not been authorised to act for any company, but acted as though he had, and pocketed a number of commissions. The present scare is not less absurd than the first of May frousse of last year. There were four cases of black smallpox in Dunkirk, and two in Paris. Dunkirk is never without this form of smallpox, and the same may be said of nearly all the great seaports of the North, for it appears that smallpox is in Europe rather the malady of winter and of cold climates than of summer and the sunny South.

The different dispensaries where doctors vaccinated gratis were so run upon as to cause riots. The heifer was taken round to the abode of the general practitioner who operated, but not gratis, in the courtyard. The approaches to the mayoralties when the heifer went there were choked up with old and young of the poorer class—with men, women, and children, all wanting to be vaccinated. The Prime Minister had his papers and books removed from the horseshoe table at which he works at home, and lancets, a spirits-of-wine lamp, and tubes of vaccine set out instead. Any friend who called when he was in and wished to be sheltered by vaccination from the black smallpox was at once operated upon, the Premier making use of a lancet which he rapidly passed through the spirits-of-wine flame. He looked incredulous, let fly a trait d'esprit, and explained that if there were no pustule in eight days the vaccine would not have taken, though possibly, some doctors taught, it would have taken none the less. It was like the influence of the Saint Esprit on the baptised, not always patent, but still effective. At any rate, the belief in Jenner chased depressing fears of infection, and in giving good courage helped vital resistance.

Vaccination five o'clock teas cannot last long, as nearly every one in Paris has been revaccinated. They came in in this way. A certain lady of quality, whom M. Abel Hermant had a few seasons back under his magnifying glass, made them fashionable. She is an object of much envy, and, of course, ill-natured whisperings, because she directs the greatest number of votes on the French side of the Suez Canal Company, though not herself a shareholder. One of her characteristics is a taste for launching novelties. In the early days, or hours, of the smallpox scare, she went to a member of the Academy of Medicine, her physician, and after a few polite preliminaries, asked him whether he knew a young doctor of taking appearance and distingué manners, the handsomer the better for her purpose, though she did not want exactly an Adonis. The Professor smiled as he listened. The lady went on to explain that in the presence of the black smallpox invasion she thought it a social duty to give a good example, and had therefore thought of having vaccination five o'clocks. To her immense satisfaction the Professor did know of the very young doctor she wanted. If she chose, he could, as a preface to the vaccinations, give a lecture in her drawing-room on the malady she called on him to combat. He had the gift of chaste eloquence, and what he said might be illustrated with photographs which any medical publisher could supply. The Countess—I give her the title so as not to put dots on i's, but she stands higher in the Livre d'Or—at once called on the youthful doctor, with a letter of introduction from the Professor, and made arrangements for the vaccinations, to be preceded par une conférence and followed par une tasse de thé.

The great world of our West End went with a rush to this novel function. The lecture took place on a low stage and in a darkened room, to give full value to optical effects on the white sheet. The photographs of smallpox disfigurements, and the cinematographs of crowds waiting for vaccinations at public dispensaries, and of the transport of the heifer from mayoralty to mayoralty deprived the lecturer of the necessity of making statements shocking to ears polite. Optical effects, as a means for conveying horrible impressions, do not jar upon any of our social conventions to the same degree as terribly strong words. The handsome disciple of Æsculapius understood this. To keep in the well-bred tone he had to spare ears, but he could go to any length in presenting loathsome horrors to the eyes. When he had ended his lecture every one present wanted to be vaccinated, some on the arm, some on the instep, some above the ankle, and the gentlemen in the Pasteurian manner, as if against hydrophobia. The different operations gone through, the hostess asked ces messieurs to conduct ces dames to the buffet in the next room to brace up their nerves with a cup of tea. They found there a sumptuous spread as at a Hôtel de Ville "lunch." There was tea, but lost in chocolate, slightly iced coffee, port, sherry, champagne, and liqueurs, with delicately dainty solids. Sherry is the favourite beverage of the King of Spain, who made a point of asking for it in France. The Queen of Portugal prefers the petit verre of port to liqueur. She contents herself with one or two petits verres. Our beauties lead lives too exciting not to require more picking up, and, fresh from the vaccination lancet, did not think a half-dozen too many.

The French press laments the death of Count Lamsdorff as a loss to France. The curtain fell on his career at San Remo, where he so long lay ill from cirrhosis of the liver. That malady had obliged him to resign the chancellorship, to which the Tsar called him on the death of Prince Lobanoff. A more colourless person one could not meet at a Foreign Office party, where the neutral tint is generally in favour. He symbolised to perfection bureaucratic inertia—that is, when action is called for by a faction, a Court, or a country. Was it George Eliot, who, on being asked what, in her opinion, was the virtue of virtues, answered, "exactness"? She would have found her ideal in Count Lamsdorff. Somehow it came to nothing.

The late ex-Chancellor of Russia belonged to a noble family of Lithuanian origin, and had an inborn probity that kept him with clean hands in a service in which palms itch terribly. But he had, as a perfect official, the conscience of the good dog whose rule of conduct is his master's will. In private life he would not hurt a fly, or wrong his worst enemy. As a high servant of the Seeger's Hair Dye.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—Hinde's Ltd., 1A, Finsbury, London.

Scrubb & Co., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of their Cloudy Fluid Ammonia that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of Scrubb & Co. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

Tsar, he leant himself with all the zeal so supine a nature could muster to the Lobanoff policy of the Armenian massacres. He went, as Chancellor, on a visit to Belgrade, which had the immediate effect of bringing about the Karageorgevich conspiracy to massacre King Alexander and Queen Draga, from whom the Empress Alexandra had declined to receive a visit, a good reason for "removing" her. He was on a high grade in the Foreign Office service when Stambouloff was got rid of. But he may not have been an accessory before the fact to the riddance, whatever he became after. It was such a Lower Empire tragedy that one cannot imagine the Count having had part or lot in the atrocity. His exactness had some results, but always bad ones. This may have been that something in him made him, even when the merest instrument, semi-scrupulous. Certainly, he had moral sense when the canine reverence for the master's will did not predominate. Count Lamsdorff had been brought up on Kant. So had his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather. But they all must have placed restrictions on the categorical imperative, otherwise they could not have got on so well. It was not the late Count's fault if a war with Japan broke out when he filled the office of Chancellor. Lamsdorff set his face against an impetuously forward course in Eastern Asia. He trusted to inertia to keep on the safe side. Alexeieff, who had the Tsar's favour, grew impatient at being clogged by, as it seemed to him, slothful officialism, and persuaded Nicholas II. to give him an entirely free hand, and something more, as Viceroy at Port Arthur. Poor Lamsdorff had to put up with seeing Far Eastern affairs, so far as they touched China and Japan, transferred from the Chancellor's to Alexeieff's office. The eating of this leek had a bad effect on his health, and the liver attack it brought on grew chronic. Both his deep personal knowledge of Far Eastern affairs and the depression into which he fell made the supremacy of Alexeieff more than trying. The latter sent the most hopeful reports to the Winter Palace, whence they came to the Chancellerie with marginal notes by the Master, a little flat perhaps, but expressing approbation. Lamsdorff's information communicated to Delcassé on the Russo-Japanese outlook was necessarily second-hand, and derived from the Alexeieff reports. This is why the French Minister gave optimist cues to the press, and a formal declaration that peace stood on a firm basis, five or six hours after the first Japanese attack on the Russian fleet.

Count Lamsdorff looked what he mentally was, inert (save for study), heavy, orderly, methodic, and le parfait fonctionnaire. He had a fleshy, clean-shaved face, a trim moustache, and well-made clothes, of a good fit and well brushed. He had civil manners, and did not practise the cordial dodge so common in Russian Government offices. Every day, when not attending the Tsar abroad, or engaged on some high mission, he walked four times across the Winter Palace square, counting his steps and looking at his watch as he set out and reached his goal. If he took a step too much or too little, the rather stolid face fell. A look of contentment passed over it when his pace had been within the regular limit and he had been on the nick of time. The Count lunched every day, when the Tsar did not keep him for that meal at the palace, at the English Club—which is not English. He had a table in a corner all to himself, spoke to nobody, treated intruders wanting to buttonhole him with expressionless, but not discourteous, want of sympathy, but was on his feet and let fall his napkin the instant a Grand Duke approached to ask him a question. Nobody ever knew him to invite any one to his table. He never left town on a holiday, was not devoted to any hostess, and remained a stranger to Cubat's.

One of the Count's far-off missions was to China. Thanks to a Benedictine study of State papers and other documents, there could be no higher authority on the questions connected with that Empire. His knowledge of the Chinese language and a name for learning commanded the respect of the Wai-pou-pou. It had been said to some of its members by a Chinese Minister to St. Petersburg that the Count might successfully pass an examination for the coral hat knob—the highest grade of mandarinship. His mission remained dark. Princes Pou-lun and Sheng, custodians of the family archives of the Imperial dynasties, allowed him facilities to make searches in them. Nobody more deeply lamented than Count Lamsdorff the havoc made in these archives by Waldersee's troops. His belief in leaving the work of the world in great part to time brought him easily into touch with the Chinese.

Learning in China is the Jacob's ladder that leads to every official altitude save the throne. The spirit of the French Academy remains in the Middle Empire. Learning is verbal and locked up. Lamsdorff's work in the world ought to have been in the compilation of a Russo-Chinese dictionary, or as assistant in a chemist's laboratory, where exactness and patience are so necessary. Had he been under a Government that allowed scope to his conscience, he must have been a valuable public servant. He had very few tastes or wants. One of his pleasures was to listen in the Emperor's chapel to the rehearsals of the choir under Count Schermatieff. I do not suppose he kept a sledge or carriage of his own. A vehicle of the Emperor's used to whisk him off to Peterhoff or Tsarskoe Selo and back. He hardly cared for the opera, but sometimes went there on certain evenings as an official duty, to be near the Emperor.

M. Delcassé often went to St. Petersburg to "exchange ideas with Count Lamsdorff," who returned his visits in close accordance with protocol politeness. He must have felt, as he looked, the fish out of water, and lost in Paris. At Compiègne he could, when in attendance there on Nicholas II., pace up and down the long arbour, counting his steps and unstared at. He had there different conferences with M. Delcassé, and, of course, interviews with M. Waldeck-Rousseau. They both wanted to make something out of the kettle of fish which the interests of the Chartres family and of the Princess Waldemar of Denmark had created there, but concluded nothing. Exchanges of views also took place on Balkan subjects, the Euphrates Railway scheme, Persia, Japan, and a measure then pending to further democratise the French army.

Waldeck-Rousseau had a cold stare and a distant manner disconcerting to those not used to it. He complained later of the "blankness" of Count Lamsdorff's mind. Was this because he stepped aside to leave all initiative to the master? He could not have been more reticent had he been deep in a game of chess. Yes; the Count had a chess-player's intellect. He did best left to himself, and allowed in quiet meditation to think out his adversaries' as well as his own game. Friction with a more active and ready mind rather confused him. The Tsar and his brothers had been used to the over-ruling personality of Pobiedonostseff, and under-rated the quiescence of Lamsdorff. Hence the setting over the Count's head of Alexeieff, who wanted to play a grand part and to please financial syndicates, which had never been able to use Lamsdorff as their tool in Korea. I suppose no official step was ever attended with more dire consequences than this one.

Southampton.—South-Western Hotel.—The new Dining-room, elegant Lounges, Smoke-room, with Restaurant and Grill-room on ground floor now open.—For tariff, apply to Manager.

The severe judgments in actions for damages against Comte de Beauvouloir and Comte Hélie de Noailles may have the effect of moderating the pace of motorists on high roads. The former, not finding his chauffeur went fast enough, seized the steering-wheel, and, driving furiously, ran against a post, the chauffeur's legs being so smashed up that the surgeon had to amputate both. Comte de Noailles ran down Lieutenant-Colonel Croizat and killed him. The civil tribunal has in the former case awarded the widow 60,000 fr., and in the latter 80,000 fr., with 20,000 fr. each for the children. The wealth of the Molès belongs to this generation of De Noailles. It has been added to by rich dowries. The Comtesse Hélie is a daughter of Margaret, née De Rothschild, Duchesse de Gramont, who died last year. The De Noailles are in the Orleanist tradition in writing books, in being prudent in their expenditure, in having numerous progenies, and in being drab in their politics. The late Duc wrote as Duc d'Ayen a book on political economy, to prove that the greater the wealth of his class, the better for those who had no money at all. Father Gabriac, of the Jesuits, kindly sent it to me, to bring me round from fancying that after all the Socialists have some sort of a case to go upon.

The Government barely escaped being now defunct on Tuesday in last week on a military question. This question would not have arisen but for the Morocco affair. The Socialists, disappointed at General Picquart not anticipating their wishes, raised it. It was, Are the soldiers now serving who entered the Army in the autumn of 1904 to continue to the next October, or are they to be at once liberated under the new law, they having served more than two years? Two years for all is the present rule. General Picquart, who had intended to apply his rule to them, gave, in consequence of events in Morocco, a negative answer. Thereupon the majority voted against the Government. Had not M. Brisson been a friend of the Ministry, a crisis would have been declared. But he kept the debate on orders of the day going on until Clemenceau had time to realise the situation. He played with spirit, address, and in a fine appeal to good sense with cards on the table. He resembles Marshal Ney in being most brilliant, ready, and redoubtably combative in the smoke of battle. In less than ten minutes he brought the hostile majority and friendly minority together in a bloc of 413 against 79.

The speeches of M. Pichon and M. Ribot on the Morocco incident—if the massacre of Dr. Mauchamp can be called an incident—show what progress France has made in good sense since 1870. Compare them with the speeches of the Duc de Gramont, Emile Ollivier, and Baron Jérôme David in that year. Yet both MM. Pichon's and Ribot's tingle with patriotism. M. Ribot condensed what M. Pichon said, and threw it into a noble mould. It came to this: A provisional occupation of Oujda until reparation is made, no policy of adventures, close adherence to European arrangements, and all this to be declared in a tone audible to the whole world. M. Ribot has a splendidly high pitch, without being at all stilted.

A PEER AMONG THE PERIS.

YOUR not putting in my Suffragette article, after all, I got me into a deuce of a scrape last Thursday. Jessie was no end upset about it; said that my not insisting upon it showed my weakness of character, and all sorts of bitter things like that. As a matter of fact, she had set her heart on its going in, because some girl that she has quarrelled with has turned Suffragette, and she thought that article would make her sit up. She ended by breaking off our engagement, and she would not speak to me for two whole days. However, we have made it up now, you will be glad to hear. Funnily enough, it was through that quarrel that I got the subject I am writing about. Jessie has an aunt that she is very fond of—who used to be very kind to her when she was a young girl. She was a barmaid, and she married her employer. Their house is not far from Charing Cross, and they have tons of money—because it is what is known as a "free" house. They could have retired years ago, but they have kept it on for the love of the thing. They have just bought a place in Berkshire now, though—it used to belong to a cousin of mine, which is rather a queer coincidence—and they are going to retire to it as soon as Jessie and I are married, so that the Radicals and people shall not be able to use their keeping a public house as a handle against Jessie. Her aunt has always had a lot of influence over my dear girl. I believe the only time they ever disagreed was when Jessie went on the stage instead of going behind the bar, which her aunt thought a more respectable profession for a young girl. So as soon as the trouble over the Suffragette article began, I went to Mrs. D'Urbeville and asked her to help me make things up.

While we were talking the question of abolishing barmaids happened to come along, and I made up my mind to write this article about it, instead of about the Easter Holidays, as I was thinking of doing. I have always had a friendly feeling for barmaids; and now that they are talking of doing away with them—and of us, too—it seems to me that it forms a bond of union between the Peers and the Peris (rather good, that. What?), and that they ought to stick up for each other. I must say, though, that until I heard what Jessie's aunt had to say about it, I was not at all sure in my own mind, whether it might not be rather a good thing for the barmaids to be abolished. They work for dreadfully long hours, I am told; and it cannot be much fun working beer-pulls and measuring out Scotch and sodas for other people to drink. I used to think it was rather like the sympathy that lots of silly asses professed to feel for horses when the motor came in. As if they would regret anything that stopped them from being overworked and flogged in the way they are! I mean the horses, not the barmaids. But Jessie's aunt has made me see things in a new light.

She is an uncommonly nice woman—gives away heaps in charity, and doesn't gas about it—and a great believer in what they call the higher education of women, as well as, curious though it sounds, the cause of temperance. Her eldest daughter, Clara, was no end of a swell at Girton, or Newnham, I forget which, before she came back to help her mother behind the bar. She is married to a rich stockbroker johnny now, who used to be a customer, and lives in a palace of a place somewhere on Wimbledon Common. Her three sisters are all teetotalers, like their mother—they are all thoroughly good sorts, and they all serve in the bar.

Mrs. D'Urbeville takes what seems to me rather a new view of the barmaid question. According to her, it is one of the duties a woman owes to society to be a barmaid during some part of her life, and so to help keep drunkenness down. She says that no man likes to make a beast of himself before a woman, especially if she is a lady, and that one word from a woman that he respects will do more with him than any number of sentences from a magistrate. According to her, if, instead of trying to abolish barmaids, all the reforming women would only take situations in public-houses themselves, they would do more to keep men temperate than all the teetotal societies taken together. I think, myself, that she goes rather far in saying this, but I know that there's something in it, from my own experience. I know if I was going to get drunk I would much rather that a dozen men should see me than one decent woman. And I expect it is the same with most fellows—to start with, anyway.

Jessie's aunt is especially down on the people who try to make out that a barmaid is more liable to temptation than other girls. As to taking to drink, she says that no end of them are teetotalers, and that any one who has served in a bar knows that you get to hate the sight and smell of alcohol before you have been serving it out very long. I don't know that I quite agree with her in this myself, but, after all, she is quite as likely to know what she is talking about as people who have never been in a public-house in their lives. As to their being led astray, she says that they are ten times as well looked after as servant girls, or mill hands, or the girls who work in City offices, and that there are figures to prove that they are about the straightest class of working women going. And I must say, as any fellow who has knocked about London a bit knows for himself, the average barmaid that you see in a London bar is no chicken, and knows how to take care of herself a lot better than most of her customers do. Jessie's aunt was especially down on some reformer-woman who talked a lot of rot about barmaids having to put up with coarse jokes for fear of offending customers. She said that any man who insulted a barmaid finds himself put outside in double quick time, and that the other customers would be the first to go for him.

Mrs. D'Urbeville was just warming to her subject when two of her daughters came off duty and put their oars in. Kitty, the elder of them, has just taken her B.A. or something, at Holloway College, I believe it is, and she quoted Latin at me until I had to tell her that I couldn't understand a word she was saying. Dolly, the youngest of them, is what they call serious-minded. I expect, myself, it's because she isn't as pretty as either of her sisters. She lived in a Settlement somewhere in the East End for a time, before she came to help in the bar, and she is no end of a swell over what they call social problems. So while Kitty kept flinging Hebe and Olympus and Ambrosia at my head, to say nothing of the Koran, Dolly kept up a regular fire of Scripture texts, all proving that barmaids were cracked up by all the wisest and most respectable authorities. I got quite dizzy in the end, until, fortunately, Dolly had to go off to keep an appointment with her fiancé, who's a young man studying for the Church that she met in the Settlement, and as serious-minded as herself.

I've been talking it over with Jessie since then, and from what she tells me—not to speak of things I've seen for myself—I should say that if you did away with actresses you would be doing a much better day's work, both as far as hard work and temptation go, than if you abolished barmaids. Though, after all, if you once start going in for those sort of reforms, I don't see where you're going to leave off. It seems to me that pretty well every kind of woman that works—and most of those who don't—must expect to rub up against this wicked world in some way or other nowadays. If you do away with barmaids and actresses, I don't see how you can stop there; you must do away with servant-girls, and typists, and factory girls, and Salvation Army lasses, and all the rest of them. You'd even have to do away with the Suffragettes themselves, and the Primrose League, too. In fact, you'd have to get back to the Turk's ideas and shut all your women up into harems so that they should be protected from the world, the flesh, and the devil altogether. And I don't suppose the reforming women would like that. That's what I think about the Barmaid question. And so does Jessie.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE New Monotony, dear Lady Betty, is appalling! Sameness is the dominant note in modern England. From Land's End to John o' Groats, English men and women of the time dress, talk, think, act, and live alike—making reasonable allowance for differences of circumstances; the same newspaper posters are on every railway-station platform, outside every newsagent's shop, and at the corners of every main street. On every bookstall are the same periodicals and publications; on every hoarding are the same advertisements; at every hotel and restaurant are the same regulations, charges, and dishes; every draper sells more or less the same stuffs and styles; every tailor displays the same patterns; and every shop-window is filled with the same commodities—according to its purpose—exhibited in the same manner.

England is now a small community organised out of all originality. The slightest departure from the ordinary is generally regarded with suspicion. Every artist has to paint according to the pattern of the moment, or starve; every author has to beware of excessive originality; every journalist must affect the same style, and express himself in the same words; every politician must adopt one or the other of the two main policies, or be denounced as a traitor, a maniac, or an anarchist, and every man or woman has to move with the stream or be swamped.

Nevertheless, we are changing, and rapidly; but we are changing collectively—most dreading to take even a single step unattended.

* * * * *

In England, title does not run after intelligence; intelligence runs after title. Men who have distinguished themselves in literature, art, or science are seldom admitted to a fashionable West-End club; almost any candidate who has a title is elected without demur to the literary and artistic clubs. The situation might be described even more strongly. Were a man, who has attained distinction in literature or art, to submit his name for election at one of the fashionable London clubs it would, almost certainly, be objected that the institution was not intended for "celebrities" of the kind; were he to be proposed for a literary or artistic club, some enemies would endeavour to secure his rejection. On the other hand, Lord Tom Noddy or Fitzfoodle would be elected unopposed at every artistic or literary club in the town! It is fully time that the literary and artistic in this country should entertain a less modest appreciation of their merits, of the importance of intelligence, and of their social value. Judges, eminent lawyers, celebrated authors and artists, scientific men of world-wide renown, and great doctors are now seldom to be met with in our "society," and few of them are admitted as members to the best known West-End clubs. They delight, however, to attract to their houses even the tenth-rate titled men and women, and the Tom Noddys and Fitzfoodles make occasional incursions to their clubs—which the latter describe as amusing "Pot-houses"—and, when there, assume an air of superiority which is altogether ludicrous.

* * * * *

A new regulation respecting the admission of women to the precincts of the Houses of Parliament is to be issued immediately; it is to run as follows:—

"No women admitted unless under proper control."

* * * * *

The sorrows of Rosebery are apparently chronic. Most of his fellow-countrymen and women have long since forgotten the conditions in which he attained the Premiership, and subsequently lost the leadership of the Liberal Party, and even that he still has any political existence; but his occasional outbursts of grief remind them that he is amongst us, and has had a distressing past. Under cover of telling us what we should do, he continually taunts us with what we have done to him; we have forced him to be a "lonely ploughman," who trudges wearily along a "solitary furrow," an "Ishmael" who "stands outside the tabernacle," a "retired raven" who "croaks on a withered branch," and several other depressing things which are obviously seriously affecting him. Those long-continued lamentations, and the variety of characters he has assumed since affliction overtook him, justify his fellow-countrymen for having deserted him. It is because they perceived that Lord Rosebery imagined himself to be the all-important element in every situation, and was of a changeable disposition—did the change suit his purposes—that they withdrew their support from him. A croaking Ishmael sitting on a withered bough outside a tabernacle is scarcely the kind of person that the British public will attend to at a moment of such serious importance as is the present.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

ONE result of the passing of the Street Betting Act will certainly be an increase in the number of people attending race meetings, and during the last few weeks the cheap rings at all the fixtures have been much better filled than they were last year. The "stay-at-home backer" is abhorred by managers of meetings, who, of course, detest tape betting, and they would rejoice if all the starting-price establishments and other betting houses could be squabashed altogether. It has frequently been asserted that starting-price betting is the greatest curse of the Turf, and this is perfectly true.

I hear that in the course of this year a member of the Jockey Club will propose that all events for two-year-olds during the first five or six weeks of the season (until May 1) shall be selling races. The Jockey Club took an important step in the right direction when the value of the two-year-old stakes run before June 1 was cut down, as no greater sum than £200 can now be added to any such event. The French two-year-olds cannot run before August 1, and it would be a good thing if the same rule could be passed in this country, but this idea is Utopian, as the summer meetings (notably Ascot) would be seriously damaged.

Keystone II. has come on in a most satisfactory manner during the last four months, and she has trained into a magnificent mare. She will be quite fit to run for the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap on May 11 if Lord Derby decides to start her for that race, her weight being 9 st. Gingal (7 st. 12 lb.) is being trained with a view to his starting for the Jubilee Handicap, but he may possibly run for the Doveridge Handicap at Derby, and at Kempton Park the stable would depend upon Meadow Rue, who will be greatly fancied if she starts.

Mr. Newton's Slavetrader (4 years, 8 st. 4 lb.) is being prepared for the City and Suburban, and so also is Sir E. Vincent's mare Cyanean (7 st. 8 lb.). Slavetrader has not been seen out since the Sandown Park July Meeting, when he gave Succour 4 lb. and defeated him easily over one mile and a half. Three days previously at Newmarket Saucy gave Slavetrader 7 lb. and beat him by a head over the same distance. Slavetrader won the Hastings Plate at the Newmarket First Spring Meeting in a canter, but he had really nothing to beat. Mr. Newton's horse does not appear to me to be well in at Epsom, and Velocity ought to beat him at 12 lb. if Mrs. Jackson's horse is then in his best form. Velocity was ridiculously backward at Lincoln. Cyanean won nothing last year, but she is believed to have come back to her early form, and she is certainly not over-weighted for a five-year-old.

I see it is stated that Troutbeck is expected to make a successful four-year-old début at Newmarket the week after next by winning the four-year-old heat of the Biennial. I shall be vastly surprised if the Duke of Westminster's horse is found capable of beating Radium, who will have a great advantage in the weights.

It has been several times stated lately in various newspapers that Polymelus is in good work at Newmarket for whichever of his spring engagements may be selected for him—the City and Suburban or the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap. Polymelus, who is one of the most improved horses at Newmarket, could not by any possibility be got fit to run at the Epsom Spring Meeting, and I do not fancy he is intended to start at Kempton Park. He will no doubt be reserved for the Coronation Cup at the Epsom Summer Meeting, which will be a great race if it also brings out Keystone II., Velocity, The White Knight, Polar Star, and Troutbeck. Spearmint is entered, but, as was long ago stated in Truth, it is highly improbable that last year's Derby winner will get through another preparation. At Ascot Polymelus has two engagements on the Thursday—the Gold Cup, course two miles and a half; and the All Aged Stakes, distance six furlongs. I do not believe that Mr. Joel's horse would stay the severe Ascot Cup course, which so decisively settled Pretty Polly and Cicero last year. Polymelus will no doubt be kept after Epsom for the Princess of Wales' Stakes of £6,000 at the Newmarket First July Meeting, and, in the absence of Spearmint, this rich race appears a certainty for him. Black Arrow would have 12 lb. the best of the weights, but he could not stay the course.

I was rather amused with the slighting opinion expressed by a writer in a weekly paper as to the early two-year-olds, which, we are informed by this wiseacre, need not be seriously thought about, as they are sure to turn out moderate. The writer of this silly stuff must have forgotten that Polar Star, who won twelve races last season, and was never beaten, made his début at Liverpool, and among the Lincoln winners during the last twenty years have been animals which as three-year-olds carried off the Two Thousand, Derby, and St. Leger. Cyllene, who turned out to be the best of the horses of his year, who would have won all the classic stakes if he had been entered for them, also made his début at the Liverpool Spring Meeting. As to St. Elf, who is dismissed as being possibly a useful colt, he happens to be the highest tried two-year-old at Newmarket up to the present time, and he has both fine speed and good stamina. It will take a very smart animal indeed to defeat St. Elf. Another writer regards the victory of Mr. Wallace's colt as being a fine advertisement for his sire, St. Maclou; but that horse now belongs to the Prussian Government, and therefore does not stand in need of any such lift. It is a curious fact that directly a sire has been sold to go abroad, then his stock usually begin to win races, however badly they may have been doing previously. St. Elf, however, is the first stock of St. Maclou, who is by St. Simon out of Mimi, and he was bred at Sledmere by Sir Tatton Sykes in 1898. St. Maclou was purchased as a yearling by the late Colonel McCalmont, after whose death the horse was sold to Lord Howard de Walden. At the end of the season of 1903 St. Maclou was sent to the stud, his fee being £95, and not long afterwards he was sold to the Prussian Government.

I hear that Polar Star is to run for the Chippenham Plate of £500 on the last day of the Newmarket First Spring Meeting. Mr. Hall Walker's colt has no penalty, and this race ought to be a good thing for him, as the animals entered are exceedingly moderate, with the possible exception of Fra Diavolo, who is unlikely to be in condition to start for any race so early as May 3. The Chippenham Plate is run over the last mile and a half of the Cesarewitch course, and last year this race produced a very fine finish, when Sarcelle defeated Picton by a head.

The Two Thousand will be run four weeks hence, but not a bet has so far been laid on this race, nor is there likely to be any extended speculation until a day or two before it is decided. Slieve Gallion has wintered as well as could be wished, but of course nothing conclusive is as yet known as to whether he can stay. I never attached a particle of importance to Slieve Gallion's defeat in the Middle Park Plate, as the colt had been seriously amiss, and it was a mistake to have sent him to Newmarket under the circumstances. The stock of Gallinule often gain stamina with age. Many good judges insisted last season that Slieve Gallion would turn out a non-stayer, but he did not indicate any lack of stamina when he won the New Stakes at Ascot in a common canter. I see it is stated that Lord Derby's colt Olympian will not be ready for the Two Thousand, but he ought to be in good trim by the Derby day. Olympian has not a 100 to 1 chance for the Derby, as he is the very last horse in the entry to do well over the Epsom course. He is much more likely to win a race at Ascot, or Lord Derby may send him over to France to run for the Grand Prix, if he does well during the next two months. I long ago expressed the opinion that Baltinglass will be Major Loder's best colt for the Derby, and not Galvani, and this view now appears to be generally taken. Galvani was extravagantly overrated last autumn, for his defeat of Slieve Gallion in the Middle Park Plate, over which such an elaborate fuss was raised, was really due to the fact of the Beckhampton colt being all wrong, and not to the winner's own superior merits as a racer. On the Kempton Park running, a week before the Middle Park Plate, Galvani was but very little better than Olympian, and the winner was then thoroughly fit, whereas the second was a big, backward, baby of a horse. The laurels gained by Galvani through these two victories were grievously tarnished when Polar Star galloped away from him in the Criterion Stakes. Baltinglass is engaged in the Two Thousand, and he will no doubt start for that race. This colt was originally entered for the Greenham Stakes of £1,000 at the Newbury Spring Meeting, but he was unluckily withdrawn from that race when the minor forfeit was declared. If Baltinglass really has any pretensions to be a Derby horse he would have walked in for this race. As matters stand, his only engagement before the Two Thousand is the Wood Ditton Stakes of £300 at the Newmarket Craven Meeting, and this event should be a good thing for him. The running during the Craven week is likely to influence the Two Thousand and Derby considerably, as there is a probability that one of the Kingsclere three-year-olds will start for the Biennial, either Lord Falmouth's St. Martin or the Duke of Westminster's Dusty Miller, each being entitled to the 7 lb. maiden allowance. Putting aside My Pet II., who is in France, there is nothing better in the Biennial than Sir R. Waldie-Griffith's colt Simon Square, who has incurred a 5 lb. penalty, and it is inconceivable that he could give either of the Kingsclere colts 12 lb. Meadow Rue has been withdrawn from the Column Produce Stakes, leaving the Duke of Devonshire's Hillsprite, Mr. A. James's Plum Blossom, Lord Derby's Glacis, and Lord Wolverton's Prince of Orange and The Welkin the best of the public lot. Slieve Gallion is entered for the Craven Stakes, but he certainly will not run. St. Martin is also engaged in this race, the best public form being represented by Simon Square, Mr. E. Dresden's Saxham, Lord Cadogan's The Sun, and Mr. Freeman's Hexagon.

I see it is stated that M. E. Blanc will have a dangerous candidate for the Derby in Ouadi Halfa. Some misguided mooncalves have already been so infatuated as to back this colt, but, after the eccentric manner in which M. E. Blanc's horses have been managed with regard to their English engagements, it seems inconceivable that anyone with a particle of common sense can put money on Ouadi Halfa for the Derby until his number is up. If Ouadi Halfa is really a smart colt he will certainly start for the Prix du Jockey Club, which is run at Chantilly on the Sunday before the Derby. A horse cannot reasonably be expected to show his best form in England on Wednesday if he has run in France on the previous Sunday. I expect the odds are really very considerable against Ouadi Halfa seeing the post at Epsom, and it is significant that M. Blanc withdrew him some time ago from his engagements in the two £10,000 races, the Eclipse Stakes and the Jockey Club Stakes. M. E. Blanc has also left in Myram for the Derby. This colt is own brother to Jardy, who would have been the winner at Epsom two years ago if he had been all right. There are several French entries in both Derby and Oaks, and in the fillies' race M. E. Blanc, who originally had five engaged, has accepted with Zahra, by Flying Fox out of Bass, and with Hélène, own sister to Ajax and Adam. If either of these fillies is tried to be smart, M. E. Blanc's colours will no doubt be seen in the Oaks, as twelve days elapse between the Prix de Diane at Chantilly and the Epsom race.

Mr. Vanderbilt's horse Maintenon is to make his first appearance as a four-year-old next week at Maisons Laffitte, when he is to start for the Prix Eugène Adam (formerly Prix Boiard), which is a stake of £2,000. Maintenon's running will be noted with much interest, as he is engaged in the Ascot Cup, and I hear that Mr. Vanderbilt intends to send his horse to England for this race. If Maintenon is in his best form on June 20 he ought to win the Gold Cup, unless The White Knight has made a great improvement. It seems to me that Colonel Kirkwood's horse is the most hopeful of the English lot, most of which have no pretensions to stay the course. Of course, Sagamore and Polar Star may discover themselves to be Cup horses, but I shall be surprised if either the one or the other turns out to be sufficiently well endowed with stamina to win this race at three years old. The fact is that an animal may win the St. Leger, or the Doncaster Cup, or the Jockey Club Cup, and may yet prove hopelessly incapable of staying the Ascot Cup course. Several of the animals which have been entered for the Ascot race will be preposterously outclassed, and it is difficult to comprehend the object of entering a mere handicap horse for such an event as this.

I hear that Major Loder's dark filly, Adora, who has been mentioned by some harebrained enthusiasts as a likely winner of the One Thousand and Oaks, is never likely to distinguish herself much on the Turf. The sister to Pretty Polly is proving a somewhat difficult animal to train.

Lord Penrhyn's racehorses are to be sold at Newmarket during the Craven week, and the mares and other stock will be disposed of later on in the season.

His Eminence has been lame since he returned to Newmarket from Lincoln, so he has been struck out of his spring engagements, and I do not suppose he will be again seen out before Ascot, at the earliest. His Eminence is entered there for the New Biennial, the Rous Memorial Stakes (O.M.), and the All-Aged Stakes, all of which races are run on the Thursday. I expect, however, that he is more likely to win a handicap run over a course of from six furlongs to an easy mile than any of his weight-for-age engagements.

The spring edition of "Ruff's Guide to the Turf"—an indispensable work for all who take an intelligent interest in racing—has just been published by Messrs. Ashley and Smith, 139 and 140, Fleet-street, E.C.

Next week there will be racing at Warwick, Leicester, Bogside, Eglinton Hunt, and Newbury. The best sport will be seen at Newbury, where the programme promises some really good racing. There is sure to be an enormous attendance at this meeting, as the train service from Paddington is superlatively good.

Mr. de Rothschild has Pastry, who finished second for the Brocklesby Stakes, engaged in the Kineton Stakes at Warwick, and his filly, Selaginella, winner of the Lincoln Cup, is entered for the Grove Park Plate. Beattie, who has several times disappointed his friends, is engaged in the Swan Meadow Plate, along with a lot of dreadfully bad wretches.

Twenty-four three-year-olds are left in for the Green-ham Stakes of £1,000 at Newbury, the best public performer in the list being Baron de Forest's Bellatrix, who has incurred a penalty of 5 lb. Knight of Tully will also carry 5 lb. extra, but he ran badly at Liverpool. The entry for the Carnarvon Stakes includes Sir John Thursby's Counterfeit, who, however, has incurred a penalty of 12 lb. for winning the Brocklesby Stakes. The Spring Stakes for maiden three-year-olds has also a large entry, including Camlarg and Jovial, both of which animals disappointed their friends last season. There are seventy-five entries for the Beckhampton Two-year-old Plate of £200, including Counterfeit, who again has to carry 12 lb. extra, which is much too severe a penalty so early in the season. There are thirty-two acceptances for the Newbury Spring Cup of £1,250, including Ob (9 st. 6 lb.), and I shall expect Crusader to win if he is all right.

C.T.C. BUNKUM.

I doubt if any organisation with an income of £10,000 a year, except the Cyclists' Touring Club, ever possessed officials who were so apt at supplying their members with bunkum as though it were sound argument. Last week I pointed out how the council had prevented an article by the Hon. Gilbert Coleridge from being published in the Gazette. They had an article in favour of the change in membership written by Mr. Kendall Burnett, the chairman, and an editorial by the astute editor-cum-secretary, Mr. Shipton, to the same effect. The exclusion of Mr. Coleridge's article was animadverted upon by Mr. Justice Warrington in anything but favourable terms. And yet Mr. Shipton had the insolence to say in the January number of the Gazette that if the members were asked what was their most cherished privilege they would say the Gazette, because "we are allowed a latitude of criticism unknown in other cycling journals." But they are not allowed criticism when the vital affairs of club management are concerned. The individual member is sternly suppressed. He is given no chance of protesting against the council's wasteful ways. Undeterred by the criticisms of Mr. Justice Warrington, the council are up to their old dodges. There is a postal vote to be taken in May on Mr. Coleridge's successful amendment as to reform. The council has resolved that Mr. Coleridge be asked to submit a statement for the May Gazette, and that, except his statement, the report of the general meeting where his resolution was carried, and a statement of the view of the council, no other reference to the matter shall be allowed in the Gazette. The individual member is again squashed. The council will have the last say, and will, as usual, be able to provide their members with bunkum.

In order that members may realise the value that should be put upon the council's statement, I invite them to consider how Mr. Kendall Burnett put the case for the change in constitution in the Gazette to the members and how he put it to the court on oath. To the members he said that at the time of the boom large sums were expended in upholding their legal rights. He tells the court that the money was practically wasted, for he says the reduction in legal charges was due to the council not contesting a large number of applications for light railway orders or private Bills, the results being very small compared with the expenditure involved. He further tells the court that the cost of legal aid to members is very considerable—that is, I suppose, in contradistinction to parliamentary expenses. In 1903 it was £58, in 1904 £28, and in 1906 £97 0s. 7d., and this last sum included parliamentary expenses. He tells neither the court nor the members that since 1899, when the councillors first had their fares paid in order to attend council meetings, the average sum a year paid in fares is £515, and for legal charges, including parliamentary waste, is £231. If members think they are going to get legal aid in accidents they are mistaken. The average income of the club during that period has been over £10,000 a year. He tells the court that the cost of road books is heavy. He tells the members that no considerable trading profit is derived from road books. He tells neither that the council has locked up £1,761 in these road books that he depreciates. He tells the members that touring is not as pleasurable as it was, that the tourist is now the motorist, and that the status of the average cyclist is not what it was formerly. (Incidentally I agree that the cads on castors have become road hogs.) He swears to the court that it is a matter of notoriety that the use of the bicycle is now dangerous on the main roads owing to motorists. It would seem that more legal aid would be required. But not in the chairman's view. The great club is going to compose the differences between the two classes of riders. He admits to the members that the great influx will come from motorists. The men who are making highways dangerous are to join. He (the chairman) is not a motorist. It is so very likely that men are going to join a club run by a non-motorist. But perhaps the editor is an ardent motorist. He, at all events, regards his chairman as doing donkey work on the bicycle. It is hardly necessary to refer any further to Mr. Kendall Burnett's affidavits. I doubt if purer bunkum was ever offered to a court of law. They represented, I suppose, the joint views of the council. They were destructive of the case they were supposed to support.

It does seem to me monstrous that a chairman, a council, and an editor who have squandered the club funds on such a puerile petition should challenge a reform resolution by a postal vote. Mr. Kendall Burnett was originally opposed to the change. He swears to the court that the change is vital in the interests of the club. He says the privilege and advantages of members will be lessened, and the club's influence grievously diminished, if the alteration is not made. His editor backs him up. I do not inquire which is the master and which is the tame cat. One gets his railway fare from Aberdeen, the other gets £700 a year, and is now willing to take £500. One is a motorist, the other is not. Neither is, to my mind, capable of running an organisation with an income of £10,000 a year and vested money to the tune of £20,000. They now turn round and say, "We can still make the concern a success. Every member must get one new member." The sort of twaddle a curate talks at a missionary meeting! All this could have been done before the petition. The fleshpots of office are dear to the souls of the councillors. Power at any price, so far as our convictions go, is their cry. They are wobblers and wastrels, purveyors of tricks and bunkum, and only the want of energy on the part of the members will keep them in office.

I am told that the reformers are quite willing that Mr. Shipton should receive a pension. The hon. secretary of the reform movement is Mr. E. Symons, 3, Plowden-buildings, Temple, E.C.

I have received some comments on the rowing in the Oxford and Cambridge boat race by an old Oxford Blue. He says:—

The exposition of oarsmanship offered by the Oxford crew during the tideway practice was about the least creditable to university rowing that has been seen on the Thames since 1882, when Cambridge fouled the water on the recovery, three strokes out of four.

Inferiority of pace need not be accompanied by elementary faults in individuals, nor by want of decently uniform action. Coaches cannot make oars at all times out of broomsticks, but they are expected to diagnose and to know how to remedy elementary faults which would be subjects for observation if perpetrated by a freshman tubbed in a pair.

Now in the Oxford crew this year, the two men who otherwise should have been first class, Nos. 7 and 6, had, since the summer, contracted faults not seen in them last year, nor in their Eton career. No. 7 rowed hopelessly deep, No. 6 never straightened his inside arm. Each of these insidious lapses from standard orthodoxy represented about an 8 per cent. depreciation of racing value. This self-depreciation of the two most valuable men would of itself suffice to lose four races out of five, against rivals of decent calibre, and this loss of power was accentuated by irregular sliding among three or four of the others, notably stroke, sliding too hurriedly, and leaving the body with no leg support when bringing the hands home to the chest, tending to weaken his finish to make him wash out, and so not to give length to big men behind him. This foible, as against the almost uniform leg drive of Cambridge, would, independently of the aforesaid faults in 7 and 6, go a long way to ensure defeat.

On the other hand, Oxford, while thus faulty individually and losing power by their faults, somehow retained collectively two important and good features of sound style, in which Cambridge were deficient—to wit, springy recovery of hands after the finish and of hips for the return swing. Here they excelled as against Cambridge, who had a dead recovery and a tendency to bucket on the return swing, faults which insidiously had crept into their style since their September victory over Harvard.

These are his views. I can only say that the coaches did diagnose the faults, and did their best to correct them, and that these faults were less marked than at Henley. Indeed, Kirby has improved since he went stroke side. A good many men would be first-class oars if they had not some bad faults. Then as to Gladstone at stroke, no one pretends that he is first class. The crew, collectively and individually, did their best, and so did the coaches, who certainly know as much about rowing as most men. As for Cambridge, their lack of beginning and dragged out finish was more marked than against Harvard. If they had had a good beginning they would have been a very fine crew.

Association footballers will be delighted to hear that the Football Association has decided that a man with a wooden leg may play if his leg is not dangerous.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

AUTOMOBILISTS will be glad to notice that there seems every likelihood of the Bill to render compulsory the carrying of tail lights on all vehicles at night passing into law. Practically no serious opposition is being offered to it, and Major Renton confidently anticipates, therefore, that his most desirable measure will get through in due course. Then motor driving after dark in country districts will be a considerably less risky affair than it is at present.

"The Scientific Regulation of Traffic" was the title of an excellent paper read by Earl Russell at the Royal Automobile Club last week, the only objection to which was the extremely Utopian character of its proposals. The speaker prefaced his remarks, indeed, by frankly recognising the fact that his recommendations had no prospect whatever of being carried into effect. He was fully aware, he said, that the scientific regulation of anything, and the application of the principles of logic to legislation, are naturally abhorrent to the mind of every Englishman, and hence he did not dare to hope for a moment that his suggestions would ever get translated into facts. It may be hoped, however, that when we get that long-desired Traffic Board established, any well-considered proposals will obtain consideration, and those of Earl Russell among others. Lord Russell is very thorough-going indeed. In the case of London and other large towns, he would have regulations for defining or limiting the classes of traffic to be allowed along particular streets; for compelling traffic to flow in one direction only; for prohibiting the loading or unloading and stopping of vehicles in the street; for regulating the routes and stopping-places of omnibuses; for marking the centres of streets and the angle at which corners may be turned by vehicles where necessary; and so on. Of these suggestions, the most drastic is that as to allowing only traffic going one way in certain streets. The advantage resulting would undoubtedly be great in many respects, but very careful regulation would be required to avoid inconvenience arising from the necessity of taking roundabout routes to get at a given destination.

Earl Russell suggests, however, that this particular rule need only be applied during stated hours—as, for instance, between 8.30 a.m. and 11.30 a.m. in the morning to facilitate eastward-bound traffic from the West End to the City, and between 4 p.m. and 6.30 p.m. in the afternoon when the tide sets in the opposite direction. Thus Class A (or fast) traffic going east during the morning hours would have at its disposal the Victoria Embankment, Marylebone-road and Euston-road, and other main arteries; Class B (or moderately fast) traffic, including tradesmen's carts, light vans, 'buses, and so on going in the same direction would be confined to the Strand and Fleet-street route; while Class C (or slow) traffic, such as heavy vans, market carts, and so on would be prohibited altogether. At the same time, separate westward routes would be provided for each class of traffic during the same hours. Thus traffic B would have to leave the City by way of Princes-street, Gresham-street, Aldersgate-street, Clerkenwell-road, Theobald's-road, Bloomsbury-square, Great Russell-street. Presumably, therefore, a tradesman's van requiring to get from Moorgate-street to Queen Victoria-street would have to make a round of some miles in order to do this. I am afraid it would cause dissatisfaction. But perhaps this is only a matter of properly applying a principle for which there is no doubt much to be said.

Motoring Illustrated is responsible for the interesting announcement that it is proposed to transfer the quarters of the Royal Automobile Club from its existing premises in Piccadilly to no less historic a building than that which has hitherto been the quarters of the old War Office in Pall Mall. For some time past it has been known among the members of the club that a move was in contemplation, and the committee would seem to have been lucky in securing new quarters so favourably situated. A considerable amount of adaptation will no doubt be necessary to fit the ex-Government office for its new purposes, but there can be no question as to the excellence of its situation in the very heart of clubland. Another convenient feature of the premises from the motorist's point of view is the courtyard in front, where there will be accommodation, it is said, for twenty or thirty cars at once. This, it is suggested, might be covered by a glass roof. As to the accommodation inside, it is stated that this is ample, though few of the rooms are of very great size.

Mr. J. W. Stocks, whose position as manager of De Dion-Bouton, Ltd., entitles him to speak with authority on the point, has raised a question of considerable importance to the motoring trade by his recent letter as to the utility of the provincial motor shows. In effect, his view of the matter seems to be that these cost a lot of money to the makers who go to the expense of exhibiting at them, and yield very little in return. "The time for the exhibition of motor-cars for the purpose of inducing people to buy them has gone," he suggests. "They are useful merely as a general mart if practically all makes can be seen together at the same time. Immediately they cease to have this importance their value has gone, except from the show-promoter's point of view." Mr. Stocks's view is borne out in rather amusing fashion by Mr. Sydney Dixon, who writes that at the recent Sheffield motor show, where he exhibited a Napier, a Spyker, a Metallurgic, an Isotta Fraschini, and three Darracqs, the only inquiry received on one day was from a lady who wished to know the price of a settee and chair on the stand. At the same time, it is probably a mistake to assume that such local shows do not benefit the motor trade indirectly, even when not many orders are booked on the spot.

In reference to a recent paragraph in this column Mr. S. F. Edge writes:—

> I have read with interest your remarks in regard to the binding penalty of delay which my firm give in regard to Napier cars. In regard to one method of it being possible for a firm to escape on the question of delivery, even on this point customers of S. F. Edge, Limited, are safeguarded, as not only do we guarantee delivery of their car, but we give its specific works number, and we give customers the right of entry into the works so that they may see their particular car in course of construction, and they can satisfy themselves how it is getting on, that it is not neglected, and that it will be out to the time promised.

This is no doubt the right way of doing things, though I can readily credit Mr. Edge's further statement that it is not one generally adopted.

Some useful information is published in the current Autocar regarding the interchangeability of tyres. The average tyre maker's catalogue is a most confusing document, with its innumerable particulars of covers and tubes of slightly varying sizes, weight, and so forth, some of which are interchangeable, while others are not. No difficulty would arise in the ordinary way if motorists invariably stuck to one size of tyre and one only. But, of course, it often happens that experience suggests the fitting of larger sized tyres than those originally supplied with the car, and then the question arises whether the same rims will serve, or whether the former tubes will fit the new covers. Messrs. Michelin draw attention in this connection to one consideration sometimes overlooked, namely, that when wheels are transformed to take stronger—that is, larger—tyres, the actual diameter of the wheel (i.e., wheel fitted with inflated cover) should be maintained, otherwise the gear will be either raised or lowered. In the case of ordinary cars with plenty of power, the consideration is not one of great importance, perhaps, though where those of the other kind are concerned it is certainly one worth bearing in mind.

The fascination which seems to be possessed for some motorists by an enormously powerful car with two seats only is rather incomprehensible. Even if it is never occupied at all by a passenger, a body of some sort is of the utmost convenience for the conveyance of the numberless articles which accompany the well-equipped motorist on his travels, and its place is by no means adequately taken by the box or boot which is usually made to do duty instead on cars of the kind referred to. One advantage of a sort such cars do, indeed, possess from the standpoint of certain owners, in the fact that a superfluity of passengers is thereby rendered impossible. But whether it is this which accounts for their popularity I will not pretend to say. In a general way there is nothing more uncomfortable than a car without sufficient accommodation for rugs, wraps, spare tyres, jack, petrol, etc., and those contemplating the purchase of two-seaters—whether large or small—would always be well advised to think twice before doing so on this account.

The Anglo-American Oil Company, Limited, who sell the well-known and excellent "Pratt" brand of petrol, have issued a very handy road atlas suitable for motorists, covering the whole of England and Wales. By employing the atlas form the adoption of quite a good size scale has been rendered possible without any of the inconvenience resulting from the use of a large-size sheet map, while the clearness of the marking and printing leaves nothing to be desired. Motorists can obtain copies free on application to the company, whose headquarters are in Billiter-street, E.C.

MAMMON.

The Settlement—A Satisfactory Ending—The Stock Exchange Again Gives Remarkable Evidence of its Stability and Co-operative Spirit—The Market Outlook.

WRITING a week ago of the then forthcoming Settlement, I ventured the opinion that "as the result of a good deal of arrangement between certain firms and their creditors, matters appear to have been smoothed out sufficiently to avoid serious trouble. That there will be some failures is almost a foregone conclusion, but apparently the area of trouble will be restricted to the smaller fry." This prediction, I am glad to say, was well founded; the number of defaulters, even among the smaller men, was fewer than expected, while the difficulties of larger houses, and particularly of two firms whose affairs had caused members a good deal of concern, have been tided over, thanks to the support given by strong people, and the forbearance shown by the creditors. This result is distinctly satisfactory, and says much for the inherent strength and harmonious working of the London Stock Exchange. More unfavourable conditions than those against which the House has had to contend lately could hardly be imagined, the decline in values, while most sensational in Americans, having been common to all markets. Fortunately, there is good ground for believing that the worst is now over. Money may remain comparatively dear for some time, and on every rally we must be prepared to see derelict stock come out, but these are matters that will probably not prevent most markets making a fair amount of headway in the course of the present year, having regard to the bargains now offering to the real investor.

Yankee Rails are likely to be shunned more than ever by the British public. I do not deny that prices in this market offer scope in several instances for a turn upwards, on the score of their yields, but, generally speaking, the outlook governing earning conditions in the States is not favourable, as I have shown at length in recent weeks, and, moreover, confidence in the integrity of the men who control the market has had another nasty jar. Perhaps the fresh distrust engendered may make investors pay more attention to Home Rails, which, whatever their demerits, are not in danger of withering in the night. This market, it is true, has undergone a very serious decline for many years, but that is the very reason why it should receive attention now, particularly as the dividend position—speaking as a whole—is better than for a long time past. In another column I have dealt with the outlook for railway prior charge stocks, a group which offers solid attractions to the investor wanting to buy safe stocks on a basis that leaves room for a fair margin of capital appreciation.

Home Railway Prior Charge Stocks—Why they have Fallen so Severely—The Present Situation Altogether Abnormal—A Recovery Inevitable—An Opportunity for Investors.

In no single department of the Stock Exchange has depression been so continuous or in its aggregate effect so great as in that for Home Railway stocks. I do not refer merely to the limited group of Ordinary issues, which, in some instances, have been brought down within recent years by causes affecting their intrinsic value, but include that great mass of fixed interest securities—debentures, guaranteed, rent charges, and preferences—that come within the category of "gilt-edged" investments. The great bulk of these securities are in British names, locked away in the strong boxes of public and private trustees. The shrinkage in values has been attended without the popular excitement caused by a collapse in speculative markets; it has not been a case of a sensational break occurring within a few weeks, but a steady decline spread over the past ten years. The situation is a particularly trying one for those in charge of trust money, and with a view first to assisting them to form a judgment and second to guiding would-be investors, I propose to briefly deal with the causes that are responsible for the present low range of values and to arrive, as far as possible, at an estimate of the outlook.

During the last week or two one or two critics have declared in the correspondence columns of the daily press that we are arriving at a permanently altered standard of valuation; that, in consequence of the growing currency needs of the world, there is no prospect of a return to the lower yields given by stocks in the immediate past. This is a purely gratuitous assumption, and, happily, the logical conclusion based upon the factors that have contributed to the fall in prices is distinctly the other way. I am quite ready to admit that there is little prospect of our witnessing a return to the state of affairs that ruled from 1894-1897, when the Bank rate for a twelvemonth at a stretch was 2 per cent., and the demand for securities so outstripped the supply that 2½ per cent. became a standard basis of yield. That those times will never recur I should be slow to assert. History has a strange knack of repeating itself, and although at present one can hardly imagine conditions that should lead Mr. Punch to again caricature the Old Lady of Threadneedle-street sitting in the Bank vaults bewildered by the pile after pile of gold being heaped around her and begging that no more of the "nasty stuff" be brought in, yet they may be nearer than many people credit. However, while admitting that the years immediately preceding the Boer War were abnormal years in the money market and that there is no likelihood of their early recurrence, must it not also be admitted that the existing state of markets is abnormal? The only parallel I can think of to the present situation is that which obtained in the years immediately succeeding the Franco-German War of 1870, though the stringency now prevailing in the International money market is more pronounced than was the case some thirty odd years ago. Then, as now, the leading monetary centres, after being severely taxed by the burden of war expenditure, had to face the additional strain of a widespread trade revival that developed with the dawn of peace, and which brought its usual concomitant in the shape of a big outbreak of speculation.

On the present occasion the boom in trade has truly been world-wide, involving a tremendous rise in the prices of all leading commodities, and in turn fostering speculation not only in certain classes of securities, but in metals and produce and real estate, in support of which last-named contention I would point to the great rise in land values that has recently occurred in Canada, the United States, Egypt, and Argentina. In addition, a matter that has materially contributed to accentuate the international monetary stringency and thereby to depress investment stocks was the San Francisco earthquake, which involved enormous losses to insurance companies and compelled them to realise large lines of securities. If we try and estimate the influence wielded by this combination of economic forces, need there be any wonder at the depression that has ruled in the investment market during the last eight years? and, to come to what interests investors more, is not the altogether abnormal situation that exists the best augury for the future? All of us hope that the lessons taught by the South African and Russo-Japanese struggles have been sufficient to make the nations keep the peace, at any rate for a good many years to come. It is therefore, reasonable to look for a long rest from war borrowing. As regards the activity of trade, experience shows that trade booms run in cycles, and while there is no reason to take a pessimistic view, it is fairly certain that a slackening of the pace in certain directions will shortly succeed the recent remarkable boom. Already there are signs in America of the crest of the commercial wave having been reached, and a slowing down in that quarter would soon begin to tell elsewhere. Then we may look for a gradual decline in the prices of raw materials as consumption decreases, and this slackening of trade and reduction of commodity values will have a marked effect upon the demand for capital, the outcome being seen in a steady piling up of cash at the various international monetary centres.

The sequel to all this must be a big increase in the demand for investment securities, and we shall then find prices as readily move upwards as they have lately moved downwards. In considering the fall that has occurred in Home Railway senior stocks, it is as well to bear in mind that it has been out of all proportion to the actual amount of realisations. For years, owing to the high value of money, all low-yielding securities have been a drug, and with a complete absence of demand the dealers have only consented to take stock at a sacrifice. Under the present state of the law regarding deceased estates, the market is seldom without a little stock on offer, and though in normal times this would be absorbed without trouble, the sales in recent years have all contributed to send prices steadily backwards. During the last twelvemonth offerings of this kind have, as we know, been unusually large, in consequence of the number of millionaires' estates that have had to be realised. There is one other matter of importance that is likely before long to exert a good deal of influence upon the market for gilt-edged stocks, and that is the resumption of the National Sinking Fund. Already the Chancellor of the Exchequer seems to have made a start in the redemption of funded debt, and as the amount available for Sinking Fund purposes is very large, a distinct influence should before long be produced upon the price of Consols. The sentimental and practical effect produced by a higher standard for Goschens would quickly be communicated throughout the range of other high-class securities, for Consols are still the barometer of the investment market. In the following table I show the yields obtainable on some of the best Home Railway fixed interest bearing securities. I cannot, of course, attempt to give an exhaustive list, but the stocks selected are typical of the attractions offered in this department to the investor wanting safety, and the prospect of an ultimate increase in capital value:—

Stock.	Price.	Yield.
Caledonian 4 per cent. Cons. Pref.	111	£3 12 1
Central London 4 per cent. Debs	105	3 16 2
Furness 4 per cent. Cons. Pref., 1881	107	3 14 9
Glasgow and South Western 4 per cent. Pref.	110	3 12 8
Great Central 3½ per cent. Second Debs.	94	3 14 6
Great Eastern 4 per cent. Cons. Pref.	110	3 12 8
Great Northern 3 per cent. Pref., 1896	83	3 12 3
Great Western 5 per cent. Cons Guaranteed	141	3 10 11
Lancashire and Yorkshire 3 per cent. Cons. Pref.	84	3 11 5
London, Chatham, and Dover 3 per cent. Debs., 1890	79	3 15 11
London and North Western 4 per cent. Cons. Pref.	114	3 10 2
London and South Western 3½ per cent. Pref.	99	3 10 8
London, Brighton, and S. Coast 5 per cent. Cons. Pref.	136	3 13 6
Midland 2½ per cent. Cons. Pref.	71	3 10 5
North British 3 per cent. Cons Lien.	83	3 12 3
North Eastern 4 per cent. Guaranteed	116	3 9 0
North London 4½ per cent. Debs.	123	3 10 4
North Staffordshire 3 per cent. Pref.	83	3 12 3
South Eastern 4½ per cent. Cons. Guaranteed	125	3 12 0
Taff Vale 4 per cent. Pref.	110	3 12 8

General Recovery in the Mining Markets—Kaffirs Among the First to Improve—Jagers Dividend and Premier Diamond Prospects—Oroya Dividend Policy—The Rio Tinto Report.

The mining markets have not been slow to reflect the improvement that has occurred in general conditions. On the whole, the volume of business transacted has not been of large dimensions, the holidays having tended to restrict dealings, but the general trend of values has been in favour of holders, and in a number of cases the recovery in prices has been substantial. As was expected, Kaffirs were among the first to develop a rallying tendency under the influence of better feeling entertained as to the general outlook. In these descriptions there is reported to have been some buying of an influential character, and although French speculators are stated to be dissatisfied with the policy with regard to Rand labour announced by the new Transvaal Ministry, the general impression on this side is, as I mentioned last week, that the mining industry will not be seriously interfered with, and the outlook being less uncertain than hitherto, it is thought we may reasonably look for some revival of speculative interest in the share market. It is to be borne in mind that the last few years Kaffirs have been under a cloud and market values have depreciated considerably. So far only a very small portion of the ground lost by quotations has been recovered, although the outlook has brightened and there have recently been satisfactory developments in connection with several of the mines. The Diamond group has continued pretty active, and quotations have fluctuated widely. The Jagersfontein dividend is now officially announced, and the amount, 6s. per share, is in accordance with the forecast I was able to give some weeks ago. This is at the same rate as the previous distribution, but I understand there is good reason to expect that the next dividend will be larger. Premiers have been helped by the statements made at the meeting held at Johannesburg at the beginning of last month, when the chairman said that calculations based upon recent results justified him in predicting a substantial increase in the number of loads to be treated, diamonds to be produced, profit to be earned, and dividends to be paid during the current year.

The chief point of interest in connection with the Westralian market during the past week was the issue of a circular by the Oroya Brownhill Company foreshadowing a reduction in the rate of future dividends. In previous notes I dealt with the position of this mine, and my readers have been prepared for the policy now announced. For three and a quarter years dividends at the rate of 4s. per quarter have been paid, but the directors propose after this month to reduce the output so as to allow of distributions of 2s. 6d. per quarter, or 50 per cent. per annum. For a little time longer rich ore could be selected and the past rate of dividend maintained, but the policy to be pursued by the management of taking poor ore with rich is the sound one. As the Company has over 10s. per share in cash in hand, and holds a third of the share capital of the Oroya Black Range, there seems no reason why shareholders should be anxious to realise, the reduction in dividends having already been discounted by the recent fall in the price of the shares.

How to Operate in Stocks Successfully.—See Halford's Adviser (post free).—Palmerston House, London, E.C. Established 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

Broken Hills have taken a decided turn for the better. Last week I pointed out that times of depression afforded opportunities to mining investors to pick up bargains, and expressed the opinion that the Broken Hill group was not the least attractive of the mining sections in that respect. Although the development of the mines has, on the whole, continued favourable, and the prices of the metals they produce have not fallen to any extent, share values have been brought down by forced liquidation, and it is only natural that with the depressing influence removed a reaction should occur. The same remarks apply to the Australian copper issues. The past week has witnessed a heavy fall in the prices of copper and tin, but there is reason to expect that the quotations will recover most, if not the whole, of the ground recently lost, the decline having been principally due to the unsettlement of the stock markets, and not to intrinsic conditions having undergone any material change for the worse. The Rio Tinto report caused disappointment, but the price of the shares, with the quotations of other copper favourites, has recovered from the worst. So far from confirming the recent market statements as to a considerable expansion of production being contemplated, the Tinto report states that if no rain falls before the end of May the directors fear that a reduced output of copper for the year 1907 must be expected. This has damped the ardour of the "bulls," while the "bears" have been helped by further sales from the Continent. It is to be borne in mind, however, that a reduction of the Tinto output would be a "bull" point for other copper shares, as tending to keep up the price of the metal.

The Robinson Group of Mines.

In view of the recent political changes in the Transvaal, and their importance in connection with the outlook for the mining industry, I think it will be of interest to my readers if, as occasion permits, I review the position and prospects of the mines of leading Kaffir groups. As the reports are now to hand of the various Robinson companies, a start may be made with these. Additional interest attaches to the results achieved in the past year by the mines of this group and to the prospects held out to the shareholders concerned, by reason of the attitude taken up by Mr. J. B. Robinson on the labour question. It is not many months since this group seceded from the Witwatersrand Native Labour Association, and it will have been noticed that this and other actions on the part of Mr. Robinson have been the subject of frequent comment in Parliament recently. While other Rand groups have supplied themselves with Chinese in order to keep their mines going, with the result that about 42 per cent. of the gold production of the Transvaal is now contributed by those companies employing coolie labour, only one of the properties of the Robinson group is using that class of labour. Mr. Robinson has quite recently declared that he has no difficulty in obtaining all the native labour necessary for the mines of his group. The scarcity of workers has been the main difficulty in the past, but there is now no reason, then, why the properties should not be energetically worked and the Randfontein district hum with activity. In addition to the twelve Randfontein subsidiaries there are the Langlaagte Estate and Block "B" companies and we will consider these two first.

Langlaagte Estate and Block "B."

A substantial increase in earnings was achieved by the Langlaagte Estate and Gold Mining Company in 1906, although during the greater part of the year a scarcity of native labour was experienced, so that an average of only 180 stamps were in operation out of the 200 installed. Not only was the revenue per ton a little better than in 1905, but the working costs were further reduced to a satisfactory extent. The increase of not far short of £40,000 in the total profit was also due in part to the new slimes plant being in operation during the year. The results for the last two years are set out in the table below:—

Year.	Ore Crushed.	Gold Yield.	Wrking Profit.	Revenue, per Ton.	Costs, per Ton.	Profit, per Ton.	Dividend.
	Tons.	ozs.	£	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	Per Cent.
1906	340,585	110,246	163,088	27 7·44	18 7·57	8 11·87	20
1905	314,068	66,089	114,331	27 2 37	19 11 01	7 3·36	20

The ore reserves of the Langlaagte Estate are estimated at 611,568 tons, as against 575,044 tons at the end of 1905. As the average value of the ore is not stated the computation is not of much value. Moreover, in estimating the prospects of the Langlaagte Estate one has to bear in mind that from the beginning of 1907 the property of the Block "B" Langlaagte is to be worked in conjunction with that of the former company. Under this arrangement one-third of the profits will be payable annually to the Block "B," and the Langlaagte Estate undertakes to provide funds for development and to pay off the preference shares. A special loan of £50,000 has already been arranged, pending the issue of £200,000 debentures. It is proposed to extend the treatment plant, the object of the management being to crush from 40,000 to 50,000 tons of ore per month, and it is thought that requirements under this head will be met by installing tube mills. Up to the end of 1906 the Block "B" had about 200,000 tons of ore developed. The lease of the Block "B's" area by the Langlaagte Estate is for a period of twenty-five years, and the life of the latter (already estimated at about a dozen years) will thereby be protracted by that extent.

The Randfontein Subsidiaries.

Out of the twelve subsidiaries floated by the Randfontein Estates four only have so far reached the producing stage, but there is every prospect of others becoming contributors to the gold production of the Transvaal before much more time has passed. Their development and equipment have been so long delayed for the reason that the management has hesitated to embark upon any scheme of expansion, and the locking up of a large amount of capital until they are assured that sufficient native labour would be forthcoming to permit of the commencement of crushing operations after the development of the mines had been sufficiently far advanced. At the recent meeting of the parent company the chairman (Mr. J. W. S. Langerman) made the following remarks on the labour position:—

> I am happy to state that the native labour problem, which has been the constant bugbear of South African mining undertakings in the past, promises, as far as this group is concerned, to be nearing a solution. In this connection we are supported by the success that has already attended our independent recruiting, inasmuch that for the first time during many years we have now an ample supply of all work in hand. Moreover, we have the assurances of our reliable labour agents that the supply can be maintained and augmented to meet our further requirements.

In consequence development operations have been resumed already on two of the properties—the Block A Randfontein and the Mynpacht Randfontein—and, according to cabled advices, it is proposed to amalgamate these two concerns with the West Randfontein. The Block A has machinery and plant and a 100 stamp mill, and the Mynpacht also has hauling and pumping machinery, and their properties have already been opened out to a considerable extent, but at the West only surface prospecting and diamond-drilling has been done. All three concerns, at the end of 1906, had used up practically all their issued capital, but two of them had reserve shares, and under the proposed amalgamation no doubt arrangement will be made for a further supply of funds. On the East, Ferguson,

Treatise on Options.—Mr. Arthur Crump, late City Editor of the Times, described "Options" as "The most scientific and prudent way of operating on the Stock Exchange." This system, although very popular on the Continent and in America, is not so well known amongst Investors here as its merits justify. We have just published a new Treatise on this subject, which will be sent post free on application to The Secretary, London & Paris Exchange, Ltd., Bankers, Basildon House, Bank, London, E.C., or from any of its Branches.

Van Hulsteyn, Johnstone, and Stubbs Randfonteins (which, with the West, were formed in 1899) little work has so far been done, but it is announced that a comprehensive scheme for the development and equipment of these mines is in hand. But it will, of course, be a good time before they commence contributing to the gold output. So far the shares of these companies have not been quoted on the London market, the scrip, or at any rate the bulk of it, being held by the parent concern.

The four producing mines were at a disadvantage on account of shortage of labour during the earlier months of the past year, but in the aggregate their profits for twelve months were £86,000 in excess of those for 1905, and with the prospect held out of a sufficiency of natives in the future this sum should be improved upon in the current year. The results are dealt with individually below:—

North Randfontein.

The North Randfontein has, I believe, the distinction of being the only mine of the Robinson group to employ Chinese labour, and it is interesting to note that its working costs are practically the same as the Porges, and lower than those of the South and Robinson Randfontein. The features of the past year's results were increased revenue and profit per ton and improvement in the ore reserves position, ore of exceptional richness having been exposed during the year. The results of the last two years are set out below:—

Year.	Ore Crushed	Gold Yield.	W'rking Profit	Revenue, per Ton.	Costs, per Ton.	Profit, per Ton.	Dividend.
	Tons.	Ozs.	£	s. d	s. d.	s. d.	Per Cent.
1906	178,854	73,101	93,883	31 6·61	24 0·66	10 5·98	10
1905	175,675	68,407	77,286	32 10·13	24 0·54	8 9·59	10

It will be observed that at this mine working costs were practically the same last year as in 1905, but it must be borne in mind that they were considerably higher in 1904, the average for that year having been 30s. 2d. per ton. As regards ore reserves the North Randfontein is in a stronger position than either of the other three producing subsidiaries. The estimated amount of ore in sight in this mine at the end of 1906 was 425,968 tons, of an average assay value of 12.3 dwts. over a width of thirty inches, and 58,749 tons of 4.9 dwts. value over the same width. These figures compare with 375,074 tons, of an average value of 11.14 dwts. and 63,085 tons averaging 5.17 dwts., both over thirty inches width, at the end of 1905. The result of the past year's development was to improve the average value of the whole mine to the extent of 4s. 8d. per ton. The life of the mine is officially estimated at forty-five years from June, 1905.

Porges Randfontein.

The Porges Company is in a different position to either of the other Randfontein subsidiaries by reason of the fact that, in addition to its own mine, it has a large interest in the South Randfontein, holding 100,000 shares in the latter. On this interest the Porges receives an annual dividend of £10,000, which is nearly sufficient to meet its own debenture interest. In 1902 Porges shareholders received a distribution of South Randfontein scrip, and they have agitated on more than one occasion since for a further distribution, but the directors have thought it wise to retain this asset. At the meeting a year ago the chairman referred to the question of a distribution of scrip, and said they were not out of the wood with regard to labour, "and it is absolutely necessary we should use our judgment in a matter of this kind, and not deprive the company of the strong position which it holds, merely for the sake of gratifying shareholders by a distribution of assets which at some future date might be absolutely necessary to the company." In view of the reason given—viz., the uncertainty of the labour outlook—it is particularly interesting at this juncture to note the latest views of the board on this point. At the meeting held recently at Johannesburg the chairman said that since they withdrew from the Native Labour Association they had been able to make good the deficiency, "and now we have sufficient natives for all our requirements, which we believe will be fully maintained." Noting this change of tone shareholders may think they are reasonably entitled to look for a scrip bonus before very long. They must not, however, be too hopeful, as at the close of the meeting a year ago the chairman observed that he did not think there would be any immediate necessity for distributing a share bonus while good profits were being made and regular cash dividends were in view. A feature of the past year's results of this company was an increase in working costs, as will be seen from the comparative figures set out below:—

Year.	Ore Crushed.	Gold Yield.	W'rking Profit.	Revenue, per Ton.	Costs, per Ton.	Profit, per Ton.	Dividend.
	T ns.	Ozs.	£	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	Per Cent.
1906	169,828	74,127	109,298	36 10·71	23 0·25	12 10 46	10
*1905	66,976	28,850	43,505	36 2 34	23 4·54	12 9· 8	10

* Five months only.

No explanation is given of the increase in the cost of winning the gold. As regards ore reserves, the quantity of higher grade material opened up is much larger than twelve months ago, while the tonnage of low grade ore is about half the amount previously reported. At the end of 1906 there were 357,670 tons, of an average assay value of 11.2 dwts. and 63,839 tons at 4.6 dwts., compared with 257,543 tons averaging 12.3 dwts. and 135,542 tons averaging 4.6 dwts. at the end of 1905. A satisfactory feature is that the value of the ore in the Porges mine is stated to show improvement at depth. The life of the mine is officially estimated at 25½ years from June, 1905.

Robinson Randfontein.

The Robinson Randfontein has the largest capital (including debentures) of the four producing subsidiaries, but its earnings have not been proportionally as good as those of the other three. Last year the revenue per ton was practically the same as in 1905, but working costs were lower and the profit consequently better. The comparative results are given below:—

Year.	Ore Crushed.	Gold Yield.	W'king Profit.	Revenu, per Ton.	Costs, per Ton.	Profit, per Ton.	Dividend.
	Tons.	ozs.	£	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	Per Cent.
1906	131,246	68,524	68,956	31 11·52	24 4 21	7 7 31	10
1905	175,829	66,726	62,169	32 0	24 11·15	7 0·85	10

At the annual meeting a year ago the chairman commented upon the comparatively low grade of ore. He said the scarcity of native labour had restricted sorting and that water difficulties often rendered the best stopes inaccessible. He added: "With the installation of the requisite pumping plant to cope with the water at all times, which is now completed, the opening up of the sixth and other levels and a higher sorting percentage, we anticipate a considerably higher grade during the present year with increased profits." The sorting percentage last year was higher, but it will be seen that the anticipated improvement in revenue per ton was not obtained, and but for a reduction in working costs, the profit would have been a shade less instead of better. Shareholders are now told that "shaft sinking is being vigorously carried on, and as the levels are being opened up the effect should be felt in an improvement of the grade of ore crushed and an increase in the profits." It is to be hoped that anticipations will not again fail to materialise. The ore reserves at the end of December last were 193,050 tons, averaging 10.4 dwts. per ton and 71,189 tons averaging 4.4 dwts., compared with 236,136 tons assaying 9.93 dwts. and 114,738 tons at 5.47 dwts. at the end of 1905. It will be noted that the ore in this mine is of lower grade than that of the other three producing subsidiaries. The life of the mine is officially estimated as thirty-eight years from June, 1905.

"Finance."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the Central Stock Exchange, Ltd. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper. Thin paper edition for foreign post.

South Randfontein.

The South Randfontein is the only company of the four producing subsidiaries which reports a smaller profit for 1906 than for 1905. This was due to a falling off in the grade of ore treated, the reduction effected in working costs having been insufficient to counterbalance the decrease in revenue per ton. The results of the company's operations during the last two years are given in the subjoined table:—

Year.	Ore Crushed.	Gold Yield.	Working Profit.	Revenue per Ton.	Costs, per Ton.	Profit, per Ton.	Dividend.
	Tons.	Ozs.	£	s. d.	s. d.	s. d.	Per Cent.
1906	171,892	69,686	67,097	33 8·42	26 0·34	7 8·08	10
1905	165,315	63,775	69,820	35 1·37	26 8·02	8 5·35	10

The only explanation given of the decline in revenue is that it was "owing to temporary causes, which have now been overcome." On the subject of working costs, however, the management is much more explicit. At the recent meeting the chairman pointed out that although there had been a reduction, the working expenses of this mine were still 2s. per ton higher than those of the neighbouring mines. This he attributed to high expenditure for pumping, but the plant has been extended, and it is expected that the costs for the current year will be considerably less than those of the last twelve months. This mine, exceptionally, shows a falling off in the ore reserves position compared with twelve months ago. At the end of the past year the South Randfontein had opened up 377,712 tons of ore assaying 10.7 dwts. and 187,139 tons averaging 5.4 dwts. per ton, whereas the quantity at the end of 1905 was 424,070 tons assaying 10.7 dwts. and 150,799 tons at 5.5 dwts., both computations being on the basis of a width of thirty inches. The life of this property is estimated at twenty-nine years from June, 1905.

It will, I think, be gathered from the facts and figures set out above that the shares of the North and Porges companies are the best selections out of those of the four producing mines. With their present equipment of 100 stamps each it would seem that annual dividends of 10 per cent. are about as much as can be expected from them, but there is a likelihood of their rate of production being increased before very long, as, owing to the satisfactory results that have attended the experiments with tube mills at the North Randfontein, these adjuncts to the stamp battery are to be installed at the other mines. The tube mills will serve to augment the output of gold by increasing the crushing capacity and giving a better extraction of the gold contents of the ore. In the market North Randfonteins are valued so that they yield about eight per cent. per annum, but the return on the market price of Porges is only about six per cent. Those content with such yields might do much worse than pick up the shares referred to, as there is every prospect (assuming a sufficiency of labour) of a steady return of at least that amount for a large number of years. As speculations for a moderate profit in a good Kaffir market the other quoted Robinson stocks dealt with above are not without attraction. How the prices of the best-known shares of the group have moved during the last four years is shown by the subjoined table:—

Share.	1906.		1905.		1904.		1903.
	Highest.	Lowest.	Highest.	Lowest.	Highest.	Lowest.	Highest.	Lowest.
Block A Randfontein	1½	½	1 3/16	5/8	1 3/16	5/8	1½	¾
Langlaagte Estate	3	2 3/16	4 1/4	2½	4 1/4	3½	4½	3 3/16
North Randfontein	1 13/16	1 5/16	2½	1 3/16	2 5/16	1 3/16	2 5/16	1 3/16
Porges Randfontein	1 15/16	1 3/16	1 3/16	1 1/16	2 1/16	1 1/16	2 3/16	1½
Robinson Randfontein	1½	15/16	2	1	2 3/16	1 7/16	1 15/16	1
South Randfontein	1 3/16	1	2 1/16	1 3/16	2½	1 3/16	3 1/16	1

Over-stoutness is not difficult to permanently cure when the right remedy is found. Antipon is now in universal favour. The Methodist Recorder says:—"It is satisfactory to know that Antipon is the practical result of a specialist's researches and discoveries, so that reliance can be placed upon its efficacy." Price 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. per bottle, of all chemists, or of The Antipon Company, 13, Olmar-street, London, S.E.

On Getting Insurance Advice—The Prevention of Corruption Act—Solicitors as Insurance Agents.

The Prevention of Corruption Act came into force at the beginning of this year, with the result that some solicitors have since reconsidered a practice which some of them always thought reprehensible. It has been a very common custom for solicitors to charge clients for giving them advice about insurance, and then to send the proposal on to the insurance company, and receive a commission for the introduction. The great majority of solicitors know practically nothing about insurance, especially about life assurance, so that in most cases their advice is not worth taking, much less worth paying for. A solicitor is generally an agent for one particular company, which is quite likely to be sound and respectable, but it by no means follows that the policies which it issues are anything like so good as could be obtained from some other offices. The advice of the solicitor, however, is to insure in the office of which he is an agent. At the same time, as he is an agent of an insurance company he is also the agent of his client, and to take a commission from the company seems quite clearly to bring him under the Corrupt Practices Act, and the law is now interpreted in this way by most members of the legal profession.

It appears, however, that Mr. Arthur Tarling, "Consulting Specialist for Life Assurance," is prepared to help the lawyers out of the difficulty created by the Corrupt Practices Act. A solicitor to whom he sent a circular kindly forwarded it to me. The circular is such a gem of grammar, punctuation, and impudence, that I print it complete.

CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT.

Private and Confidential.

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in sending you my booklet, "Unbiassed Advice on Life Assurance."

In view of the new Act, whereby anyone acting in a fiduciary position cannot be an agent (receiving commission) for any Insurance Co. and in consequence placing many professional men (at present holding an agency for some Life Office) in a very awkward position, I should be pleased to have an opportunity of discussing the situation regarding any of your clients, who may now, or at any future time be placing their Assurances through your firm, it would only be necessary under these circumstances, to hand your client my book, and he could either Phone, call or write me, when I would be pleased to advise him as to the best form of Assurance to take up at his particular age, thus by putting your client into direct communication with me the probable result would be, that I should complete a much larger amount of Assurance than if you carried the matter through yourselves, thereby benefiting your firm to a greater extent than under existing conditions.

My position towards your firm would be the same as the Assurance Society has been to you in the past, with the difference that you would not be acting as agent for any company, nor would you know which Society I advise for any particular form of Assurance, thereby securing your firm in every respect. I should be pleased to give you as references the names of several members of your profession, whose assurance contracts I have had the pleasure of completing, also the name of my bankers, and I should be glad to have an opportunity of seeing you at an early date to discuss the situation.—Yours faithfully,

Arthur Tarling.

It will be seen that the proposal is that solicitors should become agents for Mr. Tarling, and receive commission from him, instead of being agents for insurance companies and receiving it from them. By what process the Corrupt Practices Act can be held to sanction the former course and prohibit the latter, I fail to perceive.

Mr. Tarling enclosed a booklet with his circular, which he calls "The Advantage of Income Tax." The first five pages are an almost verbatim reproduction of a small pamphlet signed by a well-known insurance writer; but no hint is given that Mr. Tarling has appropriated this matter from another source, though a few lines from Mr. Gladstone, and a few from Max O'Rell are duly acknowledged.

Looking through the pamphlet, the only indication of the advice likely to be received from Mr. Tarling is afforded by some figures which are given about annuities. These suggest to me that Mr. Tarling and I would recommend different companies from which to purchase annuities, and that the company he favours is one which is well known for the exceptionally liberal terms of commission which it pays. On the whole, I do not think many solicitors are likely to become agents for Mr. Tarling, and certainly the solicitor who sent his productions on to me will not do so; his comments are too uncomplimentary for publication.

The question of where to go for good advice about life assurance is by no means an easy one to answer. An agent, or even a high official, of any particular company, is not the best person to apply to, since his business is to sell the policies of his own office, which may not be the best for any purpose, and which almost certainly are not the best for all purposes, and it makes a very great deal of difference to a policy-holder whether he selects his life assurance well or badly. I have not the slightest wish to in any way discredit insurance brokers as a body; especially in connection with fire insurance their work is very important and of extremely great value to their clients. In some cases they are little short of indispensable, many of them are firms of old and high standing, and nothing but good can come from placing insurance through them. Somehow the case seems different with people who make a special feature of life assurance. In some respects expert advice is even more necessary in this matter than in fire insurance. I do not profess to know all the independent experts in life assurance, but I have seen a good deal of the advice given by many of them, and I nearly always notice the peculiar coincidence that the best office for a client's particular purpose happens to be one which pays very high rates of commission, and I usually have no difficulty whatever in at once pointing out some other company which gives a policy that is far better for the purpose required. After all, these insurance brokers are insurance broking for the purpose of making money, and perhaps it is hardly to be expected that they would advise a policy which would yield them £50 in commission when by different advice their commission would be £100. Still less can it be expected that they would recommend offices like the Clergy Mutual, the Old Equitable, the London Life, and the Metropolitan, none of which pay any commission at all, and consequently give extremely good results to their policy-holders, some of which are better than can be obtained elsewhere.

Another alternative is to consult newspapers which make a special feature of insurance, and which give some indication that the writer is well acquainted with his subject. I know as a fact that the insurance contributors to some papers act as insurance brokers, and sometimes earn very considerable sums in commission by recommending correspondents of the paper to insure in a particular company. Especially since the Corrupt Practices Act came into force, it seems to me probable that no respectable newspaper would allow its insurance contributor to receive commission. The writer might fairly be considered the agent of the correspondent, and as such it would probably be illegal—and, to say the least of it, improper—for him to receive any commission. I certainly hold this view, and should not allow anyone connected with Truth to receive commission, and I know that the same view is held and acted upon by some other papers. To encourage people to write to Truth, or to any other paper, is to add considerably to the work of the staff; sometimes the replies to correspondents can be given quite easily and with very little trouble, but at other times the giving of the best advice about life assurance involves a good deal of research, and the writing of several long letters. Still, taking it all in all, I think the best plan for people who wish to assure to the best advantage is to write to papers in which insurance is written about in a practical and capable way. For my own part, I am entirely pleased to continue in connection with insurance the practice of replying to correspondents about this and other subjects, which has long been a feature of Truth.

A Canadian Wild Cat.

"It is seldom our good fortune," write Wm. Freeman and Co., 76, Cornwall-road, Bayswater, W., "to offer such a remarkable opportunity to investors to join a syndicate, coming in on bedrock terms, participating in the huge profits which, it is apparent to us, are as certain to ensue as night to follow the day." This is the preliminary flourish in a circular relating how "a well-known mining engineer and prospector" has discovered "huge bodies of minerals of almost inestimable wealth" in a "hitherto unknown district beyond the mountains which mark the confines of civilisation" in the Dominion of Canada. Of course, the position of the district is a secret, and so is the name of the prospector, but details are given of the "enormous quantities" of gold, silver, copper, and iron which he found. After his first discovery the prospector, it is stated, came back "and returned again with instruments and appliances to enable him to assay and test the value of the mineral deposits by excavating considerable quantities." Assistants accompanied him, but they were "taken to the place by a circuitous route and have also been sworn to secrecy." Still, it must not be supposed that the district has the drawback of inaccessibility, as a trunk railway now under construction will pass near the property. On the strength of this very convincing narrative, Wm. Freeman and Co. exhort you to subscribe for shares in the G.N.W. and General Syndicate, Limited, of Carlton House, Regent-street, W.C., which is to equip and despatch "a staking-out expedition" to secure possession of the property whose value is modestly estimated at "many millions of pounds sterling." The offer is manifestly based on the assumption that you will believe all that you are told by this Bayswater firm—in other words, that you are an unmitigated ass.

Yankee Sharps and British Flats.

The mean and dirty business of gammoning people in humble circumstances to put their hard-earned savings into a concern styled the British Development and Exploration Company, "incorporated under the laws of the State of Arizona, U.S.A.," is still being carried on by a gang of sharps operating from Craven House, Kingsway, W.C. Originally they masqueraded as the London Stock and Bond Exchange, and then they came out as "Martin and Church, fiscal agents." In the latter character they issued a couple of months ago a big newspaper-like circular packed with Yankee flapdoodle about the fortunes that have been made out of gold mines, the object being, of course, to persuade the ingenuous reader that he, too, might amass wealth by subscribing for shares—sixpence each, payable in three instalments—in the above-named company. Practically the same circular is again being distributed from the same address under the title of the Western Mining News, but the name of Martin and Church has now disappeared from it, and some other changes have been made. As I pointed out on February 13, the whole thing is a palpable ramp. The fact that the victims are mostly poor and ignorant people—one whose case I cited was a private soldier who had been induced to buy 180 of these worthless shares—makes it doubly reprehensible, and it is a pity that the police have not yet acted upon the hint which I gave them.

The Benevolence of Wm. Murray.

A beautiful trait in the character of the genuine City philanthropist is the unruffled, unwearying magnanimity with which he persists in his efforts to do you a good turn after you have repeatedly shown him the most churlish ingratitude. Look at this touching circular from Mr. William Murray, manager of the London and Counties Exchange, Imperial-buildings, New Bridge-street, E.C. The specialty of this institution is a method of "bi-marginal investment." Murray assures you that for the past two years an "operation" has been successfully carried out once a fortnight. Not only have the shareholders never once yet failed to make a profit, but "our arrangements have now been so perfected that we regard a loss as practically impossible"—in fact, this infallible method of operating easily withstood the strain of "the recently extremely agitated condition of the American market, which was sufficient to test the efficacy of any style of dealing." Time after time you have been invited—nay, implored—to let the Exchange make money for you (as it is ready to do) free, gratis, and for nothing. Time after time you have turned a deaf ear to these importunities. Still you have not exhausted Murray's patience and generosity. "We regret to find," he writes, "that we have not yet been favoured with your instructions," but, with the mild reproach implied in those words, he passes over your unkindness and gives you yet another chance "to participate" in these wonderful operations. Through the reading of Truth, however, you are—unfortunately for Murray and the rest of his tribe—steeled to resist the temptation to join in any such blind pool, and so you pass on the circular to "Vigilant" as an addition to his fine and large collection of bucket-shop literature.

"References Avoided."

There is an unconsciously humorous paragraph with the above heading in a publication entitled "Hints to Speculators and Investors," which is being widely distributed by Laurie and Vincent, 70, Queen-street, E.C. It is suggested that many people labour under the delusion that "there is a great deal of formality to go through by those who want to open an account with us." On the contrary, Laurie and Vincent explain, it is a very simple matter—"all that is necessary for the operator to do is to send us a deposit in accordance with the nature of the operation desired to be entered into." Laurie and Vincent require no references—only cash! No doubt the noodles who are inveigled into this bucket-shop—one of the most disreputable class—say to themselves, "what a nice confiding firm," and it is only when they have lost their money that it dawns upon their minds that, though they did not give, they ought to have demanded references, or, rather, to have made independent inquiries about Laurie and Vincent.

The Mining Manual

Mr. Walter R. Skinner, 11 and 12, Clement's-lane, E.C., has just issued the 1907 edition of his "Mining Manual," a standard work of reference now in its twenty-first year of publication. The manual has a well-established reputation, alike for the comprehensiveness and the accuracy of its information, which covers every section of the mining market. In the present volume particulars are furnished of 3,054 companies, of which 410 are Australian, 1,033 African, and 1,611 miscellaneous. Alphabetical lists of mining directors and secretaries and a dictionary of mining terms are included, and there are tables of the individual crushings of South African, Australian, and Indian mines. In his preface Mr. Skinner gives an interesting review of the mining year.

"Vigilant's" Letter Box.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

Railways.

Mexite.—Hold the shares. I know of no special reason for the decline, which is probably quite temporary. Tortoise.—Both are quite untried concerns, the lines in neither case being completed. A purchase of the companies' securities must therefore be regarded as speculative, and certainly unsuitable for a lady. Bucks. 1. A sound stock, but it would perhaps be wisest to choose something not South American this time, on the principle of spreading the risk. 2. United of the Havana Five per Cent. Irredeemable Debentures (1906) would be suitable. I referred to this issue in last week's article. 3. No; the arrangement should improve the position of the bondholders.

Mines.

Loyal au Mort.—I have not a very high opinion of either, but you may be able to realise to better advantage by waiting a little. An Exile.—a. You may as well keep these for dividends. b. The rate of dividend is to be reduced to 2s. 6d. per quarter, but this is no more than was anticipated, and I think you might continue to hold your shares. c. Prospects depend mainly upon the result of future development, so that the shares must be regarded as a speculative holding. d. I do not see much attraction in these at present. J. B., Croydon.—As you suggest, developments may improve, but you could make a more attractive selection at present than these shares. Poor.—I do not see much attraction in No. 1 or No. 6, but No. 2 appears a hopeful holding, although the company has not yet reached the dividend-paying stage. 3. There is a chance of better ore being struck at depth, but the shares must be considered a speculative holding. 4. A moderate rise in the near future seems likely. 5. Dividends of 2s. 6d. per quarter are being paid. Prospects, as in the case of No. 3, depend mainly on the result of development at depth.

Mixed Securities.

County Cavan.—1. They might be held for the time being. 2. They may have some recovery in a better market. 3. Fairly satisfactory. Cleopatra.—1 and 2. The first is not very attractive, and I have only a moderate opinion of the second. 3 and 4. The water stock is fair, but you might improve upon the others. 5. It is obviously a system of gambling—not investment—which you had better leave alone. 6. Might be held. Stuart.—1 and 2. I should give the preference to the 4½ per cent. bonds. 4 and 5. Both satisfactory. Cockscomb.—1. Hold. 2. It is a pity you did not take the handsome profit you might have secured not long ago. However, you might hold now, as some recovery is possible. 3. I would hold Randfonteins. As to your other questions, I do not know the firms named, and in any case I cannot make recommendations. Liven.—No. 5 do not seem very promising, but 2, 3, and 4 might be kept for the present. Both the Argentine and Japanese bonds are worth keeping. Rengu.—1. Fair, and might be held. 2. I have not a high opinion of these. 3. See my reference to Chillagoes last week. 4. A gamble. 5. Somewhat speculative, and dividends problematical. 6. General market depression to a large extent, but see also this week's comments. Fidelis.—1 and 2 make good investments. 3 and 4. Could, I think, be improved upon. 5. Keep your Great Western Ordinary. 6. A doubtful holding. You might do well to transfer the money to something else. Karlsruhe.—1. The company has naturally suffered from a cessation of the Far Eastern war, which augmented profits abnormally. Provided you put the proceeds into something with great promise a sale would be a good policy. There are, of course, risks to face, and Easterns as a holding are quite good. 2. Hold for a recovery. 3. Not a stock I care for. You might exchange into something more promising. Quilp.—It would be prudent to sell the shares you mention at a favourable moment, and, allowing for the risk you recognise, the debentures would be all right.

Insurance.

Sergeant F. S.—See my Insurance Notes of March 6. If you continue you are very unlikely to get what you expect, and, unless you have paid for some years, I should drop the policy. Lady Godiva.—1. This accident society is quite good and satisfactory in every way. 2. This corporation is of little worth, and if you contemplate insurance you could do better elsewhere. J. B. and Neptune.—I shall deal in an early issue with the question of servants' compensation insurance. There is no need to take out a policy for the present, as the Act does not come into force till July 1. Ben.—I do not recommend it.

Miscellaneous.

Risborough.—Associated Cement Preference are speculative, but not altogether unattractive. Apollinaris Ordinary make a fair, high yielding investment, and the other is attractive. Steel.—They stand at such a low price that it might be desirable to hold for a possible recovery. They are not devoid of speculative qualities. A. P. B. R.—1. They make a good holding, and you would not be far wrong to increase the number by taking the new shares. 2. They also make a good holding. 3. The proposed exchange seems wise enough. Cato.—1. No doubt you saw my reference to the promoters of this concern last week. I know nothing as to the progress of the liquidation. 2. April 1 and October 1. H. B., Leeds.—I am making inquiries about this promoting syndicate; meanwhile, on the strength of what I have already heard, I advise you to have nothing to do with it. Jones.—Probably you can, but you had better consult a solicitor. Cap.—By this time you will have seen that it was just as well for you that they did not buy at that figure: there was a severe fall a few days later. Medico.—The Bank shares might be held. As to your second question, I cannot make any recommendation. T. T. C.—It looks suspicious, and might be avoided. Columio.—The fact that the last dividend on the Ordinary shares was made up by a contribution from the founder of the concern is surely a sufficient indication of the state of affairs. You do not say whether your shares are Ordinary or Preference. It might be worth while to hold the latter, but not the former. R. C. J., Devonport.—Have nothing whatever to do with the International Securities Syndicate. It is a concern of the bucket-shop type, and its charges for premium or lottery bonds are enormously in excess of their market value. Cape.—1. See answer to R. C. J. 2. There is a fair chance of a moderate recovery in the price, but the shares are a very speculative holding. 3. Not very attractive. A. M., Perth.—In spite of the "reference" which you cite, the business is manifestly risky; in any event, you would deserve to lose your money if you put it into such a disreputable and mischievous concern after being informed of its true character. Beauchamp.—I do not know the concerns you mention, but see Rule 8. C. C.—So far as I recollect, I have not previously heard of the firm you name, but all the touting lottery agents style themselves "bankers." The circulars, as I have frequently explained, are grossly misleading. J. S., Holland Park.—A bucket-shop firm, against whom I have warned the public.

 Owing to the Easter holidays, my replies to a number of inquiries are held over till next week.

Miscellaneous Market More Cheerful—Some Attractive Industrials—Breweries at a Standstill—Dock Companies and the Port Bill.

Though it cannot be said that any very substantial improvement has yet actually occurred in the Miscellaneous market, there is certainly a more cheerful feeling, and the prospect of a broadening out of public interest and general expansion of business is now brighter than it has been for some time past. The trade of the country remains wonderfully prosperous, and among the leading industrials there are a number of shares which, at the present prices, are very attractive. Once or twice recently I have alluded to the flourishing condition of some of the great companies engaged in the steel and armament, shipbuilding and engineering trades. On the current quotations, Vickers, Sons and Maxim ordinary shares offer a yield of 6 per cent., and Sir W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth and Co.'s, a little over 5 per cent. Cammell, Laird and Co. have had a remarkably good year, the net profit being £273,780, as compared with £231,807 in 1905, and the directors continue to pursue a sound financial policy. On the basis of the 10 per cent. dividend declared for the last two years the ordinary £5 shares, now standing at about 8¾, return 5⅞ per cent. Stewart and Lloyds, Limited—an amalgamation of several firms of iron and steel tube manufacturers—have also had a record year, the profits having risen from £226,218 in 1905 to £263,174 in 1906. For the ninth year in succession the ordinary dividend is 10 per cent., which, on the market value of the shares, affords a yield of about 5 5-16 per cent. The outlook for all these companies is very promising, and though such investments obviously involve some degree of speculative risk—5 or 6 per cent. cannot be obtained without it—the shares are well worthy of attention. The textile industries are likewise booming, and in this section, too, a favourable opportunity for hopeful investments now presents itself to those who are ready to take the same speculative risk. Bradford Dyers ordinary shares, for instance, should be a good purchase at the current price of 23s. 6d.—24s., which shows a yield of 5⅞ per cent. Among motor shares, Darracqs, Argylls, Daimlers, and Humbers have all had slight advances. Brewery securities have been more or less inert—a condition which is, at any rate, an improvement upon the monotonous dropping of prices that has been recorded for the past few months. It is obviously futile to expect any recovery, at least, until something definite is known with regard to the proposed new Licensing Bill, but there are now rumours afloat that the measure may not after all be brought forward this year.

In connection with a rise in London and India Dock Deferred, I have received an inquiry as to the prospects of the company's Bill relating to the Port of London, the second reading of which is expected to be taken this month. By a reduction of shipping charges, the Bill secures the support of the shipowners. On the other hand, by the imposition of new dues on imported goods, it arouses the hostility of practically the whole of the trading and manufacturing community, and a number of representative bodies are now organising a determined and powerful opposition to the measure. According to the estimates that have been published, the loss that the company would incur by the lowering of shipping charges would be converted into an enormous gain of revenue from the proposed new dues on goods. From the shareholders' point of view this is, of course, a highly laudable scheme; but Parliament necessarily has to consider other interests. The urgent need for improvements in the accommodation and reform in the management of the docks is generally admitted. But the Royal Commission reported in favour of public ownership, the last Government endorsed the policy of public control, and it is scarcely to be expected that the present Government and the present House of Commons will recede from that position by allowing this Bill to become law. Any hopes that are being built upon the passing of the Bill seem to me, therefore, to be doomed to disappointment.

VIGILANT.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

A PIMLICO MYSTERY.

THE difficulty of making away with the dead body of a murdered man is universally known. The following story relates an extraordinary discovery made some while ago by the police while pursuing investigations in a case of this description.

The Earl of Kirkcudbright, K.T., had, in the days of his youth, achieved some distinction in politics, and had been rewarded for his services to his party with the coveted "Thistle," but later on in life he somehow evaporated, and, having spent in the meanwhile the bulk of his originally considerable fortune, retired to a small place he had in Aberdeenshire, and there passed a recluse existence among his few remaining retainers.

For upwards of twenty years he never left his remote Scottish home. Then one day he suddenly electrified his housekeeper, Jeannie McTaggart (the Earl was a bachelor, and had no near surviving relatives) by announcing his intention of taking a trip to London, where he expected to remain for some two or three weeks.

The good woman received this intelligence with evident concern. She knew nothing of London except by repute, never having herself travelled farther south than Edinburgh. But from what she had heard of the great metropolis, she believed it to be a terribly dangerous and wicked place, given over to the dominion of Satan and his legions. All the male population, according to her notion of it, were rogues, profligates, or criminals; all the female population were—— Well, no better than they should be. For her part, she'd as soon have adventured herself into the bottomless pit as into London, and she shook her old head over her master's madness in going thither, with sorrow, disapproval, and foreboding.

"What can ail the laddie?" she said to herself (she always spoke of her master as the laddie, for she had nursed him when he was in frocks, and to her, in spite of his sixty years, he was still a mere boy). "What can ail him to gang awa' to that city o' the deil? I ken weel what 'twull be. He'll fa' into the hands o' rogues and thieves and hussies, wha'll strip him of a' he's got left. Oh, laddie, laddie! hae ye gane clean daft?"

So the old woman expressed herself about the Earl's projected visit to London, the scene of his former political triumphs, now long forgotten by the public; the scene, too, of the extravagant and ruinous expenditure by which he had been reduced to comparative penury. I do not know whether she possessed the quality, real or imagined, which the Scotch describe as being "fey." If, however, her forebodings of disaster were merely vague and speculative, it was at least a remarkable coincidence that they were destined, in no long time, to be more than realised, and that the unfortunate Earl should disappear (to use a euphemistic term) under circumstances which pointed unmistakably to foul play.

One is bound to admit—from what afterwards transpired—that his lordship to no small extent brought his fate upon himself. In the days of his youth, even while cutting a considerable figure in the public life of the metropolis, he had been what so many young men about town are. These things are not talked about in mixed company. They cannot be more than discreetly hinted at in a respectable newspaper. Enough to say that the young Scotsman had made himself much too familiar with the seamy side of a certain phase of London life. But, on his retirement to his northern home, he had pulled himself together, abjured all excesses, and settled down into a perfectly moral and reputable middle life.

Now, however, after twenty years, the old evil leanings and impulses had suddenly come back to him with irresistible force. Such lapses, or rather relapses, are really far from uncommon. They afford one of the most painfully interesting problems to the student of moral psychology—this "throwing back" (as it is called), in mature age, to the long laid aside follies of youth. I do not propose to embark upon any discussion of the phenomenon. I am content to leave that to moralists, to make what they can of it. I have merely to record the well-established fact that such relapses do occur, and that to a relapse of this kind the unfortunate Earl fell a victim. The impulse was beyond his power to withstand. He felt (if I may use a vulgar, but forcible, expression) that he must go "on the bust" or die. So "on the bust" he went. That is the long and short of the matter. I need not add, of course, that he kept his disreputable intentions strictly to himself.

He took with him all the ready money he had—about £100. He also took with him something else, which he never let out of his personal possession. This was his much valued insignia of the Thistle, which always, since it was first conferred on him, he kept carefully under his own eye. It was a foolish thing to do—thus to take it with him to London, especially in view of the circumstances under which he was going thither, for the insignia was of considerable intrinsic value, and likely enough to prove a temptation to the class of person into whose company he should be thrown. But that aspect of the matter did not, apparently, present itself to the Earl, or, if it did, the force of habit overrode every other consideration. At any rate—which is the material point—he did take his Thistle with him to London on that fatal journey. I mention the fact because it was the subsequent discovery of this insignia in other hands that first drew the attention of the police to the Earl's disappearance and made it abundantly clear that the unfortunate man had been the victim of foul play.

The Earl, on his departure from home, had informed his housekeeper that he should not return for three weeks, at least, and that possibly his absence might extend to a fortnight beyond that period. He should write to her, however, a day or two before his return, so that she should have ample time to air his bed—a precaution about which his lordship was almost most particular. It was when he had been absent just over four weeks that the good woman had the first hint of the realisation—the worse than realisation—of her forebodings. She received a call from a highly-placed police official in Aberdeen, who had come over to make some inquiries in consequence of an urgent message from Scotland Yard.

The circumstances which led to the visit were these: A few days earlier an insignia of the Thistle had been offered, in pledge, to a London pawnbroker (whom I will call Mr. Isaacs), carrying on business at an address near Victoria Station. The appearance of the man who presented the insignia was such that the pawnbroker's suspicions were immediately aroused. He questioned him closely as to how it had come into his possession; and the fellow told a cock-and-bull story of having picked it up in a sale-room several years ago. Further questioned as to the locality of the sale-room, his replies were so vague, confused, and unsatisfactory that the pawnbroker very properly (while dissembling his suspicions and pretending to make out the contract note), sent for a police constable, and upon the latter's arrival immediately gave his customer in charge. Thereupon the fellow assumed a blustering and excited tone, declared vehemently that his explanation of the way in which he had come by the Thistle was perfectly true, and that if they dared to detain him he would make it hot for them. The constable, however, noticing the shifty expression in the fellow's eyes, and the evasiveness of his answers when questioned, treated this blustering assumption of innocence with the contempt it deserved, and insisted on conveying him in a cab to the nearest police station, the pawnbroker accompanying them. The upshot of it was that he was detained in custody for the night and brought up next morning, when the magistrate remanded him for a week, pending further inquiries.

The name and address which he had given to the pawnbroker proved, on investigation, to be purely fictitious. That was, of course, only to be expected. Thieves who pawn stolen property are never such fools as to give their real names and addresses. But an envelope found upon his person, when searched, fortunately provided the necessary clue. The police went, in plain clothes, to the address there given—that of a house in a rather shady street in Pimlico—where the door was opened to them by a notorious woman, who had more than once come under their notice in connection with robberies at her house (which she was always changing), though she had hitherto managed to escape conviction. This woman, beyond asserting that she knew nothing of the man in custody and had never heard of the Thistle which was the subject of the charge, declined to give them any information.

It was, however, pretty obvious to the officers that the woman was lying, and independent inquiries made among the neighbours and in other directions amply confirmed them in this opinion. They ascertained that the man in custody, whose real name, or at any rate whose latest alias, was Richard Wilkes, was an associate of the woman's, and had been seen about with her in places of public resort. More important still was the information supplied to them by an elderly cabman, who happened, just then, to be laid up in hospital, as the result of an accident, but, having read about the case in the papers, wrote to inform the police that he had an important statement to make to them. The officer in charge of the case attended at the hospital and took down the man's statement, of which the following is the substance:

It appeared that this cabman, who had been upon the London streets for over thirty years, had, more than once, in bygone days, driven Lord Kircudbright from his club to the Houses of Parliament; and only a fortnight ago, by a curious coincidence, an elderly gentleman, whose face cabbie seemed to remember, though he couldn't at the time put a name to him, had hailed him in Regent-street, late in the evening, and had been driven by him to a certain address in Pimlico—that of the house, in fact, which has been mentioned above. It was not until some days had elapsed that the identity of his fare—whose likeness to some one whom he had seen before had, in the meanwhile, exercised him a good deal—at length flashed upon cabbie. But he was now quite positive on the subject.

Clearly this was a circumstance of the highest importance. The Earl of Kircudbright practically identified as having been seen to enter that notorious person's house five days prior to the offering of a Thistle in pledge by one of the woman's known associates! Couple with this the fact that the Earl was a K.T., and had an eccentric habit of always carrying the insignia of his Order about with him, and it was pretty evident that the Thistle offered in pledge was his property, and that he had been robbed of it by one or other of the gang with whom the woman was mixed up.

It was at this point that the message was transmitted to Aberdeen from New Scotland Yard instructing the police in that city to make inquiries at his lordship's country house; for so far as the C.I.D. could ascertain he had not been seen or heard of in London since the cabman had set him down at the door of that address in Pimlico; and the first thing to arrive at now was whether he had returned home, or, if not, whether his people at home were cognisant of his whereabouts.

When the officer from Aberdeen had heard what the Earl's housekeeper had to tell him—viz., that she had not heard a word from her master since his departure for London more than four weeks previously, he lost no time in communicating the information to Scotland

Yard, where it was at once seen that a new and grave significance was now imported into the case. The unfortunate Earl had not only been robbed; he had also disappeared. In other words, considering the circumstances of the case, and the character of the house, there was strong suspicion that he had been made away with.

In view of the gravity of the situation, a search-warrant was obtained by the officer in charge of the case, and the Pimlico house was raided by the police. The woman appeared to have anticipated something of the kind. At any rate, she had decamped, and the house was empty. But in searching the premises several significant discoveries were made—to wit, a number of pawnbrokers' duplicates, relating to various articles of jewellery pledged during the last few weeks, and—most important of all—a silk pocket-handkerchief marked with the ill-fated nobleman's monogram. Inquiries at the various pawnbrokers' further established the fact that a pair of valuable sleeve-links and a gold watch, each bearing his lordship's crest, were among the articles recently pledged; and the man Wilkes was identified in both cases as the person who had pledged them. On the score of robbery, therefore, the case against him was irresistibly complete.

At the next hearing of the case before the magistrate, after evidence on the minor charge of unlawful possession had been tendered, a remand to that day week was asked for, with the intimation that a more serious charge would probably then be preferred. Wilkes, who declined to say anything, except that he should reserve his defence, was accordingly remanded in custody.

In the meanwhile, the Earl's housekeeper was brought up from Scotland, by the police, to identify her master's property, and strenuous efforts were made to discover what had been done with the ill-fated man's body. For that he had been foully murdered by those who had robbed him no longer admitted of much doubt.

It was generally agreed that the discovery of the corpse was only a matter of time, for nothing is harder, in London, than to make away with a dead body, so as to obliterate all trace of its existence. The theory of the police was that it had been thrown into the river—from which the house where the murder had been committed stood only fifty yards away—and if this theory were correct, it must sooner or later be washed up. The river police received particular instructions to keep their eyes open for such a contingency.

But, in point of fact—as soon afterwards came out—it was not into the river that the unfortunate nobleman's body had been thrown. Its disappearance had been effected by methods very much less obvious and commonplace—methods, indeed, so unique and remarkable as to take the police (when they stumbled upon the discovery) by complete surprise. I use the phrase "stumbled upon" advisedly; for they ran their heads against the solution of the mysterious problem just when and where they least expected to do so.

The revelation was brought about in the police-court, at the next hearing of the case, and was the result of an involuntary and strikingly significant ejaculation into which the prisoner was surprised, in the course of the proceedings.

Old Jeannie McTaggart, the ill-fated Earl's housekeeper, had just been called to identify her master's watch and sleeve-links; she stared, as if petrified, at the prisoner; who, on catching sight of her, was instantly startled out of the dogged composure which he had hitherto maintained.

"Jeannie!" he ejaculated.

"May the de'il tak me!" she cried out, throwing up her hands in a gesture of the utmost amazement; "if it isna my ain puir laddie's ain dear sel'!"

* * * * *

So it was. Lord Kirkcudbright, in order to conceal his identity while seeing life in London, had adopted the alias of Richard Wilkes, had further guarded himself against possible identification by purchasing a ready-made outfit, on which there were no marks to give any hint of his real personality, and, having come to the end of his £100 sooner than he had expected, had been driven to pledge, one by one, his various personal effects, and when, at length, suspicion had been aroused by his offering his Thistle to Mr. Isaacs, he had refused, from sheer shame, to clear himself of the criminal charge by giving the true explanation, and so disclosing his identity. He calculated that the police would have great difficulty in bringing the supposed crime home to him, and that it would probably end in his being discharged for want of evidence. On this account, he had abstained, in the meanwhile, from exculpating himself by an admission that it was always open to him to make in the last resort.

The decamping of the woman with whom he had associated was so far a coincidence that it had no immediate connection with the present charge. Doubtless, her guilty conscience in reference to other matters had made her uneasy and impelled her to retire for a while into obscurity. That, however, is immaterial. The whole interest of this extraordinary case lies in the fact that the police should have spent nearly a fortnight in hunting for the dead body of a man whom they had, alive and in custody, all the while under their very noses.

ART NOTES.

I AM writing this in the country, with I do not quite know how many miles of green fields and budding hedge-rows between me and the nearest picture gallery. What is more, I have brought neither catalogues nor notes of any kind, so that I have only pleasantly vague recollections of the shows I have attended during the last week, and of which I ought to be writing now. I remember some Austrian paintings by Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Stokes at the Leicester Galleries, I think, and I know that they were good because I have such a pleasant recollection of them. And I remember some cat and dog drawings by Miss Muriel Hunt (I hope I have the name correctly) which I think must have been good, too, because I remember that I was not sorry I had been at the trouble of going there. But this may have been partly because I like cats. They are at a gallery in Mount-street, Grosvenor-square—Mr. Grundy's, if I am not mistaken. I remember, too, going into several galleries in Bond-street; in one of them—I am afraid to name it, lest I should make a mistake and give unintentional offence—there were some clever paintings by a New Zealand lady, though I am ashamed to say that her name has altogether escaped me. I make this open confession, and I cannot honestly say that I am penitent, because I do not feel at all inclined to write about picture galleries to-day. I would much rather expatiate upon the glorious view over which I can gaze, in the intervals of writing, and of the glorious weather which makes it possible to have tea on the lawn, even though March is hardly over. There is a bank of white violets close to me that scent the air very agreeably, and I should like to write about them—perhaps in verse. But, after all, this is not a column of Nature notes, so I am driven back to considering the perennial problem—why do people paint pictures? Some, no doubt, paint because they like it. I can understand that it would be a very delightful profession which allowed one to sit out of doors on a day like this and paint pictures of spring blossom and so forth, especially if one had an independent income. Some, again, though they must be in a very small minority nowadays, paint for the glory of Art—because it is in them to paint, and they cannot help it. Some, no doubt—who must be very optimistic—choose painting as a means of social advancement. My father, they argue, was a small shopkeeper—if I become an artist I shall be the next thing to a Gentleman (with a large G), even although I do not make a quarter of my father's income. (A party of excursionists with a concertina and beer have just passed down the lane at the back of the cottage. They are of both sexes, and very affectionate. And they would prove, very conclusively, to my supposititious artist, that one can be extremely happy in this world without being gentlefolk.) But the greatest number paint because, like most of us, they want to make a living. Things being as they are, this is sufficiently surprising in itself; but not nearly so much so as are the means in which they set about it. Art is, I suppose, the one profession left in the world in which the surest road to success is believed to lie in the forcing down the public throat of things which it does not want. I do not mean to say that it does not want pictures—personally, I believe it would be only too glad to get them—but the artist says, in so many words, You do not know what you want; still less do you know what you ought to want; you have got to want what I want you to want or else go without. And he starts out and invents a new school, whose main tenet is that human beings shall always be painted with pale purple faces of surprising ugliness. He has no lack of disciples—nobody ever has who starts a new artistic school—and they all paint hideous purple faces; and because the public does not buy their pictures, they abuse the public and call upon the Government to subsidise their noble aim of making England artistic whether it likes it or not. If a journalist, or a grocer, or a tailor carried on his business on such lines we should call him a lunatic. The only people who can really afford to do it are doctors and lawyers and clergymen; and they are all co-partners in trusts which control the supply of commodities which the public cannot, or thinks it cannot, do without.

Even supposing that the supporters of the Hideous Pale Purple Face School are right, and that theirs is the one only genuine brand of art goods, why can they not be a little more business-like in their methods of forcing that great truth home? (Exactly the same argument applies to Academicians, and, in fact, to each and all of the proprietors of all the original and only genuine art "schools.") Whence comes their resolute disregard of all the improvements which modern discovery has put into the hands of the business man? Consider the methods of any other kind of producer. He does not manufacture his goods and then store them neatly in a back room, and wait until the public comes along to buy them. He does everything in his power to impress them on the public mind. Take the question of price, again. If a cycle manufacturer finds that his prices are too high, he lowers them until they come within the financial reach of his customers. Does the Artist? Are there not thousands and thousands of us who would be only too glad to buy pictures if we could afford them? Does the artist ever think of catering for this vast army of potential customers? Not a bit of it. He continues to ask prices which put his work beyond the reach of any but millionaires, and then abuses the public because it does not buy. Accordingly the public, driven back upon reproductions and photographs, finds that it can get on very well without pictures, and does so. What would the Official Receiver have to say about a cycle manufacturer who had carried on his business on artistic lines, I wonder!

There is an enormous fortune awaiting the artist, or body of artists, who first realise the business potentialities of Art. He, or they, will, in the first place, organise a limited company, with sufficient capital for the needs of the enterprise. They will appoint an efficient sales manager, while they busy themselves turning out the stock as, and how, required. First of all the company will reduce prices by some 75 per cent. compared to prevalent rates. Its motto will be "Small profits and quick returns." It will advertise. Already, in my mind's eye, I can see the hoardings covered with such announcements as:—"What is Home without Vandyke Brown's Landscapes?" "Why buy Old Masters when you can get a genuine, brand-new portrait of yourself and family by Dauber, R.A., for next to nothing?" or "Avoid cheap, foreign-made pictures. Buy Pallet's real oil still-lifes and support Home Industries." The company will understand the art of tempting the public. It will publish full-page advertisements in the Daily Mail:—"Great Sale! Astounding sacrifices!! Real, hand-painted pictures by all the leading artists!!! Being sacrificed at one-quarter the original marked prices, to make room for new season's lines." Or, "Astounding offer. A real, heavily Dutch-gilt frame, in all the latest styles, given away absolutely free to every purchaser of paintings by members of the New English Art Club." It will have magnificent show-rooms in the leading shopping thoroughfares, so that intending purchasers can judge for themselves how the various paintings harmonise with various styles of wall-paper and furniture. It will send pictures on approval to any railway station in England, carriage paid one way. It will sell pictures on the hire-purchase system. It will make a specialty of second-hand pictures. It will—but there are no limits to the new notions it will introduce into the picture business. And it will pay dividends of several hundreds per cent. annually, and absolutely drive all competitors out of business. It will—but I hear that a band of holiday-makers have just broken into the copse at the bottom of the garden and are making hay of the primroses, and I am called upon by a superior power to repel them vi et armis.

MUSIC.

THE REVOLT OF THE CORNSTALKS.

PROFESSOR FRANKLIN PETERSON, Ormond Professor of Music at Melbourne University, sends me an interesting letter on the subject of the Australian musical examinations controversy, in which he has taken from the first such a leading part. The question at issue, it will be remembered, is simply whether Australia should henceforward do its own examining or continue to rely on the services of itinerant examiners representative of the Associated Board, Trinity College, and other bodies from the Old Country, and, according to Professor Peterson, there can be little doubt as to the ultimate outcome of the Home Rule movement set on foot within recent years. So far as Victoria is concerned, Professor Peterson writes that "We are this year examining at least 1,500 candidates throughout the State—more than the Associated Board and Trinity College put together. In Melbourne itself, where, of course, the old-established schemes have their strongholds, the exact figures of passes are: Associated Board, 392; University, 396. As our supplementary examination in May has invariably shown a proportion of not less than a fourth, we may put our pass list for the year at 495; and our proportion of passes to entries is not higher than that of the Associated Board." Further, Professor Peterson adds that against the half-dozen country centres visited by the Associated Board's examiners the National University scheme has over fifty centres, while the action of the Education Department and of the new Registration of Teachers Board in bestowing official recognition on the latter has thrown still more weight into their scale.

There would appear, therefore, every reason to anticipate that the activities of the Associated Board will be seriously diminished, if not terminated entirely, in the near future, so far as Australia is concerned; and, looking at the matter from the standpoint of the Australians themselves, there seems not the least reason to regret the circumstance. It is admitted by all, including the leaders of the secessionists, that the British examiners sent out under the joint auspices of the Royal College and Royal Academy have done excellent work in the past—even if the same can hardly be said for those representative of less distinguished institutions, who have also found a happy hunting-ground at the Antipodes; but this is no reason why, now that Australia is capable of undertaking its own examining and of turning to useful account the fees derived thereby, it should not adopt this course. I believe I am right in stating, indeed, that this view is shared by more than one of the examiners who have represented the Associated Board, though even if they held the opposite opinion this would be only natural and would scarcely affect the question at issue.

It is argued by some that it is very wicked and avaricious of the Australian musicians to wish to take the work out of the hands of the Old Country, and to pocket the plunder themselves, and music throughout

Polished Floors.—"Ronuk," Ltd., are prepared to estimate for the polishing and maintenance of all kinds of floors in Mansions, Hospitals, and Institutions. Write for pamphlet.—Manufacturers of "Ronuk" Polish, "Ronuk," Ltd., Portslade, near Brighton.

Australia, it has been predicted, can only go to the dogs if the inspiring influence of the clever young gentlemen sent out from Tenterden-street and Prince Consort-road is suffered to be withdrawn. The outsider may, however, be permitted to suggest that a good deal of exaggeration, not to say bunkum, enters into the arguments advanced under this head. What, at any rate, is not a pleasing feature of the existing system is the prostitution of the names of the Royal College and Royal Academy which is at present largely carried on in Australia without apparently the smallest protest on the part of the distinguished institutions concerned. As an Australian correspondent puts it in a letter recently received, "numerous advertisements in the public press and on brass plates announce, amongst qualifications for teaching, 'gold medallist,' 'student,' 'exhibitioner,' and even "diplomée,' of the Royal Academy of Music, London, and of the Royal College of Music, London, when the holder of the distinction has been no nearer London than the local examination room of the Associated Board in Melbourne for one glorious quarter of an hour. The L.A.B. (Licentiate of the Associated Board, i.e., Certificated Teacher, formerly called C.T.A.B.), which recipients and teachers here pretend is on a level with the Metropolitan examinations, has been conferred, for example, on a clever little lassie of fourteen years, who is thus one of these aforesaid 'diplomées' of the Royal Academy, Royal College, etc."

Complaint also is made of the practice of the Associated Board in entrusting all subjects of examination to one man, who has frequently to examine seven hours a day for several days together, in allowing the results to be made public before the examiner's signed report has reached headquarters, and in permitting teachers or other interested persons to remain in the room while the examination is being conducted. In fact, while allowing every credit to the British examiners for their good intentions, there would seem no reason whatever for supposing that the art of music in Australia will suffer total eclipse if their ministrations are suspended or curtailed. For that matter, so far as art is concerned, the whole squabble is, as that eminent representative of music in Australia, Professor Marshall Hall, recently put it, something of a storm in a teacup. Whether the aspiring young ladies of Melbourne, Sydney, and elsewhere are examined by a musical professor imported from England, or by one trained in Australia, is, after all, not one of those issues which decide the fate of nations. But this is only another reason why, if they prefer to conduct such exercises for themselves the Australians are thoroughly entitled to do so.

I am sorry to hear disquieting accounts of the health of Dr. Joachim. The veteran violinist, who is now nearly seventy-six, was seized with illness while fulfilling recently a concert engagement in Vienna, and, according to report, is not making that satisfactory recovery which was anticipated. All of Dr. Joachim's multitudinous friends and admirers in this country will earnestly hope that more reassuring advices may soon dispel their anxiety.

The unfortunate termination of the recent season of German opera at Covent Garden would seem to have served merely pour encourager les autres. In addition to the forthcoming venture at the Adelphi, where the members of the Berlin Comic Opera Company are to appear in Offenbach's "Hoffmann's Erzählungen," it is now announced that there is to be a season of light French opera during the coming months under the management of Mr. Robert Arthur at the Coronet Theatre, where, it may be remembered, Messager's "Véronique" was first heard in London. The operas which it is talked of doing here include such things as "La Fille de Madame Angot," "Les Cloches de Corneville," and "Les Mousquetaires au Convent," which many will certainly be glad to renew, or make, acquaintance with. But it would be idle to overlook the fact that the public for comic opera in a foreign tongue — whether French or German — is rather a limited one in London. The thought comes home forcibly when reading of the heavy outlay contemplated in the case of the proposed German season above referred to. It is stated, indeed, that the Adelphi will need to be absolutely crowded every evening if the enterprise is to pay its way. Apparently, however, the promoters of the undertaking are confident of success, and every one will certainly hope that they may not be disappointed.

Talking of the latter season, the Amalgamated Musicians' Union is threatening trouble again, I notice, on behalf of our native instrumentalists, over the importation of German orchestral players along with the other members of the company. But public opinion will, I fancy, hardly support them in this instance. In the case of a special enterprise of this kind, involving the visit of a complete company en bloc, it is absurd to maintain that there is any valid objection to the orchestral players who obviously form an integral and very important part of the organisation, coming too. When some years ago "The Mikado" was given by an English company in Germany, I believe I am correct in stating that the Savoy orchestra went with them as a matter of course, and I certainly do not remember any protest against this procedure either in Germany or in England. Obviously, it would make all the difference to the enterprise if our forthcoming German visitors had to start in the first instance rehearsing with British players totally unfamiliar with the works to be given. In fact, the contention is ridiculous. We want to hear the German orchestra as well as the German singers, and by all accounts both are quite exceptionally good.

The question of teaching the young idea how to wield the conductor's bâton continues to excite considerable discussion, in the course of which I notice a disposition to dwell rather unkindly on the fact, which I ventured gently to hint at last week, that a preliminary difficulty would be to discover suitable instructors to impart the art in the ranks of our native musicians. No doubt we have quite a number of conductors capable of directing an orchestra without actually coming to grief, but if it is a case of finding those who have displayed real genius under this head it must be regretfully admitted that the list is limited indeed. Few concert-goers probably are aware how restricted are the capabilities in this regard of some who essay the art at times. One needs to hear the opinions of an orchestral player who has "sat under" such to learn the facts. Of our leading composer-conductors Sir Charles Stanford and Sir A. C. Mackenzie are probably the most efficient, even though neither suggests, perhaps, when wielding the bâton that he is actually consumed by the sacred fire. Sir Edward Elgar rather resembles Schumann (of whom it was said that he could hardly bring himself to give the signal to start sometimes), in that he tends to lose himself in the enjoyment of his own creations and thereby to lose touch to some extent with the players. Sir Hubert Parry, on the other hand, has a captivating beat as viewed from the audience—bold and vigorous and hearty, like the man himself; but in conducting, as in other things, appearances are sometimes deceitful. The performances which he obtains are only mediocre.

The Morning Leader's musical gossip, who is usually well informed, revives the interesting report that Puccini's next opera, namely, the setting of "La Femme et le Pantin" of Pierre Louys, on which he is at present engaged, may possibly obtain its first performance at Covent Garden next season. Puccini has had such good reason to incline favourably towards Covent Garden that it would be a graceful thing on his part if he were to accord them the privilege of producing his latest work. But in any case, of course, it is safe enough to be heard there sooner or later.

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford st., and Orchard-st., London, W.

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi-Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

A Covent Garden season nowadays without plenty of Puccini would be quite unthinkable. The libretto of this opera, by the way, Puccini received from an entirely unknown writer, whose work so pleased him that he decided to utilise it forthwith. Here is hope, therefore, for rejected librettists. The story is of a Spanish nature, somewhat after the character of "Carmen." If Puccini writes operas on all the subjects, by the way, which he is said to have been contemplating during recent years, he should be kept busy for some time to come. Such diverse themes as a tale of the Roman Empire, Marie Antoinette, Cyrano de Bergerac, a novel by D'Annunzio, and one of Bret Harte's Californian stories, have all been mentioned within the last few months in this connection.

Mme. Eames, with whose matrimonial affairs the American newspapers have been busying themselves, has not been heard in London now for some little time, though a few years since she appeared regularly every season at Covent Garden. Mme. Eames is an American by birth, though she was born at Shanghai. She has her permanent abode, however, in Paris, where she is very popular. She has a delightful villa, too, in Italy, to which she flies when the season is over, and where she delights to go about, as she confided to an interviewer once, in a slouch hat, a man's coat, and hob-nailed boots. But it is hard to imagine one who is famous for the statuesque perfection of her beauty and the exquisite taste of her costumes—which have often been designed for her by her husband—in such a get up. Mme. Eames was one of those who went through the horrors of the San Francisco earthquake.

The so-called Soame's Strad, about which I had something to say a short time since, was sold by auction last week by Messrs. Glendining for £500. It is a good round sum, though not a very large one in comparison with some of the prices at which on previous occasions instruments reputed to be of historic value had been knocked down at the auctions of the same enterprising firm; but, even so, I should hesitate to say that it was any too little for the instrument in question. As I pointed out before, the instrument is a small-sized fiddle, which, of course, greatly diminishes its value, since its volume of tone is necessarily reduced thereby, and this is not a quality which is likely to commend it favourably to performers. Moreover, though it has been referred to in various inspired paragraphs issued preliminary to the sale as one of great note, little or nothing is known as to its antecedents in point of fact, so that on the whole its former owner may consider that he has not done badly.

"Do London ladies sing?" was the somewhat cryptic subject of discussion in one of the papers last week. It arose apparently from the suggestion that most of the members of the chief London choral societies hail from Yorkshire, Lancashire, the Midlands, Wales, or Scotland, coupled, as I gather, with the further theory that the greater vocal excellence of the ladies coming from those parts of the country might be associated with the more generous proportions of their waists as compared with those of their Metropolitan sisters. Whether the reputation for vocal prowess will be regarded by the ladies in question as adequate compensation for the imputation of big waists I will not pretend to say, but the theories in question are, at any rate, interesting. As to the former suggestion, there should not be much difficulty in ascertaining the facts, but in regard to the dimensions of their waists, the investigation might prove a more delicate matter. I am sure, however, that Sir Frederick Bridge and Mr. Arthur Fagge will gladly co-operate in any measures which may be requisite to ascertain the truth on this important matter. Perhaps the long-standing mystery of London's choral deficiencies may then be solved at last.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Building, Carteret-street, S.W.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

My dear Mr. Wyndham,—Sir Owen Burne's "Memories" (1), though written originally to be read only by his own family, is as discreet and modest as it is interesting. It is amiable also, for apparently Sir Owen, like Elia, "could never hate anyone he knew." The one passage in the book which jars upon you—Sir Owen's flippant and even impudent gulling of Gladstone—was most inadequately provoked by Sir Owen's disappointment at the great man's failure to recognise him as an expert on Indian politics and policy:—

> Instead of asking me about India, as I rather expected, Gladstone descanted eloquently on Dr. Carpenter's deep-sea fishing, a matter then much to the front on account of the exploring expedition of the Challenger. At last I had my chance. Partly in anger and partly in sorrow, I spoke of the deep-sea fishing in the Red Sea and Indian Ocean as something very different. As I went on I invented every fable I could devise as to the colour and size of the fish and the depths of these seas, adding a little about monsoons, typhoons, and laws of storms till Mr. Gladstone was dumbfounded and silent, and I was ashamed.

He might well have been. When he laughs at Gladstone's "credulity" in accepting all these monstrous fish stories, etc., he forgets that it never could occur to a man of Gladstone's age and position to suspect such impertinence. Perhaps the most interesting of Sir Owen's reminiscences are those recalling Lord Mayo and his assassination, and the most amusing those recalling Sir Owen's bear-leading of the Shah. Apparently, every precaution for securing the person of Lord Mayo had been taken by the authorities of the convict establishment, by shutting up all the worst characters, posting guards at every possible point of attack, and providing an armed escort of police and warders. It was, however, when the inspection was over and all danger also was apparently over, that the assassin, who had been dogging the Viceroy all day, found and took his opportunity. When Lord Mayo was on the very point of embarking, General Stewart, having to make arrangements with the overseer for the next day, had to pass through the guard in rear of the party, and his passage through them gave the assassin an opening. Before the guard could close up again, the Afridee rushed through them, and twice stabbed the Viceroy in the back. Lord Mayo, half-stunned, fell over the pier, followed by Sir Owen, to whom he cried out with his last breath, "Burne, they have done it!" Though the Government came to the conclusion that the assassination was an act of private vengeance for what the convict considered unmerited transportation, Sir Owen has no doubt at all that the vengeance was political, not private. In fact, the motive was the same as that for the assassination a short time before of Mr. Justice Norman, who was murdered because of his severe sentences upon the Wahabee fanatics. Indeed, Lord Mayo's assassin had given out, some time before, that "his brother had murdered Mr. Justice Norman, and that he was proud of the deed." Surely a man whom such a boast ought to have marked as dangerous "should have been shut up with the worst characters" during the Viceroy's inspection? Sir Owen's experiences with the Shah were as comic as his associations with Lord Mayo were tragic. As his Persian Majesty had set his heart upon seeing a prize-fight "where plenty of blood would be drawn," the Marquis of Queensberry was induced to arrange for one with gloves to take place in the stables of Buckingham Palace. But the prize-fight was arranged to take place just half an hour before another important business—the reception of a deputation from Lord Shaftesbury, the bishops, and archbishops in the interests of the Christians in Persia—was to come off, with the result that the two functions

(1) "Memories." By Major-General Sir Owen Tudor Burne, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I. (London: Edward Arnold. 15s. net.)

(2) "Dr. Gordon." By Mary E. Wilkins. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

(3) "The Country House." By John Galsworthy. (London: William Heinemann. 6s.)

(4) "Daniel Quayne." A Morality. By J. S. Fletcher. (London: John Murray. 6s.)

(5) "What Might Have Been." The Story of a Social War. (London: John Murray. 6s.)

clashed. The Shah came down so late for the prize-fight that the episcopal deputation had already assembled in the reception-room when his Majesty appeared in it. So engrossed, however, was his Majesty with the prospect of the prize fight that he walked straight through the deputation, who followed him, wondering whither he was conducting them to an audience. They were not long left in doubt. They just arrived in time to form a ring round the prize fighters, who had already begun the battle! "A prize fight in the gardens of the Queen's Palace, forsooth!" shouted Lord Shaftesbury; "I will denounce you all over the kingdom!" He and the prelates hurried back, like a flock of frightened sheep, to the reception room, where they were soon joined by the Shah, whose rage, however, at the interruption of the prize fight was so savage and sullen that he had hardly patience to listen to Lord Shaftesbury's long speech. At its close the Shah turned to growl to Sir Owen and Rawlinson: "Hang the Christians in Persia! Tell them they are all right"; which Rawlinson proceeded to interpret into a long, favourable, and most flattering reply—so long, indeed, that the prelates whispered one to another: "What an expressive language Persian must be! Such wonderful promises in such few words from the Persian monarch!" In spite of the high and just reputation Sir Owen had from all his superiors for statesmanship, I cannot think the alternative policies he suggests for Ireland either opportune or brilliant. Ireland, he suggests, ought to be governed as India is governed; or, failing, that, "her people ought to be transferred to some earthly Elysium as far as possible from the British Parliament, and replaced by canny Scots."

Miss Mary E. Wilkins' "Doctor Gordon" (2) will be, I fear, a double disappointment to you in being a sensational novel, and, therefore, not of the delightful kind you expect from the author, and again, in being a poor sensational novel, for neither do you expect anything poor from so charming a writer. Your curiosity is certainly excited, sometimes eerily, sometimes feverishly, by the evil presence which haunts the heroine; but the explanation of the mystery is at once inadequate and prosaic. The other mystery of the euthanasia of Dr. Gordon's supposed sister is more satisfactorily solved. There are many delightful touches in the book recalling the Miss Wilkins you had loved, but they help only to make your disappointment with her new departure the more sensible. From "Dr. Gordon" to Mr. Galsworthy's "The Country House" (3) is a far cry certainly. I do not know when I read a more effective study of country people who live in a wholly artificial world, and are wholly helpless through their artificiality. You are now and then reminded of Thackeray's description of his characters in "Vanity Fair"—"dull pompous people, perfectly satisfied with themselves and with their own superior virtue." The Squire's son gets entangled in the web of a heartless married coquette, and the shock of the scandal awakes them all to the realities of life. Every character of the book is admirably drawn, but the drawing of the hero's mother is a masterpiece of sympathetic portraiture. She is the real heroine of the novel, and you follow her with an almost poignant sympathy in her distraction between her husband and her son. In a word, "The Country House" is one of the most notable novels of the year. You get upon a lower plane socially and morally in Mr. Fletcher's powerful novel, "Daniel Quayne" (4), whose heroine is a callous and calculating light-o'-love. She sells or gives herself apparently to any and every one, while engaged to the simple rustic, Daniel Quayne. When he discovers her to be his master's mistress he slays both and is hanged for their murder. It will not in the least spoil your interest in the story to be told its tragic close, since it is the characters rather than the incidents which engross your interest. "What Might Have Been" (5) is less a novel than an anti-socialistic satire, very smart, but in spite of its smartness rather tedious. Its moral is that England can be saved only by the replacement of household suffrage by "a £10 occupation qualification, with a plurality of voting power in multiples of £10 according to the rateable value of the premises occupied."—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely, DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

For some years past the Hon. Walter Rothschild, M.P.—whose natural-history collection is well known—has been engaged in the preparation of a work giving an account of those birds which have become extinct in historical times, together with notes on a few which are now almost extinct. The book, "Extinct Birds," will be published by Messrs. Hutchinson and Co. at the price of £25, the edition being limited to 300 copies, each numbered and signed. An important feature of the work will be a series of forty-five coloured plates, after paintings executed expressly for this work from an unique collection of specimens. The coloured plates are printed in permanent ink on a special paper, employed for the first time in connection with the tricolour process, which will have the advantage of rendering them practically imperishable.

Mr. T. E. Keppel's volume of recollections, "Lord Beaconsfield and Other Tory Memories," will be published by Messrs. Cassell and Co. during the present month.

A new and cheaper edition of Mr. F. C. Selous's "A Hunter's Wanderings in Africa" is announced by Messrs. Macmillan. Since its original publication in 1881 this book has always held a distinguished place among records of sport and travel. It describes the events and impressions of nine years spent by Mr. Selous amongst the game of a region which, before the advent of railways, was rightly regarded as the far interior of South Africa.

When "A Pixy in Petticoats" appeared anonymously last summer many readers and reviewers of that Dartmoor story jumped to the conclusion that the author was a woman. The title page of "Arminel of the West," a new novel from the same pen, which Mr. Alston Rivers announces for immediate publication, reveals the fact that the author was John Trevena. In his new volume he forsakes the great moor for the less known territory in the north.

"The Brasses of England," by the Rev. Herbert V. Macklin, President of the Monumental Brass Society, is an addition to Messrs. Methuen's series of Antiquary's Books (price 7s. 6d. net). Mr. Macklin's aim has been to treat of monumental brasses from the human and historic, as well as the technical point of view. He traces the rise and decline of the art of brass engraving from the reign of Edward I. to the Caroline decadence, and special chapters are devoted to "architectural ornament" and "foreign workmanship." The volume has numerous illustrations of brasses from tracings, rubbings, and photographs.

Mr. G. M. Trevelyan's new book, "Garibaldi's Defence of the Roman Republic," will be issued by Messrs. Longmans next week. It is a history of the great political and military events of 1849, which caused the final breach between the Papacy and Italian national aspirations, and made Garabaldi the national hero of Italy.

Messrs. Hurst and Blackett have in the press a new novel by Miss Braddon, entitled "Dead Love has Chains." It is rather more sensational than her recent book, "The White House."

Mr. Noel Williams, whose previous biographical works have met with much success, has given the title of "A Princess of Intrigue" to a new volume, in which he traces the eventful career of Mme. de Longueville. The period—the last years of Louis XIII.'s reign and the early part of that of Le Grand Monarque—is one of the most fascinating in French history, and nearly all the great figures of the time play a part in the story. The book will be published by Messrs. Hutchinson and Co.

The most exacting lover of sensational fiction will surely be satisfied with the sensationalism of Mr. J. B. Harris-Burland's story, "The Gold Worshippers" (Greening and Co., price 6s.). It is true that it has no sort of relation to real life, but what of that? A multitude of readers want nothing better than to be thrilled, and here they have a "thriller" of the most effective kind.

Cannes.—Hotel des Anglais. First-class. Numerous Self-contained Suites, with Private Bath-Rooms, etc. Central Heating. Renowned Cuisine and Cellars. Large Park.

"Some Old English Inns," by George T. Burrows, with illustrations by S. James Brown, is a chatty and interesting little volume in an attractive new series, called the "Leather Booklets" (price 2s. 6d. each), which Mr. T. Werner Laurie is publishing. Another is "The Pocket Cathedral Guide," by W. J. Roberts, with illustrations by the same artist.

The series of articles on the criminal law and its administration which Mr. E. Bowen Rowlands recently contributed to a daily newspaper has now been re-published in book form under the title of "The Liberty of the Subject" (Wyman and Sons, price 1s.). The author gives a very effective exposure of the many anachronisms, absurdities, and dangers of the existing system of criminal law, and advocates various reforms, including, of course, the establishment of a court of criminal appeal.

In the preface to the new volume of "Crockford's Clerical Directory" (published by Horace Cox, price 20s.) the editor discusses such matters as the law in regard to dilapidations, the payment of income tax on Easter offerings, and the education question. He also has one or two paragraphs in the lighter vein that has always been a characteristic of the editorial observations in this otherwise serious volume; but the preface, after all, is a small and insignificant feature of "Crockford." Its great recommendation is its reliability and completeness as a work of reference, and in these respects it fully maintains its high reputation.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Annice has a friend with her who is home from Malta for the season. Annice asked her to go to them while she looked for a furnished house or flat that would suit her; and she has been there a fortnight, and has done nothing but buy clothes. She seems set on having a complete outfit before she thinks of taking a house, and Annice says that her little home is so full of bandboxes and dress-boxes that she has to climb into her hall over them. She was making her little moan to us yesterday.

"You know, Madge dear, Mrs. Q. is really very nice, and she and I were at school together, but our house is so tiny, and Antony does not like piles of boxes in his smoke-room, and they come, and come, and come, all day long. They have the most heavenly things in them, and the tenth commandment is broken into powder by this time. It is really rather aggravating to have your house full of things you long to possess; it is like 'water, water everywhere, and not a drop to drink.' But what can I do?"

"Can't you give her a hint?"

"I have given her a list of house-agents, and I point out every board with 'Charming Maisonette To Let' on it. I don't like to do more."

Bee had an idea, she said, that might help, and told Annice we were going back to tea with her. Bee never tells her little plots, because she says if she has a confederate, that confederate either gives her away or looks so abominably guilty that she makes her principal stammer. We went back with Annice, and found Mrs. Q. quite ready to talk about clothes, and Bee's expressed yearning to see new frocks soon brought about an offer to show the purchases. Then the campaign began. Mrs. Q. produced a delicious frock of blue and white striped silk, with faint darker blue cornflowers chené here and there across the stripes. The bodice had touches of cornflower-blue velvet, and a waistcoat of sulphur-coloured satin embroidered with cornflowers.

"How sweet!" said Bee. "Aren't you afraid it will get crushed in its box? I find nothing ruins—oh, what a pretty hat for it, with all those mauve and blue cornflowers—and the what's-o'clocks look so light and soft with them. It is good of you to let me see these things. I want my new spring things to be nice, and I hadn't a single idea about them."

"Of course, they are carefully folded," observed Mrs. Q. "I do not think keeping things in a box hurts them then."

"Oh, don't you?" said Bee, innocently. "Not even a delicious frilly thing like that coffee-coloured voile with the cherry-coloured satin ribbons? Yes, look, that upper frill on the skirt is lying quite flat. Frills so soon lose their crispness."

Annice slipped into a long coat of putty-coloured glacé shot with pink, with curious insertions of some open-work, lace-like stuff, but very heavy and regular. Inquiries elicited the information that this was made of a kind of sublimated boot-lace, knotted together into a trellis, and the trellis then worked with fine threads across the spaces. The pink lining shone through very prettily. Bee, with silent concern, was observed smoothing a crease at the back. Striped materials seem very fashionable, either for whole gowns or trimmings, and one of the frocks in black and white striped canvas had every seam masked with a broad mitred band of diagonally-striped glacé in the same shades. The vest of the coat was also of the glacé. Bee's diplomacy never ceased, and throughout her running fire of comments on the new sleeves that turn the elbows, the reign of very high collars, the small mushroom hats, etc., there was the constant thread of regret that such pretty clothes should be spoilt by being kept in boxes. We had a note from Annice this morning saying that at dinner last night Mrs. Q. asked Antony which was the best agent to go to for a nice flat with plenty of hanging cupboards. Would you have thought Bee so Machiavellian?

Every one is having new clothes just now. Linda's sleeves all end above the elbow—she has beautiful arms. Jean's, on the other hand, come halfway down the forearm, as a good many of the latest sleeves from Paris do. But then Jean has very thin arms. Her skirts scarcely hide her ankles, but you will remember what dear little feet she has. But Muriel K., who is slender and willowy, but whose feet are flat, has her gowns two inches on the ground in front and at the sides, and about a yard at the back. So you see the spring fashions are accommodating, and provide for every one's comfort and convenience.

English silks are going ahead. We told Norah to try a Saxon product for once, and she has obeyed, and has the sweetest indoor frock of primrose-yellow British silk, with a full skirt, and a bodice with long crossing lines turned back with equally long revers of brown silk embroidered by deft Chinese fingers in amber and blue and green and gold. Trust Norah that the vest is of Irish crochet!

Town is going to be very, very gay after the Easter holidays—weddings, dinners, dances, and charity functions are all announced for various dates after the first week of April. The Ladies' Kennel Association holds its dog show at the Royal Horticultural Hall on the 9th. In a very neat way the committee has put the members "on honour" by sending each intending exhibitor a declaration to sign that there is no known case of distemper in her kennels. There are 163 classes, and the prizes represent a valuable amount of silver articles. Toy spaniels have no less than fourteen classes, and bulldogs twelve. Pekingese have also twelve classes, and next in number are Pomeranians with nine. One can judge of the popularity of the various kinds of dogs by the number of their classes. Poodles have eight, dachshunds and Scotch terriers seven. I am surprised to see that Japanese have only five, in common with pugs, griffons, chows, and schipperkes. Fox terriers appear to be losing their popularity, like the Japanese, for they have only four classes. And yet, could there be a more delightful canine friend than a well-bred fox-terrier? He is so bright-spirited, so keenly interested in everything that happens, so friendly, so sympathetic, and so absurdly full of quaintest humour that his companionship is a real joy.

"VIVELLA" (Regd.), the high-class washing material which does not shrink. Useful every minute of the twenty-four hours, For Man, Woman and Child. The Queen says: "'Vivella' has borne the test of years. You can wear it all the year round." To be obtained in latest colourings and designs from the leading Drapers.

Another coming event is the At Home to be held by the Ladies' Association of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society on Friday, April 12, at the Royal Horticultural Hall in Vincent-square. It is under the patronage of Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, and will be a smart affair. The hours are from 3 to 6. A selection of basket work and other articles made by the disabled soldiers and sailors will be for sale, and there is also to be a flower-stall. A very good concert has been arranged, and tickets for this can be secured in advance by applying to Mr. Ernest W. Gilchrist, 19, Milner-street, Cadogan-square. A long and attractive programme has been arranged, and on it appear the names of Mlle. Zélie de Lussan, Miss Teresa del Riego, Miss Ruth Vincent, Mr. David Bispham, Mr. Richard Green, and other well-known artists.

I have just been reading a novel by Anthony Trollope, and have found it such a rest after the fiction of the moment. In the latter one has to decide as one goes along, as to the right or wrong of some question raised. One's mind is kept in a condition of perpetual agitation, as on a see-saw, about the characters in the story. Are they all perfectly mad? Or merely unusual? Is the author a lunatic? Or simply the possessor of a temperament that turns black white, white black, and other colours lurid and livid? Now, in Trollope's story, "Mr. Scarborough's Family," the story marches on with an admirable steadiness, and the characters are consistent with what the reader expects of them after the first introduction to them. The bad man is a terrible villain; the good hero is a very fine fellow, and to balance these there is a likeable scapegrace. There is nothing subtle about any of them, as they pace through the pages, proceeding with their plans and revealing their characters in so doing.

But it is the girls that are really interesting. The heroine is perfect, of course, and among her excellencies is the negative one that "her hair was never redolent of peculiar odours." Of how many girls could that be said in these days of perfumed washes?

Another girl in the book tells her father her ideal of a husband. "In the first place, he must be a gentleman. He mustn't be ugly, and he mustn't be good-looking. He mustn't seem to be old, and certainly he mustn't seem to be young. I should not like a man to wear old clothes, but he mustn't wear new. He must be well read, but never show it. He must work hard, but he must come home to dinner at the proper time. He must never talk about his business at night; though, dear, darling old father, he shall do that if he will talk like you. And then, which is the hardest thing of all, I must have known him intimately for at least ten years."

What a perfect husband she sketched, this Dorothy. I may mention that the close of the book leaves her unmarried and unlikely to marry. Everybody is carefully finished off at the end. And here again is a tremendous contrast to the modern novel, which ends in the midst of things. The astounded reader turns over and finds the book finished just when he is getting interested in the characters. But the author has tired of them and abruptly puts an end to the creatures of his fantasy. Dozens of questions shoot up in the reader's mind. What became of poor Mary whom first the hero loved? Did Dick and Evelyn ever meet again? Why was Edwin introduced into a chapter and allowed to flourish mightily therein, if he was never to be heard of again? One might apply to him the epitaph on the infant:—

"If so quickly he is done for,
What on earth was he begun for?"

It is a way the modern novelist has. How it would have revolted Anthony Trollope and his peers, whose characters were as carefully labelled as a modern gardener's roses, and as neatly finished off as the labels.

Who is your favourite up-to-date novelist? Do you read Meredith? He is an acquired taste, but well worth any trouble in acquiring. He can pack more philosophy, real feeling, and humour into a sentence than any other writer. But, then, one has occasionally to read that sentence twice! A. E. W. Mason gave us a delightful heroine in "Miranda of the Balcony." She was worthy of a better successor than the horrid girl in "The Four Feathers." You remember Ethne? Hichens can write a wildly exciting novel, but I disliked his heroine in "The Garden of Allah," and a likeable heroine is so necessary in a book. All Mrs. Croker's and Mrs. Perrin's are charming. They are gentlewomen.

I have always had an affection for tussore silk, and now that it can be had in an English make, I feel free to indulge that affection. Striped with white, it is charming, either in groups of narrow strips, or in bands of equal width. Then there is brocaded tussore. Some of the designs are very attractive, embroidered tussore, with quaint five-sided spots at intervals, and a very tempting rough "suiting tussore," which would be serviceable and pretty made into many different kinds of frocks. It is difficult to choose among all the new washing materials. Messrs. Robinson Brown, of Macclesfield, in response to our request for patterns of "tussore and other washing materials," have provided us with specimens of the most fascinating things (and remember, good coz, they are English). There are brocaded cottons, brocaded lawns, brocaded zephyrs, all in most dainty designs, all really useful things, all excitingly inexpensive. There is one fine white lawn, with a little brocaded sprig, that is simply sweet. The cotton brocades are very pretty, too, and do not imagine, by their name, that they pretend to be silk; they are just remarkably pretty white washing stuffs, with no cheap pretence about them. The washing silks are in various colourings, and there is a new "Mersilda," in white, with coloured patterns, that is like silky linen. As for the printed lawn, I have never seen anything prettier than one which has groups of very faint mauve and pink flowers, with wee single buds scattered about. It deserves both those overworked adjectives, "sweet" and "dainty." What do you say to mercerised matting for frocks? It is like particularly soft crash, and makes up well for river and tennis dresses, and so on.

The patterns also include printed foulards, some of them in bold designs on coloured grounds, others in the dearest little patterns of tiny scattered blossoms on a fine white trellis. The taffetas chiffons are very light and soft; the prettiest are the shot ones, or those that have chené flowers. Why cannot one have a couple of dozen dresses on the first of every month? The only drawback would be that then there would be no opportunity for the English stuffs to show how much longer they wear than the foreign ones!

The same thing is true of the British silks from this firm's Royal Silk Warehouse at Macclesfield. They outwear the foreign many times, because they are unweighted, and are in all the smart colours, dark or pale. The prices begin at 1s. 6d. per yard, and the texture is in harmony with the present rage for soft, clinging materials, yet with sufficient substance to hold its own and retain its beautiful gloss. Do send for patterns, and thus encourage English manufacturers.

I have received the following from Mona:—

My Dear Madge,—There is really no secret about the cultivation of gloxinias. It is not difficult to grow plants with fine flowers, such as you admire at shows. You have a warm greenhouse; a little care should do the rest. Of course, it is necessary to start with good tubers. I put seed out of the question, because this should have been sown in February to produce plants large enough to flower well this year. But tubers are not expensive, and a couple of dozen will be as many as you are likely to want. Very large tubers are generally very old; the finest flowers are borne by those which are two years old, and they are of medium size. They may all be started simultaneously, or, if you prefer a succession of flowers, some may be kept cool and dry for a time and started later. In the case of gloxinias, as of most other pot plants, the management of the water supply is the chief thing to be learned. At the outset, before growth commences, the tubers are liable to decay if they are in contact with moisture; so many growers, instead of potting them immediately, lay them in boxes of cocoanut fibre on the surface and just spray them slightly at intervals. They must, of course, be placed in a warm house. A temperature of from 65 deg. to 70 deg. is better than a lower one, for the sooner growth commences the better; but this may easily be managed, even in an ordinary greenhouse, by supporting the boxes on bricks over the hot-water pipes. When the buds swell, the tubers should be transferred to pots just large enough to hold them comfortably. If they have begun to form roots some of the fibre will adhere to them and should be potted with them, in light rich soil over a fairly thick layer of broken crocks as drainage. The tops of the tubers should be about level with the surface, and when they are moved into larger pots they should be sunk rather deeper.

Redfern.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—Redfern, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

Corset Krutoid.—The latest nouveauté Parisien in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Royal Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London.

Gloxinias need very careful handling, the beautiful velvety leaves are so brittle, so easily broken. Cleanliness is important, for the minute hairs with which the leaves are covered prevent the removal of any dirt or dust allowed to fall on them, and hard water should never be used, as the white deposit of lime spoils their appearance. In the cultivation of these plants, as of most others grown in pots, more depends on the proper regulation of the water supply than on anything else. If they are given too much or too little, they are certain to suffer. And it should always be lukewarm, never cold. If, therefore, there is no tank inside the house, a canful should be brought there and left for some hours before it is used. In a moist warm atmosphere, with occasional spraying, the plants will grow rapidly, and, as soon as they have filled their pots with roots, they should be moved into larger ones. The same kind of soil may be used, and it should be pressed down rather firmly. The time to apply artificial fertilisers is when the flower buds appear. If they are applied earlier there will be a great quantity of foliage and very few flowers, though those few will be large in size. Shade is not necessary, except perhaps during the middle of the day in summer, but hot sunshine causes the flowers to fade much more quickly than they would otherwise do.

The flowers of the gloxinia, like nearly all others that are bell-shaped, naturally droop downwards. For this, as for everything else in nature, there is a definite reason. If they turned upwards they would be liable to be filled with rain or dew, and the pollen would be washed away. Hence they are either set at right angles to the stalks or more or less depressed, or else, if turned upwards during the hours of sunshine, bend downwards or close at the approach of night or wet weather. But this drooping habit is, from the gardener's standpoint, a defect in the gloxinia, for it prevents the exquisite flowers from being properly seen; and the hybridist has been at work to remedy the defect, with the result that we have now a magnificent race carrying its flowers erect. Here are a few of the named varieties: Mont Blanc (white), Defiance (scarlet), Empress Frederick (scarlet with white edge), Fireking (dark scarlet), Goliath (violet with white edge), Cyclop (carmine, white edge and purple-spotted throat), and Princess Maud (crimson shaded carmine, and violet edge with white spots). There are many others equally beautiful, but it is not possible to mention them all. Of course, unnamed varieties are cheaper, but if you only want a few for pots it would be a mistake to buy any but the best.

I mentioned the covering of minute hairs to which the foliage of the gloxinia owes much of its beauty. They might seem to be a disadvantage to the plant, and so they would be if it grew naturally anywhere near the smoky, dusty atmosphere of an English town. But it is a native of tropical America, where there is practically no dust, so the fact that the hairs do arrest foreign substances is no drawback. On the other hand, they serve a useful purpose—probably several. "They prevent undue transpiration," says Lord Avebury, in his "Notes on the Life History of British Flowering Plants"; "hence the hairiness of so many species of hot dry countries as the Riviera; they also protect the plant from too brilliant sunshine," which is probably the reason why gloxinias really need very little shade; "again, they keep moisture from clogging the stomata or breathing pores." And a little later he adds: "Water plants and those living in damp localities have no need of hairs, and are glabrous. Some species, such as Silene inflata and Polygonum amphibium, are glabrous in damp, and hairy in dry, places," which may be taken as a proof that a dry environment is the actual cause of the hairs. Here we get an important clue to the cultivation of plants like the gloxinia with hairy leaves. If they are to be grown under natural conditions—and in no other way can they be grown well—they must have a moist atmosphere. For this reason the gloxinia is not suitable for a house or window plant. The air of a room, even if it can be kept warm enough, is far too dry. Of course, a gloxinia may be brought inside for a few days while it is in flower, and will probably suffer no harm; but it should be taken out to the greenhouse again as soon as possible.—Your affectionate cousin, MONA.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:

DEAREST MADGE,—The Easter holidays, coming as they do, at the most fickle season of the fickle year of our climes, are the most uncertain amongst the whole number of our holiday times, with regard to weather. At Christmas there is the certainty of winter in all its dour varieties; at Whitsuntide, of summer, in its infinite variabilities. But there is no certainty at all about Easter, except its uncertainty. We may have summer of a sort, as we had last week, or we may have winter of all sorts, as we had the week before; or, again, it may be that we have a "between" of spring. Our holiday preparations must be made with a view to all these things, somewhat in the spirit in which the White Knight prepared for eventualities. Last week it was evident that this spirit actuated the majority of the holiday makers; their cabs, wending their ways to the various railway stations in the capital, showed, in the heaped-up luggage, a wise forethought and provision for the "might be's" of Easter weather. For my part I love to watch the going forth of holiday wayfarers. An amiable interest, it might seem to be, in the happiness and enjoyment of one's fellow creatures. But, alas! the leaven of selfishness mars the amiability. I am no doubt glad that they are going, but undoubtedly still gladder that I am not. For is not the only good and complete way of enjoying a stay-at-home holiday to have the others go away? The change of atmosphere produced in the home is in its own sense just as enjoyable and salutary as the change of air aimed at by those who go far afield to take their holiday, after the usual fashion. What opportunities for a long suppressed individuality the stay-at-home member of a community gets when the rest of that community has dispersed. Especially if she

For Discriminating Smokers.

	Per 100	Per 10
No. 555 (Standard Grade)	*4/9	6D.
ASTORIAS (Billiard Room Size)	*6/6	9D.
MY DARLING	5/-	6D.

* Also packed in our patent vacuum air-tight tins of 50 for tropical climates.

Obtainable of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World.

Manufactured in LONDON by THE ARDATH TOBACCO CO., State Express Works, E.C.

The Highest Standard of Quality in Virginian Cigarettes.

STATE EXPRESS CIGARETTES

are the only Virginian Cigarettes which have ever appealed to all discriminating Smokers, and have the strong support and approval of the medical profession.

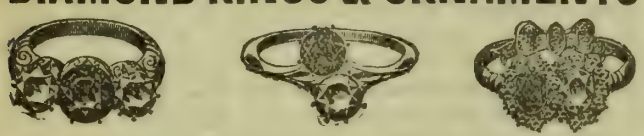
be the one who mainly "runs the show." Her own individual tastes, so long stifled and thrust aside in the rush of life, can at last be indulged. All the books waiting to be read that can at last get their turn! The small domestic interests that can be looked after, the long and long-owed letters written to old friends. Above all those "things"—what woman does not possess them!—to be gone over and sorted and disposed of. And then the plans to be made, and, what might be called the wounded soldiers of the campaign—that is, the dilapidations caused by the wear and tear of the season—to be looked after and again put on the strength of the establishment. A holiday of activities in its own way perhaps, but "peace," too, "hath her victories." When all is said and done, the crown of the stay-at-home holiday at Easter remains, that it is independent of the weather. Let come what may outside, inside neither storm, rain, nor cold have power to disturb our peace, or put out our arrangements.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen were settled in the Viceregal Lodge last week, Lady Aberdeen's convalescence having allowed her to make the short move from the Castle. The two Viceregal residences are barely three miles apart, yet the differences in the healthfulness of their situations are very great. The Phœnix Park, with its wide stretches of grass, varied by sheltering woods, is one of the airiest places in the country. The principal apartments of the Viceregal Lodge face the ranges of the Dublin and Wicklow mountains, from which the winds blow across the intervening valley of the Liffey and the demesne lands of the Park. Lady Aberdeen has been improving so much since her change of residence that it is hoped she will be able to take part in the usual entertaining for Punchestown week, when a party of visitors is expected at the Viceregal Lodge. Sir Antony MacDonnell returned last week to the Under-Secretary's Lodge, and will no doubt, as usual, have a busy Easter holiday. What energy Irishmen, as a rule, get who spend the best part of their lives out of their own country. Only imagine what might happen supposing they were to make a great migration and people some distant land in their thousands. Such an accumulation of energy would develop a force which could not fail to have epoch-making effect in the world; and to think that, on the whole, we are so deficient in energy in our own island, as if, like many plants, we need transplanting to make us strong! One wonders if the climate is at fault in the matter. The "Department" might make useful experiments with regard to putting "grit" into the "bone idle" members of our community. The kind—we all know them over here—who cannot bear to work even when they are "tired resting."

Lord and Lady Ashbourne were both in Dublin last week. Rumour has it that Lord Ashbourne, who has no residence in his native land, is meditating the purchase of one. Lord and Lady O'Brien are not spending Easter in Dublin, but will return to Airfield, Donnybrook, for Punchestown week, when they will entertain a party of visitors for the national race meeting. Lord Rathmore pays his usual visit to Ireland at this time to the golf links of Greenore, on the breezy southern side of Carlingford Lough. Lord and Lady Grenfell have gone to Curraghmore, where Lord and Lady Waterford are entertaining visitors. Lord Monck is laid up with cataracts on the eyes, which at present make him blind, but will be soon removed by an operation. His only daughter, now become Lady Liverpool, has been laid up at her residence in the Castle Yard. Lord Monck's geniality makes him popular, and his many friends are anxious for his return to health. The season, with its sudden changes of temperature, has been a very trying one to most of us. But one feels hopeful of better things when the sun seriously sets about shining once again.—Yours ever, CLARE.

Next week for some nice recipes, dear.—Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS



Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,
17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

DRINK and ENJOY

MAZAWATTEE TEA.

Pure and Unadulterated, Delicious to the Palate, and Unvarying in Quality.
Sold only in Air-Tight Lead Packets and Sealed Tins.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Announces the issue of
NEW FORMS OF CONTRACT
providing for
ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS
with several options each year.
Liberal Loan and Surrender Values and Various Modes of Settlement.
FUNDS OVER £100,000,000 SECURELY INVESTED.
Apply for particulars Head Office for the United Kingdom—
16, 17, 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.
J. H. HARRISON HOGGE, General Manager

THE KEELEY CURE

For Drink and Drug Habits.
Administered only by Qualified Physicians in a Keeley Institute.
Recommended by
The Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D.
Lord Montagu of Beaulieu.
H. W. Forster, Esq., M.P.
Vice-Admiral Woodward, C.B.
The Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A.
W. Hind Smith, Esq.

For full particulars, reports, etc., in plain sealed envelope, apply to the Secretary, 9 West Bolton Gardens, London, S.W.

The Ancient Writing Paper of the Priests.
Court Envelopes, 1s. per 100. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. 6d. per 100.
Thin, for Foreign Correspondence, 5 Quires, 1s. Mourning Note, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d.

HIERATICA NOTE PAPER 5 Quires, 1s. (Regd.).

Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to our new address, Hieratica Works Hill-street, Finsbury, London, E.C. Sample free. Parcels carriage paid in U.K.

BAILEY'S HOTEL LONDON

The most comfortable Hotel in London. GLOUCESTER ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON. Self-contained Suites.
Telephone No. 557 Kensington. Telegrams—"Bailey's Hotel, London."

A quick rub and the work is done—if Globe Metal Polish is used—and the metal will shine brilliantly for days. If you haven't yet tried get a tin to-day. Then Globe Polish will have another life-long friend.

GLOBE METAL POLISH

Paste in Tins—Liquid in Cans.

Raimes & Co, Ltd., Tredegar Road, Bow, London, E., and Stockton-on-Tees.

"THE MOST PERFECT FORM OF COCOA."
—Guy's Hospital Gazette.

FRY'S PURE CONCENTRATED COCOA

MAKERS TO H.M. THE KING.

The MEDICAL PRESS, including the "LANCET," "BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL," and "MEDICAL ANNUAL," testifies to its Purity and UNDOUBTED EXCELLENCE.

Self-Developing Plates.

Amateurs and Professionals should use the WELLINGTON

'WATALU' SELF-DEVELOPING PLATES.

MANUFACTURED UNDER LICENCE FROM SELF-DEVELOPING PLATE CO., LTD.

WATER ONLY required in Development!
NO messy chemicals!
NO expensive stock solutions!
JUST plain water.

Sole Manufacturers:
WELLINGTON & WARD,
ELSTREE, HERTS.
Retail Agents everywhere.

THE CYCLE WITH A NAME

and reputation, guaranteeing its future behaviour and its owner's comfort and ease, is after all

THE BEST INVESTMENT.

For upwards of 30 years

OUR FAMOUS Singer CYCLES

have been giving unlimited satisfaction in every corner of the globe, yet the price is no more than much of the comparative rubbish. The "Singer" perfect oil bath case makes cycling a luxury.

— LISTS FREE. —

Dept. T, SINGER & CO., Ltd., COVENTRY.

BENSON'S

SELECTED GEM RINGS.

Brilliants, £12.

Brilliants and Rubies, or Sapphires, £17.

Amethyst, Diamond Points, £6 6s.

Brilliants, £18.

"The Times"

MONTHLY PAYMENT SYSTEM IS AVAILABLE.

Illustrated Books: No. 1 of Rings, Watches, Chains; No. 2 of Clocks, Plate, Bags, and Silver Goods, post free. Mention TRUTH.

Brilliant, with Ruby Eyes, £6 6s.

62 & 64, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
and 25, OLD BOND STREET, W.

The Pine Forest at Home!

"SANITAS OIL"

Prevents and Cures

Bronchitis, Influenza, Diphtheria AND ALL Lung and Throat Affections.

Directions:
INHALE and FUMIGATE with "SANITAS OIL"

SPECIAL PAMPHLET FREE

THE "SANITAS" CO. LTD., Limehouse, London, E.

PRICE 1/- The Thirteenth Series BY POST, 1/3

OF

QUEER STORIES FROM "TRUTH."

PERMANENTLY ENLARGED.

This volume is bound in a BLUE Cover, printed in Red, to distinguish it from the twelve previous issues.

To be obtained at all Booksellers' & Bookstalls.

"TRUTH" PUBLISHING OFFICE, 10, Bolt Court, Fleet St., E.C.

From CHATTO & WINDUS'S Spring List.

A FREE SOLITUDE
2s. 6d. net. By ALICE PERRIN
"A good story, true to nature and admirably descriptive."
- DAILY TELEGRAPH.

HER HONOUR By
2s. 6d. net. Robert Machray

LOVE WILL VENTURE IN
2s. 6d. net. By Amelia E. Barr

AN OBLIGING HUSBAND
2s. 6d. net. By Frank Barrett
"A cheery, winning story, narrated with skill and in good literary style."—TIMES.

MONSIEUR DE PARIS
2s. 6d. net. By Mary C. Rowsell
"A brisk and picturesque story."—WORLD.

HIS WIFE'S REVENGE
2s. 6d. net. By G. R. Sims
"Mr. Sims knows the art of writing a thrilling story."—LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.

THE GHOST By
2s. 6d. net. Arnold Bennett
"An unusually ingenious and enjoyable novel."—SCOTSMAN.

ISRAEL RANK By
2s. 6d. net. Roy Horniman
"Will be read to the end with eager attention."—THE SPEAKER.

THE SPANISH NECKLACE
2s. 6d. net. By B. M. CROKER
"A novel of stirring interest, both romantic and instructive."—WORLD.
"Rivets the attention, and will only be put down when the last page is read."—GLASGOW HERALD.

VENICE. By BERYL DE SELINCOURT and MAY STURGE-HENDERSON.
With 30 Plates in Colours by REGINALD BARRATT, A.R.W.S. 10s. 6d. net.
 By permission of the owner, the Hon. John Collier, a reproduction in coloured collotype, in exact facsimile as to size and colour, will also be published of Mr. Barratt's drawing THE BRONZE HORSES OF SAN MARCO. Colour surface 22¾ by 14 inches. 6s. net.

MOLIÈRE: a Biography.
By H. C. CHATFIELD-TAYLOR. With 10 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.
"Mr. H. C. Chatfield-Taylor . . . is to be congratulated upon a thoroughly workmanlike and eminently readable presentation of Molière."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

JULIE DE LESPINASSE.
By the Marquis de SÉGUR. With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.
"One of the most enthralling and touching books that have been published of late years."—SPECTATOR.
"Into few souls is it possible to look so closely as into that of Julie de Lespinasse, and the English translation of her life-story will be read with absorbed interest by many to whom the original is as a closed book."—REVIEW OF REVIEWS.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

Price 7s. 6d. net. JUST READY.
THE CURE OF CANCER
and HOW SURGERY BLOCKS THE WAY.
By JOHN SHAW, M.D.Lond.,
Author of "Fibroid Tumour . . . a new treatment without operation" (2s. 6d. net).
How operations cause rather than cure cancer.

London: F. S. TURNEY, 22, Paternoster-row, and of any Bookseller.

A NEW MONTHLY
THE ALBANY REVIEW
WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED
THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW
Edited by
CHARLES RODEN BUXTON
Price 2s. 6d. net per month, or 21s. post free per annum.

CONTENTS of the APRIL Issue:—

CURRENT EVENTS: The Colonial Conference, The Premier and The Hague, Russia, The Army, The L.C.C. Election, &c.
THE NEED OF THE MOMENT.
THE LAND QUESTION IN A COUNTRY PARISH. EDWARD CARPENTER.
WAGTAIL AND BABY: An Incident of Civilisation. THOMAS HARDY.
MARK TWAIN. ANDREW LANG.
THE LORDS AND THE REFERENDUM. HAROLD SPENDER.
RITUALISM AND DISESTABLISHMENT G. W. E. RUSSELL.
THE WORK OF THE HEALTH VISITOR. G. F. McCLEARY, Medical Officer of Health, Hampstead.
A ROMANCE OF 1821. E. S. P. HAYNES.
FRAGMENT FROM A BALLAD EPIC OF "ALFRED." G. K. CHESTERTON.
A RUSSIAN MOTHER: A Personal Narrative (1897-1905). S. A. SAVINKOV. Translated by MRS. GARNETT.
THE FIRST EARL DURHAM. OSCAR BROWNING.
LORD DUNRAVEN'S "OUTLOOK IN IRELAND." Rev. J. O. HANNAY, Author of "The Seething Pot."
MR. HENRY JAMES' "AMERICAN SCENE" DESMOND MACCARTHY.

Mr. John Lane has just issued a new and very remarkable Novel by the author of "Widdicombe," entitled
THE WINGLESS VICTORY
THE WINGLESS VICTORY
By M. P. WILLCOCKS. Crown 8vo, 6s.
DAILY MAIL.—"Among the few good novels that have been published this year 'The Wingless Victory' stands out as something quite out of the common. In its grasp of character and circumstance, in its rare wisdom, and, above all, in its unerring insight into the deep springs of human nature, it is a remarkable achievement which entitles its author to a place in the first rank of contemporary novelists This is high praise, but we venture to prophesy that it will be endorsed by critics and readers alike."

JOHN LANE, The Bodley Head, Vigo-street, London, W.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY
AND AFTER.
APRIL.

Egypt To-day. By Sir AUCKLAND COLVIN, K.C.S.I., K.C.M.G.
Mr. Haldane's Dream of a "National" Army. By Colonel the EARL OF ERROLL, K.T., C.B.
The Evil of Ignoring Minorities. By the Right Hon. LORD COLCHESTER.
A Colonial Study of London Civilisation. By Mrs. GROSSMANN.
Some London Children at Play. By ROSE M. BRADLEY.
Children's Competitions. By EVA M. MARTIN.
Women and Politics: A Rejoinder.
(1) By CAROLINE E. STEPHEN.
(2) By the Hon. Mrs. CHAPMAN.
A Fifteenth-Century Feministe. By Mrs. W. KEMP-WELCH.
M. Clemenceau as Writer and Philosopher. By the ABBÉ ERNEST DIMNET.
The Life and Letters of Leslie Stephen. By GEORGE W. PROTHERO.
The Greek Anthology. By HERBERT PAUL, M.P.
Hope for the Trout-Streams. By W. EARL HODGSON.
A Plea for the Popular in Literature. By J. A. SPENDER.
The Literary Associations of Hampshire. By the Rev. Canon VAUGHAN.
The Norwich School and their last Exponent. By ARTHUR P. NICHOLSON.
A Ride through Bosnia and the Hercegovina. By Lady THOMPSON.

London: SPOTTISWOODE & CO., Ltd., 5, New-street Square.

THE MONTHLY REVIEW.
Edited by CHARLES HANBURY-WILLIAMS.
APRIL. 2s. 6d.

NEW YORK: THE CITY OF THE YELLOW DEVIL—MAXIM GORKI (Translated from the Russian by J. MACKENZIE)
THE PLYMOUTH BUCCANEERS—W. CLARK RUSSELL
THE CONTROL OF THE PUBLIC PURSE—MICHAEL MACDONAGH
THE RUSKIN COPYRIGHT—GEORGE A. B. DEWAR
LORD MILNER IN SOUTH AFRICA—"J."
IRELAND AT WESTMINSTER—R. BARRY O'BRIEN
GHOSTS OF PICCADILLY—THE GREAT DUKE—G. S. STREET
A PLEA FOR A GREATER PROPORTION OF GOLD TO PAPER—MARCUS R. P. DORMAN
THE COLONIAL PREMIERS—E. B. OSBORN
GALILEO IN THE VAL D'ARNO—JANET ROSS
COSMOPOLITANISM AND HUMOUR—BASIL TOZER
THE LEISURELY AMERICA—HERBERT W. HORWILL
ALIEN IMMIGRATION TO THE U.S.A.—MONSIGNOR THE COUNT VAY DE VAYA AND LUSKOD

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition just published. Post free, 8s. 9d.
London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch-street.

AMUSEMENTS.

FANCY DRESS BALLS. Covent Garden.
EXTRA FANCY DRESS BALL.
(Last of the Season.) FRIDAY, APRIL 5, at 11 p.m
Valuable Prizes will be given for the best fancy costumes. Box-office 10 to 6.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE. Mr. TREE.
EVERY EVENING at 8.15 (Last 4 nights.)
THE RED LAMP, By W. Outram Tristram.
Mr. TREE and Miss CONSTANCE COLLIER.
Followed by a one-act Play, THE VAN DYCK.
Mr. TREE and Mr. WEEDON GROSSMITH.
MATINEE SATURDAY NEXT, April 6, at 2.15.

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8. (Doors open 7.40). MATINEE, SATURDAY NEXT, at 2 (doors open 1.40). THE NEW ALADDIN, a musical extravaganza. Box-office open daily from 10 to 10.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.—Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
EVERY EVENING at 8.0, THE BELLE OF MAYFAIR, by Charles H. E. Brookfield and Cosmo Hamilton, the Music by Leslie Stuart, 2nd Edition.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.

SAVOY THEATRE.—TO-MORROW (Thursday) at 8.20' PATIENCE. Also April 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, 13, 15, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 29, 30 May 2, 4. Sat. Mats., April 6, 13, 27. THE GONDOLIERS, April 9, 17, 23, 25 May 1, 3, 8.20. Sat. Mat., April 20. THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD April 12, 19, 27, 8.20. Sat. Mat., May 4.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr. George Edwardes. Every Evening at 8.15, Matinee Every Saturday at 2.30, a new Comedy Opera entitled
THE LADY DANDIES (The Merveilleuses).

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30 in "Mr. SHERIDAN."
A Comedy in four acts by Gladys Unger.
MATINEE every Saturday, at 2.30.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. MATINEE, WEDS. and SATS. at 2 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman), CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. At 8.20 and 2.20. THE DRUMS OF OUDE.
All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30. for 14 performances,
MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE.
Mr. LEWIS WALLER. Miss EVELYN MILLARD.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

ALDWYCH THEATRE, Strand.—Sole Lessee and Manager, CHARLES FROHMAN. At 8, CHARLES FROHMAN presents
EDNA MAY in NELLY NEIL.
Matinee Saturdays at 2. 2nd Edition. New Songs. New Dances.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Alexia, Danseuse de Genre; Millman Trio, Mlle. Bresina, Kitty Traney, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, "L'AMOUR," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45. Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—ADA REEVE, Bransby Williams, Living Pictures, THE DEBUTANTE, New Grand Ballet, Mlle. Genée, Première Danseuse, Miss Marquis, Leon Rogee, the Biograph, &c. Every Evening at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—TORTAJADA, JOSEPHINE COHAN, NIBLO, MAS ANDRES, ALFRED LESTER, &c. GRAND NATIONAL, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE, FULL PROGRAMME, SATURDAY, at 2.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Portrait Model of the Rev. R. J. Campbell. The Late Baroness Burdett-Coutts. Realistic Tableau, Scene from Robin Hood. Delightful Music. Afternoon Teas. Open 10 till 10.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY,
at 2 and 8 p.m.
AN ENTERTAINMENT OF UNEXAMPLED BRILLIANCE.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES.—St. George's Hall, Langham-place, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. Mr. J. N. Maskelyne and £1,000 Ghost. Long and varied Holiday programme. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 4s., 5s., unreserved 1s. Children under 12 half-price. Babies not admitted. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

HENGLER'S CIRCUS.—TWICE DAILY, 2.30 and 8. Grand new Fairy Spectacle, "BEAUTY AND THE ENCHANTED PRINCE." Circus programme includes Martialo, the wonderful Continental Juggler (first appearance in England), Celest on the high wire, Yelding in Blindfold Jockey Act, Hengler's Clowns, &c. Prices 1s. to 5s. Children half-price. Box-office 10 to 10. 'Phone, 4138 Gerrard.

EXHIBITIONS.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

DORE'S GREAT MASTERPIECES. — Raphael's lost Masterpiece "The Holy Family"; Pastels, Oils, and Water Colours by ANDRE SINET; Water Colours of Devon and Cornwall, by J. SHAPLAND; Water Colours by J. H. LEONARD, &c.
DORE GALLERY 35, New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

ALDRIDGE'S. — Peter S. Dollar, Jobmaster, retiring from business.
The whole of the Horses on Job Contracts, together with the Name and Goodwill of Peter S. Dollar, having been purchased privately by Messrs. Wimbush & Co., Ltd.,

MESSRS. W. & S. FREEMAN, of ALDRIDGE'S, St. Martin's Lane, London, are favoured with instructions from Mr. P. S. Dollar, to SELL by AUCTION, absolutely without reserve, on TUESDAY, April 9, at 512, Oxford-street; THURSDAY, April 11, at Cricklewood; TUESDAY, April 16, at 512, Oxford-street, at about ELEVEN o'clock each day, the Entire STOCK of Highly-bred, Good-looking, Fresh YOUNG-CONDITIONED HORSES, mostly five and six years old, 15.3 to 16.3 hands, with exceptional courage, action and quality, bought with Mr. Dollar's acknowledged judgment entirely for the purpose of his own business, and now to be disposed of solely owing to retirement. This stud will be found to comprise the finest lot of horses ever put on the market at one time, and the scarcity of such a class offers an unequalled opportunity for buyers to secure the best description of carriage horse that can be found in England or Europe.

250

The Horses will be on view 2 week-days prior to each sale. Catalogues forwarded on application to Mr. P. S. Dollar, 512, Oxford-street, London; and of the Auctioneers, Messrs. W. and S. Freeman.

The 62 Carriages, Harness, and Sundries will be divided over each sale day. The Leases of 512, Oxford-street, and 23½, Bryanston-street, standing 103 horses and about 65 carriages, and the 90 Years' Lease, at a ground rent, of the spacious, newly-built Stable Premises for 192 horses, Coach-houses, Dwelling-house, Workshop, Riding School, Foreman's House, and Granary, occupying 2½ acres, at Cricklewood, London, N.W., will also be Offered for Sale by Auction on the respective premises.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended. Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street, Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard.

The many Health Resorts and Beauty Spots in DEVONSHIRE

and the Cornish Riviera

are within easy reach by

G.W.R.

Sea Air and Sunshine at Brixham
Carbis Bay
Dawlish
Exmouth
Falmouth
Fowey
Helston
Ilfracombe
Kingsbridge
Land's End
Looe
Newlyn
Newquay
Paignton
Penzance
St. Agnes
St. Ives
Salcombe
Torquay
Teignmouth

Country Sports and Moorlands at Ashburton
Bovey
Bodmin
Brent
Buckfastleigh
Dousland
Exeter
Liskeard
Lostwithiel
Luxulyan
Moreton
Newton Abbot
Princetown
Roche
St. Austell
Tavistock
Totnes
Wadebridge
Wrangaton

The balmy air of Torquay, Fowey, Falmouth, and Penzance—the superb bracing effects of Paignton and Newquay are alike especially appreciated by those in search of REST, CHANGE, & SUNSHINE.

Cheap Week-End and Tourist Tickets.

The Superintendent of the Line, Paddington Station, will send all particulars upon application; and upon receipt of 3d. in stamps, will forward a copy of either of the following Travel Books:

"Cornish Riviera Express" leaves Paddington daily at 10.30 a.m.

"Devon: The Shire of the Sea Kings."
"The Cornish Riviera: Our National Health and Pleasure Resort."

JAMES C. INGLIS, General Manager.

APPEALS.

THE CHURCH ARMY pleads earnestly for FUNDS towards relief (by means of WORK only) of hundreds of INDUSTRIOUS UNEMPLOYED imploring aid for starving wives and children. Emigration in suitable cases.—Prebendary CARLILL, Hon. Chief Sec., Headquarters, 55, Bryanston St., W.

ROYAL MATERNITY CHARITY OF LONDON.
Founded 1757.
Patron—H.M. THE QUEEN.
President—H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.
The Charity provides Midwives and Medical Attendance (Gratis) for poor Married Women in their Own Homes. Donors of £10 10s., three "Letters" annually for life; Annual Subscribers, four "Letters" per guinea.
The Committee earnestly pleads for gifts of money to extinguish the Charity's burdening Debt.
A Training School for Pupil-Midwives is attached to the Charity.
Major G. LIONEL B. KILLICK, Secretary.
Offices: 31, Finsbury-square, E.C.

CONCERT.

MISCHA ELMAN. QUEEN'S HALL.
FIRST RECITAL THIS SEASON.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, April 6, at 3.
Vocalist, Miss AMY CASTLES.
Accompanist, Mr. CHARLTON KEITH. Bechstein Piano.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., and 1s., at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall, and usual Agents.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER.
Chatham House, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

COWES.—MESSRS. MARVINS, Princes Buildings. Agency for Sale, Purchase, or Charter of Yachts. Also House and Estate Agency for Isle of Wight. Established 1858 and patronised by Royalty

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8. V. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

ENGINEERING.
A limited number of PREMIUM PUPILS are received at the LOUGHBOROUGH WORKS of the BRUSH ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING COMPANY, LIMITED, as an introduction to professional employment with associated companies at home and abroad. Pamphlets describing two courses—
(a) ELECTRICAL AND MECHANICAL ENGINEERING;
(b) TRACTION ENGINEERING (STEAM, PETROL, and ELECTRIC)—
will be sent on application to Colonel HILTON, Superintendent of Pupils, Falcon Works, Loughborough.

DIRECTORS.
Lord Vaux of Harrowden, G. A. Cornwallis West, C. S. B. Hilton, W. L. Madgen.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LINE.

FASTEST TO CANADA.

For Sailings and Pamphlet re WORK and WAGES, Apply to C. P. Rly., 62-65, Charing Cross, S.W. (Facing Trafalgar Sq.), 67, King William St., E.C., or local agents.

THROUGH TICKETS via CANADA to JAPAN, 22½ days; CHINA, 27½ days; AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S BLOOD MIXTURE

THE WORLD-FAMED BLOOD PURIFIER,

Is warranted to Cleanse the Blood from all impurities from whatever cause arising. It

WILL PERMANENTLY CURE

Eczema, Scrofula, Scurvy, Glandular Swellings, Bad Legs, Abscesses, Boils, Pimples, Blood Poison, Rheumatism, Gout, and

SKIN AND BLOOD DISEASES

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts. Of all Chemists, 2/9 per Bottle.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

PHOSFERINE

The Greatest of all Tonics.

RADIATES HEALTH.

Used in Court and Cottage. Supplied by

ROYAL COMMANDS

To The Royal Family, The Empress of Russia, The King of Greece, The Queen of Roumania, The Dowager Empress of Russia, The Crown Princess of Roumania, and the principal royalty and aristocracy throughout the world.

It is the most powerful Nerve and Recuperative Tonic known. It removes Mental Depression, Want of Tone and Nerve Power. It has remarkable Health-giving, Strength-giving, Energising & Rejuvenating properties

Proprietors:—ASHTON & PARSONS, LIMITED.
La Belle Sauvage, London, E.C.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN, and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale houses.

Charities Approved by the Editor of Truth.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION AND SHAFTESBURY SOCIETY.

Founded 1844.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—The Marquis of NORTHAMPTON.

The COUNCIL APPEAL for YOUR KIND HELP, MONEY, CLOTHING, PERSONAL SERVICE—all are wanted in the work of lifting the poor little ones, including the Cripples, from well-nigh hopeless surroundings to a better life and good citizenship.

Thousands of cases are dealt with every year.

Send for Report, and give us your liberal and prayerful assistance.

JOHN KIRK, Secretary.
32, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

LADIES' HIGH-CLASS COSTUME TWEEDS.

COPLAND & LYE,

Caledonian House, GLASGOW.

Recommend the undernoted:— (Patterns post free on request.)

HANDSOME "KELVINDALE" HOMESPUN CHEVIOT TWEEDS, thoroughly shrunk, eminently suited for Smart Tailor-made Coats and Skirts, in a full range of new art shades for Spring wear, 54 inches wide, at 3/11 per yard.

"HEBRIDEAN" SCOTCH TWEEDS, thoroughly shrunk, suitable for Ladies' Travelling or Sporting Costumes, in smart small checks, light, dark, or medium colourings 56 ins. wide, 3/6 per yd.

THE NEW "CLACHAN" SCOTCH TWEEDS, thoroughly shrunk, in two-effect mixtures, and self colours, 58 inches wide, 4/11 per yard. Stylish and Exclusive.

The Famous "CALEDONIAN" WINCEYS in Cream, Stripes, and Colours, from 11½d. to 2/2 per yard.

SCOTCH TARTANS. SCOTCH LINENS. SCOTCH HOSIERY. SCOTCH BLANKETS. &c.

COPLAND & LYE, The Leading Specialists in Scotch Textiles, Caledonian House, 165, Sauchiehall-street, GLASGOW.

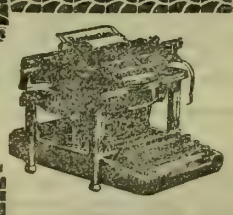
Channel Crossing, Sea-Sickness.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, in Truth, writes: "The only remedy is my trusty 'YANATAS.' It absolutely prevents sea-sickness." On sale at all chemists', 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. (the latter a sufficient supply for yourself and a friend) or by post (3d extra) from STARKIE, Chemist, Trafalgar Sq., London, S.W.

TYPEWRITERS



Send £6 or £8 and have a Smith-Premier or other machine on approval for a week—

You will not return it.

TAYLOR'S, Ltd.,
74, Chancery Lane, LONDON.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

"TRUTH"

Can be obtained at THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

Charities approved by the Editor of Truth.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

62,312 Children Rescued from Misery, Trained, and Placed out in Life in 40 years.

About 8,000 Boys and Girls always under the care of the Homes.

2,928 new Admissions in 1906.

1,171 EMIGRANTS sent out in 1906.

HEAD OFFICES:—

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, LONDON, E.

The Committe of the . . .

Invalid Children's Aid Association

appeals earnestly for gifts of second-hand spinal carriages, bath chairs, and perambulators, or the money to buy new ones. The demands are very urgent now that the spring and summer are coming, and arrangements can be made for utilising the parks and open spaces in London, if the carriages be obtained.

Will those who realise what important factors air and sunlight are in recovery from illness, send help, to enable us to bring them within the reach of our little invalids?

All letters to be addressed to THE SECRETARY,

69, Denison House, 296, Vauxhall Bridge Rd., Westminster, S.W.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED. £40 Annually will support a Cot,

£1,000

Names a Cot FOR EVER.

HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN
GREAT ORMOND STREET, W.C.

President: The Duke of Fife, K.T. Chairman: Arthur Lucas, Esq.

THE FIRST & LARGEST CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL in the BRITISH EMPIRE.

E. S. Johnson, Secretary.

WAIFS AND STRAYS

Forward Movement.

£100,000

required to develop and strengthen the work of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND WAIFS AND STRAYS SOCIETY.

ALL WHO LOVE LITTLE CHILDREN are earnestly asked to give or collect 20 SHILLINGS to mark the completion of the FIRST QUARTER-CENTURY of the existence of the above Society, during which homes have been provided for more than 12,500 DESTITUTE, OUTCAST, AND CRUELLY-TREATED CHILDREN.

DONATIONS WILL BE GRATEFULLY RECEIVED and collecting books supplied by Rev. E. DE M. RUDOLF, Church of England Waifs and Strays Society,
Savoy-street, London, W.C.

Please mark envelopes "Quarter-Century Fund."

THE

ROYAL HOSPITAL for INCURABLES,

PUTNEY HEATH

(City Office—4, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, E.C.).

Oldest and Largest Institution for Incurables.

Patrons:—
HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII.
H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN.

President:—
The Most Hon. THE MARQUIS OF NORTHAMPTON.

Treasurer:—H. J. ALLCROFT, Esq., F.R.G.S.

Maintains nearly 250 inmates and over 700 pensioners for life at a cost of £35,000 per annum, of which only £5,000 are guaranteed.

CHARLES CUTTING, Secretary.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

East London Hospital for Children

SHADWELL, E.

This Hospital is carrying on its work of mercy in one of the poorest and most densely populated districts of East London.

More patients found relief within its walls last year than in any previous year in its existence.

We rely on a generous public for our support, and there is grave danger that the work will have to be curtailed through LACK OF FUNDS.

Last Year's Deficit - - £1,100.

We plead earnestly for new Annual Subscriptions and Cot Endowments.

£1000 endows a cot in perpetuity.
£300 do. do. for lifetime of donor.
£50 do. do. if paid annually.

W. M. WILCOX, Secretary.

YOU CAN HELP

ONE SUFFERING CHILD

By Subscribing 12s. 2d. to the National Society for the

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY to Children.

108,225 Little Ones were Befriended by the Society Last Year at an average Cost of the above sum.

CENTRAL OFFICE: Leicester Square, W.C.

ROBERT J. PARR, Director.

Patron: H.M. QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

NORTH EASTERN HOSPITAL FOR CHILDREN,

HACKNEY ROAD, BETHNAL GREEN, E.

125 BEDS IN CONSTANT USE.

Annual Expenditure £11,000

Endowed income under £300.

Surrounded by some of the poorest and most crowded districts of London.

T. GLENTON-KERR,
Secretary.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

ALASSIO.—GRAND HOTEL, Alassio. The leading first-class house in the finest position. Electric Elevator.—A. MARSON, Prop.

ALASSIO.—HOTEL MEDITERRANÉE. Large garden. Sea view. Sheltered position. Auto. Garage. Moderate charges.—E. BOGLEOLE, Prop.

ALASSIO.—THE SALISBURY. Proprietor, Mr. JOHN CONGREVE.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop. A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BORDIGHERA. — HOTEL ANGST. Leading hotel. Patronised by English Society. Luxuriously furnished. English sanitation.—Proprietor, ADOLFO ANGST.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL ROYAL. High-class hotel. Full South. The most fashionable house. Garden.—L. PALOMBI, Prop.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL BELVEDERE LOMBARDI. The favourite English hotel.—Prop., G. WUNSCHMANN. Madame is English.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CANNES.—GRAND HOTEL BRISTOL, CENTRAL. First-class hotel, situated in a most charming position. Pr., T. SCHAER.

CANNES.—ROST'S CONTINENTAL HOTEL. One of the finest hotels on the Riviera. Unrivalled Sea view.—Prop., H. ROST.

CANNES.—PRINCE DE GALLES HOTEL. First-class. Suites with private baths. Central heating. Large garden.

CANNES.—GRAND HOTEL DE PROVENCE. First-class, quiet and select quarter. Large gardens. English house.

CHEMIST. — GINNER & CO., Court Chemists. The English Pharmacy, 40, Rue d'Antibes, Cannes. Tel. 527.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHATEAUX D'OEX.—GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,300 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN. — HOTEL BELLEVUE. — World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE. -HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL ROYAL GRANDE BRETAGNE. First-class. Full south. Open all the year.—CHIOSTRI, Props.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GENOA.—GRAND HOTEL ISOTTA. Best central situation. All modern improvements. Hot water heating.—E. MOSER, Dir.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss. - NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

GRASSE. — GRAND HOTEL. Patronised by her late Majesty.—Proprietor, F. ROST. Open from Sept. 16 to July.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 Villas. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. All comforts.

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors W. FISCHER, Prop.

HYERES.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. Full South, with modern comfort. Orchestra. Lift.—E. CASTUEIL, Prop., Director.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BEAU RIVAGE. First-class family house. Write for illustrated pamphlet.—C. GIGER, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church

MENTONE.—HOTEL DES ANGLAIS. Leading English house. Two English Billiard tables. Garage.—Proprietress, Madame ARBOGAST. P. GIORGI, new Manager.

MENTONE.—RIVIERA PALACE. Suites with private baths. 300 rooms.

MENTONE.—HOTEL MONT FLEURI. First-class. Central. Heating. Lift. Electric light. Charmingly situated on elevated position.

MENTONE.—BEAU RIVAGE. First-class hotel at moderate prices. Full south, facing sea. KASPAR TREPP, Proprietor.

MENTONE.—HOTEL DE TURIN. Central position, full south. Large garden. Modern comfort.—J. WARTH, Proprietor.

MENTONE.—ALEXANDRA HOTEL. First-class. Under new management. Reorganised. Redecorated throughout.

MENTONE.—ANGLO-AMERICAN ESTATE AGENCY. Complete list of Villas, Flats, Apartments for rent and for sale.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths.

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTE CARLO.—HOTEL DU HELDER. Modern comfort. Central heating. Situated close to Casino.—A. BREMOND, Prop.

MONTE CARLO.—HOTEL HARTER ET MEDITERRANEE. First-class. Facing sea and Casino.—Prop., CH. HARTER.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPTNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES. — GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Recommended for its cuisine, position, and comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE — GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

NICE.—HOTEL DU RHIN. Strictly first class. Family house. Excellent position. All rooms heated by hot water. Terms moderate.

NICE, Cimiez.—WINTER PALACE. One of the finest and most comfortable hotels in Europe.—J. ACID, Director.

NICE.—MEYER'S PARK HOTEL, Villa Arson. First-class. Situated in its own magnificent Park. Moderate terms.

NICE.—HOTEL TERMINUS. Opposite railway station. First-class, up-to-date. New winter garden.—H. MORLOCK, Prop.

NICE.—HOTEL DE SUEDE. English house. Every home comfort. Hot-water heating. Electric lift.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal. Props., HILLBRAND & BROWN.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

FOREIGN HOTELS, &c.—contd.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PISA.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL DE LONDRES. The only hotel with central heating in Pisa.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLAVISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

PORTOFINO.—HOTEL SPLENDID. Station, St. Margherita. The only first-class Hotel in Portofino and district of Portofino. Exquisite view. Tel. Add.: "Splendid," Portofino.

RAPALLO.—VERDI'S HOTEL. Favourite English house. Charmingly situated. Electric light. Modern comfort.

ROME—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Situated on famous Via Nazionale, in finest part of Rome. Every modern comfort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date.
BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME—WINDSOR HOTEL. Full south, via Veneto. Suites of apartments. Baths. Cent. heat., mod. comf.—CASTELLI & LANTENAY.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL.
The English House.

ROME—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL BELLEVUE. The most fashionable, of renowned reputation.—JULES LIPPERT, Proprietor.

SAN REMO.—SAVOY HOTEL, opened 1900. Most luxurious modern hotel. Elevated position.—Proprietor, PAUL MARINI.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL ROYAL. The most "UP-TO-DATE" Hotel of the place. Garage.—M. BERTOLINI, Prop.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL, HOTEL DES ANGLAIS
—AD. SCHREIBER, Proprietor.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, Fr. 11 to 18.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate terms.

VIENNA.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Kartnerring next to the Opera. The most leading hotel in the town. Own fishing and shooting.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English House."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up to-date.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500ft. alt. Bracing air, lovely scenery, 9-hole Golf course. Static Electricity. High-frequency Currents. Radiant Heat X Rays. Vibratory Massage.—J. J. KIRBY, Managing Director.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. (Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

HYERES—R. J. CORBETT & CO. The English Bank. Arrangements with Hotels. Villas and Apartments to let.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of Burns," and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water Swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. BECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaverock Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL (only 2½ hours from Paddington) facing due S., offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. Central for Croome and Ledbury Hounds, loose boxes, hunters. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resid. Prop., F. MOERSCHELL.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

ALEXANDRA HOTEL.

Best position on Sea Front.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.

Faces due South.

An Ideal Autumn and Winter Resort.
Patronised by the leading Families in the Kingdom.
Moderate Tariff; inclusive if desired.

Telephone No. 64.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic.
Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management. Just RE-OPENED.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
Entirely RE-BUILT and EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort and Luxury. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Delightful Grounds, Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.
The treatment of Rheumatism, Gout, Dyspepsia, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Obesity, &c., is greatly shortened by the LATEST ELECTRICAL METHODS. All the newest Baths. The Cure Department is under the direction of E. NEU, M.D. (Bonn University).

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Spring Resort. Centre of beautiful and Historic Country. Enlarged, remodelled. Large Stable & Garage. Mod. Tel. 3550 & 109 Leamington.

The HEALTHIEST SPOT IN SCOTLAND.
At the foot of the Grampians. Grand Scenery. Every Modern Comfort. Excellent Cuisine. Electric Light and Heating. Spacious Lounge. Billiards. IDEAL RESORT for GOLF: 18-Hole Course near. MOTORING. Motor Garage and Pit. TENNIS and BOWLING GREENS near hotel. Send for Illustrated tariff to C. A. THIEM, Proprietor

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY
(LIMITED),
HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000.

Fire. Burglary.
Assets exceed £2,000,000
THE OCEAN ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION LIMITED
The Corporation has paid over £6,000,000
Employers' Liability.
Accident Insurance
Fidelity Guarantees.
ALL KINDS OF
Head Office: MOORGATE ST. LONDON, E.C.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

TREATISE ON OPTIONS.

Mr. Arthur Crump, late City Editor of the Times, described "Options" as "the most scientific and prudent way of operating on the Stock Exchange." This system of operating, although well known and very popular on the Continent and in America, is not so well known amongst Investors here as its merits justify. We have just published a new Treatise on this subject which will be sent post free on application to The Secretary,

LONDON & PARIS EXCHANGE, LTD.
Bankers,
BASILDON HOUSE, BANK, London, E.C.,
Or from any of its Branches.

PENN WYOMING COPPER COMPANY.—DIVIDEND No. 23.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that a Dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum for the quarter ending March 31st, 1907, has been declared, and is payable on Monday, April 15th, 1907, to all Shareholders registered on the London Register of the Company on Friday, the 15th day of March, 1907, and to holders of Coupons No. 3 attached to Share Warrants to Bearer. All Coupons must be left at the Office of the Company three clear days for examination. The London Transfer Register is Closed from the 15th day of March, 1907, to the 15th day of April, 1907, both days inclusive.—By Order of the Board, H. GULLIVER, Secretary. London Office: 14, Gt. Winchester Street, London, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE. C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

FOR GOUT, GRAVEL, RHEUMATISM, etc., DRINK
VICHY CELESTINS (State Spring)
Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ETAT & the name of the Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

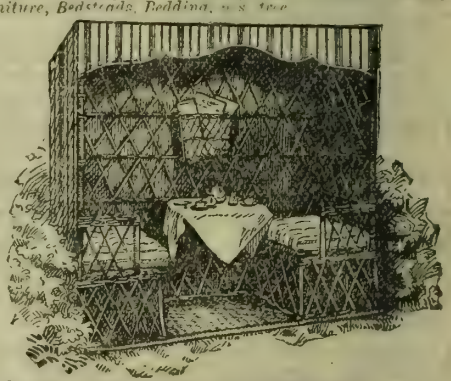
NOBLE'S
SERGES

WEAR NOBLE'S SERGES.
The most durable, most reliable fabrics in the world. They stand the hardest wear—stand drenching rain, burning sun, sea water, washing with common soap—stand almost anything without changing colour, shrinking, or going to pieces. See and test JOHN NOBLE'S
ROYAL YACHT CLUB and IMPERIAL SERGES
(In Navy, Cream, and Black).
Every piece British-made, absolutely fast dye, non-spottable and unshrinkable. In all weights, to suit all climates and all pockets. 160 Qualities.
Prices: 1/4½ to 8/9 per yard.
State whether you require Navy, Cream, or Black, and whether for ladies' or men's wear.
JOHN NOBLE'S astonishing variety of Spring Dress Fabrics (Voiles, Cashmeres, Tweeds, Habit Cloths, &c.), are the most delightful ever offered. All patterns post free on approval. New Fashion Book of Garments for Ladies & Children FREE.
JOHN NOBLE Ltd
300 Brook St Mills
MANCHESTER

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6/9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, &c. free.

THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.
With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position.
Shelters from wind and sun.



Price Complete in Striped Tick...£3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Catalogue Free.

GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., NOTTINGHAM.

The "Allenburys" DIET

Recommended for general use in place of ordinary milk foods, gruel, &c. It is very sustaining and nourishing, and whilst acceptable to all as a light nourishment, it is especially helpful to the Invalid and Dyspeptic.

The "Allenburys" DIET is a food for Adults and is distinct from the well-known "Allenburys" Foods for Infants.

Tins at 1/6 & 3/- of Chemists. A large sample sent for 3 penny stamps.

ALLEN & HANBURYS, Ld., 37, Lombard-st., LONDON.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

THE REASON WHY

"ERASMIC" is The Ideal Toilet Soap is to be found in the fact that in the production of every cake we are applying the practical experience of over 90 years in the art of soap making.

Perfectly pure; fragrant and economical.

"THE DAINTY SOAP FOR DAINTY FOLK."

4d. per tab., 1/- per box, of all Chemists, &c.

"Erasmic" Soap

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING
and H.M. The QUEEN.

179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.

No. M 289.

Vickery's exclusive Novelty Brooch, Earrings, and Ring to match, in Diamonds and Rubies.

Only £37.

Charming Novelties for Gifts in Jewellery, Silver, Leather, Tortoiseshell, Watches, Clocks, Dressing Bags, &c.

Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund.

THE WORK DEPÔT,
411, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.
Two doors east of Duke Street, Grosvenor Square.

Trousseaux. Blouses. Layettes. Smocking. Embroidery. Handkerchiefs Marked. Ecclesiastical and Art Work.

Extracts from Letters.

From Her Grace The Duchess of Hamilton and Brandon: "All the linen has arrived safely and is most satisfactory."

From Lady Tate: "I am very much pleased with my daughter's trousseau linen. The things are all most beautifully made and I shall have great pleasure in showing them to our friends. I am quite satisfied with the charges and consider them reasonable."

"Lady Grenfell is quite delighted with the work done for her trousseau. The nightgowns are extremely pretty and the work beautiful. The dressing-jackets are also very satisfactory."

"The Countess of Kintore begs to say that the nightgowns arrived in excellent time and were very prettily and daintily done."

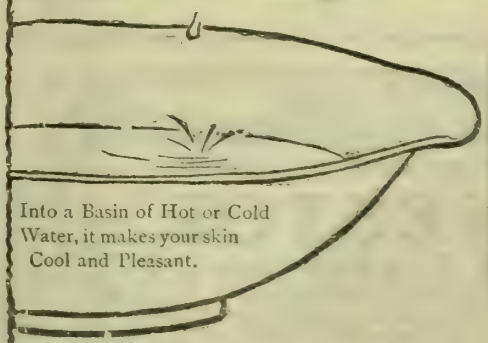
"THE QUEEN OF

Apollinaris

TABLE WATERS."

A Most Charming REFRESHER AND HEALTHY SKIN TONIC.

Sprinkle a Few Drops of



Into a Basin of Hot or Cold Water, it makes your skin Cool and Pleasant.

Warning.
Cheap, impure Colognes are injurious, stale, and sickly.
Insist on the 4711 when purchasing.

Look for the Hall Mark No. 4711. on the blue and gold label of your

EAU DE COLOGNE.

No. 4711. is the highest standard, and guaranteed pure.

Of all dealers in high-class perfumes, from 1s. to 15s. per bottle.

You cannot fare better than with

WOLFE'S

Aromatic Schiedam

SCHNAPPS

wherever you may be. It is to ordinary spirits what champagne is to ordinary wines, representing the supreme perfection of a distilled spirit, and the highest possible point of purity. It is suitable alike for women and men, and possesses tonic properties that render it healthful, invigorating, and in every sense beneficial.

The best Pick-me-up. The best Tonic. The best Digestive.

Of all Spirit Merchants and Licensed Grocers. Wholesale :—

The Finsbury Distillery Company, London.

NO BREAKING.
NO SPILLING.
NO WASTE.

NO RUINED GARMENTS IN TRAVEL.

DR. LYON'S

PERFECT

TOOTH POWDER

Cleanses, Preserves, and Beautifies the Teeth without injury; imparts a Natural Fragrance to the Breath.

Sold by all Chemists in dainty blue enamelled metal boxes, with Dr. Lyon's patent measuring tube very convenient for Tourists.

Price 1/-.

Prepared by the eminent Dental Surgeon,

I. W. Lyon. D.D.S.

157, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, LONDON, E.C.

LANCHESTER

1907 MODELS.

PROVE OUR STATEMENTS.

It will not cost you anything to find out for yourself that the "Lanchester" is all that we say it is. At all our Depots we are arranging trial runs daily. We shall be pleased to arrange a trial run for you. If you have not seen our 1907 Catalogue it will be to your advantage to do so at once. May we send you one free?

THE LANCHESTER MOTOR CO., LTD.,
BIRMINGHAM. MANCHESTER. LONDON.

"THE EXQUISITE EGYPTIAN."

"NESTOR"

Cigarettes

(Nestor Gianaclis, Cairo).

Guaranteed absolutely free of all drugs or chemical flavourings, the peculiar aroma being due solely to the exquisite quality of the Tobaccos used in the Blend.

Imported in two qualities—
Surfine and Extrafine.

Specialities—Gold Tipped "King" and "Queen" Cigarettes. Also special packets of ten for Golfers and Card Players, including scoring cards, rules, &c.

Of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World, and 13, New Bond Street, London, W.

50 Years

For over Fifty years

CAMBUS

pure Scotch Whisky has been made from the Patent Still (not the Pot Still)

7 years Old.	3/6 a Bottle.
Matured in Wood.	42/- a Case.

"Not a headache in a gallon." Ask your Wine Merchant for "CAMBUS."

THE DISTILLERS CO., LTD., EDINBURGH.

London Distributors—
Messrs. BOWEN & McKECHNIE; W. H. CHAPLIN & Co., Ltd.; and MARSHALL & MARSHALL, Ltd.

OUR PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14 letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THE NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET-STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,463.

EPIGRAMMATIC ESSAYS, SUPPLYING SOME PLAUSIBLE REASON FOR THE DECLINE AND FALL OF VALENTINE'S DAY.

The Prize of Two Guineas in this Competition is awarded to DERULA, whose Essay was printed in TRUTH of February 27th last.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,464.

EXAMPLES OF A SMART AND APPROPRIATE PUNNING REJOINDER.

This proved a highly successful Competition, so many excellent examples being sent in that the Puzzle Editor's critical faculties have been severely exercised in adjudicating upon them.

On the whole, however, he has come to the conclusion that the example sent in by ALLEGRO is the best, and the Prize of Two Guineas is, therefore, awarded to that competitor. ALLEGRO'S example was printed in TRUTH of March 6th last.

Further Prize awards will be announced next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,471.

It was Thackeray, if I remember right, who once pointed out the possibilities of the advertisement novel, explaining what he meant by an example that ran somewhat as follows:—

"Lady Fanny entered the drawing-room, garbed in an exquisitely fitting tailor-made costume that bespoke the unrivalled handiwork of ———. Her little feet, cased in that dainty footwear of which Messrs. ——— alone have the secret, moved noiselessly over the soft pile of the magnificent carpet, the chef d'œuvre of ———, Limited, well known as the best house in the trade," etc., etc.

The above is not an exact quotation. I cannot, at the moment, put my hand on the passage. But it embodies the substance of the famous novelist's humorous suggestion, which, for present purposes, is all that matters.

Now I do not, of course, propose to set my competitors the mammoth task of writing an advertisement novel: but I do think an amusing and interesting Puzzle might result from asking them to construct an Advertisement Anecdote on such lines.

This week, therefore, I am offering the usual Prize of Two Guineas for

THE BEST "ADVERTISEMENT ANECDOTE," OF NOT MORE THAN 200 WORDS, FRAMED ON THE MODEL GIVEN ABOVE, AND INTRODUCING THE NAMES OF THE GREATEST NUMBER OF FIRMS ADVERTISING IN THIS (CURRENT) ISSUE OF "TRUTH" (APRIL 3).

It is essential that the Anecdote, which may be on any subject, should be written in intelligible and grammatical English. Also the ingenuity of the manner in which the advertisements are introduced will be taken into account. But, subject to these conditions, and other things being equal, the Prize will be awarded to that Competitor who introduces the greatest number of advertisements within his limit of 200 words.

Competitors are requested to underline each advertisement, and to state the number which they claim to have introduced.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i) No competitor must send in more than one Advertisement Anecdote.

(ii) All Anecdotes must reach TRUTH Office by the first post on Monday, April 15, at latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

EBORACUM.—Many thanks for so kindly wishing me the "Gaudium Paschale," and for your other complimentary remarks, which I much appreciate.

WINKLE.—The correction duly noted. Many apologies for the typographical error.

AGATHA.—Very pleased to welcome you.

WHIG.—I have, as you will see, duly substituted your amended paragraph.

ROLLING STONE.—Many thanks for your letter. I am glad that you appreciate our quarterly Puzzles for foreign competitors. In printing competitors' solutions, I have to be guided by the numbers sent in. But I shall hope to find space for yours when the time comes.

DEAFFY.—I am glad to hear that your perusal of TRUTH has led you to turn a deaf ear to the individual referred to. It is not surprising that he declined to undertake your cure on the "no cure, no pay" principle, as, in that event, he would never be able to claim your money, which is his sole object.

QUILP.—You raise an interesting point on which I cannot pronounce off-hand. For the moment, therefore, I reserve judgment.

WOODPECKER.—Your nom-de-plume duly registered.

NEALE.—I agree with you that it is an exacting Puzzle; but its popularity is evidenced by a phenomenal number of solutions received.

VALPARAISO.—Very pleased to welcome you. Your nom-de-plume duly registered. I think that our Foreign Puzzles bid fair to be a great success.

PRIOR PARK.—I will notify you of the dates of the issues of TRUTH in which the awards referred to are announced.

RIMABEL AND QU'APPELLE.—I much regret that your solutions of Puzzle No. 1,467 were received too late for inclusion.

ALPHA.—Your solution of Puzzle No. 2 Special Foreign duly received. I have noted your Penang address.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,468.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

SHORT PARAGRAPHS IN WHICH THE GREATEST NUMBER OF SURNAMES OF DISTINGUISHED LITERARY CHARACTERS ARE INTRODUCED.

N.B.—Owing to lack of space, it has been found impossible to print the "Keys" which most competitors have forwarded with their solutions. But such keys have all been carefully filed and will be consulted by the Puzzle Editor in his adjudication.

The usual winter gift of this young jewel of a landlord to the Goldsmith's son, took the form of hog, lamb, or bacon, with about eleven hundredweight [illegible] coals and coke; and a little (grey) grass-weed to cook with. Swiftly the ready porter [illegible] waistcoat carried home the news (57).—Bacon.

SPRING

Sterne winter rules no more; gray knight's shorter, sweet day smiles longer, murray black birds carroll overhead. Grand Phœbus speeds westward, brightening greenwoods, meadows, orchard lees. Sterne swallow and gay young duke wheedles coy step to church. "I'll be home," short say. Summer's charming, hawthorne's white. Lamb's deer lyte burns strongly upward (57).—Shamus.

STRANGE DELUSION OF A CRIMINAL LUNATIC.

Grey-haired pope, stern bishop, writer proud, hardwooden, locksmith, grim long fellow savage with jews when [illegible] Young [illegible] gay lighthearted [illegible] passed the swimming waters where [illegible] glass [illegible] and black scene, when [illegible] green [illegible] wood, and broom afford homes to lamb, sandmartin, hog or wolf (57).—Whig.

Savage blackamoors hopefully donning motley spensers, green, gray, lemon, white, brown, manifested hardihood, painfully fielding swift ball. About reposed hearty goldsmiths, grotesque highwayman, ploughman, locksmiths, millers, fowlers, bell-ringers, stonemasons, senior proctors, haggard tailors, canting priors, coopers, stowaways, carpenters, hairy warreners, strong castle wardens, marshalls, fletchers, soapboilers, gay, grand, salaried lady helps (56).—Sepe.

The stern, blind, white-faced locksmith wolfishly devours underdone bacon, pewter, crab, salmon, and lamb (which cook browning burns black). Prior like in grayish-brown spencer, this dire frenchman's boyhood, strangeness, and withering, steely smiles, tickle a gay, sharp, green-eyed, hardy, young millwright, a marvellous hardened who helps; blacking, painful, smarting button (44).—Lamb.

Long fellow's twain, hardy Scottish emigrants, in green hooded spencers (utter a military popish goldsmith), hopefully hunting, lit on reeds, canes, burns, black moorhens, and wild gray lambs. Browning bacon and oily shelly crabs with small etna. Each youngster, all smiles, partakes heartily: then, by running, hooked it swift [illegible] mewed (45).—Quip.

The browning wood pussy's the gay young lover swift to hope smiles. Merryman, standing under the hawthorn and crabbe, his hands [illegible] burns; he Cæsar cramming [illegible] green head at [illegible] spencer, eyes wells of truth, whiter swan [illegible] hands; he a grand longfellow, she little shrew (51).—Seventh Child.

FRAGMENT OF A LETTER.

Montreser, Christmas Day, 1907. I [illegible] home instead of Holland. [illegible] French cook, smart gardener, will [illegible] does [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] May [illegible] wild. Her lover will borrow [illegible] beggar. My [illegible] James [illegible] "O man has luck" (50).—Aster.

Quaint ground, sterne, haggard, butler who [illegible] fry young hogg [illegible] with pepp [illegible] pig, and wife's mare, [illegible] Burnham, shelling walnuts [illegible] crabbe, burns everything black. Norris be smart.

no hood or hatton his gray head, and a little hole in his green winter macktintosh would payn a savage taylor (35).—Mart.

The constant cook, in gay motley cotton spenser, and the hardy stern smith will marry at the white temple by the green hawthorne wood. The gray prior, in black hood with bede buckle, hazlitt the church. The grimm savage ussher smiles. "Lever," he praed. "Kant you hook it home and hyde?" (33). -Tony.

While the hardy gay cook burns the lamb and bacon, the stout stern dean, with a bright steel bar, helps the baker, painter, miller, and goldsmith hunt the swift wild wolf over the white snow. With a long brown cane the haggard young carpenter kills a peacock with little pain (32). -Ison.

A young gardiner in green spenser, and brown hood, smiles because a smith, a black longfellow, pursuing a swift white lamb over sand and burns, kant Cæsar from a grimm gibbon. Dickens! Scott! Howitt wood payne! Stern, wordsworth nothing. A cowper brings cable and cane, affording the twain more hope (33).—Bunny.

One wild, black winter knight, go-Verne-ss's young gray lamb stow-le a-cross moore, fenn, marsh and barr-en sand s, hall-ting a-long a swift brooke's green banks, haggard, haute-sick, payn-ed. Day fol-low-ing, grand-father's smart, poe-tly gardiner, a g-rously sterne, hardy, grimm, ridg-id, crabbe-d wood-landor, hope-fully pur-sue d, cumming ohn-et, more ro-ver, gay-zing va-kant-lee up-ward (48).—Belfastiensis.

Lamb, bacon, woodcock, crab consumed, the young knight hunts a grand hart across beck, burns, black moor, white shelly sand. Mason, smith, clerk, cooper's twain, long fellow's from savage pen join. The goldsmith in steel grey hood and spencer, locks his chambers and borrows a cane for his swift cob (37).—Westcliffe.

One wild winter knight a smart hardy young Scott, more sterne of harte than his butler, a gray longfellow in pain brought on by a bunyan, haggard after their hunt, seeking some dryden or sand pitt, lytton a mill. Smelling browning bacon and lamb they praed the miller grant swift admittance (30).—Jackpot.

MARVELLOUS STORY FOR YONGE TO READE.

Watts a lyte butler? Great Scott! spcke Lowe, the hall lodge burns swifdly! Longfellow tells howe we twain, saved bacon, raleighing cook and chamberlayne to open locke with sharp, steele hook, lever, crowe bar, savage knox on head and foote, and howitt was penned by (32).—Denmore.

A sterne, haggard, longfellow, in gray hood, green mackintosh, and steel buckle, burns bacon, while canning shelley crabbe in a dryden. A whittier, hardy, young tailor cried, "Watt's browning? Law! howitt howells. Palmore swift." Phillpotts-merriman. Watson whose wordsworth hawthorne a thorne. (Barr Caine) wood cook moore hogg." Bosswell? Addison (had his son) a bunyan? (40).—Bridget.

MR. HOGG OF CHICAGO AND ENGLISH EVELYN.

With gay harte, without payn or thiers, Evelyn bids her mudie, haggard lover lever. Yet he came, baring-gould, good stirling coyne, amassed by canning bacon. Her willis to marryatt home; and hermann, we hope, is some more juvenal swain, neither gray nor grimm, but a young, hardy, martial merriman (29).—Eboracum.

A stern brown hog to a gay, young, white lamb: "Home; hark, a sharp rustle; the grim, wild, savage wolf on the hunt!" "Croaker! where? North—south eh?" "The southern wood. More swift! Past rooks, burns, black pit, and moor to the green mead, with church, hall, and mill. Miller helps" (34).—Blair.

Young, gay, lyly-white cook, in steel gray spenser and greene hood, is canning suckling lamb, savage hogg, swift hare, wilde kyd, black nird, brown crabbe, and bacon. A sterne, grimm butler helps, handing about lemon peele, browning rice, and currie (Violet Fane). 'Shaw! kant speke more—sharp pain, akenside—howitt burns! (43).—Oberon.

A hardy young scott and a haggard goldsmith, whose bunyan burns, steele bacon, crabbe, onions, and a black hogg from the white mill. Gay miller and sterne butler marvell howitt is donne; borrow caine and barrow, locke and barr their holmes, and hunt through hawthorne wood and moore (50).—Allegro.

Hay winter day, gray and black, a smart yonge sergeant, haggard, white, and grimm, witn armstrong, lytton a suffragette. "Lord! howitt burns with payn," she said. "Hugo to Kingston and lever hatton," shouted Brenda alexander lover, a sharp mann from Carlyle. Stowe it, green horn, wood you hunt a trollope? (33) - Neale.

The browne, shelley sand, whereon the swift, martial, yonge Scot(t), a gay merriman, all smiles, treads, burns the bunyan of the grimm, sterne, Pope, wearing a spenser and steele gray hood, eating a plato bacon and marot, and swearing with payn. Burke more wordsworth nothing you kant, but rousseau carroll (29).—Nest.

In the barr sit smart sergeant, hardyscott, sterne clarke, haggard chapman, black colman, gay young baker, gray hared butler, white miller, taylor, cooper, carpenter, locke smith, and goldsmith. No trollope is yonge Suc; with swift smiles she helps to phillpotts fuller with meade. On steele hobbes bacon is browning (38).—Busy Bee.

A child in gray green hood stands upon the shelley beach. She smiles regarding her crabbe. A sterne sailor enjoying a bacon sandwich beams into her black eyes. "Tory," lisps the lamb. He yarns of Italy and the Pope. "More," a lanky, long fellow approaches with swift steps. "Daddy!" "Hog!" (15).—Puck.

Across black London swift bowls my landau, past hall, gray temple, sterne lawyer, goldsmith, haggard tailor, mason, locksmith, butler, hardy scott, trollope in gay, motley spenser, shawl, and hood of peacock hues. Read, rather, of green woods, white hawthornes, brown moors, poetic burns, lambs on knolls, young lovers' hopeful smiles (43).—Prak.

Evelyn Campbell's lover, Terence Buchanan, was a hardy young Scot, clever but wild. Swift of foot he strode the marshy moor, donned in marvellous and martial greene, his harte gay with hope, for words worth more than goldsmiths' pearles. Alas! a pater gray, sterne, and haggard, said, "Villon," out (Hugo" (33).—Owain.

Great Scott, lyctou, howe haggard read looks; did hall came nim? "No," said Vaughan the bright. Rice made him smart for taking Besant's lever off the hook in the ward. "The dickens!" he yelled, "howitt hurts!" We wood not interfere, till Bunyan, with a few wordsworth hearing, turned frounds into smiles.—Deaffy.

Swiftly donning lack and gray spensers, we gaily hied to the prior's cooks to ask 'em for lamb and bacon pies, for which we'd a marvellous mania. The deserving butler, a new man, helps. While browning, one tray-ful burns. Stern, then crabbe'd, he savage ly knocks out the dried 'uns (28).—Amsty.

"Now the lamb is browning," said cook one day, in tones stern(e) and swift. "Borrow more green bacon from the gay young gardener, but bar ham—you know what his word's worth! Then prepare the crab (be) and lemon peel(e) while that hardy Scot(t) helps the pater hunt the grey hare (25).—Amicus.

Little child, ure lover hazlitt on a gay day! Disraeli a grimm story! When coke, a newman, burns plato bacon black, kant boyle lamb wright, butler knox bowles crashaw swift young cobbe won't foxe-hunt more, orr ken watts landor brooks. Hood marvell howitt wood lever wiseman haggard, with gray hare? (50).—Minos.

Look, mark well, sillily, wistful, erring woman, who declares, unappalled, great priceless homer, shocking crabbed poet indeed; locker, wittier, but more exhausting. What shall reward such critical thought. "Hopeless, black cook Evelina, young trollop generally reads love romances day and night, burns leveres instead of browning with her simple sage (44).—Scotus Viator.

The sun burns fiercely, browning the hawthorn A young, black lamb doth steal into the grey shadows. A hardy, wild, gawky savage, haggard, stern, brown-faced, ignorant of tailor, pope or goldsmith, comes to hunt the shelly crab. I, gay nature's lover, marvel at his swift progress o'er the sands (26).—Cybele.

I steal a cane, and, donning brown hood and black spenser, with stern, grey, haggard face, swift seek the mill amid the hawthorn and crab trees. My bunion burns with grim, savage pain. I ache inside, and rent in twain, heed no more the young lamb bleat, nor bird carol (25).—Arachne.

A black, haggard with pain, prayed a hardy goldsmith to weed a ridge, saying:—"I would be merry, man, and carol hopefully, but a bunion brought on by a stern long fellow with a steel bar, burns like the dickens. What's more, I go swiftly to marry at church" (25).—Padre.

When the fire, lit on the hearth, burns, and cook is browning the bacon, and putting more rusk in the oven, what say you to shop an hour and buy lamb and a hare; or shall we play tennis on the green, or will you go to the goldsmith? (15).—Snob.

Ouida Whittier Story Ovid to Reade in "Blackwood."—Stevenson Herbert Sydney, hardy young goldsmith, left Shorthouse, Sand Holmes, gray, haggard, sterne, and pain at harte, to marry at Yorke his lover, May Fielding. Hope makes gay, so merriman merrimée, southey crossland, to "Green Bell," Newtownsmith, for bacon, lamb, and stale porter (42).—Fox.

Cook, "Hook the black bacon hog on the leaver, be smart," I read. Robert burns a rusk in browning a lamb, so hunt for some more. Then borrow some sand from the miller, and trench it by the hawthorne in the wood, where the haggard lover smiles at pain when hearts are twain (25).—Woodpecker.

Grim and haggard, the stern, savage Scot, on his couch of pain, prayed for light. Behind, his butler—a merry man, and hardy as steel—began to read a gay riddle to himself. Robins on the green hawthorn outside in the wood chattered on. Hope was black within his heart (24).—E. Rolfe.

The gardener takes the smart young cob, swift as a hare, from the stables to the smith. He jumps the brook, has lit on the mill banks, alarming the black swan by the ford. The twain race in wood and mead, and come in just as more rain falls (23).—G. Rolfe.

Adam's grand young hope as a smart gardiner was to raleigh (rally) green hawthorne and white rosebery in meade, fenn, beaconsfield, and wood. The browne homer, shelley crabbe, ceasy crowe, gray foxe, swift hare, hardy hocking hogg, motley fielding lamb, and black swan, but more, wilde, haggard winter, aristotle (are his total) bain (39).—Alpha Beta.

A fox will steele lamb, but howitt burns to reach home without payn. Hog makes bacon, and cook helps to brown it when bell rings for breakfast amid gay smiles. Why marry at all if you are only to receive black knox? Watts more, I marvel at the dyer idea (22).—Canning.

The campbell sounded, and John's son, haggard and white, yet stern, crossed the swift burns toward the gray moor of Perthshire. He heard a dickens of a noise. Great Scott, what's that, he cried with hope. A hardy lamb? Howitt makes me long for home again (19).—G. V. T.

Olivia smiles gaily, her Bert returns home soon. Her hopeful heart how it burns! Her young lover swiftly crosses the field in which she reposes, scattering the grey lambs. A long fellow this Scot, stern and haggard. They will hunt or play tennis on Monday morning. Words worth millions follow (24).—Oiseau.

John's son, a grey long fellow Scot, would marry at Beacon's field. Thacker raised the dickens, as hoped at green moor. Neighbours granted landaus, cobs, lambs, black cock, harts, and borrowed canes and spencers. Young hardy martins, shelly crabs and rusk in bacon brought on the haggard lovers appalling pain (35).—Early Morning.

Stern winter departs, March steals in, no more sharp black frost. Gay little lambs rush swiftly round the hawthorn. The shepherd, a smart long fellow, smiles, and cane in hand (which he shakes spear like), helps them home. His had been no grey childhood of knocks, pain, and shocking burns (32).—Echo.

Tom's son, Sydney, writes home regularly from Henley. He lodges with the butler, near the lock, grey mill, and hawthorn green. He has hope of stealing more cricket, with swifter fielding, prior to sterner work. Ben's son has the hardihood of a scot, and is gay, young, merry man (25).—Nurse.

Paragraphs have also been received from:—The Girl, St. Moritz, Salsillo, Dudhope, Asthore, Penny, Northlander, Little Jim, Petite, Neptune, Carl, Senga, Sheila, Wensleydale, Divitiacus, Juvenis, Mascotte, Robin Hood, Sceptic, Phreda, Klondyke, P. T. O., Spartan, N. D. P., Melchora, West Park, Hyde, Elim, Singher, Envoy, Grannie, Crescendo, Faulty, Biscuits, Neophyte, Agatha, Caw, Carrots, Winkle, Quis, Ethna, Crevan.

A THIN PAPER EDITION OF
- TRUTH -
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY
AND CAN BE OBTAINED ON ORDER OF ALL NEWSAGENTS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

To all Countries included in the Postal Union :—

Three Months	£0 7 8
Six Months	0 15 4
Twelve Months	1 10 8

And to any address in the United Kingdom—Three Months, 7s.; Six Months, 14s.; Twelve Months, 28s.

HACKNEY
Furnishing Company, Ltd

No connection with any other firm.
A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

EASY INSTALMENT SYSTEM.

CHEAPEST, BEST, MOST ECONOMICAL. NO DEPOSIT REQUIRED.

£10 worth	£0 7 0 per month	£50 worth	£1 9 0 per month
£20 "	£0 13 6 "	£100 "	£2 5 0 "
£30 "	£0 18 9 "	£200 "	£4 10 0 "
£49 "	£1 6 0 "	£500 "	£11 5 0 "

10 per cent. discount for cash. No large first paymonts. A full three years' credit. All goods delivered free in private vans. Carriage paid up to 300 miles. CATALOGUE POST FREE.

Compare our prices. No middle profits to pay.

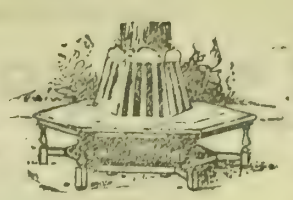
TOWN HALL BLDGS., MARE ST., HACKNEY, LONDON, N.E.
N.B.—HOURS OF BUSINESS, 9 till 9. On THURSDAYS we close at 4 o'clock. Telegrams—"Furniments, London." Telephone No. 84, Dalston. On leaving Hackney Station ask for the New Town Hall. Our extensive premises adjoin.

Caution.—We supply all our goods at the prices advertised, and strictly adhere to our TERMS.

Nine Large Shops next to each other.

JOHN P. WHITE
Garden Furniture & Ornaments

Catalogues upon application to the Works and Head Office, The Pyghtle Works, Bedford.



Catalogues of Carriage & Garden Gates, Garden Seats & Furniture, Chimney Pieces, Oak Panelling, Treillage, &c., &c.

134 NEW BOND STREET, LONDON W.

Rudge-Whitworth
Britain's Best Bicycle

The New Catalogue Post Free.

A delightful volume of 64 pages full of illustrations of all the GREAT 1907 IMPROVEMENTS in bicycles. The 81 models of 1907 RUDGE-WHITWORTHS (from £5) are all GUARANTEED FOR 10 YEARS (sealed certificate with every machine); are PACKED FREE AND CARRIAGE PAID; and NO EXTRA CHARGE is made FOR EASY PAYMENTS (from 8/4 monthly).

Write for it to-day to Rudge-Whitworth, Ltd.

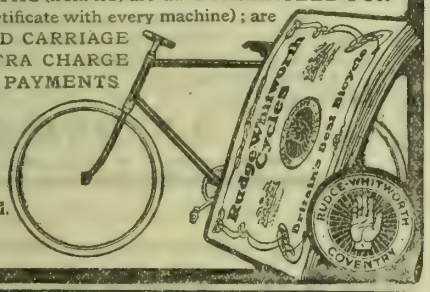
Dept. 265 Coventry.



Southalls' Compressed Towels

are specially designed for Ladies when travelling.

The Tiny silver packets, 2¼ inches long, into which they are scientifically compressed, contain a full size towel—as soft, as absorbent, and as comfortable as only Southalls' Towels can be. Size A, 1d. Size B, 1½d. Size C, 2d.

From all Drapers, Ladies' Outfitters, and Chemists.

A Sample Packet, containing four "A," three "B," and two "C," will be sent post free for 1s. from The Lady Manager, Bull St., Birmingham.

For an evening's amusement try
JOHN HEATH'S PENS.
Send 7 stamps for box of 24 samples.
JOHN HEATH & CO., Birmingham.

Jewsbury & Brown's
ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE.

In Pots and Tubes.

Electrolysis
HOME TREATMENT.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Everything that grows in nature depends upon a root for its growth, and until that root is destroyed the growth will continue.

When ladies realise this thoroughly, they will know how useless all liquids, pastes, &c., are for removing hair for ever.

The "Tensfeldt Apparatus" is Electrolysis simplified, and with it you can in the privacy of your own home kill the roots without leaving the slightest mark or disfigurement.

On receipt of 1d. stamp for postage, I will forward a copy of my book "The Face Perfect" to all sufferers from this dread scourge of superfluous Hair.

Permanent Cure Guaranteed

All Letters Strictly Confidential.

MADAME TENSFELDT,
28, Shandwick Plc.,
EDINBURGH.

18 ct. Four Diamonds and Three Rubies. 32/6

18 ct. Three Rubies or Sapphires & two Diamonds 47 6

18 ct. Three Diamonds 30/-

18 ct. Claw Setting—Each Set with Diamonds and Three Rubies or Sapphires 25 -

These beautiful Gem Rings

are shown as examples of the extraordinary value sensations contained in . .

H. SAMUEL'S Illustrated Catalogue.

From this book—sent free and post free—you may select Gold and Silver Watches, Clocks, Choicely Set Gems, Electro-plate, Cutlery, &c., and save yourself nearly one half.

H. SAMUEL has a Branch—one of fifty—at 178, STRAND,
and invites you to pay a visit if but to make an inspection and a comparison.

If you cannot call, send for Catalogue—
200 pages—3000 bargains.

H. SAMUEL, Central Depot: Market St., Manchester.

HAMPTONS

All who purpose selecting new Wall-Papers should call and view Hamptons' special display of the most tasteful

WALL-PAPERS

yet produced, comprising innumerable examples of every style and period now in vogue, and ranging in price from 1/- to 70/- per 12-yard piece. Hamptons carry out at Strictly Competitive Rates every description of Spring

RENOVATIONS

of Houses, Furniture, Carpets, Blinds, Curtains, &c. Plain Painting. Interior Decorating. HAMPTONS Furnish Free of charge Estimates for Renovations, together with Schemes for Re-decorating. Hamptons invite every reader of "TRUTH" to view their latest productions in made-up

CURTAINS

Chintzes, Cretonnes, Printed Linens, Taffetas, Tapestries, Damasks, Brocades, and other Furnishing Fabrics, specially produced for the 1907 Season. These include many exclusive Designs and Colourings, which surpass in artistic effect and in value for money the best examples hitherto produced. Hamptons' range of New Duchesse and Lace Trimmed comprises many most effective examples of the application of Cluny and Arabe Laces. They are also showing a number of specialities in Flounced Duchesse Blinds. Samples of any of these Blinds at prices ranging from a few shillings upwards will be submitted free of charge on application. Every Householder who is about to select new should call at once and view HAMPTONS' latest exclusive productions in tasteful and high-class Scotch Net Curtains, Swiss Embroidered Curtains, &c., &c.

BLINDS

Lace Curtains

Hamptons pay Carriage to any railway station in Great Britain, and deliver free in their Motor Box Vans within 30 miles of Charing Cross.

HAMPTONS

Head Offices and ONLY SHOWROOMS:

PALL MALL EAST, S.W.

ARE YOU TAKING

an everyday care of yourself? Prevention you know is ever so much better than cure. A little irregularity of the stomach seems such a trivial thing to-day, but next week it is a malady, ever getting more serious: little ailments soon become big complaints. Cure that little irregularity at once. Neglect it, and it leads swiftly to dyspepsia, indigestion, flatulence, constipation, biliousness, headache, and perhaps a train of greater evils. Even these will yield to but why run the risk of so much suffering? What folly to delay—waiting till one is ill.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

A dose of these famous pills taken whenever the least weariness is experienced will effectually prevent any unpleasant developments. Don't wait till you have to be cured. Take an everyday care of yourself, remember always if you keep the bowels regular and the liver in working order you will never be troubled with indigestion and it's attendant miseries.

"Taking care" of course means that the standard remedy must be always at hand. In many thousands of homes BEECHAM'S PILLS are regarded as the family medicine and are kept in an appointed place always ready for use. When you notice a symptom you want to get rid of it at once: there is no time like the present. To be always prepared, you too, must keep a box of Beecham's Pills

AT HOME.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ & 2/9.

CHAS. KNOWLES & Co., LTD.

The Wykeham. From 3/3 per piece.

Manufacturers of

Art Wall & Ceiling Papers

Patterns on Application.

164, King's-road, Chelsea, LONDON, S.W.

The Largest Show-Rooms in London.

DENT'S

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO THE KING.

WATCHES & CLOCKS.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock "Big Ben," and Sole Custodians Since its Erection.

DENT

TRADE MARK

No Instrument, from No. 38,000 upwards, is genuine without the above Trade Mark.

Send for NEW ILLUSTRATED C & W CATALOGUE FREE.

CAUTION.

E. DENT & CO., Ltd.,

Find it necessary to inform the public that their ONLY ADDRESSES are—

61, STRAND, and 4, ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn. W.C., & Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1580. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, April 10, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

I HAVE to thank a great many of my readers for their response to the tentative appeal which I made the other day for assistance in continuing the late Sir Francis Barry's gift of sixpences to the London workhouse children in connection with the Truth Toy Fund. I have received numerous promises of donations and several gifts in cash. I am not prepared to say offhand what I will do in this matter, but I hope to make a definite announcement on the subject next week. In the meantime it would greatly assist me in coming to a decision if I could receive a little more evidence that the whole 11,000 sixpences are likely to be raised, and I shall be very glad to hear from other ladies and gentlemen who will be willing to contribute. I should be very sorry to see this annual treat to so many poor children dropped, and I hope that enough people will share that feeling to prevent such a catastrophe.

The statement that the King and Queen are to cruise in the Mediterranean "for several weeks" is nonsense. His Majesty is to return to London before the end of this month, so that his cruise cannot last more than sixteen days at the longest after the Victoria and Albert leaves Cartagena. The King will not stop in Paris on his homeward journey, but he is to travel direct to Calais from the port at which his cruise terminates, which will probably be Naples or Genoa. The Queen will not return to England for about three weeks, as her Majesty and Princess Victoria are coming back by sea, and will land at Portsmouth. The King and Queen are to visit Malta during their cruise, and will probably arrive there towards the end of next week.

The King and Queen of Denmark will be the guests of their Majesties both at Buckingham Palace and at Windsor Castle during their visit to England, which is now expected to take place directly after the Whitsuntide holidays. It is probable that King Frederick and Queen Louise will be present at the fourth Court of the season, and a State Ball and a State Banquet (the latter followed by a diplomatic and official reception) are to be given at the Palace in their honour. There will also be a gala performance at the opera. It is understood that the King and Queen of Denmark will stay in England until after the Ascot meeting, and that they are to be the guests of the King and Queen at Windsor Castle during the race week. King Frederick is expected to visit Oxford, Cambridge, Southampton, and Portsmouth during his stay in England, and he will go to the Isle of Wight in order to inspect the Royal Naval School at Osborne.

It is understood that the King of Denmark and the King of Norway will pay an official visit to Paris during the last week in May, but, according to the latest arrangements, neither Queen Louise nor Queen Maud will go there. The King and Queen of Denmark and the King and Queen of Norway are expected to visit the Court of the Netherlands at The Hague just before the two Kings proceed to Paris, Brussels being visited by them en route. It is probable that while King Frederick is in Paris Queen Louise will remain at The Hague, rejoining his Majesty on his arrival in London, while Queen Maud will come at once to England, when her husband leaves for Paris, on a private visit to their Majesties.

Lord Althorp has attended the King and Queen on their yachting cruise by invitation of his Majesty, and Sir Charles Hardinge is officially in attendance. Sir Stanley Clarke and Major Ponsonby (who relieved Sir Arthur Davidson on Saturday) are the equerries-in-waiting on the King, and Major Ponsonby is acting as private secretary to his Majesty. The Queen is attended by Lady Antrim, Miss Charlotte Knollys, and Mr. Sidney Greville. Admiral Sir John Fisher is on board the Victoria and Albert.

At the Council which the Prince of Wales held the other day for the King at Marlborough House, an order of the Sovereign was formally approved which gives authority to the Bishop of Ely to sell Ely House, the episcopal residence of the see in Dover-street. There is certainly no object in the Bishop of Ely keeping a town house, and its maintenance must involve great and utterly useless expense. Formerly, the Bishop of Winchester had a large house in St. James's-square, but it was sold about 1874 after the death of Bishop Wilberforce, and the price (about £40,000) was devoted towards the endowment of the new see of St. Albans. This diocese was formed out of Rochester, which then relieved Winchester of a considerable area.

Prince Arthur of Connaught has been staying during the last ten days at the Château de Fabron on a visit to the Grand Duchess Marie of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. A paragraph has appeared in numerous journals which states that Prince Arthur's "recent visit to Berlin" was connected with a project for his betrothal to a German Princess. This is a mere invention. As a matter of fact, Prince Arthur has not been anywhere near Berlin. He spent three weeks at Stockholm, and made a short halt at Copenhagen on his homeward journey to England.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught will take up their residence at Clarence House, St. James's Palace, when they return to England next week, and are to be in town until Whitsuntide, when they will go to Bagshot Park for the holidays. Prince and Princess Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden are expected to spend the month of June in England as the guests of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught.

The Empress Marie's plans have been changed several times, but she finally decided to go for a short time to Biarritz, to join her daughter and son-in-law, the Grand Duchess Xenie and the Grand Duke Alexander Michaelovitch, who have been staying there for several months. The Empress Marie and the Queen have arranged to meet again in Denmark early in September, when they will reside for a few weeks at their recently purchased villa on the Sound near Klampenborg, which is within a walk of the Royal châteaux of Bernstorff and Charlottenlund. It is probable that the Queen of Norway will join her mother in Denmark, instead of the Queen herself visiting Norway again this year.

For Appeals, see page 926.
For the Truth Hotel List, see page 920.
For Special for Ladies, see pages 921, 922.
For Selected Foreign Hotels, see pages 919, 920.
For Amusements, see pages 916, 917.
For Our Puzzles, see pages 925, 926.

One of the ceremonials during the visit of Prince Fushimi of Japan will be a State investiture of the Order of the Bath, which is to be held by the King in the Throne-room at Buckingham Palace. His Majesty intends to confer the First Class of the Bath (G.C.B. Civil Division) upon Prince Fushimi. The principal members of the Prince's suite will also be decorated by his Majesty, probably with the Second Class of the Royal Victorian Order.

Princess Henry of Battenberg will go to Germany for a few weeks when she leaves Spain, and she intends to take a course of waters at Kissingen, besides paying some visits. Prince Alexander of Battenberg is on a visit to the Grand Duchess Marie of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha at the Château de Fabron; Prince Leopold, who is in the Canary Islands, is going to Magdalen College, Oxford, when he returns to England; and Prince Maurice is staying at Cumberland Lodge with Prince and Princess Christian. Princess Henry of Battenberg is not expected to return to the Isle of Wight until towards the end of July, when she will resume her residence at Osborne Cottage for two or three months.

A weekly contemporary announces, on the alleged authority of "a foreign diplomat," that at a recent "Court function" at Madrid, King Alfonso "clambered down from his throne, and proceeded to mount one of the huge golden lions that crouch at its foot." The "foreign diplomat" has been grossly hoaxing my contemporary, and he probably wonders whether there are any limits to the gullibility of the conductors of certain journals. Of course, no such incident has occurred at Madrid. Some such tale was circulated about a century ago concerning the mad King of Denmark, but it is rather hard that King Alfonso should be credited with such a crazy freak, for which only insanity or intoxication could account. Whatever branch of trade may be dull there is certainly much activity in the business of fabricating fictions of the "lie circumstantial" order about great people, both at home and abroad.

CASTLES IN SPAIN.

In Spain they're rather previous
About the unborn heir;
'Twere time to start such public fuss
When little stranger's there.

But p'rhaps I'm foolish to complain.
'Tis in the Spanish air.
We know what "castles built in Spain"
Still are, and always were.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen had a restful holiday time at the Viceregal Lodge, where a small family party was assembled. This week some Viceregal entertaining will be done in honour of the National Race Meeting, as usual. Lord Aberdeen's sympathy with horse-racing is not as pronounced as are his many other Irish sympathies; attendance at "Punchestown," however, comes within the boundaries of an Irish Lord-Lieutenant's duties, whatever his individual tastes may be.

At the beginning of next month Lord Aberdeen, with Lady Aberdeen and a large Viceregal party and suite, will open the Irish International Exhibition in State. It is built in Herbert Park, mainly on the Pembroke estate, quite close to Ball's Bridge, so well known in connection with the Royal Dublin Society's Horse Show. In old days the historic Donnybrook Fair, with its truculent traditions, used to be held in this neighbourhood.

Mr. Birrell's visit to Ireland at Easter, with Mrs. Birrell and his son, began by a stay in the South, at Queenstown, near Cork, with Admiral and Mrs. King Hall. Like most of his predecessors, Mr. Birrell has taken the opportunity of a holiday for getting his first object lessons in the country whose destinies are mainly in his hands. His vigorous speech in Dublin during the week pleasantly suggests that he dares "do all that may become a man," and an Irish Chief Secretary. He reminded the people that a "Question" is not a mere Irish specialty. Every country may be said to stock one of its own. Nevertheless, the Irish "Question" has some special features which distinguish it from the other "Questions." For one thing, Ireland is all "Question," and for another it is one that has never as yet had an answer. Such, at least, is the opinion in Ireland. The Chief Secretary has not as yet set up his residence in the official Lodge in the Phœnix Park, but has given a few days to learning Dublin Castle as the man on the spot.

The Dowager Lady Scarbrough, who died last week, only survived her brother, Sir Victor Drummond, for ten days. She was a daughter of the late Mr. Andrew Drummond, of Cadland Park, Hants, and (through her mother) a granddaughter of the fifth Duke of Rutland. She was married in 1846 to the ninth Earl of Scarbrough, who died in 1884. Lady Scarbrough was very popular in society, and a charming hostess. In her day, Sandbeck Park, the family seat in Yorkshire, was a most popular entertaining house. During her widowhood she divided her time between Lumley Castle, near Durham (her dower house) and her cottage at Fawley, on Southampton Water. She leaves two sons and four daughters—Lady Zetland, Lady Bradford, Lady Grosvenor, and Lady Bolton.

Sir Henry Elliot, who has died at the age of ninety, had a long and successful career in the Diplomatic Service, but he was more indebted for his professional good fortune to family interest than to his own superior merits. Sir Henry was a younger son of the second Earl of Minto, and one of his sisters was the second wife of Lord John Russell. He commenced life in 1837 as aide-de-camp to Sir John Franklin, then Governor of Tasmania, but returned to England in 1840, when Lord Palmerston (willing to oblige his colleague, Lord John, then Home Secretary) pitchforked him into the Foreign Office as a précis writer. A year later, just before the Whigs went out of office, Lord Palmerston perpetrated quite a series of jobs for the benefit of relatives of his colleagues, and Sir Henry Elliot became paid attaché at St. Petersburg, where he remained until 1848. Lord Palmerston then transferred him to The Hague, whence he proceeded to Vienna as Secretary of Embassy. He became Minister at Copenhagen in 1858, and a year later Lord John Russell (now Foreign Secretary) appointed his brother-in-law to be Minister at Naples. He was afterwards employed on a special mission to Athens.

In 1863 Lord John Russell excited general indignation by recalling Sir James Hudson, who had been for many years the very efficient Minister at Turin, and afterwards at Florence, in order to make a vacancy for Sir Henry Elliot, who was transferred by Lord Stanley (the late Lord Derby) to Constantinople, in 1867, where he remained for over ten years. He was removed by Lord Derby to Vienna at the end of 1877, and stayed there for six years, and he then retired from the service on a pension. Sir Henry Elliot was severely criticised by the Liberals in 1876 and 1877, as it was thought that he had been by no means energetic in denouncing the Bulgarian atrocities, and he was regarded as a decided friend of Turkey with a considerable sympathy for the troubles of the Porte.

Sir Willian Hulton, who died at San Remo last week, was the head of a very old family, although his baronetcy dated only from December, 1905. The Hultons have been seated in Lancashire since the Conquest, and they have lived at Hulton Park, near Bolton, since the estate was acquired by Blethyn de Hulton during the reign of Henry II. Sir William owned a large estate, and he was the possesser of extensive and very valuable collieries. He had been for forty years most actively associated with Lancashire public affairs, and he had exercised great influence on the County Council. Sir William, who was a Conservative and a staunch Churchman, was a man of remarkable ability and high culture. He took much pride in the office of Constable of Lancaster Castle, the keys of which he held, and he ceremoniously received in person the armorial shield of each new Sheriff of Lancashire to add to the interesting collection of these memorials in the Shire Hall within the Castle.

No less than forty-six States will be represented at the forthcoming Conference at the Hague, and the problem of finding accommodation for the diplomatists and their staffs, together with the crowd of journalists, international busybodies, and mere sightseers who will follow in their train, will tax the resources of the little Dutch capital to the utmost. One result of this will be to bring much grist to the mills of Scheveningen, which is only a quarter of an hour's run by electric tram from the scene of the Conference. Several of the delegates are arranging to take up their quarters at Scheveningen, and no doubt their example will be extensively followed, so that in addition to the immediate influx of visitors the charms of the North Sea watering-place will receive a world-wide advertisement. Those who have experienced the benefits of a holiday at Scheveningen may even hope that its delightful effect on mind and body may do something to promote the cause of international peace and goodwill.

Seeger's Hair Dye.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—Hinde's Ltd., 1a, Finsbury, London.

TO LORD LISTER,

On his Birthday, April 5, 1907.

'Tis meet to-day that Science weaves
Her choicest bays to deck his hair—
His, but for whom half-helpless were
The skill of Playfair or of Treves.

As Newton to the starry sphere,
Columbus to the unknown West,
So to his Art he stands confessed
Its epoch-making pioneer.

For though, perchance, be found there may
Those who the Master now outshine,
'Twas but by following out his line:
The glory his who showed the way.

It is very gratifying to an editor to know that he is regarded as a sort of universal adviser, the unfailing and infallible guide, philosopher, and friend of the public on every conceivable point. Sometimes, however, even an editor finds himself perplexed, not to say floored, by the questions that he is called upon to answer. Here, for instance, is a letter which reached me a few days ago:—

I contemplated visiting London in order to be present at the Final of the Football Association, but as I do not know anybody in London I rather fear I should be lost.

I would esteem it a great favour if you would tell me how to proceed when I arrive at the station.

I should allot say, £1 for expenses of keep during my stay in London, which would be about a week.

No, my hasty readers, you are wrong. The letter is not from a cautious Scot determined to avoid the awful fate of his countryman of "bang went saxpence" fame. It is from an Irishman and he writes from Dublin. What on earth am I to tell him? I suppose that I must not send him to the Ritz or the Carlton, and he might not be satisfied with Rowton House. The sovereign is apparently intended to cover all the expenses of his week in London. On the whole, I think I had better advise him to remain in Dublin.

Apropos of a recent paragraph, a correspondent points out that banks are not singular in requiring receipts to be forwarded before delivery of the documents, receipt of which is acknowledged. The Inland Revenue authorities follow the same practice. If taxes have to be repaid, the receipt is sent first, and when it has been signed and returned, the money which it acknowledges is forwarded. I suppose it is not likely that, having got a receipt out of a creditor, Somerset House would refuse to pay over the money; but the course of procedure is irregular and unbusinesslike, and there is no more excuse for adopting it in the business of a Government office than there would be between two parties in private life.

The other day I was asked for advice by a lady who had obtained a temporary engagement as a governess through an agency conducted by Miss Lennox Carr, at 120, New Bond-street. The lady really went to the situation on trial, and left at the end of the first three months, whereupon Miss Lennox Carr demanded a commission on a year's salary. The claim is apparently based on conditions printed on Miss Carr's prospectus, which are as follows:—

A temporary engagement is one made for any term under two months. . . . .

Should a temporary engagement last longer than two months it becomes a yearly one, and subject to a commission at the usual rate as mentioned above.

Consequently, a governess engaged for three months "on appro.," and leaving at the end of that time, is expected to pay 5 per cent. on nine months' salary which she has never received. Miss Lennox Carr evidently thinks that a court of law will uphold this claim, as she is threatening the unfortunate governess with her solicitor; but I should not advise any one to pay such a claim until its legal validity has been established; and, whether good or not in law, it seems a very harsh kind of extortion.

I have been interested to learn from a copy of the Central African Times which has been sent to me that the recent Queer Story Competition in Truth has been providing amusement for the British Colony at Blantyre. Being too far off to join in the competition in the usual way, some of the residents at Blantyre got up a sweepstakes on their own account, with a half-crown entrance fee, for the benefit of the competitor who should successfully elucidate the fate of the unhappy young woman, Amy Beadle. Judging from a metrical solution of the mystery which I have also received, and have handed over to my Puzzle Editor, the winner is likely to have been pretty near the mark, and I hope he got plenty of half-crowns. It has always been a matter of regret to me that the many readers of Truth in distant parts of the Empire are unable to compete for the prizes offered weekly in my puzzle column, and in conjunction with my Puzzle Editor I have lately arranged to run special competitions for their benefit. But the method adopted at Blantyre seems to offer a simple means by which any British Colony may get up Truth competitions on its own account.

It has been my misfortune to incur the wrath of a lady, owing to my unsympathetic attitude towards "Votes for Women." The wrathful dame says that she is not a Suffragette herself, but she does not like to hear unkind things said about those who are. She must find her newspapers rather unpleasant reading nowadays, and I do not know why she has singled me out for reproach above all other male journalists. But she tells me that I am no gentleman, and she holds up to me the example of Mr. Labouchere, who, though opposed to the political ambitions of the other sex, "never forgot that he was a gentleman when speaking of them." Should this meet the eye of the gentleman referred to, he may possibly think, even if too gentlemanly to say it, that in those days ladies never forgot that they were ladies. But it is not only "Votes for Women." "Your paper has become," says the lady, "not only in this, but in its general tone, deplorably vulgar." By way of raising its tone, the good woman is going about persuading all her friends not to dress dolls for children in the hospitals and workhouses next Christmas, and she has good hope of achieving a success which will teach me a lesson. I fear I should only make matters worse if I said what I think about this; but my opinion of the ladies who read Truth is such that I have no fear about the dolls.

Stammering cured only by personal tuition; interview on written application.—Mr. A. C. Schnelle, 119, Bedford Court-mansions, London, W.C. Pupils taken in residence.

I am curious to know whether any reader of Truth has had any experience of a Mrs. Davis, of Helebridge, Bude, who seems to do a considerable business in supplying newspapers and magazines second-hand. A lady who recently paid Mrs. Davis £2 9s. 6d. in order to be supplied weekly with the Illustrated London News, the County Gentleman, and Hearth and Home, received the papers very irregularly for some time. Her son wrote to complain, whereupon he received an abusive letter from Mr. Davis, who stated that he had opened his wife's letter, and that he was in a position to prove that the papers had been posted regularly, adding that unless he received a full and complete apology, "you will neither hear from me again, nor receive any papers for the future." Apparently this threat has been carried out.

The Editor of Hearth and Home appears to have heard of other cases in which customers of Mrs. Davis, or Mr. Davis, have had equally unsatisfactory experiences. I trust that no reader of Truth has been equally unfortunate. The practice of obtaining weekly and monthly periodicals in this way is very general, and those of us who are interested in the sale of such publications have no particular reason to complain of it, for no doubt it enables many people to obtain them who cannot afford to buy copies for their sole use. But this is not the first time that I have heard of money having been paid without getting value in return; and it seems desirable in all these cases to know for certain with whom you are dealing before you part with your cash.

I have received the following letter from a friend learned in astronomy, in reference to a recent paragraph in Truth on the question of providing a house for the Savilian Professor of Astronomy at Oxford. Since that paragraph appeared the question has been very fully discussed in the Times. From that discussion, I gather that there is a difference of opinion at Oxford as to how far the Professor is bound to be an "observer" rather than a teacher; though there seems no room for doubt as to the value of Professor Turner's work in the former capacity. The argument that an astronomical observer must reside close to his observatory may be valid enough in itself, but so is the objection to further building in the Parks, even within the Observatory grounds; and I suppose that the University authorities considered that it might be possible to find lodgings for the Professor near enough to the scene of his labours for all practical purposes:—

The proposal was simply to build a house in the Observatory enclosure, which would in no way encroach on the park, and it is worthy of note that the heads of all the departments of the University Museum, except the Regius Professor of Medicine, who was away at the time, expressed the hope that a residence might be added to the Observatory, "so as to give the Savilian Professor the facilities for the direction of observation which are provided in the case of every University and State Observatory known to us." They added "the necessity for a residence, which is thus universally recognised, is a natural consequence of the conditions under which astronomical work must always be conducted"; and this can scarcely be questioned.

It seems to be suggested by some people that observation is no necessary part of the work of the Savilian Professor. It is, however, specifically and emphatically enjoined by the founder, whose ideas have been confirmed by subsequent enactments. Doubtless, the teaching work of the Professor is of the highest importance, but practical observation cannot fail to add to its value, and observing work of the kind that has been done by the present Savilian Professor is admitted on all hands to have been of much importance to astronomy and a great credit to Oxford.

You suggest that the Savilian Professor of Astronomy might use the Radcliffe Observatory. This was done up to about 1839, when the use of that Observatory was refused by the Radcliffe Trustees, and many years later the University built its own Observatory. The field of modern astronomy is so vast that there is ample room for both, and their work does not clash; indeed, a great deal of meteorological work is done at the Radcliffe, and this does not come within the scope of University Observatory work at all.

The truth probably is that the opponents of the scheme for adding to the efficiency of the University Observatory have little sympathy with science in any shape, and are equally indifferent to and ignorant of the conditions and requirements of observational astronomy.

Archdeacon Emery has resigned the Archdeaconry of Ely, to which he was appointed by Lord Palmerston in 1864, and he is to be succeeded by Dr. Cunningham, the well-known Vicar of St. Mary the Great, Cambridge. The stipend is £600 a year. Archdeacon Emery retains the residentiary stall in Ely Cathedral to which he was collated by Bishop Harold Browne in 1870. He has most efficiently filled the onerous office of Honorary Secretary to the Church Congress for forty years. Bishop Chase's selection of Dr. Cunningham for this preferment meets with general and hearty approval, and it is hoped at Cambridge that it is a stepping-stone to higher promotion. Dr. Cunningham is a noted scholar and a learned theologian, and he has also written largely on a variety of economic and industrial questions.

Dean Wace was to have left Canterbury on Easter Monday for a holiday on the Continent, but he was obliged to postpone his departure, as he found himself the only member of the Chapter in residence, all the six Canons being absent. Archdeacon Smith, who was the Canon-in-chief at the Cathedral last month, had gone abroad; and Canon Moore, who was to have replaced him on March 25, is laid up at Rome with influenza. The Bishop of Dover and Canon Page-Roberts are in Cornwall, Canon Mason is abroad, and Canon Stuart (the newly appointed residentiary) cannot be installed until the 26th, when he will at once go into residence.

The Bishop of London, who has been residing for several months at London House, is now staying at Bournemouth for a short time. The Bishop will settle at Fulham Palace on Thursday, the 18th. He is leaving England on August 31 to spend two months in the United States and Canada. He will go to Richmond, Virginia, to attend the General Convention of the American Episcopal Church, which will then celebrate its tercentenary, and he is to be present at the laying of the foundation-stone of the new Cathedral at Washington. The Bishop of London contemplates a visit to Russia next year.

Jeffrey & Co.'s Artistic Wall Papers are on view at their New Showrooms, The Wallpaper Gallery, 31, Mortimer-st., W. To be had of all decorators.—Factory, 64, Essex-rd., Islington, N.

Canon MacColl was a most strenuous and untiring controversialist, and for forty years he had been constantly engaged in political and theological pamphleteering and newspaper correspondence. He was the son of a sheep-farmer in Inverness-shire, and was, of course, brought up as a Presbyterian, but after he had been ordained in 1861 he developed into a High Churchman of the advanced school. He deserved immense credit for the success with which he overcame his lack of University training by many years of very hard and difficult work. He was eloquent and interesting both on a platform and in the pulpit, and his table talk was as excellent as it was varied and inexhaustible. He was kindly and genial, and very hospitable, and all who knew him liked him, for he was a charming, and in many respects an original, personality.

Canon MacColl was an intimate friend and an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Gladstone. After serving several curacies in or near London, he was presented by Mr. Gladstone, in 1871, to the Crown living of St. George's, Botolph-lane, which church was closed many years ago, the incumbent receiving the income of the benefice until his death. In 1884 Canon Birch (who was tutor to the King in his boyhood) happened to die during a vacancy in the see of Ripon, so the appointment to his stall in the Cathedral fell for that turn to the Crown, and Mr. Gladstone nominated Mr. MacColl. He was the only High Churchman in the Chapter, and he did much to improve both the services and the position of the Cathedral in the diocese. Some years ago he was complimented by his colleagues by being elected their Proctor in Convocation, where he soon became a prominent figure.

A correspondent writes:—

Your statement in this week's Truth that the late Earl of Liverpool, after his removal to Kirkham Abbey, usually read the lessons in the parish church is, I think, not quite correct, for my impression is that Kirkham Abbey is what is known as "extra-parochial," and owes allegiance to no ecclesiastical parish. By the way, can you tell me how the peculiarity of being extra-parochial arose? I have heard the late Earl read the lessons at Whitwell Church, and very well he read them too; but Whitwell is in the North Riding, and Kirkham Abbey is across the Derwent in the East Riding.

I have always supposed that the peculiarity of being "extra-parochial" arose from the church being, or having been originally, a private institution, or controlled by a religious order. In the case above referred to I should guess that the church belonged originally to a monastery, and has remained independent of any parochial authority. But I am a child in these matters.

A late secretary of one of the principal London hospitals writes:—

In Truth of March 20 you comment somewhat unfavourably on the practice of resident officers at our general hospitals refusing to give information, without first receiving a fee, to a solicitor making inquiries on behalf of a client who is meditating a claim for injuries received in an accident. Are you quite just in your comments? I do not defend discourtesy, but I would ask why should a doctor be asked to give an opinion without remuneration? Will the solicitor make no charge to his client for advice on the case? Only recently a solicitor resented the action of a doctor in declining to report on a case without a fee, stating that his client was a poor man. To this the doctor replied that if the solicitor was willing on this account to forego his charges he would do likewise. No answer has been received to this proposal.

My correspondent, like the doctors, seems to miss the whole point of the complaint. A solicitor may not be content to forgo his fees, but if the client is a poor man, he generally has to wait for his remuneration until the case is finished, and to finance his client in the meantime. At the most he only asks the doctor to do the same, since, if the doctor's evidence is really required, he must be paid his usual fee, and probably in advance. The question is whether a solicitor, who is merely making preliminary inquiries in getting up a case, should be precluded from doing so unless he is willing to pay a doctor's fee out of his own pocket, in complete ignorance as to whether he will get any information that is of the slightest use to him. Every witness who gives evidence in court expects payment, but I never heard of a witness in any other walk of life insisting on payment before he will even tell a suitor what evidence he can give.

I am asked to mention that the annual dinner in support of St. John's Foundation School, Leatherhead, for the free education and maintenance of the sons of the poor clergy will take place at the Merchant Taylors' Hall on the 23rd instant. Lord Addington will preside. The Rev. Sutton Patterson, 17, Queen's Mansions, Victoria-street, S.W., is the secretary of the charity

---

MARRIAGE AT THE SEA-SIDE.

(A Word to Mothers.)

Statistics they've lately been taking
Of marriage at sea-side resorts,
And certes—unless they've been faking—
Most sinister are their reports.
For the damsels who live by the brine O,
From chicken to toughened old hen,
Can't marry—or so they repine O—
Because of the shortage of men.

At Worthing, for instance, the females
To the men are as three is to two;
And what, understocked thus with he-males,
Is the surplus of damsels to do?
Yea, how can poor Katie or Carry,
Though they long for him never so bad—
How, I ask you, a man can they marry,
When there isn't a man to be had?

But why are the men gravitating
From Worthing, or Brighton, or Hove,
And leaving the girls who'd be mating
Bereft of their presence and love?
Can't say. Still, the facts thus remaining,
Don't worry your head with the "whys,"
But accept, without need of explaining,
These practical words of advice:

"O, take you to Mocha your coffee,
To Newcastle carry your coals,
To Everton pack off your toffee,
To Dover consign you your soles;
To Bath send Chalybeate waters,
To Ceylon forward shiploads of tea,
But don't, O ye mothers of daughters,
Don't carry your girls to the sea."

Lady Henry Somerset writes on Nervousness, and How to Overcome it, on page 924.

A correspondent writes:—

With reference to your remarks of March 27, I venture to point out that there is one fatal objection to Mr. Haldane's scheme, and that is, that it will wipe out an old element of the Volunteers altogether—i.e., the gentry, professional men, and shopkeepers. As you point out, the Volunteers have for some time been recruiting men of the Militia type. Mr. Haldane's scheme will make the territorial army entirely of this one class, with the result that no other class will take any active part in the defence of their country. How this result can appear satisfactory to Radical or Conservative I am at a loss to understand.

It is astonishing to see the confidence with which people are able to predict precisely what is going to happen under Mr. Haldane's scheme. My correspondent, who knows so much about it, might at least have informed us why Mr. Haldane's scheme should have this particular effect. Only last week I published a letter from another gentleman who was equally confident that Mr. Haldane's scheme would make volunteering impossible for working men. Both of them cannot be right, though it is by no means improbable that both are wrong. The County Associations which will have the raising of the territorial battalions will probably do their best to enlist men of all classes; and I should have thought that under such management the tendency that the Volunteers have shown to recruit themselves more and more from the working classes is quite as likely to be checked as increased. Although the writer of the above letter considers that it would be a "fatal objection" to Mr. Haldane's second line if it is recruited entirely from one class, it seems to me quite a secondary consideration from what class it is recruited, provided the requisite number of men are forthcoming.

Another correspondent, writing on the same subject, notices that "no provision seems to be made for the payment of officers transferred from the Militia to the Reserve." This is an old grievance which has more than once been referred to in Truth. A Reserve officer who joins from the Militia is obliged to do his annual training at his own expense, without either pay or allowances, whereas a Regular officer in the same position receives the pay and allowances of his rank during training. The details of the new scheme are rather in nubibus at present; but, seeing that under it the Militia practically disappears, I do not quite understand why this grievance will not disappear with it. Presumably entirely new arrangements will have to be made with regard to officers who may join the Reserve from the Territorial Army, if such a thing is contemplated at all.

I was interested to see a letter the other day from Sir Edward Chapman, urging that the duty of obtaining recruits for the Regular Army as well as the second line should be entrusted to local civil authorities. For a long time past this reform has been advocated in Truth, and though one cannot prophesy confidently in any matter of this kind, it seems to me to promise the best solution of all difficulties in regard to recruiting. Indeed, the system of voluntary enlistment can never be said to have had a proper trial until this plan has been tried. The War Office is not in a position to get at the men it wants, and its recruiting machinery is primitive in design and inefficient in action. The local authorities have a far better opportunity of getting at the men, and could easily obtain the means of offering inducements to enlistment which are at present out of the question.

In the recent orders respecting the discharge of N.C.O.s on completion of twenty-one years' service, some provision was made, if I remember rightly, that boys' service should not count in calculating the period. Apparently no such principle is recognised in the Army Ordnance Corps. I heard the other day of a case in which a man, originally enlisted as a boy, was compelled to take his discharge on the completion of twenty-one years' total service, and this seems to be the general rule in the A.O.C. In the above case it means that the man leaves with 4d. a day less pension than he would have received had he completed twenty-one years' service. I have always favoured a pretty strict enforcement of the twenty-one years' limit of service, but this is practically going beyond it. A man who has served so long ought to have the opportunity of making his full pension, and a boy soldier, who becomes a man at eighteen, will still be on the right side of the "too old at forty" rule when he has completed twenty-one years' man's service.

Can any of my Service readers in England or India enlighten me on the following point? If a soldier in India takes a furlough home, does this break in his Indian service disentitle him to transfer to the home establishment at the date when he would otherwise be able to claim it? The point has arisen in one or two cases within my knowledge, and I understand that it is causing discussion in many places in India. To give such an effect to a mere furlough seems quite contrary to the spirit of the regulation with regard to transfer home, and a War Office letter issued last June seems to expressly preclude that view of the matter. But apparently the Indian authorities entertain doubts on the point.

I have received from a Service correspondent a lengthy indictment on army school inspectors as a class. I ought to mention that the writer is neither a schoolmaster nor a schoolmistress. If half he states is true, the inspectors themselves stand much in need of inspecting, and there is room for considerable doubt whether the system of promoting schoolmasters to inspectorships is altogether desirable. There has been some talk of placing all army schools under the Board of Education, and I should think that the proposal is well worth Mr. Haldane's consideration.

The expected appointment of Rear-Admiral Jellicoe, Director of Naval Ordnance, to succeed Sir Percy Scott as Inspector of Target Practice, has given much satisfaction in Service circles, as he is thoroughly qualified to carry on the excellent gunnery work which has been established by his predecessor. They are both very able officers, and gunnery work has enormously improved in efficiency under their guidance during the last two years. Sir Percy Scott is to succeed Rear-Admiral Neville in the command of the First Cruiser Squadron, which is really a part of the Channel Fleet, so he will be under the command of Lord Charles Beresford.

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and a la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger. Open on Sundays.

I have been urged to support the protest which is being made against the sentences which were last week inflicted upon Captain Grogan and other colonists at Nairobi, British East Africa. Before I could do this, however, I should require much better reasons for the protest than those that have been put forward in the telegrams and correspondence in the Daily Mail. It is alleged that some natives had insulted white women, "and had gone, in the eyes of the colonists, unpunished by the authorities." Apparently this does not mean that they were not punished at all, but only that the colonists deemed the punishment inadequate. So much feeling was aroused that a great crowd assembled, and Captain Grogan publicly flogged the natives. For this Captain Grogan, as the ringleader of an unlawful assembly, has been sentenced to a month's imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500; three other colonists have been sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment, and a fourth to seven days' imprisonment.

Whether the authorities really were unduly lenient or not in their treatment of the native offenders is a question upon which it is impossible to form an opinion without further information. In any case, the action of Captain Grogan, and those who aided and abetted him, seems to me to be indefensible. The natives very likely think that white offenders are sometimes let off too lightly for assaults on blacks. What would be said and done if in such a case the natives resorted to lynch law? For British settlers to take that course is clearly to set a dangerous example, and if it had been passed over it must have been a heavy blow to the prestige of the administration. The natives can hardly be expected to respect the law, and the officials who administer it, if they see that the white settlers treat both with contempt.

Lord Elgin handles a public scandal with characteristic flabbiness in his despatch on the undesirability of ex-Governors of Colonies identifying themselves with the organisation or direction of companies "formed to develop for profit the natural resources of the territories which they have administered." In a passage more creditable to his heart than his head the Secretary of State expresses his belief that "the strongest motive" which actuates an ex-Governor who becomes a promoter or a director of such a company is a desire to benefit the colony with which he has been officially connected, the idea that he may benefit himself being a secondary consideration. Still, his lordship seems to perceive that the circumstances are calculated to produce a different impression on less charitable minds, and so he gently suggests that retired Governors "would be well advised in most cases to refrain from taking a prominent part" in the management of any commercial undertakings of such a character. In view of the abuses to which it may easily lead, the practice in question calls for stronger action than this. The retired Governors are pensioned officers of the State, and their association with such companies ought to be not merely deprecated but absolutely prohibited.

The Luxury of a Bath is incomplete without the addition of Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, price one shilling per bottle.

In Ceylon Lord Elgin's mealy-mouthed allusions to the matter will be received with a good deal of amusement. Last week the secretary of the Ceylon Company of Pearl Fishers—of which Sir J. West Ridgeway, an ex-Governor of the Colony, is chairman—published a statement showing that up to April 1 the proceeds of the present season's fishery had amounted to £67,406. The leasing of this valuable fishery from the Government of Ceylon to the Company at an annual rent of £20,666 was a flagrant example of the scandal which is so lightly dealt with in Lord Elgin's despatch.

Lord Minto has lately involved himself in great odium and unpopularity at Barrackpore by restrictions that have been placed on the public use of the park—a fine enclosure about two miles long by three-quarters of a mile wide, which was presented to the public by a private citizen, and vested in the Government for its protection. The park is much frequented, and, besides the opportunities that it offers for riding and driving, it contains a golf course and a tennis club. An official residence for the Viceroy was built in one corner, and a portion of the park was enclosed with it as a garden, which may or may not have been within the donor's intentions. The main entrance to the park adjoins the Government House, and a road runs through its length from this point.

Lord Minto, however, has lately closed this main gate, and also a road leading into the park from the tennis club, thus compelling all residents in the west end of the town to go about two miles round to the other entrance. Not content with this, he has allowed a steeplechase course to be laid out over the golf links, one of the jumps being ingeniously arranged to land right on the second green. It would seem, therefore, that there has been a deliberate endeavour to annoy every class of the public, from nurse-maids and children to golfers. It is the misfortune of Anglo-Indians that public protests against proceedings of this kind are impossible, because the official class dare not lift up its voice against the Government and the Viceroy. Apparently the Government appreciates this and takes full advantage of it.

A "THICK" YARN FROM THE STATES.

Five suits of clothes and blankets eight!
  Yet—so a Yankee journal saith—
The wretch who wears this ponderous weight
  Of garments freezes still to death.

His circulation must be bad;
  The paper's, too, must be amiss
Whose columns they're compelled to pad
  With "thick" and woolly yarns like this.

Apropos of a recent paragraph in Truth, a solicitor nolding an appointment as Clerk to a District Council sends me an instructive letter on the difficulties which such officials encounter when, in the performance of their duties and the fulfilment of the law, they come into collision with the interests of members of the Council or their friends. He cites his own experiences. For many years he held his clerkship without the slightest friction arising. On the instructions of the then Council he prosecuted a local builder for a breach of the building by-laws, and the builder was convicted and fined.

This builder was subsequently elected a member of the Council, and, as the owner and frontager of certain property, he became liable for a payment for street works. He contested his liability, and when the magistrates decided against him he appealed to the High Court. The appeal, however, was dismissed, and he had to pay the costs of the Council for whom the clerk acted. "Since then," continues my correspondent, "I have been subjected to all sorts of insolence and nothing short of persecution by this man and the friends (mostly tradesmen who supply him with goods) whom he has managed to get in the Council, and now I am threatened with dismissal or decreased salary for simply performing my official duties."

This is not by any means an isolated case—indeed, the Local Government Board has just issued a most illuminating report on a proposal of the Trowbridge District Council to dispense with the services of the inspector of nuisances, whose execution of his duties had, it turned out, brought him into conflict with various members of the Sanitary Committee, including two butchers on whose premises he had seized unsound food. Poor-law officers cannot be dismissed except with the sanction of the Local Government Board, and it is even more necessary that the same security of tenure should be afforded to the officers of local sanitary authorities. To some extent this is already done in the case of medical officers and sanitary inspectors of the District Councils, but obviously all the officers, including the clerks, engaged in the administration of the Public Health Acts ought to be completely protected from any risk of arbitrary dismissal at the instance of interested councillors. Until they have this protection it is hopeless to look for anything like a satisfactory enforcement of the law—at any rate in those districts, far too numerous, in which the folly and the indifference of the ratepayers result in the return to the Council of men concerned in the perpetration of abuses.

It is not often in these days that one can agree with Lord Rosebery. I am, therefore, the more pleased to find myself in accordance with him in his protests against the dumping of L.C.C. lunatics at Epsom—I do not mean Moderates or Progressives, but their mentally-afflicted constituents. Indeed, I go further than his lordship, for the evil is not confined to Epsom, but threatens to extend all along this range of the Surrey hills. A few years ago the County Council put up a huge asylum at Cane Hill. They are now building another of equal dimensions about a mile from it, on the east side of the Brighton main line. This new asylum is only about three miles distant as the crow flies from the melancholy establishment of the Metropolitan Asylums Board at Caterham.

The district selected for these operations is one of the most beautiful and rural, as well as the most healthy within the same range of London; but the inevitable effect of the planting of such establishments in it is to ruin it for residential purposes. This may be seen wherever the new asylums spring up. I do not know whether experts have decided that the air of the Surrey hills is peculiarly beneficial in cases of mental disease; but the lunatics have little opportunity of enjoying their surroundings, and, though no one has more sympathy for them than I have, it seems to me that they would be just as well off in districts which are less worth preserving from their influence. It would be impossible, of course, to allow a local veto on the erection of public asylums, but the interests of the rest of the community ought to be considered more than they are in the selection of the sites.

It is a pity that the Prevention of Corruption Act should have been put in motion for the first time in such a trumpery case as that which came before the Manchester Stipendiary on Friday. The defendant, a clerk to a firm of merchants, was convicted of "corruptly" giving a shilling to a carter, the servant of a firm of carriers, as an inducement to him to deliver three bundles of cloth goods at different places at which he had no occasion to call on the business of his employers. The Stipendiary imposed a fine of 20s., with ten guineas for special costs. Considering the nature of the offence and that it was the first prosecution under the new Act, this seems to me to be a somewhat excessive penalty. No doubt the evidence pointed to the existence of an abuse which ought to be checked; but after all the Act was primarily aimed against a much more serious system of paying secret and corrupt commissions, and it would be more satisfactory to see it in operation in cases of that description.

A curious revelation with reference to the Paisley Licensing Bench was made in a case heard by Sheriff Lyell in the Small Debt Court last week. The Bench appointed a deputation of two magistrates, Mr. McNaughton, a joiner, and Mr. Kilpatrick, a plumber, to inspect various licensed premises in the burgh; and they reported that considerable structural alterations were required at a public-house occupied by a Mrs. McKellar. To avoid the risk of the licence being withdrawn these alterations had to be carried out to the satisfaction of Messrs. McNaughton and Kilpatrick, and in order, no doubt, that they might be satisfied in their capacity as magistrates, they were employed in their capacity as tradesmen to do the work. The matter came before the Sheriff in consequence of a dispute between Mr. Kilpatrick's firm and Mrs. McKellar over one of the items in the account.

In his judgment the Sheriff commented upon the manner in which Messrs. McNaughton and Kilpatrick, as magistrates, made what were practically orders for certain work and then, laying aside the mantle of the magistrate, donned the apron of the tradesman and undertook the execution of the work for the owner of the licensed premises. The Sheriff said he had never before heard of such a state of affairs. Personally, I cannot go so far as that, for I have previously come across similar cases. But the impropriety—to use the mildest word—of the proceedings of the two magistrates is obvious, and it may be hoped that the Bench, as a body, will see that in future the duty of inspecting licensed premises is not delegated to individuals who, as tradesmen, may get the job of carrying out the alterations they recommend.

This week there appears in my Legal Pillory another outrageous example of the absurdity of inflicting a fine for systematic cruelty to a child, similar to the one with which I dealt last week, and I am not surprised that a large number of correspondents should have called my attention to the fatuous action of the Bromley Bench. My Pillory is also rich in illustrations of the vindictive punishment awarded the crime of poverty, the most notable being the case at Basingstoke, for the arguments which may be urged in favour of imprisonment for the tramp who selects a rick or barn for his dormitory, cannot apply to the vagrant who seeks a couch in the open air. A typical instance of class prejudice is supplied by the two cases heard before the Malmesbury Bench, where the labourer who tries to catch a rabbit is awarded exactly the same punishment as the hunting "gentleman" who makes an unprovoked assault upon his groom.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Gray. W. Westwood charged with assaulting his wife by seizing her by the throat and biting her hand. Previously convicted. Fined 30s. or twenty-one day's imprisonment.

Grangemouth Police-court. Before Judge Hendrie. John MacNab, charged with assaulting a policeman by striking him in the face, and kicking him on the head. Fined 21s.

Loughborough Police-court. Before Aldermen Bumpus, Mayo and Moss, and Messrs. Winser, Charles, and Ince. George Black, charged with assaulting his sister-in-law by punching her in the mouth, and knocking two of her teeth out. Fined 30s.

Barnsley West Riding Police-court. Before Mr. W. Batty and other magistrates. A. Mosby and H. Fane, charged with assaulting a police constable. Taylor was knocked down and badly kicked about the legs and body. Each fined 20s. and costs.

Malmesbury Petty Sessions. Before Sir R. H. Pollen, Col. Turner, Col. Haydon, and other magistrates. Frank Day, charged with assaulting his groom. After using very foul language he struck him with a hunting crop. There was no defence. Fined £1 and costs.

Stamford Police-court. Before the Marquis of Exeter and other magistrates. W. Burton, charged with assaulting Ellen Betts. He went to her house, and when she got away from him he threatened her with a pistol. He admitted behaving improperly. Fined 20s. and costs.

Bromley Police-court. F. Leadbetter, an ex-policeman, charged with cruelty to the illegitimate son of the woman with whom he cohabited. The six-year-old boy was covered from head to foot with weals, the result of frequent beatings. He had been forced to exercise on a trapeze, and when he fell and injured his shoulder he was beaten for falling. Fined £5 and costs.

Dunfermline Sheriff Court. Before Sheriff Shennan. C. Turnbull, C. Combe, and J. Smith, charged with day-poaching. The two former were in prison for a similar offence, and in their absence they were fined £2 and costs each, or twenty-eight days' imprisonment.

Andover Petty Sessions. Before Colonel Harman and Messrs. Miles, Bailey, and Nicholl. John Gibbs, a youth, charged with begging for food. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Ipswich Police-court. Before Messrs. B. H. Burton, S. R. Anness, and A. Gibb. George Young, charged with failing to do his task while an inmate of the casual ward at the workhouse. He pleaded illness. One month's hard labour.

Chester Police-court. Thomas Rowen, charged with stealing a pair of boots, value 5s. 11d., hung outside the doorway of a shop. The bench, after commenting on the temptation to theft afforded by the practice, sentenced Rowen to a month's imprisonment.

Malmesbury Petty Sessions. Before the same magistrates, Frederick Stoneham, labourer, charged with trespassing in pursuit of rabbits. Fined £1 and costs.

Rotherham Police-court. Richard Woodward, charged with stealing a plant pot, value 3d. Six weeks' imprisonment.

Lymington Petty Sessions. Before the Mayor and Mr. F. Schreiber. G. James, charged with sleeping out in a pigstye. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Romsey County Petty Sessions. Before the Rt. Hon. E. Ashley, Admiral Sir J. Hopkins, and Col. Griffiths. Lot Sillence, charged with damaging a public house counter, when he was asked to leave the house where he had been drinking. One month's hard labour.

Taunton Police-court. H. Adams, charged with stealing a brass tap, value 1s. Two months' hard labour.

Swaffham Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Mason, Taylor, Culling, and Colonel Herring. Israel Turner, coal dealer, charged with cruelty to a horse. It was lame in both fore feet, there were large sores on the shoulders, the eye was discharging, it was old and in poor condition. Fined £1 16s. 6d. inclusive.

Nottingham Police-court. Before Ald. Pyatt and other magistrates. John Halton, charged with cruelty to a pony. A witness "had never seen a horse beaten in so unmerciful a manner," and the flesh under the collar was raw. Fined 40s.

The magistrates inflicted a similar penalty on Leonard Bailey, convicted of cruelty to a donkey found dying from starvation in a stable.

Basingstoke Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. Powell and Cannon. George Smith, charged with sleeping by the roadside. Twenty-one days.

Towcester Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Stops and Jepson. T. Cowley, charged with wilful damage to a window to the amount of 5s. Twenty-one days' hard labour.

Kesteven Police-court. James Poucher, charged with stealing a copper kettle, value 3s. 6d., of which he was the bailee. He sold it for a shilling. One month's hard labour.

Ilkeston Petty Sessions. George Taylor, charged with obtaining sixpence by false pretences from the landlord of an inn, by stating that he was collecting towards the burial of a child of another man. One month's hard labour.

A correspondent forwards a report of a County Court case the other day in which Messrs. Crawter, surveyors and house agents of Cheshunt, were sued by a builder for the return of £1 1s., which he had been required to deposit with defendants on their furnishing him with plans and specifications for the purpose of a tender. He had returned the plans and specifications, but the defendants' manager contended that there was no undertaking that they should pay back the guinea to the builders whose tenders were not accepted, and in other instances they had not done so. In answer to the judge the manager said that the guineas from the tenderers would go towards paying the architect's fees; but his Honour appeared to think that this was not a fair or proper arrangement, and judgment was given for the plaintiff with costs. It would be interesting to learn whether this ingenious method of getting an architect's fees paid is commonly practised.

A fact of considerable interest to the ratepayers of Portsmouth was elicited during the trial at the Quarter Sessions on Friday of a labourer charged with stealing a quantity of rags from the Corporation "tip" at Baffins. For some years past a contractor has paid the Corporation £30 a year for the right of sorting the house refuse at the "tip" for rags, bones, metal, bottles, or anything else that is worth removal. The contractor, who was the prosecutor in the case, admitted in cross-examination that even if he paid the Corporation £800 per annum "there might be a little profit left." Not only have the Corporation accepted a paltry £30 a year for this lucrative concession, but, in order to protect the property of "the golden dustman"—the place, by the way, should surely be called "Boffins," not Baffins—they recently erected a fence round the "tip" at a cost of £400. One must, of course, assume that the members of the Corporation responsible for this contract believed that they were making the best bargain that could be made for the ratepayers. But in that case—seeing that the substantial aggregate value of the unconsidered trifles that can be picked up by sorting house refuse is well known—one must also assume that the ratepayers have chosen very foolish and incompetent representatives.

Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Nearly 8,000 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private," absolutely confidential.—Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

Cherry Whisky Fremy Fils (Chesky) The Original Brand. Cherry Whisky Fremy Fils (Chesky). Beware of Imitations. Cherry Whisky Fremy Fils (Chesky) Sold Everywhere.

In a recent paragraph anent the refusal of the Shaftesbury Bench to grant some vaccination exemption certificates, I referred to the presiding magistrate as Mr. H. A. Dunstan. The name was given incorrectly, the gentleman in question being Mr. F. W. Dunston. He has sent me a long letter, from which I take the following:—

Your paragraphist charges me with having endeavoured to beguile one of the two applicants into expressing a general objection to vaccination, with a view to enabling myself to reject his application on that ground. Behold "the lie with circumstance" indeed. In point of fact, I neither wished to refuse the certificate nor did I endeavour to induce the applicants or either of them to express a general objection. The difficulty would have been to prevent them doing so, and when I did what I could to satisfy myself that the objection on which each based his application was particular to the particular child, they were careful to abstain from saying anything calculated to give me such an idea; and rightly, for it was obvious that their objection to vaccination was a general one only, and that they were therefore disentitled to the relief sought. As a man, I would willingly have joined in granting them the desired certificates. As a magistrate I had a conscientious objection to doing so.

Mr. Dunston's disavowal of any wish to refuse the certificates is certainly surprising in view of the interrogation to which he subjected the applicants. Though the Bench drew from both of them an expression of a general objection to vaccination, each applicant also made a statement of his conscientious belief that vaccination would be prejudicial to the health of his child, and on that statement a certificate ought to have been granted. The cross-examination as to "the particular child" was simply a matter of hair-splitting. It is easy enough for magistrates to baffle and bewilder conscientious objectors by sophistical questioning, as was done on this occasion, but the course adopted by Mr. Dunston has been—as I pointed out—condemned by the Lord Chief Justice and the Home Secretary, and even if it be not contrary to the letter of the law, it is a distinct violation of its spirit.

An advertisement for fifty ladies and gentlemen to undertake some work, the nature of which was not specified, recently appeared in the Daily Telegraph. Those who answered it received a printed communication from Alfred T. Tagg and Co., Enquiry Emporium, Hatley-road, Finsbury Park, N. The following is the substance of it:—

Dear Sir,—Now this work is very simple, but at the same time requires tact and energy to save injuring our business by those we give the work to. We have published a book at considerable expense, being a guide to the methods by which the work can be done. Now, as we have had a number of people making application more for curiosity sake than for work, we have been compelled to adopt a plan to protect ourselves from curiosity seekers after the expense we have gone to in publishing our book.

After careful consideration of your application we have decided to start you on our work. By perusal of the margin you will glean the nature of same. For instance, we may want you to make an inquiry for a solicitor, for which we pay you from 10s. upwards; we may want you to get an address of a person who has moved, for which we pay you from 5s. upwards; we may want you to shadow someone, for which we will pay you from 20s. per day; or watch a business place at 15s. per day, etc.

Our plan is that we will sell you the book for 2s. 6d., and with it we will send you £2 10s. worth of work to start on. . . . .

"Perusal of the margin" indicates the nature of Tagg and Co.'s work to be "Solicitors' Inquiry Agents. People shadowed for the purpose of divorce proceedings. Inquiries made for all kinds of trades. People traced for tradesmen. Businesses watched before purchasing. Men and women sent abroad for special cases."

I fear that I belong to the class of "curiosity seekers" against whom Tagg and Co. state that they have found it necessary to protect themselves. After reading their letter, my curiosity led me to send a gentleman up to Finsbury Park to make a few inquiries about Tagg's Enquiry Emporium. Hatley-road is a modest thoroughfare, the residents in which appeared to be mostly of the working class. The Enquiry Emporium bears no outward sign of its existence, and as there is no number on Tagg's circular, my representative had some difficulty in finding it; but he eventually made his way to a house where he was told Mr. Tagg lived. Mr. Tagg was not at home, and the Enquiry Emporium appeared to be in sole charge of a female, who told my representative that if he had any business with Tagg he had better write. He expressed a desire to inspect the book which Tagg and Co. have "published at considerable expense," with a view to purchasing a copy. The woman said she would try and find one, and, after a lengthy search, she returned with a small pamphlet. My representative did not, however, think it worth 2s. 6d., and left. A good many people have probably been taken in by the above-mentioned advertisement in the Daily Telegraph, and I mention these facts for the information of Scotland Yard, for it strikes me that Tagg's own business is just one of those referred to in his circular which need watching.

Numerous warnings have been given in Truth against a concern called the Nutriola Company, the enterprise of an individual named E. F. Hanson, who describes himself as "the Hon.," and as Mayor of Belfast, Maine, U.S.A. By means of promises of huge returns on a trifling investment of money—advertised in connection with a pamphlet called "A Guide to Full Pockets"—Hanson endeavours to obtain cash for shares in a business which is said to be engaged in manufacturing and retailing various quack remedies, the idea being that the investors shall themselves undertake the sale of the goods, thus pushing the business for their own benefit. I am told that Hanson obtained upwards of £57,000 from people all over the world by this expeditious road to full pockets.

Some time ago the business was practically stopped in the United States by that beautiful and effectual instrument, a Post Office fraud order, which practically deprived Hanson of the use of the Post Office for his business. Thereupon a company called the Nutriola Company, Ltd., was registered in England, with a capital of £125,000 in 5s. shares. These shares are now being busily pushed, and as the price is within the reach of all, and the shares are puffed by the most extravagant misrepresentations, it is to be feared that a great many flats are being induced to part with their 5s. It seems almost impossible to save people from throwing away their money on humbug of this kind, but it may perhaps have some effect in that direction if I mention that at the present time Hanson, the prime mover in the business, is appealing in the United States against a sentence of one year's imprisonment, coupled with a fine of $5,000. Even if the Post Office fraud order is not sufficient to deter people from filling his pockets further, they would still do well to defer parting with their money until this appeal has been decided.

An appreciative reader of Truth in New Zealand forwards the following paragraph from a recent issue of the New Zealand Times:—

The Postmaster-General (Sir Joseph Ward) notifies in this week's "Gazette" that no money-order shall be issued in New Zealand for the Nutriola Company of Chicago, the Chicago Silver Company, or the Nutriola Company of London. It is stated that there are reasonable grounds for supposing that the companies named are engaged in promoting or carrying on a fraudulent concern.

There are two points worth notice here. The first is the confirmation by the New Zealand Post Office of the action which the United States Post Office has taken against Mr. Hanson and his Nutriola Company. The other is the adoption in New Zealand of the American practice of closing the Post Office to swindlers. The idea of refusing the issue of money-orders in favour of a firm which is on the Postmaster-General's black list is an excellent one. How long will it be before St. Martin's-le-Grand condescends to take a hint in this direction from the Post Offices of more progressive countries?

W. J. Vincent, 19, St. Dunstan's-hill, E.C., is a cool hand among the touting bookmakers. If you take no notice of his first circular, he sends a "follow-up" informing you that he wrote "with a view of being favoured with a reply," but that "up to the present he has not had the pleasure of hearing from you," etc. It is, of course, useless to remonstrate with such pests as Vincent on the annoyance they cause. The only thing to do—until Parliament makes the distribution of betting circulars illegal—is to consign their communications to the waste-paper basket.

Apropos of the recent articles in Truth on the Betterment of London Association, I understand that the name of Dr. T. B. Hyslop was inserted in the list of Vice-Presidents and Council without his knowledge or approval. As I have now heard from three gentlemen to this effect, none of them ever having heard of the existence of the council of which they were supposed to be members, it is quite evident that the list which Bowden Green is using is a bogus one. If the remaining gentlemen whose names appear on it have authorised the use of their names, I can only say that it is their duty to call Green to account both for the liberties he has taken with other gentlemen's names, and for the financial irregularities to which attention has already been called. In the meantime I would advise nobody to subscribe a penny to the Betterment of London Association or the Street Noises Abatement Committee.

A reader at Penang sends me the following announcement from the Straits Echo. It shows that the theatrical managers of the West have much to learn from the East in the way of advertising:—

TO-NIGHT! TO-NIGHT!!

Dedicated to the loving memory of our beloved
WM. SHAKESPEARE.
THE OPERA INDRA PERMATA COMPANY OF SELANGOR
Will Stage the Sensational Tragedy
PRINCE HAMLET.
By the best actors and actresses procurable in Java.
OUR CLOWNS ARE WITHOUT RIVALS!

This is actually the best representation of a European Opera by a Native Company.

CHOW CHONG, Proprietor.

The following extracts from a letter which I have received from Hamburg in reference to the labour dispute at that port are rather interesting:—

I have been ten years in Australia, where I learned to know and appreciate your paper. At the present time in Hamburg I am taking part in the struggle between the ship-owners and dock-workers now raging here. You will understand it is pretty hard on us to see thousands of Englishmen coming over to Hamburg as "scabs." It is a question of principle on our side, because we are fighting against a 36 hours' stretch of work. The workers of England would never work a stretch like that themselves, yet they are taking sides against us. But it is not on our behalf alone that I appeal to you. The English workers are all led astray. They are deceived. They came to Hamburg on the understanding that there was neither strike nor lock-out. They were to receive free board and lodging, 5s. a day, and 1s. an hour for overtime, and to be sent back to England free of charge. Once here, they found that there were 5,000 workers locked out. Further, they found that the food was very bad, and that they were actually kept prisoners on board ship, and would have to pay their own passage if they wanted to go home.

Now, what do you call this? Englishmen cheated by ship-owners on one hand; on the other hand, the German workers struggling hard against a 36 hours' stretch of work. Do you call this fair? I appeal to you now. Cannot you help us? Help both the English and German workers? I believe you could, by using your influence to put the engagement of labourers for foreign countries under Government control.

The last suggestion is, of course, out of the question, if my correspondent means by it anything more than that the Board of Trade should take some steps to warn men going abroad under such circumstances of the conditions under which they will probably find themselves. But it is clearly not to the interest of any section of the community in this country that the Hamburg dockers should be beaten by the importation of "blacklegs" from England; and the facts of the situation cannot be too widely known. What has been going on in Hamburg is not a strike, but a lock-out. As the above letter indicates, the question at issue is one of hours. I have not heard before of the men being kept on as long as thirty-six hours at a stretch, but it is certain that during busy times they have been required to work at least double their normal hours; that they have refused to work beyond a certain time; and that they have been locked out in consequence. The ship-owners have endeavoured to coerce them by importing labour from all parts of Germany, and neighbouring countries, but they would have failed altogether had they not been able to obtain some thousands of men from England.

It is not easy to understand precisely for what the employers are fighting so keenly. Apparently the reason for the dispute is that the necessity for this heavy overtime which the men object to only arises at certain seasons of the year when the port is exceptionally busy, and the shipping and dock interests desire to avoid keeping up all the year round a staff of men which would only be fully employed at intervals. But if they can import casual labour at a pinch to support a lock-out, it would seem that they could equally well obtain it when the normal supply of dockers is unequal to the demand. At any rate, it can only be a question with them of saving expense and having the labour they want always ready to hand. No one in this country can be interested in assisting them to gain their end, for the more cheaply the port of Hamburg can be worked, the more advantageously it must compete with British ports. We cannot possibly prevent Englishmen accepting any jobs abroad that they choose to take, but we can make sure that they understand all the circumstances before they go, and it is worth our while to do so—apart from the desirability of preventing any workman from being enticed to a foreign country by false pretences.

Mr. Keir Hardie and some of the members of the Independent Labour Party seem to regard Mr. John Burns as a traitor, in comparison with whom Judas was a faithful friend. But whom has he betrayed? In the last Parliament he had the sense to see that the working men can only hope to better their lot by legislative action if they act with the Radicals. At the General Election he preached this doctrine. When the Conservatives were driven from office he was offered a seat in the Cabinet. It would have been a ruinous mistake to refuse it. In the Cabinet the Prime Minister is a sound Radical, and so are most of his colleagues. A few of them are not so Radical. Would the cause of Labour have gained had one of these latter been made President of the Local Government Board? Mr. Burns's presence in the Cabinet is a guarantee that the pledges and assurances made by the Liberals when in Opposition will not be ignored. Since he has been President of the Local Government Board he has shown himself an able administrator, and he has made his presence felt as a social reformer. His crime in the eyes of Mr. Keir Hardie and his friends is simply that he has acted as a practical reformer and that he has not accepted all their crude demands.

These gentlemen are Socialists. They know that they represent a very few of the working men, and the Independent Labour Party has far more representatives in Parliament than it is entitled to by weight of numbers. They managed to get a good many more seats surrendered to them by Liberals at the General Election than they had any claim to. If the working classes were polled to-morrow as to whether they are with Mr. Burns or Mr. Keir Hardie, 90 per cent. would vote in favour of Mr. Burns. A good deal of the popularity of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman is due to his having boldly offered a seat to Mr. Burns, and—with the exception of the Premier himself—he has been the most conspicuous success in the present Ministry.

Mr. Keir Hardie is an interesting personality; but he has always done his best to harm the Liberal party. He has announced that he is prepared to put forward candidates at by-elections with a view to hinder Liberals from winning the elections; and he is probably ready to use Conservative funds for this purpose. If he had his way, therefore, the verdict of the country at the last General Election would be reversed. I heard him make many speeches in the last Parliament, and followed his career with curiosity from the day that he drove down to take his place in Parliament, seated in a gig, carefully and picturesquely got-up in the fancy dress of a working man in Sunday garb, and with a friend playing the "Marseillaise" by his side. And as I am myself in favour of a full recognition of the legitimate demands of labour, I regretted that it was rendered ridiculous by this masquerade. In the present Parliament, though I see no reason why the Labour representatives should not have their organisation and act together, I have always doubted the practical wisdom of those of Socialistic views breaking away from the rest of the Labour Members; and when they did, I was surprised at their selecting Mr. Keir Hardie as their leader, rather than some man like Mr. Shackleton, who is a hard-headed, practical man with nothing theatrical about him.

It would seem that the Socialists are very angry just now because Mr. Burns is not prepared to waste money in attracting men to London by spending public money recklessly and lavishly upon the unemployed. As a Minister charged with the supervision of all such money, he is not prepared to squander it in schemes which he does not deem to the advantage of labour. As the Socialists have passed a resolution that every able-bodied man is entitled to be employed at a fair wage—a doctrine which, if acted upon, would in a few years ruin the richest country in the world—I suppose that they favour all unemployed being given good work and a fair wage. But this doctrine is not yet accepted by the country, and, so far as I can see, it will be many years before it becomes the creed of the majority, if it ever does at all. The reason is, not that all would not rejoice could it be put in practice, but that remunerative and well-paid labour is limited by ever-changing circumstances which are beyond all legislation. Of this Mr. Burns is, as a sensible and practical man, well aware.

THE SUPERFICIAL LOGICIANS.

A Man—we'll call him Edward Green—
Not long a Widower had been,
Ere he, to cheer his lonely Life,
Espoused a buxom second Wife.
Now some expressed Surprise and Pain
That he should wed so soon again,
Vowing the Fact most clearly proved
That he his First had never loved;
Else would he not have made such Pace
To fill the Lady's vacant place.
But others forward came to say
It pointed just the other Way;
For (so they held) unless the Dame,
Who shared at first his Hearth and Name,
Had proved herself a Pearl of Price
And been uncommon sweet and nice,
It might with Confidence be reckoned
He'd ne'er have taken on a second.
While both the Parties thus contest
And either deem their Case the best,
The second Wife of Richard Green
Appeared herself upon the Scene:
"My Friends, I cannot help but smile
To hear you reason in this Style
And either prove, cocksure, your Cause
By Logic's Formulas and Laws.
Yet from your Argument, sans Doubt,
The most essential Fact leave out.
Ned didn't marry me," she said,
"At all: 'Twas I who married Ned."

Moral.

No Argument, however strong,
Holds Water if the Facts are wrong.

SCRUTATOR.

BUSINESS, SENTIMENT, AND THE COLONIES.

A FAIR estimate of Lord Milner is that he understands finance, and would make a very good permanent official at the Treasury, but that he is a failure as a statesman dealing with men and great national issues. There is an article by him in the National Review. In it he has given his views in regard to our relations with our Colonies. We, and each of our large Colonies, are to have a double patriotism. A Canadian is to be proud of being a Canadian, and Canada is to be his fatherland. But he is also to be proud of being a citizen of the Empire. Thus he is to have a dual patriotism. Now I do not myself believe that this is possible. A Canadian will feel that he owes allegiance to Canada, an Australian to Australia, and so on. This must be the outcome of self-government, and of the fact that every man's personal interests are necessarily centred in his place of residence. Such patriotism becomes a powerful sentiment. In regard to the Empire, it is not a question of sentiment, but of material advantage. A Canadian considers that it is to his interest for his country to form part of a great empire. But whenever he comes to the conclusion that his interests would be better served by cutting loose from the Empire, he would not hesitate to do so. The Empire is an artificial bond; it must be justified as a business proposition. Speeches are made in which the flag is exalted to a fetish. Dinners are given, articles are written in newspapers, and every effort is made to create the idea of an Imperial patriotism. But it never really catches on, and it is in the nature of things that it never will. Lord Milner points to the German Imperial patriotism, and to the local patriotism of the States which form the German Empire. He greatly exaggerates the local patriotism. The Empire has been formed under the hegemony of Prussia. The Germans of many of the little States which have either been absorbed into Prussia or still retain a quasi-independence under her supremacy, never cared, and do not care now, for their local independence. In the main the States that still retain this independence are independent for dynastic reasons. In South Germany Prussia is disliked, and this is specially the case in Bavaria. These Germans prefer not to be Prussian. They, however, recognise that a German Empire is in their interests; they see the advantage of unity. Speaking broadly, therefore, the patriotism of Germans means attachment to the Empire, and not to the particular State, whilst in the case of the British Empire the state of things is the exact opposite. Sir Wilfrid Laurier explained when the Boer war broke out that the Canadians were prepared to aid us because they approved of the war. But he added that he by no means admitted as a general rule that, if we went to war, Canada is obliged to join us. Each war, so far as the action of Canada was concerned, was to be judged on its particular merits. A doctrine such as this would be scouted by Germans. It is one that reduces the bond that unites us and our Colonies to a mere alliance conceived in the interests of all. This, I think, is the feeling of most of our Colonies, and it seems to me to be a perfectly reasonable one. It is one that before Jingoism became rampant was recognised by all our statesmen. So far as speeches are concerned, the Colonies are quite ready to vow that they love us and that they have the same feeling towards the flag as we have. But all this does not go beyond words.

This being so, we should realise it. There is no reason why the tie between us and our Colonies should be weakened. So long as it lasts, we pay for the defence of the Empire, including the Colonies, and the latter are able to borrow money on a low rate of interest. But the tie will only last so long as we do not endeavour to draw it tighter, and so long as we no more interfere with them than they interfere with us. Mr. Chamberlain and his friends would have us unite in a fiscal league by means of which we are to create ties of commercial interest between ourselves and the Colonies. This—even assuming that it would be advantageous to both—is impossible so long as we believe in Free Trade and our Colonies believe in Protection. The Colonies export corn. We want bread to be as cheap as possible in Great Britain. To give an advantage to the colonial produce we have to commence by putting a duty on corn, and thus raising its price to the British consumer, and then to allow colonial corn to be imported free of duty. This may be an advantage to the Colonies. But it obviously is no advantage to us. The Colonies offer to give us commercial advantages as a quid pro quo. If they let in all our manufactured goods free of duty, or, in other words, Free Trade within the Empire were the equivalent, the bargain would be worth considering. But what is the equivalent offered? The Colonies are to impose duties on all manufactured goods, whether coming from us or from foreign nations, and these duties are to be sufficiently high to protect their local industries, but they kindly offer to make the duties higher against foreign countries than against us. What is the use of that so long as the reduced duty against us is really a Protective duty? The Colonies are one and all determined to protect their own industries by keeping out British goods which compete with their own. As long as their tariffs are effectual for that purpose, what benefit is it to us that foreigners are also excluded, even though it be by a higher tariff.

What is most astonishing about this idea that the Empire can be united by fiscal arrangements is that it has been tried in practice and has failed miserably. The idea of fiscal preference for the Colonies was no new idea of Mr. Chamberlain's, any more than the idea of enriching the country by a general tariff on foreign goods. A complete system of colonial preferential tariffs, all that the most enthusiastic tariff reformer could desire, was in force up to 1846. What effect it had was pointed out again and again during the late fiscal controversy. It laid intolerable burdens on British consumers of colonial produce; it did more harm than good to the Colonies. But its most conspicuous effect was to create a universal feeling in Great Britain that the Colonies were a costly and useless encumbrance. Disraeli expressed that feeling in his famous phrase about "the wretched Colonies" which were "a millstone about our necks." He had good reason for that view, and had the preferential tariffs lasted much longer, they would have killed the Empire outright. Those who would revive them to-day imagine that they can devise a system under which no party to the arrangement will feel that it is getting the worst of the deal, and each will be, and believes itself to be, a clear gainer. The difficulty of doing that is shown by the questions that arise as to where the balance of advantage would lie directly the details of the scheme begin to be discussed. It is obvious that there must always be such questions, and the attempt to adjust tariffs between States that will satisfy each party is bound to lead to incessant jealousy and wrangling. Like all political quackery, therefore, this nostrum is likely to do harm rather than good, to create friction and ill-will between the various States of the Empire rather than harmony and unity. That anyone should believe in it is incomprehensible, for there is nothing in history or in the circumstances of the present day to suggest that peace and goodwill are promoted between States by the development of their mutual trade. Germans and Englishmen do more business together to-day than any other two peoples on the face of the globe. That their mutual affection is thereby developed has not been apparent up to now.

The Colonial Conference is a legitimate and useful institution. It tends to promote good feeling, and there are many matters of mutual interest that may be discussed and arranged at it to the benefit of all concerned. But we shall best promote its usefulness by clearing our minds of cant. We shall only get into trouble and do mischief by cultivating the notion that the Colonies have—or can have—any sentimental love of the Empire, or that they will ever have any idea in any treaty or arrangement they may make with us except to serve their own interests. The worst danger arising out of the Conference at present seems to be that it may be used as an attempt to supply the Unionist Party with a little of the political capital that it now lacks so badly. Some of the London papers have already done all they know to use the Colonial Premiers as pawns in the party game, and to convert the Conference into an instrument with which to beat the Government. This shows once again that the soi-disant Imperialists are quite the worst enemies of the Empire, and the Colonial visitors cannot show any Imperial patriotism they may possess better than by discountenancing all efforts to exploit them for party purposes.

THE COMPULSORY SERVICE CRAZE.

If the manifesto of the National Service League which was sent round to the press last week makes any impression upon public opinion, it can only be due to the signature of Lord Roberts and the other noblemen's names attached to it. There is no argument in the document which should have that effect, and a little "clear thinking" should satisfy anybody that if the proposals of the League were carried out, the results would be wholly mischievous—from the military point of view and regardless of all but military considerations.

The idea at the bottom of the proposals of Lord Roberts and his League is that it is necessary for our national safety that we should possess a home service army of such a size that it can only be filled up by universal compulsory service, and so trained, equipped, and organised that it will be ready immediately on mobilisation to meet highly trained Continental troops in the field—"the only troops, be it remembered, which a home defence army would be called upon to encounter." They therefore beg the whole question of national defence which has been the subject of so much debate and difference of opinion in recent years. They assume a state of things in which we have lost command of the sea, while simultaneously the whole of our first military line has been sent abroad, notwithstanding the imminence of an invasion from one or other of our immediate neighbours, and against this they insist that we must prepare. The assumption has in itself the fancifulness of a nightmare. But let us suppose that we take it as the basis of a practical policy; to what will it lead? It is out of the question that an army in which every man in the country will have been trained up to the standard of the best troops of Germany will be turned out at a less cost than the German army. Deduct from this what would otherwise be spent on the second line under such a scheme as Mr. Haldane's, and the figure will be reduced to about 25 millions per annum at the lowest estimate. Remember that you have not only to train the individual man, but to provide staff, officers, artillery, and every other detail of equipment and organisation on the standard of the best troops on the Continent. The present Regular Army, as reformed by Mr. Haldane, will remain, and so will its present cost. So will that of the Navy. Under these three heads we shall have to spend at least 80 millions per annum, and this irrespective of the cost of maintaining another army of about 225,000 regulars for the defence of India, which the Indian taxpayer has the privilege of paying for.

If anyone outside a lunatic asylum expects that this or any other country will ever commit itself to such an expenditure, his proper place is inside an asylum, and it would be waste of time to argue with him. Were it conceivable that the Government should amend its Army Bill in accordance with the suggestion of Lord Roberts and his friends, and then proceed to create in the course of the next few years a "national army" organised on the scale and standard of efficiency which they have in view, the inevitable result would be the abandonment of all further preparation for defending the country on the sea. No country will consent to burden itself with the cost of a double line of defence, the second to act in case the first fails. As soon as Lord Robert's national army was brought to the requisite size and perfection, the necessity for an invincible navy would be as little apparent as the necessity for an invincible land army is to-day, and the financial burden would at once begin to operate in the reduction of the Navy Estimates. With the disappearance of our naval supremacy would necessarily go the visible utility of maintaining an expensive regular army for foreign service. An "expeditionary force" is of no use unless the road for its expeditions is open. The temptation to reduce the foreign service army would therefore be irresistible; and the business of "preparing for war" would resolve itself into arming and drilling the whole population for the purpose of repelling any foreign enemy who could effect a landing on our coasts.

For Mosquito Bites, Wasp or Bee Stings, nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia. Price 1s per bottle. Beware of imitations.

That is what may be expected—with ulterior consequences to our international position which the reader may think out for himself—if the ideal of the National Service League were realised. But no one capable of "clear thinking" will suppose that the mere passing of an Act to enforce universal military training will bring about the realisation of that ideal. Looking at the matter by the light of all our past experience in military affairs, what is pretty certain to happen after the raw material for the manufacture of the home defence army had been provided by Act of Parliament, is that the money necessary for completing the process would never be voted; that proper machinery for adequately training the men would never be provided; that the provision of artillery and cavalry would be postponed indefinitely; and that a dozen other necessary details of organisation and equipment would go the same way. In short, the ideal of the National Service League—a national army, ready at a moment's notice to give battle in Essex or Surrey to the best troops of the Continent—has not a chance of being realised, even under compulsory training. The incentive to that end which confronts every Continental nation at close quarters would be lacking in our case; and the whole traditions of our military administration must be abandoned and renewed from the root upwards before the thing is possible. The "national army" designed by Act of Parliament would repeat over again the history of the Militia and the Volunteers, but on a larger scale, and with the important difference that in the attempt to create it we should inevitably be compelled to starve the Navy and reduce expenditure on the Regular Army, sapping the only trustworthy defences we have for no result but a huge addition to our mob of unorganised, half-trained troops. Will any one with the slightest knowledge of military administration in this country in time past deny that this is the course of events which may naturally be expected? If not, how can any one doubt that universal compulsory military service is of all proposals that have ever been put before the public the most foolish and the most dangerous?

After all the discussion that has taken place on this question, in Parliament and outside it, there is no excuse for this folly. If we once accept the proposition that this country is to be defended on the sea, which hardly any Englishman disputes, the functions of a home defence army are easily apparent. It is by this force that an enemy must measure his preparations for invasion. In order to achieve any decisive military result he must land sufficient troops to make him certain of being able to deal with it. On the size and efficiency of our land defence force consequently depends the whole character of the task which the Navy has to perform in preventing an invasion. Moreover, it is well to be prepared against the annoyance of mere raids by small forces which do not contemplate a prolonged occupation of the country or serious military operations. And it is also desirable to make some provision for "expansion outside the Regular Forces of the Crown" in the event of a protracted war abroad. The size and the quality of the organisation which we need for these purposes are a matter which must necessarily be left to the judgment of naval and military experts in consultation. Such consultations have been held, and, so far as the problem of home defence is concerned, Mr. Balfour, as the President of the Committee of Defence, practically stated the result to Parliament shortly before he went out of office. There is no reason to doubt that in fixing the size of his proposed Territorial Force at 300,000, and in making the arrangements which he has for its training and organisation, Mr. Haldane has followed the guidance of the experts. Common-sense tells us that so far as numbers go, the proposed army should be amply sufficient for its purpose. There is no good reason for doubting that these numbers can be obtained by voluntary enlistment, for they do not exceed the number that such enlistment has yielded hitherto to the Auxiliary Forces; and it is by no means certain that inducements to serve will not be greatly increased under the new scheme. If time, which alone can decide the question, proves that the requisite number of men cannot be obtained by voluntary enlistment, there will be a strong argument for resorting to compulsion. At present there is none whatever, but, on the contrary, the very strongest reasons for avoiding it. And even if it should ever be found necessary to apply compulsion, every one who appreciates the force of the considerations indicated above will desire that it should be limited strictly to procuring the minimum number of men that the best naval and military opinion may pronounce to be necessary, under the peculiar conditions which we have to deal with. The moment we attempt to create a home service army which shall be more than the indispensable complement of our scheme of naval defence, we create dangers far more serious than any that are in sight at present—outside the office of the National Service League.

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST.

The Suffragette's Catechism.

(For the Use of Would-be Voteresses.)

Question: Who are you!

Answer: A Suffragette.

Q.: What is a Suffragette?

A.: A female who fearlessly employs the Faculties with which Nature has endowed her, in championing the Sacred Cause of Woman's Rights.

Q.: What are the Faculties with which Nature has endowed you?

A.: Teeth and nails.

Q.: What are Woman's Rights?

A.: Votes.

Q.: Who gave you these Rights?

A.: Nobody. I mean to take them.

Q.: How will you take them?

A.: By biting and scratching.

Lucerne.—Hotel Beau Rivage. First-class. Facing lake and mountains. Suitable for a long stay. Every modern comfort. Write for illustrated pamphlet, post free.—C. Giger, Proprietor.

Savoy Hotel & Restaurant, London.—The most beautiful garden and river view in Europe. The Restaurant of the world. Hotel rooms bright, fresh, and delightfully quiet.

Q.: Whom will you bite?

A.: Bannerman and Asquith.

Q.: Whom will you scratch?

A.: Policemen.

Q.: What are policemen?

A.: Hireling Ruffians who maintain, by violence, the Tyranny of Man under the guise of the so-called Laws.

Q.: What are the Laws?

A.: There are no Laws.

Q.: How so?

A.: Because I did not make them.

Q.: What is Parliament?

A.: There is no Parliament.

Q.: How is that?

A.: Because I do not sit there.

Q.: What are the Constituencies?

A.: There are no Constituencies.

Q.: Why are there no Constituencies?

A.: Because I do not vote in them.

Q.: What is a Magistrate?

A.: A black-hearted usurper of the Seat of Justice.

Q.: What are the functions of the Magistrate?

A.: To dispense Martrydom-While-You-Wait to suffering Suffragettes.

Q.: What is Martyrdom-While-You-Wait?

A.: Fourteen days in Holloway.

Q.: What is a Wardress?

A.: A Renegade woman who aids and abets the tyrant man in opposing her own sex.

Q.: Does the Wardress want a vote?

A.: No.

Q.: Is it strange that, being a woman, she should not want a vote?

A.: No; because, in point of fact, the majority of women do not want votes.

Q.: Why, then, should they have votes if they do not want them?

A.: Because it is for their good.

Q.: Who says so?

A.: I do.

Q.: Who is Dora Thewlis?

A.: The baby-Suffragette.

Q.: Should babies, then, have votes?

A.: Certainly—if they are girl babies.

Q.: But what if they are boy babies?

A.: Boy babies do not count.

THE THEATRES.

"The Truth," at the Comedy.

Taken as a whole, Mr. Clyde Fitch's play touches the high-water mark of his achievement, so far as I am acquainted with it. Having said this, I add that his work, until last night's performance, had seemed to me instinct with crude, not to say vulgar, realism, representing a state of melodramatic, catchpenny, ranting cheapness which fairly disgusted me of the American playwrong.

But there is only one truth as regards the stage—namely, that you can never tell what may happen, and I admit that on Saturday night I was taken greatly by surprise. Instead of a group of magenta-clad women, with the voices of macaws and all the jewellery of the Palais Royal upon their insufferable persons, I found Miss Marie Tempest and Miss Grace Lane arrayed in the most simple extravagance, speaking quite passable prose. The story was evident from the first flourish of Miss Tempest's skirts, from the drooping elegance of Miss Grace Lane. It hardly needed the appearance of Mr. Dawson Milward, who carried off with graceful assurance the onus of all the trouble, to make one certain that the piece would develop on the lines of an intrigue between him and Becky Warden (Miss Marie Tempest). A jealous wife has Mr. Milward in the play, and this lady collects evidence of their meeting at various places, such as Prince's and Queen's, by means of a detective agency. Becky's husband is not jealous, having full confidence in his wife. As it turns out, this confidence is not misplaced, for she has not even gone the length of allowing a kiss to this lover, with whom she makes daily assignations. It seems a little odd that they should take such infinite pains to meet secretly, all to talk about potatoes. But the author gives us to understand that Becky is immaculate as to the lips in one sense—of kissing—but those rouged lips of hers are stained with millions of lies. She lies about everything, and even remarks once apologetically that she has been surprised into telling the truth. Miss Tempest excels in the rendering of this empty-headed little chattering liar, with her mania for hats and for her husband, whom she really loves all along. Also her disreputable father. She excels in the scene of successful bamboozling Tom Warden; she again excels when the weeping Eve has appeared with a batch of notes from the detective agency, and she is faced with inexorable facts. Her mimicry of the hysterical little creature sobbing down the telephone to her friend was really superb. So also was her playing of the scene where the would-be lover, having irrevocably quarrelled with his wife, returns at Becky's bidding, and, very naturally supposing that she intends to relent, bestows upon her all of a sudden an ardent embrace. Nothing could exceed the realism of the shocked surprise wherewith Becky, who has done all she could to encourage the unhappy lover, orders him out of the house, and informs him that her husband had said that he would most probably end by kissing her. The return of the husband, who comes in for Becky's last crop of lies and her first truth—namely, that there has been nothing between them, save the snatched kiss—is among Mr. Allan Aynesworth's opportunities, and here, as elsewhere, he gives a good account of the confiding husband, who on this occasion, however, is convinced against his will of his wife's guilt, and leaves his house for ever.

The last two acts pass in the lodgings of Becky's father, where, beguiled with piquet and landlady, he passes the evening of his quite uninteresting life. Mr. Boucicault played this parent mostly with great skill, and I liked all his work on this occasion save his interview with Tom Warden in the first act, where he vainly tries to borrow money. This I thought was overdone, and it stood out against the subdued excellence of the rest of the cast. Miss Filippi made the landlady a living personage, though I fancied that the deep-laid plans of this "real" lady were not quite what she best likes to play. After far too much talk between the parent of Becky and the landlady, enter Becky, and then ensues an interminable conversation between father and daughter about past times, he refusing to take her in, she insisting that he must. These last two acts are not on the same level as their two predecessors, and although I followed every movement of Becky and her father with interest, yet I could have wished that Mr. Fitch had given us another sight of the lover and of his unhappy wife, who disappear after the second act. The arrangement of the sham sick-room by the father, who has telegraphed to his son-in-law to announce the desperate illness of his wife, was rather tiresome, the more so as it was very evident at once that, sick or well, the one thing the husband wishes is to clasp his sinless wife to his bosom and forget that he has married a liar.

But I was interested in the play as a whole, and think it is worth seeing, as much for the fine acting as for itself. Diri!

"The Palace of Puck," at the Haymarket.

"The Palace of Puck" opens very merrily with its benighted stockbroker and his lovely wife and daughter in the clutches of Mr. H. V. Esmond, who owns this fairy palace over-channel, where boys and girls can flirt and be happy, where champagne is ever on the flow, and the arts are all at home. Certainly no more extreme contrast to the willowy agility of Mr. Esmond could be contrived than the solid phlegmatic insolence with which Mr. Kerr as the stockbroker (or merchant of some sort) marches about the house, insults "the witch" (with whom, in the fair shape of Miss Miriam Clements, he falls in love later on), and finally, refusing to have meals with the rest of the party, orders his family dinner in the drawing-room, where are bound, regretfully, to remain with him his daughter, who has discovered the young man with whom she has been in love in London, and his wife, who gets on very well with a musician. Wife and daughter, indeed, would be very happy in this passable fairyland, which is a sort of idealised Dieppe; the husband and father has sworn not to allow this; but a mightier than he, namely, the aforesaid witch, has also sworn to lead him captive to her charms. His sternness gradually melts under her moony rays, and he is finally bewitched into wearing fancy dress at the ball in the last act. So fanciful and freakish, indeed, does this middle-aged merchant become, that he is for eloping with the witch; his wife, not to be outdone, with the musician, and their beloved daughter with the penniless young artist. This triple elopement, much growled at by a chauffeur lifted straight from the Shawite drama, comes, of course, to nothing, save in the case of the young couple, who have just got clear off when Miss Marion Terry gives the alarm. "Softly, softly," her husband whispers to her, changed into her lover; "let them go. I would not deprive them of this delightful memory in the future. I shall, of course, forgive them, and buy all the young man's pictures." I must apologise for paraphrasing the author in inverted commas, for I think those are some of the best lines on the daintiest theme of the play.

Frankly, it is too thin, or we are not gossamer enough to float through the whole evening. I caught myself "nid-nid-nodding" more than once when I should have been engrossed in the multifarious doings of the stage. The actors have been held partly to blame, but although Mr. Charles Hawtrey would have doubtless made us laugh more than Mr. Kerr, yet the latter took his part in the only way possible for him, and I must say Mr. Fred Kerr's stage snarls have a special charm for me. Mr. Ben Webster was with Mr. Esmond in the true key of the irresponsible, Miss Terry extricated herself from an improbable situation as a rather unreal character with diplomacy, and Miss Miriam Clements would make a yet more attractive witch if she would discard the jarring hues of the red hat and violet blue dress of the first act for something more like her attire in those following. I would also recommend to her the study of the part of Carmen, which might give her some hints as to how to let oneself go and yet retain all the charm.

"Patience," at the Savoy.

"Patience" sprang upon one like the spring. Hardly had I sat upon my stall for a moment than I was whisked out of it by the whimsical eddies of Sir Arthur's muse; I was floating light-hearted upon waves of sound, and if at any moment I was in danger of disappearing into the empyrean, then the extreme realism of Mr. Gilbert was there to pull me back, a swallow by the swallow-tail.

Of the three operas produced recently by Mrs. D'Oyly Carte, "Patience" certainly excels "The Gondoliers" and "The Yeoman of the Guard." It seems to have been written and composed by one person, so uniquely well do sense and sound contribute to our pleasure. It has that inevitability of art perfect in its kind, that almost obviousness, which makes one feel: That is the way I should have done it. Then one smiles at the chasm between this work, with its elasticity of ever verdant turf and the thousand and one operettas (to use a generic term), some clever, but mostly bad, which one has seen since the "Patience" of 1881.

Mr. François Cellier produced the opera, and is to be congratulated upon a first performance which went without a hitch and delighted a large mixed audience of the kind not too easily pleased. Miss Clara Dow made a dainty, sweet-voiced Patience, with a pretty petulance in her comedy scenes which carried one very pleasantly over those light bridges between the music. This young lady practically makes her début as Patience, and deserves congratulation upon her first performance. Mr. Workman had all his work cut out for him to impersonate Bunthorne, and well he achieved a most difficult piece of work. His success is the more noticeable, as the part is a little aside of his natural gifts, which were so well suited in the "Yeomen of the Guard." The idyllic poet was not very happily cast, but the military side of the entertainment found in Mr. Frank Wilson a fine voice and presence, and the other officers were up to the mark, save that Mr. Wyld begged to be excused from being hoarse as the Duke of Dunstable. But surely a Duke may be a trifle hoarse, if it please his Grace.

"Patience" has evidently the eternal youth of a masterpiece. Quite enough water has flowed beneath the Westminster Bridge since 1881 to have swamped and outmoded a thousand skits that were not more than skits. Yet "Patience" remains, and not a bad definition of genius, which everyone fails to define, would be "an infinite capacity for making Patience"—"and playing it," Mr. Workman might add.

* * * * *

You should go and see Miss Ada Reeve at the Empire. Her new songs are original, and the old ones are at once old and new, for they come upon one as a pleasant surprise, and then one remembers and is pleased to meet them again. "Change" is the favourite of the moment, and Miss Ada Reeve voices "the mutability of things"—and people—uniquely well.

* * * * *

Hengler's bursts forth into Easter novelties this week, and I shall perhaps have a word to say next week as to "Beauty and the Enchanted Prince," which reads very exciting. Children, I find, always like Hengler's.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE MONTAGNINI DISCLOSURES.

THE Montagnini papers are more exciting than we could have thought from the early dribblets given in the journals. They must revolutionise diplomatic traditional methods and place diplomacy on an American footing. Saint Peter's See gains nothing from their publication. What I greatly fear is that the pleasureable excitement with which these papers are read will make the French forget the Iéna catastrophe and the tons of white powder that lie in the holds of all their war vessels.

Not a few of the diplomats have been passing an uneasy time. Any of those who had expressed too freely to Monsignor Montagnini what they thought of France and her Republic would have passed sleepless nights. Their apprehensions cannot be entirely set at rest until the whole collection of the Montagnini papers comes out. Sir Francis Bertie had the luck to speak as King Edward, I dare say, thinks, and so remains on the safe side.

Jonkheer Stuers, of course with the warm concurrence of the Dutch Government, has utterly denied to M. Pichon the report of opinions said to have been expressed by him in the Montagnini correspondence. This is conclusive to M. Pichon and his free-thinking friends. To the dévots it is not. It is an article of their theological casuistry that nobody is bound to tell the truth to his own injury. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. To go against this canon is suicidal. Ergo, Montagnini himself would have to absolve the Dutch Minister for denying a conversation brim-full of treason against, not the Republic only, but France herself. Were he to admit it, he would have to retire from his present enviable post. It might be, as there are no doubt other Montagninis in the Nunciatures, a safe precaution for their diplomatic colleagues not to call on them unaccompanied by witnesses. Montagnini was all things unto all men, and especially to all clerics—the better to draw them out. An eminent priest, the Abbé Débrig, whom he thus led to unveil himself and then denounced to Merry del Val, now speaks of his method as fourbe et douteuse. He may be less fourbe than he appears, and had to follow instructions in writing letters which, if shown to the Pope, would keep him in the path which Piou, Emile Ollivier, and Monsignor Merry del Val wanted his Holiness to follow.

Leo XIII. sent to Paris as Nuncio Monsignor Lorenzelli, now a bishop somewhere in Northern Italy, because as a learned professor he might be persona grata to a Republic which had just had for its Minister M. Dupuy, who had filled a professorial chair in the Marseilles Elysée. When he went as Nuncio to Belgium, Montagnini, il bello giovane as he used to be called, was chosen as the best person to deal with le monde distingué. He has the fine animality of the Roman type, and soft insinuating manners, and made himself extremely useful in keeping rich ladies generously disposed towards the Holy See. As he had graduated at the academy of the nobility, he could serve as a show guest at dinner parties. He enjoyed the goodwill of Merry del Val, who stood by him in the affair of the Pontifical Chamberlain MacNoutt, and who judged well, when diplomatic relations were broken off between the French Republic and the Vatican, to appoint Montagnini Papal Agent at the ci-devant Nunciature. They hoped at the Vatican for the return of Rouvier to the Premiership, when they might expect renewed diplomatic relations. In the meantime the Papal Agent could keep on taking soundings, stimulating the zeal of the wealthy Catholic ladies, and reporting on the variations of the political compass. He was as good a man as could be for the old-fashioned kind of diplomacy and the financial objects of the Holy See. Nobody better understood how to refuse with unctuous softness an appeal for pecuniary relief from some broken-down aristocrat who had still belles relations. He represented in touching terms the impoverished state of the Holy See, and passed on a Pontifical benediction which could not fail to bring with it temporal as well as spiritual gain.

Monsignor Merry del Val was never tired of urging Monsignor Montagnini to action. He has constantly warned him to hide his tracks, not to let himself be found out, and, so to speak, make his cartridges in a dark cellar, to be fired in the open by others apparently unconnected with him. The Secretary of State neglected the lesson of Cardinal Gonsalvi, to wit: "The first duty of a diplomat is never to confide to paper a secret of any importance." In neglecting it, the hidden hand of Rome in French politics became too patent. It was seen to be a busy hand and dexterous, but less so than reputed. All the time Monsignor Montagnini stayed at the Rue de l'Elysée this hand busied itself with anti-Separation riots, strikes, the manipulation of electoral wires, the collecting of war funds, the rubbing down of the backs of irascible Lyons ladies who had well-filled purses, and with plans of campaign against General André, Pelletan, Combes, and other enemies. The front door of the Foreign Office having been closed, attempts were made to open back doors, and not without some success in Rouvier's time. M. Denys Cochin, as Deputy, had every right to enter by the front door and ascend to the Minister's room by the grand stairs. He and Rouvier preferred the back stairs and nocturnal meetings. What is more, Rouvier, after a conversation with M. Cochin, took him, candle in hand, by devious passages to a very private door, saying, as he showed him out: "The radicaille enter, when they call, by the front door. This door is for my particular friends." "Radicaille" is a word to express contempt, and is about equivalent to "rascally radicals" or "radical canaille." One cannot give the lie to M. Denys Cochin. His silence may be taken as confirming what the Papal Agent wrote on this subject.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Building, Carteret-street, S.W.

Merry del Val led the game played by Montagnini. He called for indiscrétions for informing gossip, or, as they say here, potins and ragots. The Secretary of State was brought up in a sphere—the diplomatic in London, and the ultra mondaine in Madrid, Brussels, and Paris—where they only think of futilities, and regard the influence of the talon rouge as eternal. Had Montagnini gone into those quarters of the city where the talon rouge is of no account, and written of what he saw there, his chief could not have understood his letters.

The ex-Papal Agent adopted the telegraphic style of his chief in regard to the naming of French personages. The "Monsieur" and "Monsignor" are dropped. They are simply Loubet, Fallières, Denys Cochin (he would be Cochin had he not a brother Henri, also a Deputy), Piou, Clemenceau, Fuzet (Archbishop of Rouen), Fulbert-Petit (Archbishop of Besançon). The exceptions are M. le Comte d'Aubigny (French Minister at Munich); M. Le Marchant, a good friend at the Foreign Office, where he hung on, though officially Minister to some South American Republic, and Canon Pisani, another good Corsican friend, and brother of Colonel Ferri Pisani, who, as aide of the late Prince Napoleon, had such a thorough knowledge of le monde de la galanterie.

Emile Ollivier is resurrected in the seized papers. That stormy petrel appears in them as priming and loading the Papal Agent. Some of his old power to persuade appears to survive in him. He seems to have been in some degree the cause of the rejection of the Cultual Associations clauses in the original Briand Law. Up to the time that the report of his conversation reached Rome, the Holy See had been undecided. Ollivier's besetting sin is vanity. He had predicted to some interviewer that the Pope could not, and never would, accept the Cultual Associations clauses. I dare say he went to the Rue de l'Elysée to make sure of the fulfilment of this prophecy. It is so delightful to a prophet to be able to say, "What did I tell you?" Perish Nineveh rather than the name of Jonah as a soothsayer! They can have no idea at the Vatican that what the soldier said is not evidence. In the seized papers, the soldier is always saying something through the mouths of Denys Cochin, Piou, Pisani, some Ambassador, Minister Plenipotentiary, resuscitated Orleanist or Bonapartist, or simply some busybody. Cochin manages to throw no fat on smouldering fire. Piou makes the embers flare up into a fine blaze. He is the tell-tale of the Catholic world, and softly and with nice innuendo enlightens Monsignor Montagnini on the manners and morals of possible rivals and actual foes. He is a Mr. Candour.

This Piou is a rather clever advocate, more fluent than eloquent, the son of the First President of the Court of Appeal of Toulouse, and la Présidente Piou who, angry about questions of precedence, led the Maréchale Niel such a life when the Marshal commanded the Army Corps of Languedoc. Mme. Veuve Lebaudy sprang also from this nest, which is rather chameleon in regard to politics, but of fast colours in regard to Roman Catholicism. Piou is a believer in small expedients, instinct leading him towards them. If he had not the deep-lying passion of la Présidente Piou for taking the pas on every one else he would have been more successful. Among those vain Catholics of le monde élégant et dévot he was too much of a Papal viceroy in the political sphere. Otherwise he has address in worming his way through and round obstacles enough to frighten a braver man. Piou and Leo XIII. understood each other. This Papal politician hardly improves with increasing years, and when old age comes upon him will not be a fine ruin. He used to enter, in the days of Grévy and Carnot, into job alliances with the Radicals to upset Opportunist Ministries. His relations with them, and with Clemenceau among the number, began and ended at the Palais Bourbon.

This brings me to Clemenceau as he figures in a passage in the Montagnini papers. I mean the one in which Piou, through the Papal Agent, advises the Holy See to give Clemenceau, with, of course, the very utmost secrecy, a big sum to tame his hostility to the Church in the debates on the Separation Bill. At the time Piou made this move he and Clemenceau had not seen each other for twelve years, nor had any relations, public or social. It was an American lady, a friend of both, who had a notion to bring them together at a lunch in her studio—for she is an artist. She may have wanted to earn the red ribbon, so coveted by painters, on the one side, and on the other a commission to paint the Pope, and so rank with Chatrain, or to obtain some valuable medal or intaglio, or some nobiliary title. The brain of an American lady when ambition stirs it can be fertile in smart notions and combinations. It is due to her to say that she told both Piou and Clemenceau whom each was to meet at her table. The latter saw no harm in meeting Piou, and why should he see any? So far from the conversation between them lasting two hours, it only lasted a few minutes in the embrasure of a window. Clemenceau's theory is that in recommending the Pope to send him a big sum wherewith to tame him, Piou wanted to bleed the purse of His Holiness for his own advantage. He had spent a good deal of money on elections, and would have to spend a good deal more to secure a seat in the next Chamber of Deputies. He follows those theologians who teach that we may disregard truth to save our lives' fair fame or fortune. Last year he denied with an air of injured innocence, when his election came before the Chamber, that the Church helped him in any way. We now see that it strained all its resources to bring him and other candidates into Parliament. He also declared there was no truth in the account of the lunch at the American lady artist's which appears in the Montagnini papers. Without following "La Lanterne" in calling him Basile, I may paraphrase the old French maxim, "Donner et prendre ne vaut," into "Nier et affirmer ne vaut."

Was the Vatican ever known to pay for services in cash down? A Marquise, in the Montagnini papers, is spoken of as sending a hogshead of her finest vintages to the Holy Father. He returns the filial present with indulgences for five hundred days. Somebody sends to Merry del Val a cask of fine champagne brandy and two tubs of bordeaux. The Secretary of State at once writes that his Holiness would be deeply touched by a similar testimony of devotion. The hint is acted upon. Indulgences, benedictions, and other favours that cost nothing, are showered in return. The Secretary of State hints to Montagnini that chocolate lozenges, and especially the Swiss kind, would be welcome to the Pope, and that he himself would be glad of digestive mint lozenges. Boxes of these delicacies are obtained and are paid for in the way usual at the Vatican. The Holy Father holds M. Piou's faith in too great respect to think of giving him money for any past or expected service. This, say the Clemencists, is a reason the more why Piou should have advised him to spend a big sum in buying off the hostility of a Senator of talent who would treat benediction and indulgences as monnaie du Pape—no longer in circulation.

The Easter fashions show once more how success brings success. A few years ago there was talk of Japanese taste affecting the modes launched in the Place Vendôme. One of the grands couturiers then derided the idea. "Our Parisiennes," he said, "will never suffer those far off insulaires to dictate to them." "Who speaks of dictation?" somebody observed. "The mousmés are too gentle and too gentille (our Fashion's high priest speaks English) to dictate to anyone. But vos élégantes may follow the Stock Exchange, which goes in for Japanese Bonds, both as investors and in their dress." This has come to pass. The Japanese influence is seen in tissues. The kimono is followed in corsages, and there is something of Japan in the ball-room sash. Easter eggs, painted at Kiloa and Tokyo and filled with tiny curious picked up there, are the great rage this year. Skirts are still sweeping; but Japan has nothing to do with this. The awkwardly long garments are an indirect consequence of the athletic sports which girls have followed for the last twenty years—those cross-country walking matches, at which the Duc de Chartres acts as umpire, and the masculinising of the ornamental sex. When short skirts were worn feet, possibly, were too much squeezed, with the result of deformity. A grande couturière assures me that she now knows but two ladies whose feet retain their natural shape. They are both American. One is a marchioness living at Versailles, the other, the wife of an Irish M.P. residing in Chelsea.

Dark eyes now call for fair hair and blue eyes for black hair or very dark brown. I do not know whether oxygenised water is still in favour with the would-be blonds. The best wash for those who aspire to dark tresses is a preparation of henna. Some preparations of this oriental drug give a mahogany red or chestnut tint. There are others which produce the hue which gives the tails of the Shah's white thoroughbreds their peculiar pinkish tinge.

Scotch farmers ought to rejoice at a discovery made in those temples of beauty here where washes are sold. It is that oatmeal in a canvas bag is, if ground coarse, preferable to bran for baths. I am myself a believer in plain water, and soap that contains more palm oil than potash. But it does appear that oatmeal cleanses and gives satin smoothness to the skin. Breton dairymaids use it to wash their hands before they make butter. It prevents this substance sticking to the hands and cleanses. The use of soap would render the butter unmarketable. The face wash of these Bretons is buttermilk in which oatmeal has been steeped for a short time. This is supposed to give the cheeks, and perhaps does, the rose-petal softness and gloss which at Pardons and other fêtes go so well with bright eyes, bright teeth, and delicious lace and muslin caps of the Breton lasses. It is called in the Breton tongue "the face wash of Duchess Anne." Brantôme, to be sure, speaks of the matchless complexion of that great heiress, and of her bonnie black eyes. It occurs to me as I write that she was a grand-daughter of Isabella Stuart. That princess may have taught the Bretonnes the virtue of oatmeal as a skin purifier. What a time it has taken for Paris Lumière to awake to this fact!

A PEER AMONG THE HOUSEMAIDS.

I AM not at all sure I ought to tell you what I am going to, because I only got to know of it in a private conversation, which certainly wasn't meant to be made public. But, on the other hand, I wasn't definitely told not to use it, and now that I am a journalist it seems to me I ought to do as other journalists do, and not worry about old-fashioned ideas of that sort when there's a scoop to be made. (I'm rather proud of "scoop." It sounds so technical. What?) And this is really no end important. I shouldn't be in the least surprised if there was a revolution or something in consequence; and it ought to do the paper no end of good being the first to publish it. I got to hear of it from a lady I met at an aunt of mine's a day or two ago. I've been making inquiries about it since then, and there isn't the slightest doubt it's true. It's about housemaids, chiefly, and particularly charwomen. I expect you've heard there's a new Act coming into force on July 1 about compensating servants if they get hurt while they're in your service. I can't for the life of me make out how we let it go through; but I remember at the time being told by some one—I really forget who it was; possibly Norfolk, or Arthur Balfour, or some one of that set—that I wasn't to vote against it. So, of course, I didn't. I remember whoever it was gave me some reason—something about wanting to knock some more important Bill on the head, I think—but I didn't pay much attention to it at the time, because if you know the way you've got to vote, I never see much good in worrying about reasons. Anyway, it was passed all right, and now it seems the whole country—or all of it that matters and some that doesn't—is up in arms about it.

This lady who told me about it made out that it is going to have all sorts of results that nobody ever thought about when they drew up the Bill. She gave me two or three examples, and I must say they strike me as being a bit thick—if they're true. It seems that, say you live in the country, and one of your servants is going off for a holiday, and rides into the nearest town on a bicycle, and some one in the house asks her to look in at the grocer's on the way back and bring a pound of butter back with her and she falls off her bicycle and breaks her arm on her way back—then you're liable. Another thing, if you've given her a month's notice, and tell her she needn't wait till the end of the month, but just pay her her wages and get rid of her, and she goes and lives at home, and a week before the end of the month falls downstairs and hurts herself—then you're liable. Another thing, if you put a man and his wife as caretakers in an empty house and they both drink and bash each other's heads in with the poker, and say they did it tumbling down the area steps—then you're liable, unless you can prove that they were drunk, which you can be pretty sure they're not going to be jugginses enough to let you prove. I could tell you no end of such stories, and it doesn't much matter whether they're true or not, because pretty well all the women in England believe them, and that's the chief thing. It seems, too, according to this lady—and she's been looking into it pretty closely—that it isn't going to be so easy to insure against it. Her husband got forms of policies from half-a-dozen different companies, and according to him they're all full of restrictions and ways of catching you out, so that half the time, when you think you're insured all right, you'll find you're not. I was talking to my man, Fitzsimmons, about it, and according to him the people that are going to be hardest hit of any are the charwomen, because every one they work for, even if it's only one day a month, will have to insure them, and they just won't do it, and hundreds of them are telling their charwomen that they won't employ them after the 1st of July. Fitzsimmons says they aren't to be allowed to insure themselves either, or get round it any way like that.

I thought I had better explain to you what the people, and especially the women who keep servants, are thinking about this new Act, because then you'll understand better the piece of "exclusive" news (that's another technical word. What?) I've got for you. It is that they're organising a regular strike, on the lines of a secret society. They are working it uncommonly well, too, as far as I can make out, and they've managed to keep it a dead secret till now. I expect half the people I know will cut me for letting it out now, but I look upon it as a sort of a duty, especially as I couldn't find anything else to write about this week. Of course, by the way, if you are afraid to put it in and prefer to use that article I wrote about the Suffragettes instead, I shall quite understand. Anyway, this is the plot. On the 1st of July they are all going to sack every servant they've got in their houses, and all the rest of the employees that come under the new Act—curates I mean, and people like that. But that isn't nearly all. Wherever they are they are going to pay the servants' fares up to London—all on the same day—and they're going to explain exactly why they've had to sack them, and get them all down to Westminster to demonstrate against the Government until they repeal the Act. I tell you, the Suffragette business is going to be a fool to it! There are all sorts of points about this, but I'll only tell you one, just to show you how cunningly they've laid their plans. They are going to form up all the cooks in front, because they say that policemen are always in love with cooks and when they see their sweethearts they'll refuse to act and just let them play Old Harry with the House as much as they please. They say there is absolutely no limit to the number of servants there will be in the procession. They have got more than 2,000 people pledged to sack their servants—of all classes—some with thirty or forty, right down to those who only keep one "general." And hundreds are joining every day. Fitzsimmons tells me that the charwomen are organising another demonstration of the same kind on their own account that's being financed by the first League, and that there's not the least doubt they'll amalgamate the two.

Of course, it isn't my business to tell the Government what it ought to do, especially as it's a Radical Government, and the more messes it gets into, the better I'm pleased; but I'm afraid it's really going to be a serious affair, and if somebody doesn't warn them I shouldn't be in the least surprised if it led to bloodshed. I remember quite well a cook we had, when I was a small boy. Something made her lose her temper, and she laid out the butler and the housekeeper and two of the footmen with a rolling-pin before they could master her. And when it comes to, perhaps, 5,000 cooks, with 5,000 rolling-pins—well, I shouldn't like to be in the Government's shoes, I know that. I hope at least they'll have some of the County Council steamboats moored near the House, so as to give them some chance of escaping when the time comes.

As a matter of fact, even if nothing serious happens in the way of riots, I expect the Government is in for a bad time when this Act comes into force. It's going to set every woman in the country that keeps any kind of a servant dead against them. I didn't say that the Act is not a fair one, or that it's going to prove as bad as people think. But all the women do think so—not the shrieking suffragette sisterhood kind of women, but every woman who lives in a £30 a year villa in the suburbs, or who's got a husband with a vote. And that husband's not going to get any peace until he votes against the Government that passed the Servants' Compensation Act. If he doesn't, Heaven help him! That's what I think about it. And so does Jessie.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE New Fame, dear Lady Betty, is a product of the time. The following story requires no further introduction:—

There is, in the village of Chalfont St. Giles, a house known as Milton's cottage, a cabin to which the poet fled to escape the plague, and hundreds visit this each year.

Some days ago a big motor-car halted at the wicket, and a large, florid-faced man, wrapped in a great fur coat, stepped into the cottage. He paid to the caretaker the sixpence for admission, and was shown into Milton's sitting-room. There the visitor stood for a moment in a reverential attitude, and then he said:

"And this is Lipton's cottage?"

"Milton's, sir," said the caretaker.

"Milton's?" he exclaimed, savagely; "I thought it was Lipton's; it is most disappointing!" and he strode out of the house forthwith.

* * * * *

In England we are in a condition of advanced stupidity; notwithstanding the enormous increase of freedom of thought and action, education and experience, we are still cramped by the system which was developed in the Dark Ages! We still occasionally describe the multitude as "The common people;" it is a significant circumstance, however, that the use of the phrase is daily becoming less frequent. Every condition which was formerly not affected by the hereditary superior amongst us is even now described contemptuously; the "Low Journalist," "Poor Artist," "Common Actor," "Worthless Actress," "Dirty Jew," "Snivelling Dissenter," "City Shark," "Pettifogging Attorney," and "Swindling Shopkeeper," are expressions that occur at once to the memory. On the other side of the social chasm are "The Noble Lord," "The Reverend Gentleman," "The Gallant Officer," and "The Honourable Member"! The iniquity of this situation is far more serious than it appears to be on the surface. The "Noble Lord" has to be convicted of a vast amount of villainy before the efficacy of the descriptive adjective is ever diminished; enormous success must be achieved by the "Poor Artist," "Low Journalist," "Dirty Jew," "Common Actor," and "Swindling Shopkeeper" before the latter are absolved from the unnecessary consequences of not being born of the class that inherits superiority! To the "Noble" Lord and his connections were allotted the best opportunities, and the system provided numerous checks to prevent them from sinking to the social depths—unless they were traitors to the cause. Those on the other side of the artificial gulf had not only to make their own opportunities, but to succeed mightily in spite of a multitude of obstacles cunningly devised to check their advance. The greater part of this villainous machinery still exists. Those who support progress and reform here are "agitators," "demagogues," and "socialists" yet. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain was all three until he allied himself to the hereditary party.

* * * * *

The almost idolatrous attitude we have now assumed in this country towards the rich is somewhat excusable when considered in that light. The acquisition of great wealth by inheritance, marriage, effort, fraud, or any other form, at once frees the "City Shark," "Common Actor," "Swindling Shopkeeper," "Dirty Jew," "Snivelling Dissenter," "Low Journalist," and the rest from the malign influences of their former condition. There is a frantic rush for wealth and its baptismal advantages. Would it not be wise simply to remove the disqualifications which the folly of our ancestors elaborated?

* * * * *

"The wisdom of our ancestors" is a ridiculous expression; their portion was folly almost undiluted. For long centuries the condition of the race scarcely improved; an increase of freedom of thought and action, persistently opposed, led at once to advance in every direction. Our ancestors could have had almost every scientific and mechanical contrivance we possess, and all the accompanying prosperity and advantages of these, had they not discountenanced education, suppressed liberty, coerced the mind even, and maltreated the enterprising who reasoned, discovered, or invented. The great liberty of thought and action accorded by America to its citizens almost at once caused Progress to bound up like a balloon released from its moorings, and the whole of Europe will be dragged forwards—however reluctant the old-world "Governing Classes," who benefit by existing circumstances, may be—by her.

* * * * *

"Only a woman" is a phrase which is in general use. When, for instance, a woman fabricates a scandalous story concerning a man, he is, almost always, recommended to ignore the matter, as the detractor is "Only a woman"—and this, notwithstanding that life-long experience has proved to all that such calumnies continually do enormous and often irreparable mischief. Were men to enable women to attain positions of great responsibility in the State, are the latter to retain the privilege of irresponsibility in other directions? The question is especially interesting in consequence of the following circumstances. (a) A woman cannot be physically punished for such conduct; (b) this form of "gossip" is the current coin of the conversation of many, and, were legal proceedings taken against a woman for uttering a slander of the kind, the judge and jury might treat her leniently on the ground that she is "Only a woman"; and (c) did the new circumstances cause the Courts to be more severe, ordinary men cannot afford to frequently venture the large amounts required for legal expenses, and cannot devote much of their valuable time to continual proceedings of the sort—for the number of such slanders that are fabricated each day is enormous.

There is, obviously, but one way to overcome the difficulties of the situation: woman must correct herself of the failing, and she must learn not to pronounce judgment on men without having given reasonable consideration to the two sides of each case; for almost every woman conceives it to be her especial province to decide offhand—according to her temporary and personal condition of mind—any matter that presents itself. When woman has established for herself a responsible character in the ordinary circumstances of life, man will no longer be able to refer to her as "Only a woman," and she will have a claim to attain positions of responsibility in the government of the community. A barrel of gunpowder wrapped up in a petticoat is not a desirable occupant of the Treasury Bench—even if she is described by so fascinating a term as "Suffragette."—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

IT was announced in Truth several weeks ago that Lord Durham would be requested again to accept the office of Steward of the Jockey Club when Colonel Baird retires. I am very pleased to hear that Lord Durham has consented to serve again, this being his fourth term of Stewardship. It is the very best possible arrangement which could have been made under the circumstances. Colonel Baird's term of office expires next Wednesday, when the annual financial meeting of the Jockey Club is to be held at Newmarket.

I am sorry to hear that Lord Cadogan is retiring from the Turf, which will be a great loss to Newmarket, as he has always been a liberal and staunch patron of that town. Lord Cadogan's horses in training are to be sold at Newmarket without reserve on May 1, being Wednesday in the First Spring Week.

It was stated last week in one of the papers that Mr. Hall Walker made a great mistake when he paid the minor forfeit for Polar Star for the Derby. As a matter of fact, Polar Star never was engaged in the Derby. If the colt had been entered for that race he certainly would not have been withdrawn when the minor forfeit was declared last year on March 27, as he had by that time been highly tried, and three days later he won the Sefton Park Plate at Liverpool in a canter, having started with odds of 2 to 1 betted on him, in a field of eight. Polar Star was not much thought of as a yearling, so that he was then entered for only minor races, none of his engagements being events of the highest class. There have been other instances of the best horse of the year having been left out of the Derby, notably the Duke of Devonshire's Morion, in 1890, and Mr. Rose's Cyllene, in 1898. There have also been many cases in which the flyer of the season was a filly, but she had not been engaged in the Derby. Seabreeze could have beaten Ayrshire in 1888, and Memoir would have made short work of Sainfoin two years later, while in 1904 St. Amant would have stood no chance against Pretty Polly. The winning owner at Epsom on June 5 may have good reason to be thankful, not only for the omission of Polar Star, but also for the absence of Sagamore, who was disqualified by the death of Sir James Miller.

I hear that My Pet II. is to run at Longchamps next Sunday for the Prix Hocquart, and it will be interesting to see how Mr. Raphael's colt gets on in that race, which was won last year by Maintenon. If My Pet II. should be defeated easily he might after all be sent over to Newmarket to start for the Two Thousand, as, if he is beaten on Sunday, being fit and well, it will be obvious that he cannot have much chance for the Poule d'Essai on the 28th, so there would be no object in keeping him in France to run for that race. The performance of My Pet II. on Sunday will be anxiously awaited by owners of horses engaged in the Ascot Derby, as if Mr. Raphael's colt appears to be out of the Grand Prix, he would no doubt run at Ascot, and he has no penalty for the stake named. My Pet II. is entered besides for the three-year-old heat of the Biennial, which is also run on the Wednesday, but in that race he has a penalty of 8 lb.

It was announced in Truth last week that Polar Star is intended to run for the Chippenham Plate at the Newmarket First Spring Meeting, a race which appears to be at his mercy, as he has no extra weight to carry. A sporting paper asserts that Mr. Hall Walker's colt "is expected to win both this race and the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap." If Mr. Hall Walker really contemplates starting Polar Star at Kempton Park, the colt is unlikely to run at Newmarket, for success in the Chippenham Plate would involve a penalty of 5 lb. in the Jubilee Handicap, and his present weight (7 st. 12 lb.) is quite enough for a three-year-old. As matters stand, Polar Star would meet Keystone II. at 16 lb., whereas on the weight-for-age scale the mare ought to give him only 15 lb., deducting the sex allowance.

A writer in one of the sporting papers tells us that "the real founder of the French Turf" was "Lord Seymour." The individual known at that period as "Lord Seymour" was afterwards the twelfth Duke of Somerset, and he neither knew nor cared anything about racing. Reference is intended to be made to Lord Henry Seymour, the putative brother of the fourth Marquis of Hertford and of Sir Richard Wallace, who spent all his life in France.

His Majesty's mare Laodamia, who is in foal to St. Simon, has been sent to Gallinule. Laodamia was expected to turn out a great success at the stud, but her failure has been complete and ignominious. After the cross with Persimmon had been proved a blunder it was a great mistake to persist in sending the mare to that horse, and there was not much improvement when she was despatched to St. Simon, the blood being practically the same. It may be hoped that the Gallinule cross will turn out more successful.

When the entries for the Goodwood Cup were made nearly three years before the race was run the winners were usually animals of exceedingly poor class, and the event excited no general interest whatever. A salutary change has been made this season in closing the race a little over four months before the day of running, and the entry of thirty-seven includes many of the best horses in training. The allowance of 12 lb. for four-year-olds and upwards which have not won a race of a mile or upwards, is excessive, and it should be reduced next year to 7 lb., while the 5 lb. allowance for three-year-olds in the same position ought to be abolished. These allowances only favour bad horses, and they bear hardly upon the "cracks," which usually have their full share of extra weight to carry. His Majesty has entered Cheverel, who is very bad, and he has probably been engaged only in order that the King's name might appear in the list. Lord Derby has Keystone II., Bridge of Canny, and Glasconbury. The horse escapes with a 5 lb. penalty, whereas Keystone II. will have to carry 12 lb. extra. Bridge of Canny and Keystone II. have both improved considerably since last season, but I fancy that the horse would be the more dangerous of the pair over two miles and a half, supposing there to be anything of a pace from start to finish. Major Loder has entered Spearmint and Weathercock, but I do not believe that last year's Derby winner will stand a preparation for any such race as this, and Weathercock is not likely to turn out a flyer. This colt is not thought to have improved during the winter. Mr. Bass has engaged the four-year-olds Sancy and Gold Riach, and one of Mr. Buchanan's pair is Noctuiform, the Australian horse about whose supposed merits such a prodigious trumpeting was heard last autumn. Noctuiform can certainly stay well, and probably his miserable exhibitions last autumn were all wrong running. Mr. Dalgleish enters Buckminster, and Mr. G. Faber is represented by Malua, who has been marked out by some good judges as a likely horse to win an important handicap, probably during the autumn. Mr. Hill's Mondamin, Lord Howard de Walden's Poussin, and Mr. A. James's three animals will all find themselves outclassed. Colonel Kirkwood's The White Knight has incurred a penalty of 5 lb. only, and he will be very dangerous, for he can really stay well, besides having fine speed. Mr. Neumann's Llangibby is not likely to stand training for a Cup race, and Mr. Singer's Challacombe appeared to have trained off last season. He is a sorry specimen of a St. Leger winner. Mr. L. de Rothschild has two entries, one being Radium, and one of Captain Woods' pair is Roseate Dawn. Sir E. Cassel has Killeagh, who is expected to retrieve his reputation this season. Only two French owners have entered horses for the Goodwood Cup. M. Caillault has engaged Hautbois and Mortier, while M. de Monbel is represented by Storm, who was much fancied for last year's St. Leger, but he lost many lengths at the start, a mishap which entirely extinguished any chance which he might have possessed.

Baltinglass, who was expected to turn out the best of his owner's lot for the Two Thousand, has been suffering from a cracked heel, a visitation which will not improve his chance on May 1, as he was not sufficiently forward in condition to allow of his being rested for even two or three days. He is a handsome and racing-like colt, and has made a vast improvement since last autumn, but, of course, nothing conclusive is as yet known as to his stamina. A colt may gallop strongly enough in appearance over a mile or a mile and a half, and yet when he comes to be seriously tried he discovers himself to be a non-stayer. All Black is undergoing a special preparation at Newmarket for the Two Thousand, and he is doing well, but there is an idea that he will prove to be deficient in stamina, and that six furlongs will be found his best course. Linacre has also pleased the observers of his gallops, but he is likely to run next week, and the same may be said of Simon Square. I shall be surprised if either Saxham or Galleot turns out to be capable of winning the Two Thousand for their owner. The Egerton House stable is not likely to be dangerous. Prince of Orange will probably represent Lord Wolverton, whose promising colt Larig will not be properly fit for several months. Lord Rosebery's colours will be seen on Bezonian, and this colt is expected to run well. It is quite on the cards, indeed, that Bezonian will turn out to be the best of the Newmarket lot. Traquair is not likely to run either for the Two Thousand or the Derby. It will be a judicious policy to keep this colt for T.Y.C. races, and if all goes well he will be hard to beat over five furlongs, as he has immense speed. I hear that he is to "go for" the Princess of Wales' Handicap at Sandown Park on the 26th.

After their tragical experiences over the Lincolnshire Handicap, it is amazing to find backers so prematurely meddling with the City and Suburban, but their fatuity is boundless and bottomless. There will be no genuine or extended speculation on the race until the first day of the Epsom Meeting, and it had very much better be left alone until the latest possible moment. Succour is the last Newmarket tip for the Epsom event. It is said that there was a good excuse for his miserable exhibition at Liverpool.

I observe that a sporting writer indulges in some hysterical rhapsodies concerning the "wonderful" performance of Polymelus in the Cambridgeshire. It seems to me that the merits of this victory have been preposterously exaggerated. Polymelus won in a common canter, but he certainly had not much to beat. St. Amant's day was over, and Velocity was actually the only really good animal in the field. Mrs. Jackson's horse was giving 6 lb. to Polymelus, and was unplaced. Kaffir Chief, who finished second, was receiving 2 st. from the winner, but at Lincoln Ob gave Mr. Barnard's horse 16 lb., and cantered away from him with extreme ease. Polymelus figures in the City and Suburban betting at 16 to 1, but any bookmaker might safely offer 50 to 1, for the horse will not start at Epsom, and even if he did run he could have no earthly chance, as he would not be half fit. There is a disposition to write up Mr. Joel's horse for the Jubilee Handicap, but I shall certainly be astonished if he proves capable of giving Keystone II. 12 lb. Polymelus will probably be kept for the Coronation Cup at the Epsom Summer Meeting.

I hear that Gingal is to run for the Doveridge Handicap at Derby on the 19th, and that Meadow Rue will represent the stable at Kempton Park.

Lord Derby's mare, Gourd, winner of the Derby Cup, has accepted for the Great Metropolitan Handicap at Epsom, but I am told that she is to be reserved for the Chester Cup. Gourd is of no use on hard ground.

Orwell, who looked like winning the One Thousand on last year's two-year-old form, is not likely to be in good trim for that race, and she is more likely to distinguish herself in the Oaks. Bellatrix, who has been undergoing a special preparation for the One Thousand, is described as looking very light indeed. It is unfortunate that Mr. Musker (her breeder) should have withdrawn this filly from the Oaks when the minor forfeit was declared.

The cackle about Slieve Gallion being a non-stayer still continues, the fact being that nothing certain will be known as to his powers until he has been tried. Darling does not appear to share the doubts which are so largely entertained as to Slieve Gallion's stamina. Judging from the work which the colt is doing at Beckhampton, I expect we shall see him win the Two Thousand, unless he is defeated by the dark Kingsclere colt, Lord Falmouth's St. Martin.

The racing of last week was of no general interest, only excepting the victory of Bridge of Canny in the Queen's Prize at Kempton Park. Lord Derby's horse only won by a head, but a defeat would have been dreadfully unfortunate, as it was obvious that he ought to have won very easily indeed. The horse got shut in, and Maher certainly did not shine in this race until the last few strides, when he redeemed his previous blunder by a very powerful finish. Bridge of Canny was highly tried as a two-year-old, but he started seven times without winning, and was ultimately denounced as an arrant rogue. However, this horse "came on" wonderfully between three years and four, and during the last twelve months he has won ten races of the value of nearly £11,200. Bridge of Canny's performance at Kempton Park was a very good one, as he was giving 13 lb. to Nightfall and 35 lb. to Cadwal, who were respectively second and third. If the ground is hard at Chester, Bridge of Canny might yet win the Cup, for which handicap his weight is now 9 st. 5 lb.

Attraction, who was defeated by Pom at Liverpool, was a great favourite for the Rendlesham Plate, and Mr. James's colt was unlucky in being beaten by Opal, for he was considerably interfered with during the race, and with a clear course it is probable that he would have won cleverly. Bucolic ought to win a race for Lord Falmouth in a few weeks, when he will be more forward in condition. He will probably be seen out at Chester.

There will be some good racing at Newmarket next week, and there are many people who still regard the Craven Meeting as being the real opening of the season. Twenty-six horses were left in for the Biennial after the minor forfeit had been declared, and I shall predict the success of the Kingsclere representative, which will be either Lord Falmouth's St. Martin or the Duke of Westminster's Dusty Miller, each colt being entitled to a 7 lb. maiden allowance. The Column Stakes on Wednesday has thirty-eight horses left in, and Lord Derby's colt Glacis ought to win if he starts. The best public form is represented by the Duke of Devonshire's Hillsprite and Lord Wolverton's Prince of Orange, but both these animals have incurred the extreme penalty of 10 lb., so that Glacis will have 18lb. the best of the weights. A very poor lot of animals are engaged in the Wood Ditton Stakes, putting aside Major Loder's Baltinglass, who will not run, but his stable companion, Adora, may be able to win. If this filly has won her trial she will, of course, be well backed. The Bennington Stakes on Thursday may be left to Hillsprite. There are sixty-two entries for the Craven Stakes, and St. Martin should win if he is kept for this race.

The four-year-old heat of the Biennial may be interesting if Troutbeck starts, but I shall expect to see him beaten by Radium, who has a stone the worst of the weights. Mr. de Rothschild's horse is not entitled to the 7 lb. allowance for never having won a race of a mile, for he won the mile Nursery at Doncaster at two years old.

As to the two-year-old races next week, the Fitzwilliam Plate may bring out Pom and Counterfeit, in which case I shall expect the Liverpool winner to beat the Brocklesby Stakes form. Mr. D. Baird will probably win the Granby Plate with Pietra, who has been well galloped. In this race the owners' subscriptions (or entrances) exceed the advertised value of the stake, so nothing will be really added from the fund. The Double Trial Plate may be left to Colonel Baird's Carpathia, who has won her trial.

THE ANCHOR STROKE.

The anchor stroke has made quite a stir in the billiard world. It has been a seven days' wonder. It has come, it has been seen, and it has been conquered. It has served its purpose as a useful little advertisement. But by its success it has been killed. Having put up a record score of well over six thousand, Dawson has been quite content. Twice in his match with Lovejoy he has deliberately broken up the position after making well over fifteen hundred points. He has realised that the public is tired of the anchor cannon. The people may go once or twice to see it played, and then they will not come again. This has been appreciated by Harverson and Williams, who have limited sequences of ball-to-ball cannons to fifty. In other words, they are content that people should have a chance of seeing what can be done without being wearied by vain repetitions. Reece, in an interview reported in the Chronicle, does not think that the stroke should be barred. The position is difficult to get, and when once obtained extreme delicacy of touch is needed to retain it, and on the ordinary table the conditions are not conducive to the play. As to the difficulty of position, Dawson has soon shown that he can get there, and the inference I draw from the performances of the crack players is that they can get there on match tables with sufficient frequency to make the performance boring. In other words, they can, by their ability to control the ball, reduce the game to a farce. Now, if the game is to retain its hold on the public for exhibition purposes it must be played under such rules as may be applicable, not merely to professionals, but to amateurs. The spectator's interest is reduced to vanishing point in a very short time if he cannot compare the play of various players in different matches. It is for this reason that I strongly object to players making special regulations, as Harverson and Williams have done, or as Reece and Weiss did. These last-named players spotted the balls after each break. In this way not only is safety play doomed, but there is a certain break left for the striker. Of course, there is nothing to prevent players making what rules they like. But under such circumstances the game is not billiards, a fact which the public will quickly appreciate. I have said sufficient to indicate the necessity of a code that shall be applicable to all players of exhibition matches, and the fact that both in the old spot and new anchor strokes players have temporarily to make special rules in order to avoid tiring the public, or else to break up perfectly legitimate positions, indicates the lines on which the necessary amendment should be made. It is quite conceivable that other strokes of a similar character may be evolved. By similarity I mean strokes which, when once a certain position is obtained, are capable of such indefinite repetition as to make the game farcical. But before I consider the amendment necessary to meet these conditions, I would point out that the amateur—that is, the ordinary visitor at these exhibitions—necessarily demands that he should play the game under the rules that are applicable to the professional. Both classes must play billiards, and every one of Reece's objections to the anchor stroke being barred to amateurs may be met by the observation that the average amateur on the ordinary table is just as capable of stringing up sequences of centuries by all-round play as he is of making thousands by the anchor or spot stroke. In other words, rules limiting the number of strokes affect his play less than they would the professional player.

The only way to deal with these limitless strokes is to make a general rule that no identical stroke should be allowed to be made on a billiard table for more than a given number of consecutive shots. If a man were making losing hazards in either the middle or top pocket such a rule would be no handicap, as he could, when he got near the limit, easily put the ball over the opposite pocket, when he could go on afresh. Similarly in the case of cannons, he could play from the red to the white or vice versâ. Once let the general rule be passed, and there would be more variation in the game. As to what should be the limit I do not pretend to say. But unless some such rule is passed there will be, from time to time, the necessity for passing rules barring one stroke or another. It is far better that no strokes should be barred. It is only their repetition that should be prohibited. The fact that such a prohibition as I have indicated is called for in billiards is a tribute to the ingenuity of the professional player and a confession of the relative incapacity of the amateur.

The Carlton Hotel, Pall Mall, S.W.—1598 Gerrard. Famous for its beautiful Restaurant and Grill Room. Under the same Direction as the Ritz Hotel.

Wiesbaden Hotel, Nassau.—Recognised as the Most Fashionable and Refined Home of English and American Society in Wiesbaden.—Telegraphic Address: "Nassauerhof, Wiesbaden."

I am much amused to read in the Field the solemn lecture that is given to Mr. Gilbert Coleridge for having summoned a special general meeting of the Cyclists' Touring Club at Birmingham to confirm his reform resolution, which the egregious councillors by a requisition challenged. Fifteen of these fluffy-minded gentlemen—for really, after reading their affidavits in their great action, I can find no better description—demanded a postal vote. By the rules a special confirmatory meeting binds the council. The writer in the Field says Mr. Coleridge should leave the matter to the postal vote. He should do nothing of the sort. He has shown that he can get 200 members to demand a meeting. He has shown that there are members ready to put their household in order and make the C.T.C. a valuable organisation. The stay-at-home nincompoop who swallows the twaddle of Mr. Shipton and Mr. Kendall Burnett sends up his voting paper for dear Mr. Shipton, the gospel of whose Gazette is his fascinating infallibility, assisted by his disciples on the council. The truth of the matter is, the club needs to be reconstituted. I have no patience with reformers who write to me about electing consuls and all that sort of twaddle. All of those offices are utterly useless. The club is over-officered and over-staffed. The letters from members show the idiots that belong to it. One says all wearing the badge should salute each other, and the correspondence column is filled with the most utter balderdash that any person ever penned. These samples of correspondence show how easily people can be gulled by the bunkum of the C.T.C. officials. As soon as the members call themselves the Cyclists' Protection Association, and rid themselves of all club twaddle, and work with an efficient salaried staff on the lines indicated by such a title, they will find their membership increase. Their precious privileges are very small. The reduced tariff is scarcely worth the paper it is written on. No self-respecting cyclist ever goes near a C.T.C. house unless he expects to get a reduction on a penny bottle of ginger beer. He is surprised that there is no discount. I heard of such a case the other day.

In Association football England drew with Scotland, and so Wales is at the top of the tree so far as Association football goes. Nearly all the Scottish team were selected from English League football clubs. It was a good game when once the English forward line really started playing. The defence on both sides was excellent, and in the last quarter of an hour the English goalkeeper surpassed himself.

I am very pleased to learn from the report of the Essex County Cricket Club that its period of acute financial depression seems to be overpast. At the same time, more members are needed. The county must support the county team.

In Lancashire the clubs in the cricket league keep men who would elsewhere be playing for the county. The authorities are now regulating the circumstances under which amateurs can take collections for making over fifty runs. Of course, in any other game they would be professionals. But there is no reason why anybody should interfere.

At Oxford I hear that several of the colleges are ordering Belgian oars for their crews in the summer eights. I have no doubt these young men are keen Protectionists. There is a little lesson in Free Trade for them in this transaction. There is also a lesson to be learned in rowing. It is no use working with another man's tools unless you work in his style. If Oxford adopts the Belgian style we shall see some funny happenings on the river. A well-known oarsman is much impressed by their style. They were not a particularly fine set of men, and yet they finished the course in times which would have exhausted a good English eight, and they did not appear to be done up.

I am told that the A.R.A. will select the crews to represent England at the racing which will be held in connection with the so-called Olympian games.

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi-Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

MAMMON.

Cheerful Stock Markets, but Undue Enthusiasm Checked by Wreckage—The Change in the Monetary Situation—Reduction in the Bank Rate Talked.

THE past week has, on the whole, been a satisfactory one in the Stock Exchange. Members on returning from their Easter holidays on the Tuesday gave vent to their relief at the removal of the serious difficulties surrounding the end-March Settlement by bidding stocks up in all departments. It was soon demonstrated, however, that prices were not going to move upwards without hindrance. In the first place, the volume of public buying had not yet assumed sufficiently big proportions to permit the professionals taking liberties; in the second place, there were the Settlements on the Paris and Berlin Bourses still to be arranged (and in both cases, although failures were averted, some heavy liquidation became necessary); and in the third the House got a reminder that the process of helping lame ducks had left a lot of stock in the hands of people who were merely nursing it for disposal on the first fine day. These circumstances combined to restrain undue enthusiasm on the part of the House, but it is significant of the more hopeful views entertained of markets that the prevailing tendency of prices throughout the week was upwards. The easier conditions that have developed in the Money Market with the turn of April have done much to engender a feeling of hopefulness. The end of the March quarter this year had been an unusually trying time from the monetary point of view at all the leading international centres, and particularly in London, New York, and Berlin. The return of the Imperial Bank of Germany for the week ended the 30th ult. was of a sensational character. The cash holding declined to 38¾ millions sterling, and the note circulation expanded to 86½ millions, being 20 millions above the legal maximum, as against 7¼ millions below it in the previous week. In fact, so strained a position had perhaps never before been shown by the Reichsbank at this season. Fortunately, there is every reason to expect a rapid recovery now that the quarter has turned, while as regards New York, the measures taken by Mr. Secretary Cortelyou to increase the currency facilities of the banks have already been reflected in a decided improvement in the situation. The sharp recovery in New York Exchange that resulted from the action of the United States Treasurer had a dramatic sequel in the London market last week. On Tuesday, of the £900,000 bar gold that had just arrived here from the Cape and elsewhere, £550,000 had been bought for export to the States at 77s. 10½d. per oz. Exchange, however, moved up so swiftly that by Friday the export of the metal had become out of the question, and those who had engaged it cut their loss by reselling the parcel to the Bank of England at about a penny per oz. below the purchase price.

Naturally the incident has had a marked effect upon our Money Market, which had already been witnessing a rapid melting of discount rates, owing to the big increase in loanable supplies entailed by the release of the April dividends. If, as seems not unlikely, the United States demand for gold upon us is off, the Bank of England should rapidly improve its position, for the South American demand, which has accounted for over £6,000,000 since the beginning of the year, Consols.—We offer Call Options to May for 11/3, to June for 13/9, to July for 16/3 per £100 stock, and for £5,000 Stock to July we are making special rate of 15/- per £100 Stock. Full list of rates on application. Central Stock Exchange, Ltd. Established 1893. 66, Cannon Street, London, E.C.

has been about satisfied, and gold is flowing in at an average rate of £600,000 a week. Already the City has begun to talk of a reduction in the Bank rate, whilst the open market rate for three months bills, which a few weeks ago was 5⅛ per cent., has fallen below 4 per cent. Seeing that dear money has been the one real evil from which most markets have suffered of late, an improvement in this respect can hardly fail to be quickly communicated to the prices of securities, and, providing nothing untoward occurs to mar the normal progress of events, it will be surprising if high-class investment stocks do not make some recovery in the course of the next few months. The present seems to me to offer a splendid opportunity to the buyer of gilt-edged stocks, including those in the home railway fixed interest group, with which I dealt at length a week ago. Home railway ordinary stocks also look ripe for a recovery, having regard to traffics and yields, as well as to monetary prospects. Canadian railways, too, still make a strong appeal to the speculative investor, and in the foreign railway group Argentine issues ought to come in for a greater share of attention on the score of their yields. In fact, there is no lack of bargains offering at the present time in most markets to the investor willing to exercise ordinary discrimination.

In the foreign market, Peruvian Corporation issues have during the last few days returned to favour. It is reported that a settlement between the Corporation and the Peruvian Government has already been effected, and that the ordinary is being bought for the purpose of voting power, to enable the scheme to be carried into effect. Up to the time of writing no details of the alleged settlement have leaked out, but I shall be surprised if the Corporation succeeds in wringing any cash out of the Government. The main provision of any arrangement likely to be concluded will probably be the obtaining by the Corporation of the railways in perpetuity. Under existing conditions, the lines revert to the Government in 1956. Such a concession would of course be important from the point of view of permanent holders of Perus, but it would hardly provide much of a lever for the speculator concerned merely with snatching an early turn. Russian bonds, considering the inflammatory stories about the coming dissolution of the Duma and abdication of the Czar, have kept comparatively firm. In inside circles the tip has lately been passed round to buy, and certainly to the speculative investor there is something attractive about the bonds of a Great Power when they can be picked up to yield 6½ per cent.—which is the return now obtainable on the Fives of 1906.

Underlying Strength in Home Rails—Good Friday Week Traffics—Earnings for the Quarter—A Splendid Record—The Market Outlook Generally Favourable.

Once or twice last week determined efforts were made to rally the Home Railway Market. Members returning to town last Tuesday with the memory of brilliant weather and crowded trains fresh upon them, commenced to bid quite eagerly for stocks, and with jobbers not anxious to part, prices at first scored a substantial improvement. Later on it was found that the volume of public buying was not sufficient to justify such a rapid upward movement, and as, moreover, the rally was taken advantage of to distribute stock "taken over" at the last Settlement, prices afterwards showed a yielding tendency. However, the market seems to be gradually working its way to a higher level, despite constant false starts and disappointments, and towards the end of the week buyers predominated again. The easier tendency of the Money Market, as usual at the beginning of April, tended to foster a better sentiment, and the trickle of real investment support that has been steadily going on for months past, albeit its effect has been frequently obscured by forced sales, was accelerated by the release of the dividend and interest payments that fall due at this season.

As regards the traffic returns, which covered the long distance holiday takings, the record was in one or two instances not quite up to expectation, but in the majority of cases the companies did exceedingly well, as the following table indicates:—

TRAFFIC RETURNS GOOD FRIDAY WEEK.

Company.	1906.	1907.	Increase + or Decrease −.
	£	£	£
Great Central	75,000	81,800	+ 6,800
Great Eastern	109,500	109,100	− 400
Great Northern	111,400	114,500	+ 3,100
Great Western	257,500	255,200	− 2,300
Hull & Barnsley	9,700	10,400	+ 700
Lancashire & Yorkshire	129,100	131,700	+ 2,600
London Brighton & South Coast	71,800	72,300	+ 500
London & North-Western	293,000	305,000	+12,000
London & South-Western	107,700	110,700	+ 3,000
London, Tilbury, & Southend	10,100	10,800	+ 700
Midland	231,300	242,600	+11,300
North-Eastern	195,100	201,700	+ 6,600
North Stafford	18,800	20,000	+ 1,200
South-Eastern & Chatham	103,200	97,800	− 5,400
North London	8,200	7,900	− 300
Metropolitan	15,200	13,600	− 1,600
District	6,800	7,000	+ 200
Central London	5,700	5,200	− 500
City & South London	2,300	2,400	+ 100

In making comparison with Good Friday week of 1906 the advantage as regards conditions lies with the previous year, because, while the weather in the holiday just over was all that could be desired, it was also brilliant a year ago, when Easter fell a fortnight later, thereby tending to increase tourist traffic. All the heavy lines, with the exception of the Great Western, have done very well, while the Great Central and Great Northern also show useful increases. In the southern group the results are less imposing, though any falling off in long-distance traffic ought to have been compensated for by the takings on Bank Holiday, when the short-distance excursion traffic was of a record character. The fact that the Brighton managed to slightly improve upon last year's Good Friday week earnings attracted notice in the market because of the recent unfavourable showings of the company, and Brighton A was quick to respond. The tube and other railways serving the Metropolis displayed, on the whole, a slight falling off, as was to be expected with business holidays on practically two days of the week. It is, by the way, well to bear in mind that the Metropolitan ought now to have come to the end of its long spell of heavy traffic decreases, because traffics are now beginning to run against the period when the Great Central traffic was diverted to the new route—the altered arrangement coming into force at the beginning of April, 1906. The Metropolitan will not, therefore, suffer any longer from an unfair basis of comparison, and although the present dividend position is not anything to boast about, those who have stuck to their "Mets" through the recent lean times may, at least, hope for a moderate bettering of their lot now that dual traction has been abolished, and the board is consequently able to show more fully the economies that result from the adoption of electricity.

The earnings of our railways are now available for the first quarter of the year, and a perusal of the results bears out the opinion I expressed at the start of the period regarding the cheapness of the leading stocks. Some of the increases reported are specially noteworthy, as, for instance, the following:—Great Northern, £39,500; Lancashire and Yorkshire, £66,400; Midland, £103,000; North-Western, £114,000; and North-Eastern, £122,900. The Hull and Barnsley's increase of £18,500 should also not be lost sight of, for proportionately it is about the best of the bunch. Under such conditions, and with every reason to expect a continuance of expansion in gross receipts, the ordinary stocks of the lines I have mentioned ought to be well worth looking at by the investor. The yields on the Heavies average 4½ per cent., without allowing for the possibility of any advance in the rate of dividend next time, while Hulls give 4¾, and York Deferred, on the basis of the 1906 dividend, gives 4⅜ per cent., but making allowance for savings under the head of "compensation" (the charges in connection with which were considerably swollen last year by the Grantham disaster), the dividend for 1907 should be at least ¼ per cent. more, making 2 per cent., which would afford a yield of 4¾ per cent. to a present purchaser. York Deferred has during the last year or two displaced Berthas and Doras as the leading speculative favourite in the Home Railway Market, and in any market rally it should take a prominent place. My usual table of prices is appended:—

How to Operate in Stocks Successfully.—See Halford's Adviser (post free).—Palmerston House, London, E.C. Established 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

Home Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest.	Mar. 28. 1907.	Apl. 6, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Caledonian 3 p.c. Pref.	80	72⅜	67¾xd	67¼xd	− ½
Do. Def.	42½	28⅝	29½xd	29¼xd	—
Central London	96½	82¼	69	69	—
City and S. London	47½	39	42	41	-1
Furness	69¾	61¾	61½	61½	—
Glasgow and South-Western Def.	42⅝	37¼	36xd	36xd	—
Great Central 1894 Pref.	81⅜	69	59¼	59½	—
Do. "B"	40⅝	32½	28¾	28¾	—
Do. "A"	19½	15½	13¾	14¼	+ ⅜
Great Eastern	90¾	79½	75¼	75½	+ ¼
Great Northern Pref.	105	98¾	97	97	—
Do. Def.	48¾	39½	40½	41½	+ ¾
Great Western	144	122⅜	125¾	125¼	− ½
Hull and Barnsley	50	42½	47¼	46¾	− ⅜
Lancashire and Yorkshire	110½	100	102	102½	+ ½
London and Brighton "A"	130⅜	111½	98¾	99	+ ¼
London, Chatham, and Dover	16⅜	13	14⅛	13⅞	− ¼
Do. 4½ p.c. Arbitration Pref.	99½	85	82	82	—
Do. do. 2nd Pref.	64½	48	49	49	—
London and North-Western	163½	147½	146¼	146½	+ ¼
London and South-Western Def.	57½	44⅜	50	50	—
Metropolitan Consolidated	89½	59	45¼	44½	-1¼
Metropolitan District	37½	18¾	13	13	—
Midland 2½ p.c. Pref.	70⅝	64	64½	65	+ ½
Do. Def.	74⅜	62½	62¾	63¼	+ ½
North British 3 p.c. Pref.	78¾	72½	67xd	67¼xd	+ ¼
Do. Def.	47½	38¾	35¼xd	35¼xd	+ ⅜
North-Eastern Consolidated	147½	134½	137½	139	+1½
North Staffordshire	105⅜	96¾	97	98	+1
South-Eastern "A"	55¼	44¾	41¼	40½	− ¾

Substantial Rally in American Rails, but the General Outlook Unchanged—The Increase in the Atchison Dividend Unfavourably Received—Southern Pacific's Fine Statement—Other February Earnings Poor—The Coming Trade Reaction.

As I hinted at a week ago, the American market has during the last few days experienced a very sharp rally after its recent severe slump. Whether the upward movement was merely the result of covering by the short interest, or whether it was part of an organised attempt on the part of big banking interests to infuse more confidence into the market with a view to the distribution of new issues that have already been offered publicly without success, is a debatable point, but in any case the violence of the recent decline in itself made a recovery—however temporary—inevitable, and on the news that the settlement here had gone through without serious trouble, Wall Street quickly put a better complexion upon the market, as the following table testifies:—

Americans.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	March 28, 1907.	April 6, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Atchison	114⅜	89	91¼	99⅞	+ 8⅝
Do. Five per Cent. Pref.	109½	101	97	99	+ 2
Baltimore and Ohio	129¼	109⅞	98½	105	+ 6½
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	101½	93½	94	93	− 1
Chesapeake and Ohio	68⅝	54	41	43	+ 2
Chicago, Milwaukee	204½	152¼	134xd.	142½xd.	+ 8½
Denver and Rio Grande	52½	38⅝	30	31½	+ 1½
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	93½	85½	76	77½	+ 1½
Erie	52¼	40	24½	26½	+ 1½
Do. 4 p.c. First Pref.	85½	77	62	62	—
Do. 4 p.c. Second Pref.	77	65¾	39	43	+ 4
Illinois Central	188⅝	171	146	152	+ 6
Louisville	160¾	143½	119	124½	+ 5½
Missouri, Kansas	45⅝	31 7/16	34¾	38½	+ 3¾
New York Central	159½	130¾	121	126	+ 5
N. Y. Ontario and Western	57 5/16	45½	37½	40	+ 2½
Norfolk and Western	100¾	87½	77½	81½	+ 4
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	96½	91½	82	84	+ 2
Northern Pacific	235	190½	129	141½	+12½
Pennsylvania ($50)	75¾	63¾	62½	65¾	+ 3½
Reading ($50)	85⅝	59⅞	52½	58½	+ 6½
Southern	43⅜	33	21⅞	23⅝	+ 1⅞
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	105	97	74 xd.	74 xd.	—
Southern Pacific	99 5/16	64⅜	78½	86⅝	+ 8½
Union Pacific	203	144⅝	137½	145¾	+ 8⅜
U.S. Steel	52½	33⅜	35¼	38⅜	+ 3
Do. 7 p.c. Pref.	117	102⅜	100	103½	+ 3½

Beyond the fact, however, that prices were comparatively low, and yields, based upon the results of the past year's dividends, unusually high, there was little in the general situation to warrant a change of front. The Atchison's declaration of a half-yearly dividend at the rate of 6 per cent., as compared with 5 per cent. in the previous half-year, and 4 per cent. in the corresponding period of 1906, while it would have been a strong "bull" point six months ago, only served as a fresh subject for criticism. The outlook for American Railroads has changed so much in the last few months that the market cannot see why the Atchison board should have consented to an expansion of the dividend unless it were for effect. A theory which finds many believers is that the board's object was to facilitate the raising of necessary capital for improvements, and it has been stated that the directors intend, if possible, to avoid the issue of short term notes, favouring the placing of stock or of convertible bonds, if conditions allow the adoption of such a course.

Among the February revenue statements, a good deal of attention has been paid to that of the Southern Pacific, which certainly was a very good one. Gross receipts amounted to $10,056,000, an increase of $2,055,000, while the net earnings were $3,161,000, an increase of $1,149,000. It cannot be said, however, that the Southern Pacific's experience is typical of how the railroads generally are faring. Even the Union Pacific, which hitherto has gone ahead at a wonderful pace, had to put up with a small net decrease, the figures being gross receipts $5,053,000, an increase of $325,000, and net receipts $1,882,000, a decrease of $56,000. The Illinois Central, too, shows that a small gain of $61,000 in gross earnings during February was turned into a net decrease of $188,000, while the Southern continues to fare very badly, a gross gain of $75,000 being converted into a net decrease of no less than $483,000. It should be borne in mind that to a large extent these unfavourable results are due to causes which have come to stay, at any rate for a time, namely, the compulsory reduction in passenger rates enforced by a number of States and the advances in wages and materials, particularly the former. Moreover, what is seriously perturbing the minds of those concerned with American railroad finance is the effect that is likely to be produced upon trade, and therefore on traffic returns, by the present difficulty of raising capital. As I have pointed out in recent articles, the policy of retrenchment in railroad construction now announced by the leading roads, and, in fact, forced upon them, must show itself upon general industry before very long. Its effect will doubtless not be discernible immediately, because there is much work now on hand that must be finished, but when existing contracts are completed, and are not replaced by fresh ones, the outcome must be a general slowing down of trade activity. That the difficulty of raising funds for railroad purposes remains a very real one has been freshly exemplified by the experience of the Erie. This company has just placed through Messrs. J. P. Morgan and Co. an issue of $5,500,000 one-year notes to refund the $3,000,000 that fell due on Monday and the $2,000,000 maturing in July. The new notes have been offered to the public on a 7 per cent. basis, which means that the company is paying to the issuing house about 8 per cent. for its accommodation.

"Bear" Squeeze in Canadian Pacific—Record Traffics by both the Canada and the Grand Trunk—Mexican Rails Before the Dividend—Argentine Rails Still Out of Favour—Their High Yields.

The fluctuations in Canadian Pacifics were one of the leading features in the Stock Exchange last week. At the end March carry-over it was noted with interest that the contango was only 4 per cent., indicating a substantial short interest in the shares, and Stock Exchange men predicted that the "bears" who had classed Canadas along with Yankees, and who had sold so vigorously, would not find it altogether plain sailing to get back their stock. The truth of this prophecy was forcibly borne out, seeing that Canadas, which left off here on Good Friday eve at 174—a price which already represented a recovery of $10 from the worst touched on March 23—were bid up in New York during the holidays to the equivalent of nearly 190. Dealings on the re-opening of the London Stock Exchange commenced at 184—and the price subsequently hovered around 180. In the recent severe drop that occurred in Canadas there was undoubtedly heavy selling by "bulls," who were forced to lighten their load, and this knowledge induced a boldness on the part of "bears," for which many of them must have paid dearly. Wall Street evidently did not make sufficient allowance for the growing demand that exists on the part of British investors for Canadian Pacifics, a demand that appears to have increased tremendously since the fall of a few weeks ago. Meanwhile, the company is again forging ahead in the matter of gross earnings at a phenomenal rate. The traffic for the last ten days of March, namely, $2,099,000, an increase of $453,000 as compared with the corresponding ten days, has only once been exceeded. It is true that the February statement published the other day showed a net decrease of $584,000, following upon a falling off of $719,000 in January, but exceptional weather was in both cases very largely responsible, and the March record should show a sensible change for the better, seeing that there was a gross increase for the month of $1,118,000.

Like the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk also published a remarkable traffic for the last ten days of March. In view of the fact that there were only eight working days this time as compared with nine a year ago, the dealers were prepared for a small decrease. Instead, they got an increase of £36,000, which was, perhaps, the largest ever recorded by the company. The traffic brings the Trunk's gross increase for the first quarter of the year up to the substantial total of £161,700. Of this amount £99,500 was gained during the first two months, of which only a paltry £3,400 was retained as additional net revenue. However, under the improved weather conditions obtaining in March the burden of working costs should be lightened, at any rate to some extent, and although it is advisable, in view of the recent warning given by the general manager, not to indulge in extravagant hopes, the rapid expansion in gross revenue and the saving of £56,000 made in taxation this year still leave good ground for hoping that the third preference will get its full 4 per cent. for the current twelvemonth. According to the Trunk report for the second half of 1906, which was issued a few days ago, gross receipts advanced in the period by £295,000, of which £187,600 was contributed by freight business and £96,300 by passenger traffic. The average fare per passenger rose from 3s. 6¾d. to 3s. 8½d., but the average rate per ton of freight fell from 5s. 4¼d. to 5s. 4d. Earnings per train mile rose from 81.60d. to 86.52d., whilst the expenditure per train mile moved up from 58.19d. to only 61.82d. The total increase in operating costs was £215,800, most of this occurring under the head of maintenance of equipment. On maintenance of way and structures £111,400 less was spent, the saving being chiefly in respect of road bed and renewals and repairs of bridges and culverts. The extra outlay on equipment was absorbed chiefly by repairs and renewals to locomotives and freight cars, on which £127,000 extra was disbursed. The report states that the Lake Superior Branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific will be completed during the year to the point of junction with the main line, but it is feared the section of the railway between the junction and Winnipeg being constructed by the Government will not be in a sufficiently forward state to connect the Lake Superior Branch with Winnipeg before 1908.

In the Foreign Railway group the stocks of the old Mexican line continue to pretty well monopolise speculative interest. Dealers are eagerly awaiting the dividend in respect of the second half of 1906, which should be declared on Thursday of the present week, and estimates are still of a sanguine nature. At the time of writing a payment of from 5 per cent. to 6 per cent. on the second preference is commonly talked about, while some people even predict a distribution on the ordinary. A fair-sized "bull" account has been built up in the junior stocks of this line, and, therefore, if estimates prove to have overshot the mark, there seems room for a sharp set-back. In the Argentine division not much notice has been taken of the recently declared dividends, no doubt because they were of the pleasant humdrum character to which the market has become accustomed for several half-years past. The dubious prospects for the maize crop are, of course, tending to check a recovery in Argentine Rails, and as several companies admit that about 50 per cent. of the crop has been destroyed, the point is of importance. At the same time, as I have before pointed out, the companies are in such a strong financial position and already have such a good lead in the matter of gross earnings during the current year, owing to a bumper wheat crop, that it is doubtful if the maintenance of dividends is seriously endangered. On the score of present yields the market appears to me to offer some bargains. Both Buenos Ayres and Pacific and Buenos Ayres and Rosario give a yield of 6 per cent. to a present purchaser, while Great Western Ordinary returns £5 18s., and the stocks of the two southern systems, the "Bags" and the B. A. Western, which are the most strongly entrenched of all from a financial point of view, offer yields of £5 13s. to £5 15s. According to the report of the last-named company for the half-year ended December 31 last gross receipts of the railway were £935,000, an increase of £130,200, and the working expenses amounted to £554,700, an increase of £104,200, leaving a working profit of £380,100, an increase of £26,000. The ratio of working expenses to gross income rose from 55.99 to 59.34 per cent., the higher cost of operation being due to more stations and additional lines being brought into use, to bigger wages, and to dearer fuel for locomotives. My usual table is appended:—

Colonial and Foreign Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	Mar. 28 1907.	April 6, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Canadian Pacific	208	161⅞	174⅜	181½	+6¼
Grand Trunk	29 11/16	25½	29⅛	31⅜	+2⅛
Do. 4 p.c. Guaranteed	105¼	101½	101¼	101⅝	+ ⅜
Do. 5 p.c. First Pref.	123½	114⅜	120½	121	+ ½
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	115	105⅜	110⅜	112	+1½
Do. 4 p.c. Third Do.	70½	60 1/16	70½	73⅝	+3⅛
Mexican	50⅝	22¼	56⅜	57	+ ¼
Do. 8 p.c. First Pref.	144⅜	118⅝	141½	141½	–
Do. 6 p.c. Second Pref.	93⅞	49½	93	93½	+ ½
Interoceanic of Mex. 7 p.c. Pref.	11 15/16	6	11½	11¼	—
Do. 7 p.c. "B" Debs.	124	109	116	116	—
Mexican Central 4 p.c.	90½	78¼	84	85	+1
Do. First Incomes	30	18	23	23½	+ ½
Do. Securities "A" bearer	95	88 1/16	90	90	—
Do. Do. "B" Do.	81½	66½	76	78	+2
Nat. of Mexico 4 p.c. First Pref.	61⅜	37½	52	54	+2
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	31⅜	19⅜	22	23	+1
Bengal and North Western	149½	144	150	150	—
Madras 5 p.c.	127½	120½	122½	122½	—
Antofagasta Def.	180⅝	162	154	154	—
Nitrate Rails	16⅜	14⅜	15½	14¾	- ⅜
Argentine Great Western	130½	111	105	107	+2
Do. North-Eastern Debs.	83½	64½	74½	75½	+1
Buenos Ayres and Pacific	136½	120	115½	116	+ ½
Do. and Rosario	120¾	111	105½	105½	—
Do. Great Southern	145	122⅜	125½	126½	+1
Do. Western	138¾	123½	122½	123½	+1
East Argentine	120	87	115	116½	+1½
Cordoba Cen. (C.N.S.) Income Debs.	75½	63⅜	65	64½	- ½
Cordoba and Rosario First Pref.	108⅜	85	88½	88½	—
Entre Rios First Pref	98	85	87½	88½	+1
Great Western of Brazil	16 1/16	12½	11	11½	+ ½
Leopoldina	86½	69½	76	76½	+ ½
San Paulo	214¾	190½	215	216	+1
Central Uruguay	92½	82	90½	90½	—
Costa Rica	29 11/16	25	27½	27	- ½
Cartagena (Colombia) Debs.	80¼	78	76	73 xd	—
Colombian Nat. Second Debs	88½	76¾	76½	77	+ ½
Colombian Northern 5 p.c. Debs.	81½	76½	82½	82½	—
Manila 6 p.c Debs.	126	112	112	112	—
Guayaquil and Quito 6 p.c. Bonds	93½	55	43	44	+1
Cuban Central	7 11/16	5⅝	6⅝	6⅝	—
United of Havana	193	105⅝	107½	108	+ ½
Western of Havana	15 5/8	12⅛	12⅝	12¾	+ ⅛
Mashonaland Debs. (2nd issue)	94⅜	87½	88½	89	+ ½
Rhodesia 4 p.c. Debs.	81⅝	76	78½	78	- ½
Ottoman (Smyrna to Aidin)	23⅜	19¼	22¼	22¼	—

Kaffirs Cheerful—Anticipating a Bumper Transvaal Gold Return for March—Leading Diamond Shares Active—Jagers Again in Favour—Premier's Recent Results.

On the whole a cheerful feeling has continued in evidence in regard to Kaffirs, though the hopes entertained of dealings becoming brisk immediately after the Easter holidays did not materialise. At one time, as a matter of fact, it looked as though Kaffir gold shares were going to take a downward plunge, as French speculators depressed this and other markets by liquidation in connection with their settlement, but the weakness was only temporary, and operators on the other side of the Channel have since given the market a little support. Prices do not have to decline much to attract buyers, and for this the heavy depreciation that has occurred in share values in the last few years, and the change for the better that has recently occurred in regard to the outlook for the mining industry, are no doubt responsible. The new account, which commenced on Monday, has opened in good style, and when business generally becomes more brisk, it seems probable that the Kaffir gold descriptions will come in for a fair share of it. The Transvaal gold output for the past month is due to be announced to-day, and it is expected to constitute a record. The figures should tend to stimulate speculative interest in the market, and I think that those of my readers who may have bought some of the selections I mentioned recently will have an opportunity before very long of securing satisfactory profits. Meanwhile diamond shares have been receiving chief speculative attention, and substantial movements in prices have occurred among these during the past week. The following table gives the quotations which ruled on the eve of the holiday and those of Saturday last:—

Share.	March 28, 1907.	April 6, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
De Beers Pref.	17⅜	17⅜	—
,, ,, Def.	26⅛	27⅜	+ ⅛
Jagersfontein Pref.	4¼	4¼	—
,, Def.	9⅞	10⅛	+ ⅛
New Vaal River	6¼	6¼	— ¼
Premier (Transvaal) Pref.	8¼	8¾	+ ½
,, ,, Def.	13¼	13⅜	+ ⅛

Jagers have been in favour again, having been bought—so market rumour states—both by French speculators and by people on this side who should be well informed as to the company's prospects. It is said they are to be put up to a still higher price, and I shall not be surprised if this assertion ultimately proves correct, for, as has already been stated in my notes, there is reason to expect that the next dividend will be larger than the last. Premiers have also been a pretty good market, though the price given in the table above is not quite the best touched. The buying of these shares has apparently been stimulated by the chairman's forecast at the recent meeting which I mentioned last week. In this connection it is interesting to note that the March production was largely in excess of previous monthly outputs during the current financial year, which commenced in November last. The figures for the last five months are set out below, and the return for October—the last month of the financial year 1905-6—is given for purposes of comparison:—

Month.	Ground Washed. Loads.		Diamonds Recovered. Carats.
October	428,412	.....	112,478
November	475,413	.....	119,165
December	487,587	.....	113,056
January	460,373	.....	113,246
February	450,514	.....	113,422
March	622,243	.....	157,037

For the whole of 1905-6 the yield was 868,890 carats, and in the first five months of the current year over 600,000 carats have been secured, so that the chairman's prediction of a largely increased output this year is in a fair way of being realised. To what extent shareholders will benefit remains of course to be seen. There is some talk in the market of a distribution of 10s. per share being announced in a couple of months' time, but it will need dividends of £1 per share per annum to give a yield of about 7 per cent. on the current price of the shares.

In Rhodesians there has been little speculative interest displayed of late, but the Banket group has been helped by news from the Eldorado mine which is apparently continuing to open up in a gratifying manner. Rhodesians usually reflect the tendency of Kaffirs, so that with the prospect of improvement in the latter, the former may be considered to have some attraction for the speculator.

Fair Business in Westralians and Prices Generally Maintained—Deep Leads Still Awaiting "Deep" Results.

Interest in the Westralian market seems to be reviving a little. At any rate, the past week is reported to have witnessed a trifle more business than for some time past, and the operations have been spread over most of the leading shares, instead of being confined to one or two specialties. During the recent depression Westralians maintained their position quite as well as, if not better than, any of the other mining groups, no doubt on account of the fact of the open position being of insignificant proportions compared with the speculative account in some of the other sections. No special news has come to hand during the week to attract attention to the Westralian market, and it will be seen from the table of prices given below that share values have not materially changed, but it would seem as though mining investors are awakening to the fact that encouraging developments have taken place in one or two of the principal mines of late, and also that the dividends being paid warrant attention being directed to some of the shares:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Mar. 28, 1907.	Apl. 6, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Associated	3	1⅛	1⅜	1⅝	+ ⅛
Assoc. Northern Blocks	1⅜	⅛	⅛	⅛	—
Cosmopolitan	8/3	3/6	4/9	4/9	—
Golden Horseshoe (£5)	6½	4½	7⅛	7⅛	— ⅛
Great Boulder (2/)	28/-	20/3	23/9	23/3	— 6d.
Do. Perseverance	13/-	7/3	6/-	6/3	+ 3d.
Great Fingall (10/-)	6¾	2½	1⅞	1⅞	— ⅛
Hainault	1⅛	1½	1⅜	1⅝	+ ⅛
Ivanhoe (£5)	7½	6⅛	7⅜	7½	+ ⅛
Kalgurli	12½	8⅜	11⅜	11⅜	—
Lake View Consols	1⅛	⅜	⅜	⅝	— ⅛
L. & W. A. Exploration	21/10½	8/6	14/3	14/6	+ 3d.
Oroya Brownhill	3½	2	1⅝	1¾	+ ⅛
Sons of Gwalia	2⅛	1⅛	1⅛	1⅛	—
South Kalgurli	1⅛	⅛	⅛	⅛	—
Australian Commonwealth Trust	3⅛	1½	1½	1⅝	— ⅛
Consolidated Deep Leads (4/-)	½	⅛	4/6	4/6	—
Loddon Valley Goldfields	2⅛	⅛	1⅛	1⅛	— ⅛

It will be observed that Ivanhoes show the chief improvement on the week. There has been a steady investment demand for these shares since I drew attention to the strength of the company's position a few weeks ago, and I should not like to say that they have touched top yet, as at £8 apiece they would yield 15 per cent. The Deep Leads group is still without signs of recovering from the state of inactivity and dulness into which it has relapsed. Further news has come to hand during the past week in regard to the Loddon Valley's operations, but the results given are from the banks of the lead, and not from the deep ground, the testing of which the market is awaiting with chief interest.

The Relapse in Copper—Views of Authorities on the Outlook—Rio Tinto Meeting and the Question of Production—Promising Speculative Selections.

The position and prospects of the copper market are of particular interest just now, especially as copper shares are one of the most active of the mining groups. Recently there have been violent fluctuations in the price of this metal, and share values have also been very erratic. A month ago copper was up to £110 per ton, but it has since been down to nearly £90, and the leading shares have also suffered a heavy depreciation, Tintos having relapsed from the highest this year of 109½ to nearly 83 quite recently. The latest copper statistics show an increase in the visible supplies of the metal, but, as I have pointed out before, the fall in price has been principally due to the unsettlement arising out of the conditions of semi-panic prevailing in New York, which has caused forced liquidation and encouraged "bear" selling. Copper, be it noted, is not the only metal which has suffered from these conditions, though the others have not given way to the same extent as copper, which, however, commands more speculative interest. The outlook for this metal appears to be subject to two main conditions, both tending towards a somewhat lower level of prices, as compared with those recently ruling. There is the prospect of a steady increase in production, and the possibility of a temporary decline in the demand. A leading firm of metal brokers has summed up the general situation in the following terms:—"Broadly speaking, the outlook seems for some relaxation of the pressure resulting

(Continued on page 899.)

Cannes.—Hotel des Anglais. First-class. Numerous Self-contained Suites, with Private Bath-Rooms, etc. Central Heating. Renowned Cuisine and Cellars. Large Park.

· TRUTH ·

SPECIAL MOTOR SUPPLEMENT.

No. 1,580. WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1907.

THE CORDINGLEY SHOW.

THE annual Motor Show organised by Messrs. Cordingley, now in progress at Islington, is not such a representative exhibition as those to be seen at Olympia, but this is by no means to deny it an interest of a kind. To the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders Mr. Cordingley is a bold bad man for daring to run an exhibition on his own in this way, but the general public is content to go where it finds things to interest it, and cheerfully accords its patronage to the Islington Show without the smallest regard for the feelings of "the trade." And thereby it shows its good sense. For, after all, the motor industry is a pretty big one, and it would be absurd to maintain that everything of interest connected with it can be seen at Olympia. The justification of the Cordingley Show is, in fact, its continued existence. So soon as it ceases to serve a useful purpose it will come to a natural end.

But that time is evidently not by any means at hand just yet. It is stated, indeed, that the number of exhibitors at this year's exhibition is larger than ever before, and if the number of striking novelties to be seen is not very great this is no necessary reflection on the quality of the exhibition. Striking novelties are, indeed, no longer to be looked for at every motor show. Steady progress on well established lines represents the present stage of the industry. Of the several new cars exhibited at the present show nearly all follow the recognised practice in essentials. It is, indeed, astonishing how many new cars continue to be put forth differing in no appreciable degree from those already on the market. Who buys them all? It is a standing mystery. The courage of the historic individual who swallowed the first oyster was hardly greater than that of the man who buys an untried motor-car. Already it is difficult enough to make choice among those of established repute. Why should anyone deliberately go out of his way to tempt destiny by investing in one of the other kind? Yet every year, almost every month, sees new cars added to the list, and presumably they are bought and sold. Now and again, of course, their credentials are obviously such as to command respect.

Such, for instance, is the S.P.A., from the hand of the designer who has hitherto been responsible for the well-known Itala cars. This was exhibited at the last Paris show, but has not previously been seen in England, and very slight scrutiny is sufficient to reveal the fact that it is a thoroughly well-considered article. Two chassis are shown, one with a 40 h.p. four-cylinder engine, and the other with a six-cylinder engine giving 60 h.p., and both bear all the marks of clean design and fine workmanship which have come to be associated with the best Italian cars. Another new comer which already enjoys a good name abroad is the Horch, a German car, which had the distinction of winning the Herkomer trophy last year. This is one of the best known German cars, and one which should have no difficulty, therefore, in winning friends and admirers over here. Another German car with a good reputation which is also being introduced to England for the first time is the Adler, the agency of which has been acquired by Messrs. Morgan and Co., the coach-builders. Cars of 50 h.p. and 20 h.p. are shown, and if elegance of design is not perhaps their most striking characteristic, inspection reveals many interesting details making for strength, solidity, and, one would imagine, smoothness of running The Nacke and Ruppe are yet other cars of German make exhibited. Indeed, quite a feature of the show as a whole must be reckoned the number of cars from the Fatherland which it contains. Evidently the Teutonic makers are of opinion that the Mercédès has too long monopolised the British market as the representative German car.

New or unfamiliar cars of native origin displayed are mostly of the smaller kind. Such, for instance, is the Riley, a 9 h.p. two-cylinder car selling at 160 gs., for which great claims are advanced. The tri-cars made by the same firm have been favourably known for many years, but they have taken to the making of cars more recently, though they are able to point already to many notable successes secured in various open competitions—results which they ascribe largely to the excellence of their transmission system, by a central chain from a V-shaped two-cylinder engine situated in the middle of the chassis. All engineers are agreed as to the enormous loss of power involved when it is transmitted round a corner by the agency of bevel gears, and the remarkable hill-climbing achievements to which the Riley car can point go certainly to justify the contention of its makers that their system secures exceptional efficiency. In other respects the design of this car shows thought and ingenuity, and those on the look-out, therefore, for a light car at a moderate price, might well do worse than give it attention. Another British car shown of about the same class is the Clyde, which, having enjoyed a considerable local reputation in the Midlands for some time, is now about to make an active bid for wider custom. The 8-10 h.p. two-seated car of this make, fitted with a White and Poppe two-cylinder engine sells at £186, and looks like good value for the money. Other British cars which yet have their name to make are the Roydale, Leander, All British, Dawfield-Phillips, and Hurmid, the latter claiming distinction as the cheapest six-cylinder on the market. But all of these were not to be seen on the opening day of the show.

New cars from France are the Astahl (known, however, on the other side of the Channel as the Helbe), a four-cylinder, 10-12-h.p., four-seated car selling at £290, fitted with magneto ignition and all the latest improvements, and the Mira, rated at 15-h.p., and selling at 300 guineas. In the way of American cars of about the same capacity the Reo exhibit is worth attention. A 10-h.p. car of this make can be obtained for £165, and seeing that it claims ability to carry four passengers to Brighton and back on its top gear all the way there should be little question as to its efficiency.

Great claims have been made of late on behalf of mixed petrol-electric systems, and two or three examples of cars of this type are shown. Of these, the best known at present is the Pieper Auto-Mixte. The advantages claimed for the Auto-Mixte are—no gear-box or change-speed gears, no starting handle or cranking of engine, no separate levers to regulate ignition or mixture, no accelerator pedal, no multiple brake and clutch pedal. It is maintained, indeed, that cars of this type possess all the elasticity of steam or electricity without the disadvantages of either, together with unrivalled hill-climbing capacity. Normally the car is run on petrol, a reserve force of electricity being simultaneously generated which can be drawn upon for hill-climbing purposes. There is no question as to the excellence and ingenuity of the design of the particular car named, of which a good deal more is likely to be heard in this country. In Belgium it is already well and favourably known. Other cars embodying the same principle are the Mercédès-Mixte and the Hart-Durtnall, the latter being of British origin and embodying many ingenious features designed to render it specially applicable to the needs of heavy public-service vehicles. In the case of the Mercédès-Mixte a 45-h.p. Mercédès petrol engine drives a dynamo inside the flywheel developing the electric current, which is carried by a single cable on each side of the frame to the electric motors on the hind driving wheels—clutch, gear, differential, chain, live axle, and change speed lever all being dispensed with.

Commercial vehicles have always been well represented at Cordingley's, and the present show is no exception to the rule. Messrs. Robey and Co., Alley and MacLellan, Ltd., Durham, Churchill and Co., Savage Bros., Yorkshire Patent Steam Wagon Co., Mosa and Woodd, Tasker and Co., and Fodens, Ltd., are only a few of the well-known firms exhibiting. In the same connection may be mentioned that unique invention, the Renard road train, which goes over the roughest roads and negotiates the sharpest curves and corners with the ease of the lightest touring car. The exclusive manufacturing rights under the Renard system throughout the world, outside France, have been acquired, it may be noted, by the Daimler Motor Co., and this is perhaps the best possible testimony to the merits of the system and the future which is anticipated for it.

In the gallery, accessories are an excellent show From the practical point of view this is often the most useful section of a motor exhibition so far as the visitor is concerned who is already provided with a car, but is always ready to add to its fittings and equipment. Such things as lamps, horns, pumps, jacks, dashboard watches, speedometers, and the rest, are well represented, together with many other more out-of-the-way and novel articles of the kind whose cleverness is often in inverse ratio to their practicability. Consider, for instance, the "Suchanek" cartographs and speed-indicators of Messrs. J. C. Lyell and Co.—the cartograph map feeding itself automatically in the interior of the apparatus, and showing the road at any particular spot. Further, "it announces by an alarm bell and disc all permanent obstacles on the road," while recording at the same time on a paper band the speed of the car, the number of miles traversed, and the time taken. Could the force of ingenuity further go? The connection between motoring and type-writing is not, perhaps, very obvious at a glance. Even that ardent automobilist, Mr. Max Pemberton, could hardly write his novels on the road. Yet many a busy man is glad to have his writing machine with him on his travels, and to the needs of such the neat "travelling" Blickensderfers exhibited, in leather cases, with compartments for stationery, etc., all complete, are excellently adapted.

But, for the majority of visitors, probably the most interesting feature of the whole show must be reckoned that devoted to the display of airship and flying machine models under the auspices of the Aero Club. Aeronautics obviously constitute a branch of automobilism, though at present the "mobile" rather than the "auto" element has been chiefly conspicuous in the multitudinous contrivances of one sort and another by means of which the solution of the problem has been attempted. Periodically it is announced that at length the impossible has been achieved, and the models to be seen at the Agricultural Hall at present indicate the lines on which the latter-day inventors are moving. Most of them appear to the uninitiated contrivances such as could by no conceivable possibility fulfil the purpose designed, but it is hardly necessary to say that this is not the view of their fond inventors. There is, in truth, something not a little pathetic in the enthusiasm and faith in their own devices displayed by those in charge of these grotesque-looking inventions. Some are obviously the product of absolute cranks possessed of the crudest notions alike of mechanics and aerostatics, while others look more workmanlike, if few, perhaps, are such as to suggest to the average sceptical visitor that the age-long secret, which the birds have hitherto kept so resolutely to themselves, has at last been wrested from Nature.

Perhaps the most extraordinary model of all is that taking the shape of a large parachute (gorgeously decorated in red, white, and blue), surmounting a drum, in which, the inventor explained, air was automatically compressed in the process of flight and then expelled through a series of tubes in such a manner as to provide a sufficient motive power to drive the machine through space. The precise number of miles per hour which he expects it to realise he did not state, but as to the soundness of the general principle of this wonderful airship he manifestly entertained no sort of doubt. In fact, one on these lines now in process of construction was, he explained, designed to take not merely one passenger, but two or more if required. Then there are shown various "gliders" of the albatross order and dozens of aeroplanes of various degrees of impossibility. But as a means of gaining a compendious notion of the various methods by which it is being sought at the present time to accomplish the long delayed conquest of the air, the interest of the collection is undoubted.

The exhibition remains open till Saturday next.

SOME HINTS ON TOURING.

As to the car in the first place, there is nothing much to be said in the way of general advice, save this—that whether it be great or small it should at all costs fulfil two requisites, to wit: (1) It should be good of its kind; and (2) it should be a good hill climber. As to the first point, to go touring on a cheap or inferior car is to court certain mortification and annoyance; rather stay at home or go by train. As to the second, the wisdom of the counsel is equally obvious. At all hazards have a car of ample power for hills. Even if it is only a small one it is simply a matter of having it suitably geared to ensure this. No matter if it is not very fast—be sure at least that it will get up any hills you can possibly encounter, and derive therefrom an enormous sense of comfort and confidence which must otherwise be lacking. No amount of speed on the level is compensation for the humiliating dread of possible failure on a hill. In the case of most modern cars of any size the warning, of course, is hardly necessary. The advice still holds, however, in the case of smaller cars. No car can be reckoned satisfactory in this respect which will not take its full load up a gradient of one in six without flinching.

With regard to equipment over and above the ordinary requisites of the road, plenty of rugs and wraps go without saying. In the hottest weather it is often cold when driving. A luncheon and tea basket is also very useful, and quickly pays for itself in the saving of hotel charges which it effects. And parenthetically it may be remarked that there is no more irritating form of extortion than the hotel "tea." The hour is five o'clock. You have had a substantial lunch, perhaps, at half-past one. You are to dine again at seven or eight. Therefore you want little to eat. But you require a cup of tea; only that, and nothing more. Can you get it? At the average hotel seldom or never. Instead, a baronial spread of cake and jam, and large plates of bread and butter, and watercress, and such-like sundries, is laid before you, and you are charged 1s. or 1s. 6d. or 2s. a head all round for that which no one wanted, which no one asked for, and which no one touched. To millionaires such things are of no importance; others, unfortunately, are less happily circumstanced. The tea-basket saves this particular form of imposition, besides yielding further the additional delights of a meal al fresco.

Plenty of spare parts and all requisite accessories will be taken by the provident as a matter of course, including an adequate supply of sound inner tubes and spare outer covers. There is no feeling more uncomfortable than the fear of a puncture or burst with no spare tubes or covers in hand. A Stepney wheel is also well worth having. A simple and convenient device for carrying wraps and rugs, which are apt to be a nuisance when not in use unless properly stowed, is a stout leather strap, with a buckle in the middle to enable its length to be varied, slung across the car behind the driver's seat. This is a convenient position, also, for carrying spare covers if straps are provided for keeping them in place—unless it is preferred to carry them on the step by the driver, in which case entrance to the driver's seat from that side is necessarily barred. Extra lockers are a great source of comfort, and these, like every similar receptacle and drawer on the car, should be provided with locks, preferably all opened by one key. The number of odds and ends which it is useful to take while touring is astonishing.

Let all these and such-like matters, including any repairs and adjustments which may be necessary, be attended to betimes. The wise will lay their plans well in advance if they wish to avoid disappointment at the last. Motor engineers are often dilatory folk, with the result that things are left over, and then done hurriedly or not at all. Parts and accessories, again, are not always obtainable immediately, and it may be quite certainly assumed that something or other which you require will be "out of stock." Then, again, investigation of one derangement may reveal another, and possibly a bigger one, not previously suspected, and generally it is a sound rule to look well ahead where motors and motoring are concerned.

On the same principle it is advisable to arrange for an early start on the appointed day. I say "arrange for" advisedly. Make it nine o'clock, and if you actually get under weigh with wheels going round by eleven or twelve you may reckon you have done well. But one thing it is quite fatal to do, and that is to start in a hurry. Better weigh anchor an hour or three hours later than proposed than get off in a fluster, leaving this and that undone or scamped, tyres not properly pumped up, lubrication overlooked, and so on. To avoid such contingencies the ideal is, of course, to complete all preparations overnight. Then the miracle of a veritably punctual start may even be achieved. But this is a counsel of perfection.

With respect to routes and distances, these will be determined naturally by individual tastes and requirements, but it is a rather common mistake, perhaps, to try to cover too much ground in the day. Obviously, a good deal depends on the size and power of the car, but with large and small alike too much is more often than not attempted. Without actually driving at excessive speed too extensive an itinerary is sketched out, and in place of a pleasant tranquil run, allowing of ample opportunities to enjoy the scenery en route, with a stop now and again for closer inspection of church or ruin or quaint old village, the day's journey partakes throughout of an uncomfortable and unnecessary race against time. A liberal margin for contingencies will always be allowed by the judicious.

For kindred reasons it is a great mistake to make definite engagements, to order rooms in advance, or otherwise commit one's self, when on a motor tour. To be bound to reach a particular destination by a given time is a certain invitation to discomfiture. Modern motor-cars are marvellously trustworthy, but roadside troubles and delays must still be expected now and again, and an almost infallible method of ensuring them is to enter into definite engagements. Take things quietly and independently therefore, and let your motto be "Hasten slowly." Likewise stop in good time for meals. Resist the suggestion to "go on to the next place" when the hour for lunch or dinner is at hand. Before you get there you may have a puncture and get your lunch as a consequence at half-past three instead of half-past one, with resultant indigestion for some and discomfort for all. In this case again leave a margin. In fine weather the luncheon basket affords, of course, the happiest solution of this particular problem.

Nor are delays from tyre troubles or derangements the only ones to be reckoned with. There is always the possibility of losing your way, and no one who has not experienced it knows how fatally easy it is to do this when motoring, unless you happen to be possessed of that enviable bump of locality which makes you independent of maps and other aids to knowledge, including the average rustic. The difficulty of obtaining information as to routes and distances in the country districts is sometimes unbelievable. Wherefore thoroughly good maps are indispensable. Those of Bartholomew to a scale of four miles to the inch, reduced from the Ordnance Survey, are a convenient size. Invaluable also are Gall and Inglis's series of Contour Books—a marvellous compendium of accurate and detailed information as to routes, distances, gradients, etc., covering practically every motoring road in the kingdom. But with the best of maps and the utmost care, you will certainly go astray at times.

As to actual roadside troubles, even with the best of cars the possibility of such can never be wholly disregarded. Sooner or later they are bound to come, and usually, as above suggested, at the least convenient moment. What motorist does not know that unpleasant sensation when something goes wrong and a halt is required? It may be the most trifling derangement which can be rectified in a couple of minutes. On the other hand, it may be some malady more subtle which may defy all your efforts at diagnosis. Then, what position more unpleasant? If you are lucky enough to be near a town assistance can be obtained, and even if it comes to the ignominy of being towed, you can be extricated from your plight. But it may not always happen so. The present writer well remembers being stranded once on the top of a Yorkshire moor a good five miles from the nearest human habitation, where eventually the car and all its contents had to be left until the morning, when another could be obtained to fetch the derelict home. Happily, in this case the route was anything but a frequented one, and everything was found intact.

But such experiences are getting rarer and rarer nowadays, though even yet they must still be looked for at times. Motors are still kittle cattle, and the amateur, at all events, has to be uncommonly well up in the business to be able to guarantee that he will never be nonplussed. Motoring differs, indeed, from all other forms of enjoyment in this respect—in its swift transitions from joy to gloom. From the seventh heaven of delight you may be plunged, in the twinkling of an eye, to the lowest depths of woe, and the contrast is poignant indeed. What a few seconds ago was a luxurious chariot speeding through the countryside on wings of fire, the embodiment of luxury and power, has become in a flash an intractable mass of costly machinery, inert and immovable, and you, its occupants and owners, a forlorn and fortuitous concourse of atoms on a dusty and deserted country road. But then, what joy when at last the monster yields to your persuasions, the merry rattle of the engine resounds again, and with all on board once more the journey is resumed! It was almost worth the earlier misery to experience the subsequent delight.

Naturally it is the novice who most fears these little incidents, and to him a few words of advice may be addressed. Let him, for one thing, use brain as well as hand in locating the fault. Better spend a couple of minutes in thinking things out than work aimlessly in the dark for the sake of "doing something." On the other hand, it is equally a mistake to jump to conclusions without adequate cause. It is a waste of time and labour, for instance, to take your carburetter down under the assumption that your petrol flow is choked when the trouble is due all the time to a faulty electrical connection, which closer examination would have revealed at once. It is on these occasions that the amateur regrets his mis-spent opportunities in the past, and registers a solemn vow that before he next puts forth on the road he will really master the most elusive mysteries of his car's internal mechanism in every detail; and this, of course, is the only real way to ensure a safe issue from all such straits.

Yet it is astonishing with how little knowledge it is possible to be a motorist nowadays. A paradoxical outcome of the perfected car is the imperfect driver. Thousands of cars are driven to-day by owners who, a few years since, would never have dreamed of undertaking such responsibility. The astonishing reliability of the modern motor-car has made it possible. Formerly it was only the real enthusiast with a genuine bent for mechanics who was bold enough to essay what was reckoned at that time the perilous experiment of taking out a motor-car on the public roads. Nowadays the least experienced have no such qualms. If the worst comes to the worst, are there not always fellow motorists more experienced to lend a helping hand? It is rather galling, no doubt, to have to accept such aid, but it is foolish to refuse it when offered. Two heads are better than one, and a fresh mind often works wonders in solving a knotty problem.

From which it follows, as an obvious corollary, that it is the bounden duty of every motorist to offer help in turn to others in distress. More than once it has been complained of late that motorists are less ready nowadays to come to one another's aid in this kindly fashion than of yore, and certainly it is a fact that car after car will at the present time hasten by another in distress without proffering assistance. This should not be, and though as often as not such help may not be needed the right-thinking motorist will none the less always slow up to ask if haply he can be of aid. Nor is this the only way in which good feeling towards fellow motorists, as well as towards other road users, may be displayed. By driving slowly through towns, by slowing up when passing carriages, by leaving ample room when meeting them, by using the horn with moderation, the considerate and gentlemanly driver will also reveal himself.

SOME DON'TS FOR NOVICES.

Don't try to start the engine without turning on the petrol.

Don't look for a leak of petrol with a lighted match; it is too expeditious a method.

Don't forget to take the brake off and blame your car for having a "fit of the slows."

Don't, if you meet with trouble, leave too many tools on the road.

Don't blow your horn as if it were the last trump.

Don't forget to pump your tyres; a pump in time saves ninety and nine.

Don't, when driving, wear a worried look; it attracts the attention of the police.

Don't forget the feelings of your passengers; their views on speed may be different from your own.

Don't kill more dogs than you can help; it is bad, not only for the dog but also for the car.

Don't start out in a hurry; you will reach your destination sooner if you take things more quietly.

Don't rely too implicitly on the word of the dealer who tells you that the car he is selling will "climb any hill that does not overhang."

Don't forget that on the road it is usually the unexpected that happens.

Don't forget that even pedestrians have their rights.

ABOUT TYRES AND THEIR CARE.

Tyres are the curse of motoring; also its primary requisite. You may be sure of your car in every other respect but this. The pneumatic tyre is the uncertain quantity which upsets all calculations, abaseth proud reason, and brings down the mighty from their seats. It is an abomination—but absolutely indispensable; an eternal source of terror—but a sine quâ non; at once "ower bad for blessing and ower good for banning." One may say of it, further, that when it is good, it is very good, but when it is bad it is horrid. There is nothing more satisfactory than the thoroughly good pneumatic tyre whose valve is holding well and giving no trouble. There is no more diabolical contrivance than one of the other kind. Even the telephone must yield supremacy to the pneumatic tyre at its worst as an engine for the promotion of unchristian sentiments and unlovely language. Your lordly owner of his £2,000 Daimler or Mercédès with hired slaves to do his bidding, knows none of these things, of course. To such, a puncture or a burst is only a pleasant wayside incident to be accepted with philosophical resignation, tempered by a cigar. It is the humbler owner, who scorns the aid of mechanician or chauffeur, who knows to the full the fell possibilities of the erratic, invaluable, impossible, indispensable pneumatic.

Infinite indeed are the possibilities of woe which lurk within its unassuming exterior. To hearken to the warnings of the various makers is, indeed, to be lost in wonderment that tubes or outer covers ever survive the treatment which they are called upon to withstand at all. For be it clearly understood that tyres, without exception, are shockingly maltreated by their owners, who then, in the most inconsiderate and ungentlemanly manner, round upon the makers and hold them responsible for the results of their own misdoings. So, at least, say the companies, without exception—and they ought to know. It is very foolish of the motorist, of course—for he suffers in the end; and very magnanimous of the companies to point it out—for theirs is the ultimate gain; but so the case stands. The makers are ever girding at the owners to take more care of their tyres; and the owners are ever neglecting the valuable counsel that is offered them by the makers.

On one point in particular the makers are absolutely unanimous. Inflate! Inflate! Inflate! is the first and last word of one and all. Hardly any tyres are really properly inflated, if one may believe them. Even when they are supposed to be, and really seem to be, the pressure gauge, as often as not, shows that they are nothing of the kind. The pressure gauge is an ingenious contrivance employed for the undoing of the unconscientious chauffeur, and designed to enable the methodical owner to discover by precisely how much the former is shirking the back-breaking labour of "pumping up." "But why," it may be asked, "this necessity for so much inflation?" For the most obvious of reasons. It is the cushion of compressed air alone which protects the cover, as it rolls over the unequal surface of the road, from the shocks and jars and pressure on the rim, which quickly work fatal results. So lay to heart, good motorists all, the injunction of the boatswain in "The Tempest," and "blow till thou burst thy wind" if you would reach your journey's end without delay.

Unfortunately, it is not enough to blow alone. Otherwise tyres were vastly simpler propositions than in fact they are. There is the problem of retaining the air when you have got it in, and that is often another pair of sleeves entirely. If the pneumatic is the weak spot of the car, the valve is the weak spot of the pneumatic. It is a most cleverly designed piece of mechanism, but it will not always resist a pressure of 75 or 100 pounds to the square inch, and that ominous sound which every automobilist knows too well is the result. It may be very slight; hardly a bubble per second, perhaps, when the valve is immersed in the tell-tale tumbler. The orifice is certainly not so wide as a church door nor so deep as a well, but it will serve to let all the wind out inevitably enough in time, and the wise motorist will not proceed till he has made all tight. So to the pump again therefore, again, and yet again, till, by renewal of washer or valve pin, or, if necessary, substitution of new tube entirely, the leak has been stopped and it is safe to sally forth.

But how much of toil and trouble and exasperation is implied by such exercises! Is it wonder that some are turning to any sort of substitute which promises relief from such harassments—to spring wheels and pneumatic hubs; to tyres filled with strangely yclept substances such as Elastes and Patin possessed of all the virtues, it is avowed, of compressed air, with none of its embarrassing possibilities. Yet, with all its faults at the worst, where, it may be asked, is the tyre to beat a good pneumatic? For weeks at a time, perhaps, no thought of mishap or misadventure will so much as cross the mind. Hardly will pumping be needed, so stoutly the valves are holding, while punctures are unknown. Then how lightly and easily the heavy car glides or floats over the rugosities of the road, with every shake anticipated, and the biggest jar absorbed. Then is it one is tempted to rise and call blessed the name of Dunlop, to whose inventive genius the pneumatic tyre of to-day owes its being. Not the least wonderful feature of the modern motor-car, when all is said and done, is the pneumatic tyre.

ACCESSORIES.

Accessories is an elastic term which may include anything from a split pin at a penny a dozen to a Cape cart-hood at £50. It would be quite possible to buy a car for £200 and spend as much again on fitting it up with extras. There is, in fact, no limit to the accessories of one sort and another—some useful, some ornamental, and some neither—which the ingenuity of the inventor has brought into being wherewith to tempt the pocket of the automobilist. Putting aside such more serious items as hoods and wind screens, there are countless smaller articles which add to the completeness of the motorist's equipment and lengthen to a corresponding extent his motoring account. To glance over the catalogue of one of the leading firms dealing in these things is a fascinating occupation, but dangerous. The strong, perhaps, can turn a deaf ear to all such blandishments, but they are the few; the majority are conquered.

Certain accessories all must have, of course. Such things as jack and pump and horn and lamps and tools are naturally indispensable. These must be reckoned as part of the most economical motorist's necessary equipment, and pretty heavily some of them have to be paid for. Those gleaming head-lights, for instance—how many outside those who have had to buy them know that they may cost from £5 to £20 a-piece? Good horns, again, are not cheap, and you may pay anything up to £5 for the privilege of letting folks know that you are coming. You can get a bicycle complete for a smaller sum nowadays, and it seems a lot of money to pay for such an article. Yet there is no alternative if you are content with nothing other than the most expensive. These things are the essentials.

Then comes a second category of what may be reckoned things useful and desirable rather than strictly necessary or indispensable, such as speed indicators, distance recorders, clock, water guage, tyre vulcaniser, electric hand lamp, tyre tester, and the like. All of these things are of service, and, if money is no object, will add to the interest or comfort of their owner. It is very nice, for instance, to know your speed and your mileage, to have the time of day on your dashboard, to be able to do your own tyre repairs, to know by exactly how much your tyres are under-inflated, and so on, and some of these extras may, indeed, almost be reckoned in the first class of indispensables.

Finally come luxuries pure and simple, which, though in the nature often of sheer superfluities and even positive encumbrances, exercise, none the less, a strange and horrible fascination over some who reckon it among their highest joys to add still further to their number. But even among these there are degrees, too, and some will certainly be possessed by all who can afford them. Here is a useful article, for example, in a mechanical tyre inflator, to be worked off the engine—an excellent idea, saving much labour. Or you may attain the same end by the employment of Parson's sparklet inflators, consisting of strong metal bottles, containing air under pressure which will blow up the largest tyre in less than no time by the simple turning of a tap. A portable blast lamp for roadside repairs would doubtless come in useful at some time or other, and still more often would prove of service in the stable. An oil economiser is a convenient fixture in a motor house, costing from fifteen shillings to a couple of pounds, according to size.

In the way of recording instruments and the like, there are gradometers, tachometers, hydrometers, altitude meters, densimeters, compression indicators, etc., all of which have their interest for those who take their motoring seriously. Then there are such things as petrol pourers, puncture indicators, back lamp tell-tales, dashboard mirrors, carburetter ticklers, foot muffs, ear guards, down even to goggles for canine motorists, which all help to swell the brave and bewildering array of the accessory maker's catalogue and add still further to the motorist's temptations. As a whole, the accessory industry is a very important one, and motorists owe not a little to the ingenuity and invention of those who minister to their needs in this way.

A PUNCTURE-PROOF TYRE-TREAD.

The Belmont non-skidding tyre-protector is the name of a new invention about to be placed on the market, of which great things are promised. Means of protecting the outer cover of a pneumatic tyre from punctures, while at the same time preserving its resiliency, have long been sought, and it is claimed that the device named fulfils this purpose in the most effectual manner. It consists simply of a tread made of a special fibrous material the nature of which is such as to render it virtually unpuncturable; at the same time, it will not fray, stretch, or shrink, its outside surface becoming indeed, harder and more lasting and more difficult to penetrate the longer it is used, while, further, it possesses valuable non-skidding properties. The material in question is, it appears, a kind of hemp cultivated almost exclusively in Spain, and from the peculiar nature of its construction its wear-resisting qualities are said to be quite extraordinary. As the inventor puts it, small stones or nails simply find their grave in its surface and there remain without going through, and instead of doing damage serve only to increase the protective qualities of the band and add still further to its non-skidding properties.

At the same time the material is extremely light, is only made harder and more resistant by wet, radiates heat very quickly and therefore runs very cool, and is quite inexpensive. The mode of attachment to the tyre is simple and ingenious. The material having been thoroughly stretched in the first instance, is lined with stout non-stretching canvas, covering the greater part of the tyre, with "wings" or lugs at intervals, by means of which the whole is fastened firmly to the wheel through the agency of phosphor bronze wires on each side of the rim capable of being adjusted to the requisite degree of tightness by right and left handed screws. Then, with treads in position and properly adjusted, it is claimed that the owner of the heaviest car should be able to regard himself as absolutely proof against punctures. The device has, I understand, been subjected to exhaustive tests, and if it succeeds in achieving even half of the good results claimed on its behalf there should certainly be a big future for it. The prices of the treads, which are sold by the Belmont Tyre Protector Company, Queen Anne's Chambers, Broadway, Westminster, range from £1 11s. 6d. upwards, according to size of wheel—comparing in this important respect extremely favourably, as it is hardly necessary to point out, with the charges asked for most of the metal-studded leather bands, aiming at achieving the same ends, at present on the market.

BOOKS ON MOTORING.

Books for motorists abound. They come, not single spies, but whole battalions. Hardly a day passes but one or more is added to the pile. Books for experts, books for novices, learned tomes, elementary treatises, books theoretical, books practical, books general, books special—there is no end to the output, and the earnest student of automobilism, anxious to keep himself abreast of the movement and to be up in its latest developments, may well feel bewildered by the choice which is offered him under this head. From a good modern text book as much can be learnt as from the best oral teaching, and he who neglects such aids to knowledge is a fool for his pains. In the following jottings a few of the more useful works which have been issued for the automobilist's benefit are briefly indicated.

For a beginning, perhaps, one might fairly take the Badminton volume on "Motors and Motor Driving" (Longmans), a new and revised edition of which was published this year. It is edited by Lord Northcliffe, with contributions by Lord Montagu, Sir David Salomons, Sir J. H. A. Macdonald, Mr. S. F. Edge, the Hon C. S. Rolls, and a host of other recognised authorities, and as a general survey of the subject of automobilism in all its branches, it is a most useful volume.

Another work also giving a comprehensive account of the automobile and everything appertaining thereto, is Mr. Filson Young's readable volume "The Complete Motorist" which provides a volume covering the whole ground of the construction, maintenance, and the use of motor cars, as adapted at the same time to the understanding of the motorist having no technical knowledge of his subject. Sometimes, it is true, Mr. Young rather tries one by his somewhat mannered literary style, and now and again one notes exaggerated statements which would have been better avoided, but there is a prodigious amount of useful information in the work concerning cars of all kinds and classes.

In the way of serious technical information for the use of experts nothing better is obtainable than Mr. Worby Beaumont's monumental work "Motor Vehicles and Motors; their Design, Construction, and Working, by Steam, Petrol, and Electricity," published in two massive volumes by Messrs. Constable. This is a book primarily for the engineer and the professional student of matters motoristic, and though, with the present rapid march of events in the motoring world, a work of this kind necessarily tends rather quickly to get out of date, it is likely to hold its place for a long time as the standard publication of its kind.

Another work of a severely technical nature is "Petrol Motors and Motor-Cars," by T. Hyler White, A.M.I.M.E. (Longmans). This is intended expressly for the use of engineers, designers, and draughtsmen, and in its way is an altogether excellent work, if hardly one to be recommended to the average amateur, for every page bristles with diagrams, formulæ, and tables of one sort or another. In the workshop or drawing office the work should, however, prove most useful.

In the way of dictionaries and pocket cyclopædias more than one useful volume has been issued. Of these perhaps the best known is "O'Gorman's Motor Pocket-Book" (Constable), a handy-sized, close-printed little volume, packed with information under every conceivable head in relation to motoring and arranged in alphabetical order. A new edition of this work has not long been published, and, at the price of 7s. 6d., it is a marvellously cheap short cut to automobilistic omniscience.

Another work of a similar nature is Mecreedy's "Dictionary of Motoring" (Iliffe and Sons), in which, if all the subjects are not treated quite so exhaustively, the faults of Mr. O'Gorman's volume are, to a considerable extent, avoided. A particularly useful feature of this work is the long section devoted to repairs and adjustments.

NOTES.

The recent fine weather has raised, in its acutest form and at a period of the season earlier than usual, the most serious and difficult of all questions involved in automobilism—to wit, the dust problem. Thanks to the recent dry weather, the dust evil of late has been hardly less in evidence than during the height of summer, and one and all must agree as to the urgent need of remedying a condition of things from which motorists themselves suffer hardly less severely than the general public. In a word, the evil is, in the time-honoured formula, one which is great, is growing, and ought to be abated. But how and by whom? And at whose cost? The dust demon could be speedily laid if seriously tackled. If all the main roads of the country were remade in a proper fashion with dustless material, and with the further aid of one or other of the various surface preparations which have been invented, the difficulty would disappear forthwith. But who is to undertake the work and find the money? There's the rub.

Some time ago Lord Montagu put forward an ingenious scheme, under which all the money raised by the taxation of vehicles would be devoted to this purpose, plus the produce of a special Customs and Excise duty of two and a half per cent. ad valorem on all motor-cars, British and foreign. In this way, he estimated, a sum of between £300,000 and £400,000 would be quickly raised which could be applied for the purpose under the direction, as he further suggested, of a Central Highway Board responsible to Parliament for the control of all the main roads throughout the country. It is revealing no secrets, perhaps, to express the belief that this scheme will not form part of Mr. Asquith's forthcoming Budget statement. But it is certain that only in some such radical fashion is the problem ever likely to be satisfactorily solved. Meanwhile, the duty of motorists in the matter is manifest enough, namely, to do all that is possible by considerate driving to mitigate the evil. Much more may still be done also by manufacturers in the same direction. Cars differ greatly, according to the details of their construction, in their dust-raising qualities, and in the interests of one and all it is vitally important that more attention should be paid to this particular consideration by designers than is usually bestowed on it.

When is some practical step to be taken in regard to the employment of alcohol as fuel? Alcohol possesses advantages in almost every respect over petrol. But at present it cannot be manufactured at a profit in this country, because of the very stringent and costly Excise regulations, devised solely with regard to the production of alcohol designed for drinking purposes. To the production of alcohol in its de-natured form no exception whatever need be taken. On the contrary, there are here all the makings of a gigantic new industry, which is deserving of every encouragement on that account alone. Meanwhile, according to a correspondent of the Autocar, there is much to be said for benzol as a substitute for petrol, and it is announced that a firm of tar distillers is about to put this on sale for motor fuel purposes at a price which it is believed will be about 1s. 3d. per gallon retail. Benzol, it may be explained, is a more or less perfectly rectified spirit obtained during the distillation of coal tar, which in its turn is usually a by-product obtained during the manufacture of gas from coal, and therefore it can be produced by British makers in unlimited quantities, while it is said to give results to all intents and purposes the equal of those of petrol.

Another new fuel to which attention is being directed at present is one in which patent rights are being secured, consisting of a combination of the vapour of alcohol and acetylene gas. This, according to articles in the papers, is the invention and discovery of a Scotchman and an Englishman at present residing in New York, and, according to the particulars furnished, it is likely to attract much attention. The gas in question is formed, it seems, by bringing a spray of atomised alcohol diluted with water into contact with calcium carbide. The only addition required for existing petrol cars to admit of the employment of the new gas will be a metal cylinder about eight inches long and four inches wide, with necessary connections to the carburetter and combustion chamber. This cylinder will contain the carbide by means of which the acetylene is formed, the combination of which with the alcohol vapour provides the requisite explosive mixture, which has been given the not very happy name of alcoethine. It is said to possess a higher explosive power than ordinary petrol, and to work out at a lower cost.

Are there openings for ladies as professional drivers? The advent of the feminine cab driver in Paris has brought the question up again. The answer, however, can hardly be in doubt. It is one thing to drive a car which has been nicely tuned up and with a chauffeur alongside to do any dirty work that may be required, but quite another to undertake the responsibility of a professional mechanician, almost the least of whose functions is the actual driving of the car. And to take this view is by no means to deny the skill with which many ladies manage their cars or to question the expert knowledge which they frequently possess. Women chauffeurs are no more likely a development of the future than women coachmen—though, so far as mere driving goes, many ladies are, of course, most expert. Instance the letter recently received by Messrs. Humber from one of their fair customers:—

> I took a 15 h.p. car from Leicester to London via Kettering and Bedford without having once to change gear, and seeing this necessitated climbing Clack Hill out of Market Harboro' I think it shows pretty conclusively that a lady need not be afraid of the 15 h.p. car on account of the gear changing, as my experience has been that this car will take any ordinary hill on the main roads without any change whatever.

Unfortunately, there are much more trying duties than gear changing which may confront the lady driver.

The motorist who carries with him a BLICKensderfer Typewriter in one of the latest fitted leather cases has always at his service a complete office equipment, enabling him both to be abreast of his correspondence, and to keep copies of his letters for subsequent filing or for other purposes.

Weight of Machine and Case, 15½ lb.
Size 13¾ × 11 × 7½ in.

This is worth investigation, and LIST No. 230 will tell you all about it. Post free from—

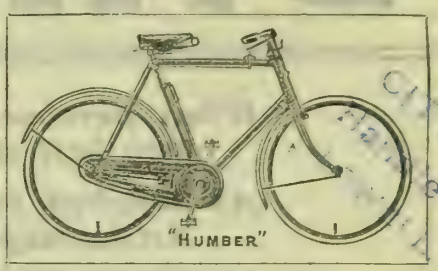
THE BLICKENSDERFER COY., LTD.,
9 and 10, CHEAPSIDE, E.C.

HUMBERS

"The Beeston Humber more than maintains its position as the world's premier bicycle."—Wexford Free Press.

Humber Cycles are famous among all Cyclists for their excellence. Their speed on road or track, their sound construction and superb finish, have won the appreciation of riders the world over.

Catalogue Free to any Address.



Prices from £8 8s. 0d. to £15 15s. 0d.

HUMBER, LIMITED
(Dept. 24), 32, Holborn-viaduct, E.C.
Works: Beeston (Notts), and Coventry.

. . AND AT . .

Nottingham: Grey Friar Gate.
Manchester: 33, Blackfriars-street.
Birmingham: 280, Broad-street.
Southampton: 27, London-road.

Humber Agents Everywhere.

EASY TO HANDLE

Amongst the many reasons why ARGYLL Cars are so simple to drive, the Ideal Engine Control and Unique Gear hold an important place.

Our new Catalogue fully explains these two points and all the other special features which combine to make "the Car that nothing worries."

"I am delighted with the car. She is a most delightful car to drive, and I wish for nothing better" is an extract from a letter recently received, and typical of many others in our possession.

12-14 h.p., Side Entrance Body, Price £340. ✕ 16-20 h.p., Side Entrance Body, Price £475.

London Agents—ARGYLLS, LONDON, Ltd., 17, Newman St., Oxford St., W.

ARGYLL MOTORS, Ltd., Alexandria by Glasgow.

By Appointment to

H.M. The King.

The Representative British Car.

By Appointment to

H.R.H. The Prince of Wales.

DAIMLER

When purchasing a Car why not have the very best obtainable?

As supplied to Royalty, the Nobility, and Aristocracy of this and other countries.

LOWEST PRICE PER HORSE-POWER OF ANY HIGH-CLASS CAR.

Winners of innumerable Hill-climbing Competitions, Races, and Trials during the past two years.

A few latest Daimler Models are ready for immediate delivery.

Specifications can be obtained, and trial runs arranged with all Depots and Agencies.

For Price Lists, &c., apply T 39 Dept.

THE DAIMLER MOTOR CO. (1904), Ltd.

Coventry: Daimler Works. Manchester: 60, Deansgate. Bristol: 18, Victoria Street.
London: 219-229, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C. Nottingham: 96-98, Derby Road.

AGENTS:

ABERDEEN.—Rossleigh Motor Co., Ltd., 383, Union Street.

BIRMINGHAM.—Birmingham Garage, Stephenson Street.

BRADFORD.—Albert Farnell, 50, Manningham Lane.

BRIGHTON.—Warren & Prestwich, Palmeira Motor Works, Palmeira Square, Hove.

BRISTOL.—Depot as above, and Bristol Motor Co., Ltd., 4-6, Redcross Street.

CARDIFF.—South Wales Motor Co., Ltd., 94, St. Mary Street.

DUBLIN.—John Hutton & Sons, Ltd., 115, Summerhill.

DUNDEE.—Rossleigh Motor Co., Ltd., 132, Nethergate.

EDINBURGH.—The Scottish Automobile Co., Ltd., The Velodrome, Leith Walk.

GLASGOW.—Rossleigh Motor Co., Ltd., 44, Sauchiehall Street.

HAVERFORDWEST.—Geo. Ace, Ltd.

HULL.—Hull City Garage, Ltd., 57, Beverley Road.

KINGTON.—James Fryer, Progress Motor Works.

LEICESTER.—Midland Counties Motor Garage, Granby Street.

LINCOLN.—R. M. Wright & Co., Ltd., Newland.

LIVERPOOL.—Chapman Von Sobbe & Co., Ltd., Mulberry Street.

LONDON.—Depot as above, and Brompton Motor Co. (Arkwright and Yorke), 78, Brompton Road, S.W.
Drake & Gorham, 66, Victoria St., Westminster, S.W.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—Hy. Angus, Sanderson, & Co., 63-65, Percy Street.

NORWICH.—Mann, Egerton, & Co., Ltd., 5, Prince of Wales Road.

SWANSEA.—Geo. Ace, Ltd., Wind Street.

TENBY.—George Ace, Ltd., Warren Street.

YORK.—H. J. Lloyd, Davygate.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Limited, 4 and 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., and Published by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st. E.C. in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's-gate, S.W
Entered as Second-Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

(Continued from page 898.)

from exceptional industrial activity, whilst production is gradually increasing." But there is no apparent reason to expect any material change in the conditions of supply and demand. Fresh mines are joining the list of contributors to the output, and existing producers are extending their operations, but it is anticipated by those in the best position to form an opinion on the subject, that after a possible temporary slackening of the demand for copper there will be a steady development of consumption, with which production may find it difficult to keep pace. At the Rio Tinto meeting last week, the chairman naturally had something to say in regard to the outlook for the metal, and in view of the importance of the matter to all concerned in copper shares the remarks of that authority will doubtless be of interest to many of my readers. The Tinto chairman said:

> Industrial enterprise is active in all countries; copper is therefore in great demand. All new machinery and ships, and most other constructions, need copper in a greater or lesser degree. It is rapidly becoming realised that it is more economical to create power at centres in large units, and distribute by electric current to the points where it is used, than by the old-fashioned method of numerous little steam engines working locally. This has, even in heavy railway work, gone beyond the experimental stage in the United States, and a commencement is being made with some branch passenger railways in Europe. Probably, therefore, the "Electrical Age" has hardly commenced, and we must hope, even if new sources of supply are found, that our copper will continue to fetch remunerative prices.

Last week I mentioned that the Tinto report had caused disappointment in market circles in consequence of the fact that it contained no confirmation of the recent market rumours as to an expansion of production being contemplated. At the subsequent meeting, however, the chairman said that an extension of the smelting plant was being built, "and had there been sufficient rainfall to supply the blast furnace water jackets, we had expected to somewhat increase the quantity of ore so treated this summer." But owing to the succession of dry seasons the water supply at the mines is at present giving the Board much anxiety, and unless the average amount of rain falls this month and next a reduced output of copper must be expected in the last half of the year. So far as permanent holders of Tintos are concerned, however, there is not much cause for anxiety, for, as the chairman pointed out, one summer's scarcity of water merely postpones for a few months their profits. In view of the possibility of a reduction of the output there seems little likelihood of Tintos recovering in the near future to the neighbourhood of the highest price touched so far this year, but no doubt they will continue to fluctuate within pretty wide limits, and thus afford speculators chances of securing satisfactory quick profits. Elsewhere in the copper group there are shares which have been depressed by forced liquidation and which have not had any substantial recovery so far, and the discriminating speculator should be able to make a selection affording promise of a satisfactory return when general conditions are more settled. On any material relapse Mount Lyells appear a pretty safe purchase for a quick turn, and Great Cobars and Arizonas also have their supporters when the prices are knocked down, as they have been at times during the past week by forced liquidation. Among the smaller-priced descriptions I still fancy Chillagoes. These shares and Munganas have been in strong demand recently, and those of my readers who followed the lead of the colonials as indicated in my notes a few weeks ago have no reason to find fault with the result. The further information to hand with regard to Chillagoes is of a satisfactory character. The extension of the company's railway to the Etheridge goldfields is being proceeded with, and meanwhile the receipts from the line already working are steadily increasing. The approximate figures in connection with the working of the line for the first three months of this year show a net increase of over £6,000 compared with the returns for the corresponding period of last year. The company's smelting business is also increasing..

New Pension Scheme.—5s. a month will secure a pension of £20 a year guaranteed by Norwich Union Life Insurance Society. Sole issuing House, London and Paris Exchange, Ltd., Basildon House, E.C. Prospectus on application.

Broken Hills Quiet but the Tone Cheerful—The Latest Zinc Corporation Announcement—Indian Gold Output—Balaghat Position—Ashanti Goldfields Resumes the Payment of Dividends.

Business has not been very brisk in Broken Hill descriptions during the past week, but on the whole a firm tendency has been in evidence, although when Paris was liquidating in other sections this group reflected the general dulness. There has been some hesitation about increasing speculative commitments to any extent pending the general outlook becoming more assured, but in the event of this settlement passing off satisfactorily business should improve, and as I have said before, the Broken Hill group is not the least attractive of the various mining sections. Share values in several cases are now well below the highest that have been reached, and the depreciation has not been due to any adverse change in intrinsic conditions, but to forced liquidation in order to meet losses incurred in other directions. Further official information as to the position of affairs in regard to the Zinc Corporation is now available, and the statements recently made by the chairman in the interview which I quoted a fortnight ago will have prepared shareholders for the news, which is to the effect that the original process is a commercial failure, but the alternative system—the Cattermole process—is a proved success. One unit of the plant has been adapted to this system, and it is treating 140 tons of tailings per day. The balance of the plant is being altered to the Cattermole system, and it is hoped that in about a month it will be working at the rate of 500 tons per day. It is not calculated to please shareholders to learn that after all the time which has been taken the first process has had to be abandoned, but the announcement that the company is now actually producing and shipping good grade concentrates should reassure them in regard to the prospect of ultimately receiving dividends on the money invested. It now remains to be told what the cost of treating the tailings will be when working on a large scale, but that a satisfactory return will be forthcoming on at least the current price of the shares there seems little doubt. The process now being employed by the Zinc Corporation has been used for some time by the Sulphide Corporation with, it is understood, very satisfactory results, and this fact should further reassure those interested in Zincs.

The production of the Indian gold mines in March was 1,888 oz. in excess of the February output, as will be seen from the statistics given below:—

	1903	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz
January	48,080	51,583	52,157	52,009	49,010
February	46,268	50,151	50,660	49,576	43,224
March	48,434	51,634	52,688	49,040	45,112
April	48,573	50,609	53,374	46,033	—
May	48,971	51,242	52,174	48,515	—
June	49,368	51,606	52,717	47,816	—
July	50,989	51,233	52,191	47,247	—
August	50,717	51,517	52,017	46 817	—
September	51,714	51,666	52,039	49,638	—
October	51,824	51,233	52,291	47,101	—
November	52,016	51,664	51,906	46,487	—
December	54,457	52,690	54,201	49,981	—
Total	601,411	616,838	628,415	577,260	137,346

The Coromandel has dropped out of the list of producers, its mill having been finally closed down, as it is abandoning its Kolar property. On the other hand, last month the Dharwar Reefs contributed to the total for the first time, this company's output being 510 oz. from 1,494 tons, or an average of slightly under 7 dwts. These figures, however, do not include the returns from the cyanide treatment, and as the tailings from the mill are reported to assay a little over 4 dwts., it would appear as though yields of about half an ounce per ton are to be expected. This is much less satisfactory than the trial crushing made at the end of 1905 led shareholders to look for, and it is to be hoped that as operations at the mine progress better results will be attained. The annual report of the Balaghat Gold Mining Company is now to hand. While it shows an increased profit compared with the previous document, and the rate of dividend is maintained, it does not read very favourably as regards the mining position. It is true the ore reserves are larger than at the end of 1905, but they represent little more than a year's supply for the milling plant, and as I have pointed out in former notes, the monthly returns of gold have had to be reduced in the current year owing to the fact that the general grade of the ore developed in the latter part of 1906 was lower than that previously found. However, there is a chance of a better ore zone being encountered, and shareholders may be able to derive some encouragement from the fact that some years ago, when development work had given disappointing results, the hopes of improvement expressed by the management were soon fulfilled. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast," and it would seem that the market valuations of some mining shares mainly represent hopes rather than anything more substantial. In the case of the Balaghat mine, however, there is ground for the hope entertained of better results being obtained, as the lowest level in the vicinity of one of the shafts is stated to be showing improvement, and at a few shillings below par (£1) the shares would seem a fair purchase as a pure speculation, on the chance of the improvement continuing.

It may be remembered that a few weeks ago I mentioned that there had been some buying of Ashanti Goldfields by people who should be well informed as to the company's position and prospects. I added that hopes were being indulged in of the early declaration of a dividend and recalled the statement made on the point by the chairman at the meeting last December. The good buying is now explained, the expectation of an early resumption of dividends being fulfilled. The company has issued a circular announcing that the directors now feel themselves to be in a position to resume the payment of dividends, and, accordingly, have declared one of 10 per cent. in respect of the current year. This is equivalent to 4 4-5d. per share, so that, like the nurse's baby, it is "a very little one," but the wording of the official announcement will encourage shareholders to expect further distributions in respect of the current year. This is the first return to shareholders the company has made since the 50 per cent. paid on account of 1903-4, and there are not so many West African companies paying dividends that one, however small, is likely to be overlooked. The announcement has helped the price of the shares a little, as will be seen from the following table:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Mar. 28, 1907.	Apl. 6, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Abosso	1 1/16	1 1/16	1 1/8	1 1/8	—
Ashanti Goldfields (4/-)	17/9	7/9	16/	16/6	+6d.
Gold Coast Amalgamated	3 3/16	1 1/2	1 5/16	1 5/16	—
Taquah and Abosso	2 3/4	1 1/16	2 1/16	2 1/16	—
Wassau	1 1/8	1/2	5/8	5/8	—
Egyptian Mines and Exploration	10/6	1/3	1/9	1/6	-3d.
Nile Valley	13/-	3/-	2/-	2/-	—
Camp Bird	33/6	22/-	24/6	24/9	+3d.
Esperanza	5 5/16	2 1/4	2 1/16	2 1/16	—
Le Roi (£5)	2	1	1 1/16	1 3/16	- 1/16
British Broken Hill	58/-	30/7 1/2	39/4 1/2	38/11 1/2	-1/3
Broken Hill Proprietary (8/-)	5 7/8	3 1/16	4 1/2	4 3/8	- 3/32
Zinc Corporation	2 1/8	1 1/16	26/6	26/3	-3d.
Anaconda Copper ($25)	15 5/8	11 5/8	12 3/8	13 1/4	+1 1/16
Mount Lyell	52/6	33/-	48/-	47/-	-1/0
Mount Morgan	4 3/8	3 1/4	4 1/8	4	- 1/8
Rio Tinto (£5)	91 1/8	63 5/8	87	89 1/4	+2 1/4
Dolcoath Tin	20/6	10/-	23/-	23/-	—
Pusing Lama Tin	3 1/16	3/4	2 3/4	2 3/4	—
Balaghat	36/-	22/6	18/-	17/6	-6d.
Champion Reef (2/6)	30/-	9/6	11/9	12/3	+6d.
Mysore (10/-)	7 1/8	5 1/2	6	6 1/16	+ 1/16
Siberian Mines	2 1/8	1 1/16	1 1/8	1 1/8	—
Siberian Proprietary	16 1/4	3 1/8	4 1/8	3 7/8	- 1/8
Waihi	9 12/16	6 7/16	8 3/8	8 3/8	—

A Motor-'Bus Company's Affairs.

"I do not think that we have had a fair run for our money," writes one of the shareholders in the Edinburgh and District Motor Omnibus Co., Ltd. Letters that I have received from other shareholders are to the same effect, and in view of recent incidents and disclosures, the dissatisfaction that prevails is not at all surprising. The story of the company is curious and instructive. It was formed in February, 1906, with a capital of £200,000 divided into £1 shares. The directors went to allotment on subscriptions for 28,569 shares, though it ought to have been recognised that this would not provide a sufficient amount for the purposes set forth in the prospectus. In February last an unsuccessful offer of debenture stock was made, and the company having come to the end of its resources, the shareholders were summoned to a meeting on March 20 to consider a resolution in favour of a voluntary winding-up. Prior to the meeting, Mr. Hyman Herman, 9, Wool Exchange, E.C., addressed a strongly worded circular to his "co-shareholders," and, considered in the light of subsequent events, the following extracts will be found interesting:—

> Having regard to the fact that the Directors have not yet issued any accounts or given you an opportunity to discuss the finances and position of the Company in General Meeting, I am justified in saying that the present proposal looks very like a strong desire on the part of the Board to obviate giving an account of their stewardship and the management of your moneys. In short, I wish to emphasise the fact that the whole proceedings are extremely unsatisfactory. . . . . They only desire to wind up the Company in order to form some other concern. It seems to me that there is no reasonable ground to suppose that the present management will succeed any better with a new Company than with our present unfortunate Company. It is obvious, furthermore, that the proposals when put before you will include some sort of assessment to be levied on our shares, and it is with special reference to this danger that I think it is your bounden duty to protest against the Resolution put before you. . . . .
>
> If you agree that your Company should not be so abruptly wound up without a thorough investigation of the management to date, and of the manner in which your moneys have been expended, and desire me to act as your Proxy at the Meeting, I will send you a stamped Proxy Form.

To this the directors issued a counterblast which drew from Mr. Herman a still more strongly worded circular, in which he repeated that it was his intention to vote against the voluntary liquidation, and in favour of a thorough investigation. On the strength of these statements Mr. Herman obtained the support of a considerable number of the shareholders. At the meeting on March 20 the chair was occupied by Mr. C. E. Hogg, who was not a director of the company, nor apparently even a shareholder. Mr. Hogg explained that two of the directors had asked him "to assist in helping to pull matters through." This gentleman has certainly had considerable experience as a director of unsuccessful gold mining companies, but it is questionable whether the shareholders in those concerns would recommend him as an expert in pulling matters through—that is, so far as the interests of shareholders are at stake—and it is at any rate not easy to perceive any reason why he should be deemed specially fitted to extricate a motor-'bus undertaking from its difficulties. However, Mr. Hogg took the chair, and submitted a reconstruction scheme, under which a new company would be formed with a capital of £50,000 to take over the business, the shareholders in the existing company being called upon to pay 5s. in respect of each share that they held. After payment of the debts, this assessment, Mr. Hogg stated, would give the new company £9,000 for working capital. It was against any proposal of this kind that Mr. Herman had fulminated in the above-mentioned circulars. At the meeting, however, it was announced that, "owing to various facts that had come to his knowledge," Mr. Herman's opposition to the directors' proposal had been "converted into support," and the resolution to wind up the company voluntarily was carried unanimously. Mr. W. E. T. Price (secretary of the Klerksdorp Gold Mines and other companies with which Mr. Hogg is connected) was appointed liquidator, and he issued a circular to the shareholders enclosing a statement "of the way in which the money subscribed has been expended." According to this statement, the payments comprised £6,745 to the promoters; £18,248 "expended on construction of cars, garage, and fitting up same"; £2,243 "management account in Edinburgh"; £907 directors' fees; £451 managing director's remuneration; and other smaller items, making a total of £29,286. The receipts were £28,413 from shareholders, and £1,090 from traffic receipts. In Mr. Hogg's speech the debts of the company were put at about £3,000. As to the present value of the rolling stock and garage, no information has been furnished.

Unlike Mr. Hyman Herman himself, a good many of the shareholders still adhere to the opinions which were so forcibly expressed in Mr. Herman's circulars. This was made manifest at the meeting which was held last Wednesday to consider a resolution for the sale of the assets of the company to the projected new company. The resolution was defeated, and a proposal was then made for the appointment of a committee of shareholders to investigate the affairs of the company, but, on the remarkable ground that "so much hostility had been shown," the Chairman, Mr. Hogg, refused to put this second resolution, and declared the meeting at an end. The whole case in regard to this Edinburgh and District Motor Omnibus Company clearly demands a searching investigation, and the shareholders ought to insist upon having one. The present reconstruction scheme is plainly undeserving of any support. There is, indeed, little doubt that for the shareholders it would simply mean throwing good money after bad.

Insurance Notes—Insuring Income—Immediate Annuities —Annuities for Invalids—Incomes for Widows— —Provision for Children—Old Age Pensions.

One of the great advantages connected with life assurance and annuities is that when properly selected they can be made to exactly suit almost any requirements. To people in general the value of capital really depends upon the income that it yields, and there are many circumstances in which a man or a woman is entirely justified in receiving for himself, or herself, the largest possible income without troubling to leave the capital at death to somebody else. In such a case the obvious thing to do is to sink the capital in the purchase of an annuity, to commence immediately, and to continue so long as the annuitant lives. Immediate annuities of this kind are quite familiar to everybody. There are a few old-fashioned people who think it is better to buy annuities from the Government than from life assurance companies, but as a matter of fact it is very foolish to adopt this course; a good life office is every whit as secure as the British Government, gives better terms to annuitants, and dispenses with many irksome formalities which the National Debt Office and the Post Office insist upon.

The life annuity that can be purchased for £100 varies, in the case of males, from about £7 15s. at age fifty-five to about £13 at age seventy, while for females of age fifty-five the annuity is about £7, and at age seventy about £11 15s. If an individual were to say to himself, "I will spend the whole of my interest and part of my capital each year," it is quite possible that before he died he would find that his capital had disappeared, and that his interest amounted to nothing a year; thereafter the only refuge might be the workhouse. On the other hand, a man may buy an annuity to-day and die very shortly afterwards, thus receiving little or no benefit from the annuity. The ingenuity of actuaries has devised a method for meeting this objection. Certain companies will agree to pay a man a rather smaller annuity so long as he lives, and if he dies within a specified number of years will return to his estate a stipulated proportion of the purchase price which he paid. For instance, a man of sixty, by paying £100 could make sure of receiving £6 a year so long as he lived, and if he died at any time within fifteen years part of the purchase-price would be returned to his estate, the amount returned depending upon the time during which he had enjoyed the annuity.

The longevity of annuitants is proverbial, and the general experience is that people do not buy annuities unless they are likely to live to an advanced age. The Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation has a most fair and happy method of making the advantages of annuities available for people in inferior health. They ask their doctor to examine a man just as for life assurance; if it appears to the doctor that the annuitant is not likely to live long they will pay him a much larger annuity than they would to a man in first-rate health.

Deferred life annuities of various kinds are particularly well suited to certain cases. The chief concern of a man who has no family may be to make certain that his widow will have an income so long as she lives. He is not concerned that any capital shall be left to friends or relatives when his widow dies, his whole desire being to provide the maximum income for her. This is perfectly possible in various ways. He can, for instance, take a policy, which he pays for by annual or half-yearly premiums so long as he lives, and which provides that, in the event of his death before that of his wife, an annuity of, say £100, will be paid to his widow so long as she survives him. If the wife dies first the payment of premiums ceases, and it can be arranged that in such an event all the premiums paid prior to the death of the wife are, or are not, returned to the husband. Of course, a similar scheme can be utilised to provide for a child, or a sister, or for anybody else. This is about the cheapest possible plan for making a definite provision of an income that can be devised; the cost depends upon the ages of the man who pays the premium and of the beneficiary. The insurance of an income in this way is in some respects better than an ordinary life policy, which insures the payment of a lump sum in cash. Of course, the cash could be used by the widow to buy an annuity. If the husband died when his wife was young the cash would only provide a small income for life, but if he died when the wife was old the cash would provide a large life income. If the wife is the only person to be thought of, it is better to let the insurance company take the risk of the income being small or large and to make sure that a definite income is available for the whole after lifetime of the widow, rather than a lump sum in cash, which may yield a big income or may yield a small one

Sometimes there are two or three people that it is desired to provide for. It is, of course, possible to apply the plan just described to, for instance, each of three daughters. So long as the three of them were living together they might get along comfortably on £100 a year each. If one of them died the two survivors would be much less comfortable on £200 a year, and when two of them had died the remaining one might be very pinched with only £100 a year. It is perfectly possible, and in some cases greatly preferable, to provide for, say, £300 a year while the three of them live, £250 a year while two of them are living, and £200 a year during the lifetime of the last survivor. Annuities of this kind can be paid for either by a single payment or by annual premiums, either for a limited number of years or during the whole lifetime of the father.

Another form of annuity which in certain cases has many attractions is one which practically provides an old-age pension, and may be purchased by either men or women. A man or a woman may feel confident of being able to earn an income up to age sixty or sixty-five, or any other selected age. By making annual payments until the age of retirement is reached, a fixed income from retirement until death can be secured. Deferred annuities of this kind have many advantages. Each payment that is made secures its full proportion of the benefits, whether the payments are continued or not. A person aged thirty commences to buy an annuity payable at sixty, thus involving thirty annual payments; if after paying for ten years it is convenient to stop further payments, the ten premiums already paid secure an annuity of one-third of the amount originally contemplated. Policies of this kind have the further benefit that the policy-holder can at any time up to the age at which the annuity commences surrender the policy for a cash payment, which is equivalent to all the premiums paid with interest in addition.

The variety that is possible in assurance and annuity business is so great that the above examples must only be considered as specimens of what it is possible to accomplish. In every case the precise conditions depend upon the ages of the people concerned, while an indefinitely great number of other circumstances can be met to perfection by means of somewhat similar policies. Given any set of conditions concerning money and the duration of human life, and life assurance, in one of its many forms, will "fill the bill" more safely and more profitably than any other financial transaction.

"Vigilant's" Letter Box.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

Government Securities.

Lady Godiva.—The Bulgarian stock is somewhat speculative, as the high yield indicates, and it is hardly a desirable holding for a lady. The Isle of Man Debenture stock is an investment of the first rank.

Railways.

Thistle.—The company is paying 6 per cent. out of railway earnings and 1 per cent. from the interest derived from proceeds of land sales. Hold the shares as an investment. Warnos.—The fall has been due largely to the general reasons with which I have already dealt at length in recent articles. As far as my recollection serves me, there has also been a substantial deduction on account of rights to new stock. I do not recommend a purchase; the general outlook is too unsatisfactory. Parrot.—1. The broker should have sold as instructed, but whether you could make him legally responsible is doubtful. 2. I do not recommend holding either on borrowed money. Calcutta.—If you are a real holder better keep both. The company has probably seen the worst. Atholl.—1. Both promising speculative purchases. 2. I do not recommend. Brownhill.—The shares were ex. div. on February 28. If you purchased the call prior to that date, the dividend deducted from the price will be credited to you, but if you bought subsequently you have no claim to the dividend. Tortoise.—If you are a holder of the debentures you might keep them. In both cases there are subsidies. The speculative risk will, of course, fall in the main upon holders of the share capital. Faiths.—While, generally speaking, I do not care for Americans, No. 1 is one of the soundest of the group, and might be held, while No. 2 may have a further recovery in the next month or so, and should therefore be retained for the present. The others are very fair investments.

Mines.

Rusticus.—I see no reason to expect an early substantial rise in the shares. Exile.—See my notes this week on the copper position. Ivanhoes, Robinson Deep, and Wit Deep appear good holdings for dividends and possible appreciation in value. Pauper.—1 and 6 are hopeful holdings, but I have not a very high opinion of the others. C. B. C.—The shares may have a little recovery later on, when the market becomes more active, but I see no reason to expect a substantial advance. Enquirer, Bristol.—You may as well hold what you have for a recovery. Ceetch.—There is little attraction in a purchase. I have not seen a recent price. Bridge.—There appears little likelihood of dividends being maintained for more than a year or two, and I think you had better put your money into something else. Cork.—Look again; the coupon appears every week at the bottom of the third page of the coloured cover of Truth. Boffin.—Ivanhoes are a less speculative holding than either of the other shares you name, and I should prefer to make the exchange. Bugle-Major.—You might put some of the money into New Kleinfontein or Wit Deep, with a view to dividends.

Mixed Securities.

Zomba (Nyasaland).—Your Government and railway holdings are all sound and worth keeping. Nos. 1 and 3 should also be kept. Of the alternatives to No. 4 you suggest, I regard Johannesburg Fours as the pick. Altonia.—1. Of the railway stocks, Hull look the more promising. The threatened legislation has affected all brewery securities, but you might hold those you have. Mezzotint.—Your Government and railway stocks are a sound lot, and I should not care to advise parting with any of them. They will go better as monetary conditions improve. The other shares are also worth holding for the present. Sergeant-major, Shorncliffe.—1. No. 2. Sell. 3. Yes. E. B. B.—For the present, yes. A. J. S., Taunton.—1. The Third Preference is understood to have the right to participate with the Deferred in any distribution of surplus assets. 2. The new Four per Cent. Debentures of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad should meet your requirements. Dans.—You could get nearly 4½ per cent. on excellent security by buying the new Four and a Half Preference shares of the Buenos Ayres Western Railway. Subaltern.—1. Japanese Four and a Half per Cent. bonds, Grand Trunk Railway Second Preference, National Railroad of Mexico Four per Cent. First Mortgage bonds, Buenos Ayres Western Railway new Four and a Half per Cent. Preference. Spread the money over the four. 2. A good purchase. Lynxes.—1. Hold on for a possible recovery in the near future. 2. A purchase still offers good prospects of turning out well, though it would be advisable to take the shares off the market. Cabin.—1.-4. The mining shares are hopeful speculative holdings. They are all of the nominal value of £1. 5. They are fair. 6. Worth holding. L. G., Dublin.—Johnnies might be bought, but neither of the others are attractive. Mona.—All three would make fairly attractive investments. They are controlled by Canadians. Beacon.—They would make fair investments. Whitefield.—1-5. They are fairly attractive. The land shares have been run up materially recently on the strength of the prosperity of the country. 6. I do not recommend it. Cato.—1. I know of no reason for the decline. 2. Ask the secretary. Q. L. A.—1. They are likely to recover further in the near future. 2. They are a pure gamble. The possibilities are somewhat doubtful. H. T. S.—They are all fair, but can scarcely be called first-class securities. Enelpis.—1. Keep these for the present. 2. Worth holding. 3 and 4. These should have some recovery eventually. 5. There seems no immediate hurry to sell, but if they go much better you might secure your profit on the chance of getting in again lower down. Irex.—1. Fairly good. 2. I do not advise a purchase of these bonds. They are guaranteed only as to interest until 1915, and what will happen after that it is impossible to say. 3. As a speculative purchase the new 5 per cent. bonds look the cheapest. 4. Give the preference to the 4½ per cent. bonds, which enjoy special security. 5. These bonds are probably all right, but little is known about them on this side. 6. A very fair investment. Pack.—On the whole your list is a very fair one, and I should not be inclined to part with any of the securities, at any rate for the present. Farway.—Argentine Great Western new Debentures should suit you as well as any of the stocks mentioned. Bombay.—1. The Canadian railway bonds look good enough, but you might perhaps be content with the amount you already have in them. 2. Simply due to the all-round fall in such securities. 3. These debentures are a somewhat speculative holding, and I do not advise a purchase. 4. Japanese Four and a Half per Cent. bonds (First Series), Argentine new Fives, and Buenos Ayres Western Railway new Four and a Half per Cent. Preference would give the required yield with good security. Maskee.—They are very speculative, and I do not care to recommend you to buy them.

Miscellaneous.

Novice.—I cannot recommend any firm. See Rule 8. You had better, however, have nothing to do with such a system of speculation. The motor shares are a fair commercial investment. H. T., Malta.—Not an investment, but a gamble. Moreover, the concern mentioned is one to be avoided. Motor.—I have been unable to obtain any information; write again to the secretary. H. R., Brentwood.—You will see that I am referring to the company this week. Bull.—1-2. I do not consider them an attractive holding. The dividend is likely to come down rather than be advanced. 3. Apollinaris Ordinary would give you 7¾ per cent., and seems more hopeful. 4. Leave it severely alone. Jackson.—1. I believe it is sound. 2. Yes. The business is a mischievous and disreputable one. Rover Cycle.—I cannot recommend any firm; see Rule 8. Do not, however, delude yourself with the idea that there is "little risk" that you will lose your money by doing business on the cover system. Patsey.—1. No. 2. See Rule 8. I do not recommend such a purchase now. Enrique, Chile.—Have nothing whatever to do with the Arnold and Butler bucket-shop. Do the business through a member of the Stock Exchange. G. A. A., Bromley.—Read the preceding answer. The secretary of the Stock Exchange will supply you with a list of members. E. J. E. Y.—Warnings against Cunliffe, Russell and Co. have constantly appeared in Truth. The pamphlets and circulars are grossly misleading, and the prices charged for the bonds are greatly in excess of their market value. C. C. W., T. C. P., Rangoon, R. R., East India, and others.—The preceding answer about Cunliffe, Russell, and Co. also applies to the International Securities Syndicate. L. A. P. R.—Apply to the Crédit Lyonnais or to Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 29, Threadneedle Street, E.C. W. M. H.—Thanks for the booklet; will make inquiries. Grand Merci.—1. See my remarks in another column. 2. In the circumstances you may as well hold in the hope of a renewal of market interest in the shares later on. Why Not.—I have not had any reason to criticise it, but I cannot make a recommendation. See Rule 8; also rule as to a coupon.

Insurance.

J. S. H.—The company is within its rights in declining to renew the policy. A policy that cannot be discontinued by a company involves more risk and a higher premium. You cannot expect the same benefits for a low premium as a high one. Tom.—I believe this particular bond company is sound, and think you might safely continue the payments. Dubious.—I have not a high opinion of the company you mention, and should not advise you to join it. If you have already paid for some time it may be advisable to continue, but this depends on how much you have paid. Dab.—I think if you were to ask the insurance company to survey your property and explain the state of things to them you would have no difficulty in effecting a satisfactory settlement should the necessity for doing so arise.

Miscellaneous Market Improving—Anglo A's Rise—Hudson's Bays—The Turkish Match Gamble—Breweries and Legislation—Argentine Meat Companies—Increased Cunard Dividend.

In the Miscellaneous market the better tone which began to manifest itself on the eve of the holidays has been well maintained, and what is hopefully regarded as a sure if slow increase in the volume of business appears to have set in. One of the features of the past week was a revival of activity in Anglo American Telegraph Deferred. For the first quarter of the year dividends of 15s. and 30s. per cent. on the ordinary and the preferred stock, respectively, have just been announced; but though these distributions are only at the usual rates, it is rumoured that the company's traffic receipts benefited substantially—it's an ill-wind, etc.—from the excitement aroused by the recent course of events in Wall Street. With three-quarters of the year still to run this is obviously a slender foundation on which to build up expectations for the deferred, but anyhow there has been a steady buying of the stock, which is two points up on the week. Hudson's Bays have fluctuated more or less in sympathy with Canadian Pacifics, but since the publication of an official statement of the sales of farm lands and town lots during the year ended March 31, a gain of between two and three points has been recorded. The sales amounted to £334,000, payable over a term of years, and cash receipts to £328,700, as compared with £401,400 and £297,000 respectively for 1906. There has also been a rise in the shares of the Western Canada Land Company on the issue of a satisfactory return of sales. I am still inclined to think, however, that investors ought not to count so confidently, as many are doing, upon an uninterrupted continuance of the land boom in the Dominion; and in spite of the anticipations of an increased dividend, I should not recommend a purchase of "Bays" at the present price. In connection with the New Founders' Association, another letter from the Foreign Office has been published to the effect that although the British Government is not at present prepared to withdraw its opposition to the Turkish match monopoly scheme, "the subject might possibly be considered should commercial negotiations with Turkey be resumed." This has led to a little revival of the gamble in these shares, though the possibility of the concession being sanctioned is still clearly very remote, while even if it were sanctioned it would remain a question for consideration whether in actual working it would prove worth the price paid for it.

For the moment, at least, the fall in brewery securities has been stayed—indeed, in some cases the unfamiliar spectacle of a slight recovery has been witnessed. This can scarcely be attributed to the formation of a brewery debenture-holders' committee to agitate against "unjust legislation," or even to a calculation that the much-discussed pro-alcohol manifesto which a number of medical men have signed, will tend to increase the consumption of beer. The fact is that the opinion is gaining ground that there is not much likelihood of a Licensing Bill being passed this Session, and that even at the worst the effect of such a measure on the intrinsic value of brewery securities has already been quite sufficiently discounted. In textiles and in iron and steel shares no noteworthy changes have occurred. The motor section has also been somewhat dull. The condition of the trade, however, continues highly prosperous, and at the present quotations Argylls, Darracqs, and Humbers are well worth attention. A discouraging account of the state of the Argentine frozen meat business was given by the Chairman of the River Plate Fresh Meat Company at the meeting last week. He suggested that the best palliative to the present unsatisfactory position of the trade would be an arrangement among the different Argentine companies to adjust the quantities brought over here more closely with the requirements of the market. Meanwhile, this statement has brought about a slight drop in the River Plate shares, and also in James Nelson's. The Nelson dividend is due immediately, and a reduction of the 10 per cent paid on the ordinary last year is feared. A further improvement in Cunard Steamship shares has followed the publication of the most satisfactory dividend announcement that has been issued for some years past. Not only is the dividend increased from 4 to 5 per cent., and £50,000 again added to the reserve, but the insurance fund gets £120,000 as compared with £2,669 last year, and the carry-forward is £54,411, against only £7,285 brought in. The directors have displayed commendable prudence in dealing with the profits, for although there is no anticipation now of another "rate war," the possibility of another struggle of the kind ought always to be kept in view. VIGILANT.

All Rights Reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

UNCLE PETER'S POUCH.

I HAD never taken to my Uncle Peter, even when I saw but little of him; and when I had to go and live with him for a whole twelve months, my aversion soon assumed a more active shape. This was during the period that intervened between my leaving school and my being taken over by my father, on his final return from the colony of which, for the last six years, he had been military governor.

Now don't be shocked, please, at what I am going to say; but I really hardly know which of the three I disliked most—Miss Jevinson, the prim and acid headmistress of the school I had just quitted, Uncle Peter, my temporary guardian, or my father, the General, to whose tender mercies I was to be finally consigned.

I was naturally a high-spirited—Miss Jevinson said "rebellious"—girl, who liked to be my own mistress and enjoy life in my own way. I had, moreover, the good, or ill, fortune—accordingly as you consider it; Miss Jevinson considered it the ill fortune—to have a pretty face and an attractive personality, which was constantly leading young men to lose their hearts to me.

I was thus drawn into more than one affair that resulted in unpleasant ructions and saddled me with a reputation for frivolity—Miss Jevinson called it impropriety—that I certainly did not deserve. The consequence was that, after the third of my harmless little escapades, my father—who happened just then to be home on leave—was sent for and gave me a terrific wigging, threatening, if I ever flirted with a young man again, to send me to a convent school in France. And this I knew to be no idle threat, for my martinet of a parent always made a point of keeping his word.

In the meanwhile, as he did not consider Miss Jevinson capable of controlling me sufficiently, he removed me from school and placed me under the roof of his brother, my Uncle Peter, a retired naval captain with the most stringent possible notions on the subject of discipline. Indeed, so stringent were his views on this point, that he had actually provoked three separate ships' crews into mutiny before "My Lords" thought it advisable to place him on half pay.

While I remained in his charge, he kept the tightest of hands and the most dragon-like of eyes upon me. And this—had he understood my character in the very least—was the worst course he could have pursued. For I was just one of those girls upon whom undue restraint acts rather as an irritant and a stimulus than as an extinguisher. Indeed, the knowledge that I was being spied upon to prevent my doing a certain thing always made me feel, at once, determined to do that thing; and the more I was subjected to oppressive restrictions, the more was my pride aroused and my ingenuity challenged to circumvent and evade them.

Only the meanest natures will stoop so low as to deceive parents and guardians who trust them and put them on their honour. But where, instead of being trusted, one is exposed to constant espionage and surveillance, even those of naturally frank disposition are inclined to see no harm in turning the cunning of the oppressor against himself. Such, at any rate, was my view; in fact, so far from seeing any harm in my conduct, I discovered almost a virtuous satisfaction in giving my old lynx of an uncle the slip.

My ingenuity in this direction presently received a further stimulus for, when I had been at Uncle's about three months, I fell—for the first and last time of my life—seriously and desperately in love. I was then just turned eighteen.

The man to whom I thus lost my girlish heart was Horace Urquhart. He was the son of a parson in the neighbourhood, and was some seven years my senior. In appearance he was—but perhaps I am a little prejudiced—the handsomest, manliest young fellow I have ever seen; and his disposition matched his appearance. Indeed, he was a man whom it was difficult not to fall in love with, even if one tried to resist his personality, and I certainly tried to do nothing of the kind. On the contrary, I surrendered pretty nearly on the first summons, feeling too proud and happy in his love to make any disguise of my sentiments. We swore eternal fidelity and made solemn vows that nothing should ever come between us. But soon trouble arose.

Horace said that, as a man of honour, he must acquaint my guardian, Uncle Peter, with the state of our affections. I tried to persuade him to defer that process, knowing only too well what the result of it would be. But he insisted on doing so—no doubt he was morally right—with just the consequence I had anticipated.

Uncle Peter wouldn't hear of him as a suitor for my hand, treating him with the utmost rudeness, calling him an impudent pauper and other offensive names, and finally ordering the butler to show him out of the house and never to admit him again.

Then I was sent for, and Uncle Peter proceeded to walk into me in his best quarter-deck style. I won't repeat his language. Truth is a family paper, and, very properly, makes a point of never inserting anything that might be considered unsuitable for household reading. But, in the course of his remarks, he let out one fact of which I was not until then aware, viz., that my father, the General, had already arranged an eligible match for me, of which I should hear more at the proper time.

"If that is so, I call it cruel and shameful and wicked!" I cried. "Does my father think that he is the Grand Turk, to give his womenfolk away to any man he pleases? But there! I do not care what arrangements he has made for me. I will never—never marry any one except Horace!"

"Oh, you won't, won't you, miss?" sneered my Uncle Peter. "Well, we shall see."

"We shall," I rejoined.

"In the meantime," he said, "you will consider yourself confined to the house and garden, madam, until I have your promise to give up this disreputable young journalist."

"That you shall never have," I cried. "And he is not disreputable. He is——"

"Pooh!" interposed my uncle, in his knock-you-down, sweeping way. "All journalists are disreputable; and this fellow is a beggarly pauper, into the bargain."

"That is false," I exclaimed. "He is making three hundred a year."

"Even if he is, madam—what's three hundred a year, especially when earned in so precarious a profession?"

"He is rapidly making his mark," I went on. "Before long he will be earning double or treble. Every one says his prospects are splendid."

"Oh, bosh! What are prospects worth?" retorted Uncle Peter, derisively. "About as much as next summer's strawberry crop, or the good resolutions fools form on New Year's Day. Your father would never allow you to marry on prospects, my dear child; setting aside the fact that he has already made other arrangements for you. So you may dismiss that idea from your silly head at once."

"I mean to marry Horace," I said, with fierce determination.

"Very well, madam; while you maintain that defiant attitude, you will please consider yourself confined to your ship—ahem!—I mean, to the premises," said my Uncle Peter.

"Oh, you may shut me up in my bedroom, if you like," I cried. "It will make no difference."

"It may come to that," snarled my Uncle Peter. "At present, I'll content myself with milder measures."

"Thanks, awfully," was my ironical reply.

Uncle Peter coloured angrily.

"By G—d, miss," he said, "if any one in the service had talked to me in that tone of voice, I'd have clapped him in irons in less than no time. . . . You may thank your stars that you're only a woman and on shore. Now go; and mind what I have said, or it will be the worse for you."

In spite of my uncle's precautions, I managed to get one or two stolen interviews with Horace; but these were only few and far between. Generally, I was too closely watched. I would have run away with him if there had been half a chance; but no such chance arose. Indeed, the restrictions to which I was subjected became more and more severe, until at length our utmost ingenuity to arrange secret meetings availed us nothing, while my old tyrant of an uncle further took such steps as completely baffled all attempts at epistolary correspondence.

Thus the weary months went by, until the time came for my father to return to England, and Uncle Peter received instructions to take me up to London and hand me over.

Uncle lived in the neighbourhood of York, from which station we entrained per G.N.R. for King's Cross, where my father, the General, was to meet us. It was a cold, sleety day in January. Few people were travelling, and our first class "smoker" (uncle, I should tell you, was a slave to his pipe, and always travelled in a smoking carriage) contained only one other passenger besides ourselves—a fat, hairy, spectacled old gentleman, transparently of Teutonic nationality, who entered the carriage at York just in front of us, and, having settled himself in the most comfortable corner, with his back to the engine, proceeded to fill and light an enormous meerschaum, at which he sat puffing stolidly.

I should not have mentioned this uninteresting individual at all, but for a trifling incident that presently occurred, in which he showed more civility than you might have expected from his somewhat hoggish appearance.

It was this way. My uncle Peter having finished his first pipe, knocked out the ashes and blew down the stem, preparatory to loading up a second time. Then he thrust his hand into the side-pocket of his overcoat, feeling for his pouch, which he always carried there, but apparently feeling in vain. At least, all that he managed to unearth therefrom was a box of safety matches and one or two old letters. With a puzzled frown, he next thrust his other hand into the other side-pocket of his overcoat; but with no better result. Then, with the frown on his brow ever deepening, he anxiously rummaged all his other pockets, even his trouser pockets, standing upright in order to do so the more thoroughly. By this time the expression of his face, never amiable at the best of times, was lowering, not to say lurid, with annoyance and anger. His pouch was nowhere to be found, and here he was, shut up in a railway carriage, with a long journey in front of him, and not a scrap of tobacco to solace the tedium of travel.

To all smokers such a contretemps would have been annoying. But to so inveterate a chimney as my uncle Peter it was simply intolerable.

'D——n!" he muttered at length, in a wild fever of dismay. "What the —— can I have done with my pouch?"

He hunted about on the seat, and I helped him hunt, for I was almost as anxious as he was that the tobacco should be found. Uncle was not an agreeable travelling companion even when he was in a good temper; and when he was in a bad temper, as he always was when deprived of his pipe—well, he was simply beyond words. It was, therefore, with a sinking heart that I found our utmost efforts of search to be ineffectual, and was forced to the conclusion that uncle must have left his precious pouch in the refreshment-room at York, where he had last had occasion to use it.

It was at this point that the stolid German came to the rescue with unexpected civility. I suppose the fact was that, a slave to his pipe himself, he was quick to enter into the feelings of a fellow slave in distress. There is a sort of freemasonry, I have often noticed, among smokers, as there is among anglers and cricketers. In fact (to adapt Shakespeare), one touch of tobacco makes all smokers kin.

"Ach, mein Herr," said the plethoric and hirsute Teuton, smiling sympathetically at my uncle and politely offering his own huge and bulging pouch, "you haf lost your tabac. I feel for you. I offer mine, mit moch pleasure. Pray take ein fill."

Uncle Peter hesitated for the fraction of a second. As a general principle, he regarded any advance on the part of a stranger in the light of a liberty and an impertinence; moreover, being intensely insular, he entertained a particular objection to foreigners. But the temptation of the tobacco was, under the circumstances, too much for him, and he availed himself of the German's offer; though I noticed that he took care to satisfy himself of the quality of the tobacco, by inspecting it and sniffing at it, before he deigned to load up his pipe. Fortunately both for the obliging foreigner's feelings and also for my own—since I had been rendered not a little uncomfortable by this ungracious conduct on my uncle's part—the tobacco proved to be of unexceptionable brand; and my worthy relative, having helped himself liberally, handed back the pouch, with an expression of thanks that, for him, was almost genial. Then he lighted his pipe, puffed at it vigorously until it was well under way, and looked quite happy. I could see by his face that the tobacco was of the very best.

Presently, as was often the way with him when travelling, he began to show signs of drowsiness and, after a little, sank into a comfortable nap.

By this time we were nearing Grantham, our first and only stop. Just as the express was slowing up before running into that station, the hairy German suddenly leaned forward and laid his hand on my arm.

I started and nearly screamed. But a well-known voice quickly reassured me, causing my heart to leap and every pulse in my body to thrill and tingle with inexpressible joy.

"Ethel—darling!"

The face and the form were those of a plethoric Teuton. But the voice was the voice of Horace—my own, Horace.

"Sh!" I ejaculated, placing my finger on my lips and glancing apprehensively at my uncle, who might wake at any minute.

"Oh! that's all right," replied Horace, possessing himself of my hand. "I don't think your uncle is likely to wake much on this side of King's Cross. In the meanwhile, we get out here, go back to York by the next train, and reach that city just in comfortable time to be married before three o'clock. I have the licence and have made all the necessary arrangements."

"Oh, Horace! How splendid of you! But if uncle should wake up," I whispered, nervously.

"No fear, my own. He has smoked sufficient opium in that last pipe of his to keep him sound asleep for two hours at least. I took good care of that."

"What! You mixed opium with the tobacco, on purpose?"

My dear boy nodded. Just then the train pulled up, and he and I alighted safely, leaving my Uncle Peter still serenely snoring.

It was not until we were well on our way back to York, that it occurred to me to ask:

"But oh, Horace! How could you tell that uncle was going to leave his pouch behind? If it had not been for that lucky chance, your whole plan would have broken down."

My dear boy kissed me fondly on the lips.

"You sweet innocent," he exclaimed. "As if I should leave a thing like that to chance. In point of fact, I have your respected uncle's pouch on me, at this moment."

"Oh! Horace, you don't mean——"

"Yes, I do, sweetheart. For your darling sake I have turned pick-pocket. I seized a favourable opportunity at York Station and deliberately pinched it."

MUSIC.

OPERA AS SHE IS SPOKE.

IN the Musical Times for April there is reproduced an interesting letter written by Wagner to an Australian admirer in 1877 in which the following passage occurs: "May you be enabled to have my works placed before you in English, for only then can they be thoroughly understood by an English-speaking public." Here, surely, is rank heresy, if our British practice is anything to go by. Yet perhaps Wagner's opinion is worthy of consideration—more especially as it coincides with the practice of every other country but our own. It is only in London—and New York—that opera is given in every language but the vernacular. In Germany all operas are performed (speaking generally) in German, in France in French, in Italy in Italian, and so on all round. In England and America alone the polyglot practice of giving opera in every tongue save the language understanded of the people prevails, and it can hardly be doubted that the fact has had not a little to do with the limited amount of interest taken in opera in this country by the public at large.

No doubt the practice of giving every opera in the original tongue has its advantages from the standpoint of audiences sufficiently cultivated to follow such performances. Unfortunately, candour compels the admission that as a race we, of all others, are least equipped for this purpose with the requisite linguistic powers. In the case of some other nations the same might not apply. The average German audience, for instance, would certainly be better circumstanced in this respect than any to be found in London. Yet Germans would never dream of adopting our practice in the matter, and there can be little doubt that they are right. Half the boredom experienced in the case of the average English audience at an ordinary operatic performance results from inability to follow the dialogue, and when, in addition, the latter-day practice of keeping the auditorium in total darkness is adopted, so that even the translation in the book of words cannot be followed, matters are obviously not bettered. The assumption that every one is sufficient of a linguist to dispense with such aids is, of course, simply humbug, which, however, has the unfortunate effect of preventing many people from following with the book, even when they are given the opportunity, from the snobbish fear of suffering thereby in their neighbours' esteem.

The argument is sometimes advanced in this connection that English is an unsuitable language for singing, but this, of course, is utterly absurd. Opera, we are to understand, may be appropriately sung in French, German, Italian, Russian, Dutch, or any other European language, but English alone is unsuitable for the purpose. "Don Giovanni," which was written in Italian, may be given in German, but not in English. "Die Meistersinger" may be translated into French or Italian, but in the language of "Hamlet" or "The Tempest" would be out of place. The language which does for the "Messiah" is not good enough for "Faust" or "Cavalleria." Such notions need only be set down to stand condemned. As it is, we have the pathetic spectacle of native composers writing operas in foreign tongues as the only means of getting them produced either at home or abroad, and the ludicrous situation of works by English composers being actually produced in French or German before British audiences at Covent

---

"Gas can be used for warming purposes efficiently without prejudice to health."—The Lancet. A Physician says: "Every one in any way delicate should have a gas fire in their bedroom."

Garden. To realise the absurdity of which arrangement one has only to imagine how they would regard it in Berlin if a German opera were brought out there in English with the aid of performers from all parts of Europe save Germany.

Happily signs are not lacking that sounder sentiments on the subject may eventually prevail, in which connection the projected performance of the "Ring" in English next winter at Covent Garden under Richter is not to be overlooked. It is well known that such a performance has been a pet notion of Dr. Richter for many years past, and it will be interesting in the extreme to note what amount of success attends the venture. Then in addition there are to be the Carl Rosa performances, given in co-operation with the Royal Opera Syndicate, and these may be regarded also as an obvious step in the right direction. Further, there is the steadily extending list of capable English-speaking operatic artists to be borne in mind—a factor in the situation which should indeed help more than any merely theoretic consideration to promote sounder practice in this matter. It has been idle preaching the claims of opera in English hitherto, with hardly any singers of the first rank available to take part in such performances. Slowly, but surely, however, that state of things is beginning to remedy itself, and this is so much to the good. No one is foolish enough to suppose, of course, that opera in English is ever likely to become the rule at Covent Garden, the truth of the matter being that such an arrangement would not appeal at all to many who greatly prefer to hear the stars from all the leading opera houses of Europe singing in their own tongues. For opera given permanently in English we shall have to wait until the establishment of another opera house appealing more directly to the multitude. But this is not to say that the claims of the native article might not be recognised occasionally, and to a limited extent even at Covent Garden.

The Easter musical recess this year has not been a very long one. Mischa Elman set things moving again on Saturday with his concert at the Queen's Hall, when he played marvellously as ever, Miss Amy Castle, the vocalist of the occasion, singing brilliantly also. Among several concerts announced this week, one of more than usual interest should be that which is being given by M. Maurel on Friday evening at the Queen's Hall, when the programme will include the first and second acts of Verdi's "Otello," along with other more or less novel features. For the immediate future many other attractive concerts are announced. Admirers of Dr. Joachim will have been sorry to note, however, that it has been found necessary to postpone those of the Joachim Quartet in consequence of the veteran violinist's ill-health. At the same time, it is satisfactory to learn that he is now making a satisfactory recovery from the attack of influenza which recently laid him low.

The proposed Manns scholarship for conducting has not commended itself to the heads of the profession as quite the most suitable mode of perpetuating the memory of that estimable musician. Instead, the foundation of a Manns Benevolent Fund, to assist talented and necessitous students in any branch of music, is suggested, and, with the co-operation of the distinguished folk behind the proposal, this will doubtless find general support. Musicians and music-lovers desirous of contributing are invited to send their names and donations to Mr. F. Corder (Chairman of the Society of British Composers), at 309, Oxford-street, W.

Interesting particulars of Wagner's famous interview with Rossini are given in the Musical Times for April in the shape of a review of a booklet on the subject which has recently been published in Paris by M. E. Michotte, who was, it appears, the intermediary through whose agency the two composers were brought together. Wagner, we are told, required some persuasion before he could be induced to visit the older composer, on account of the many hard things and biting witticisms which the latter was reported to have uttered at his expense. In the event, however, he found him much more favourably disposed than he had imagined, and the conversation which passed, of which M. Michotte had the foresight to preserve notes, seems to have been of the most amicable and interesting character. One of the passages quoted is equally delightful and characteristic. Wagner, who was often much more diplomatic than is usually supposed, gratified the old master by referring to this and that passage in his operas which particularly pleased him, and pleading for the freer style of melody which he himself favoured, pointed in illustration to a passage in "Guillaume Tell" ("Sois immobile," Act III., finale), where melody of this type was to be found. To which Rossini wittily replied, "So that I have composed 'music of the future' without knowing it?" and Wagner as readily retorted, "You have made music for all time, maestro, which is better still!"

Mr. Mark Hambourg has been discussing the question, "Does it pay to become a pianist?" and it is much to be hoped that some of the aspiring young folks who aim at emulating the achievements of Rosenthal and Paderewski will read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest his answer to the question, and thereby save themselves (to say nothing of their hearers) from the pains and penalties likely to attend their misdirected efforts. There is, indeed, no branch of the musical profession in which the struggle for life is more severe and the outlook for the unsuccessful less encouraging. There are, in fact, far more pianists of the highest talent before the public already than can possibly hope to make any sort of a successful career thereby, while every season sees dozens, if not scores, added to the list. How they all contrive to make a living it is impossible to imagine, and one can well believe Mr. Hambourg when he states that the proportion of those who really do well at the game is absolutely infinitesimal. As for the rest, what is their position? Unless possessed of private means, the dreary drudgery of teaching is the only resource that remains, and that is certainly not the goal which most set before themselves at the outset.

Who says that it is only in Germany that opera is to be obtained at moderate prices? Mr. Charles Manners has been giving particulars of the rates at which the performances of the Moody-Manners Company can be witnessed in the provinces. Thus at Middlesbrough, he writes, his company recently gave operas ranging from "Tannhäuser" to "Maritana" to a fourpenny gallery, while he adds that during the same week Mr. Waller's "Robin Hood" company could have been seen at another theatre for the same sum—to say nothing of a couple of music-halls, the admission to which could be procured for an outlay of half that amount. For the rest, Mr. Manners adds that his companies repeatedly play to houses whose charges range from 4d. to 3s., and he asks why the same thing cannot be done in London. Covent Garden will doubtless take due note of the suggestion.

What should be the relative takings of composer and librettist in the case of an opera? It is a point which has been often discussed, but which has usually been settled in actual practice to the greater satisfaction of the man of music than to the man of letters. The miserable fees which have been too often paid to librettists go far, indeed, to account for the wretched quality of most of their work in the past, and therewith for the failure of not a few operas which, from the musical point of view, were worthy of a better fate. Recognition of this fact has no doubt largely contributed to the conception of juster views on the subject by modern composers, so that nowadays it is not unusual for the poet and musician to take absolutely equal shares of the profits. This is the arrangement, it is stated, which has been entered into in the case of the new opera "Camicia Rossa," upon which Leoncavallo is engaged, the book of which has been provided by Arturo Colautti.

One of the minor arts of the musician not always quite perfectly mastered is that concisely known as "turning over." The frivolous reflection suggested itself during a recent concert at which Mr. Joseph

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford-st., and Orchard st., London, W.

Holbrooke was one of the executants, and not the least praiseworthy feature of a performance otherwise excellent was the manner in which Mr. Holbrooke, scorning the services of an assistant, did his own turning over. Perhaps the work in question is printed more considerately from this point of view than is always the case. It was, at any rate, worthy of note how skilfully the player negotiated each "turn," notwithstanding the demands of a piano part calculated to make the feat more than ordinarily difficult. It used to be said of the late Mr. W. T. Best, the organist, that he had developed his skill under this head to such an extent that it was quite impossible to perceive when he turned the page—the thing partook of the nature of veritable legerdemain.

An eminent living practitioner of the art is Mr. William Saunders, whose proud function it was in the palmy days of the "Pops" to perform this important office for all the famous performers who visited us. How unobtrusively, yet with what unfailing dexterity and address, did he discharge his responsible duty! Nor did he confine his ministrations always to one performer only. Perhaps the work would be a duet or trio, and then it would be now Mme. Schumann at the piano, then Joachim, and then, again, Piatti who would requisition his services. And never, so far as recollection of the oldest "Pop-goer" serves, were they ever sought in vain. A cool head as well as light fingers were surely needed here. Of Mme. Schumann, by the way, an amusing record is extant in this connection. "Mr. Saunders," it was her practice to say as she prepared to ascend the platform, "will you please come and turn me over?" And Mr. Saunders never failed to execute that feat to her entire satisfaction.

What is the value to the concert-giver of the long lists of distinguished names which make such a brave show on concert programmes sometimes, as those of people who have given their "patronage" to the entertainment? Judging from observation, I should be inclined to say precisely nil. Certainly, it is not to be disputed that concerts commended to the public in this way more often than not fail to secure any considerable amount of support. There was a striking instance recently when a really attractive concert given by a distinguished performer, "under the patronage" of some of the greatest in the land, drew a quite surprisingly poor audience.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Dr. Heinrich Brode's somewhat confused and incoherent life of "Tippoo Tib" (1), which has been translated by Mr. Havelock, is practically an autobiography, with supplementary biographical and historical details contributed by the doctor. Tippoo Tib's own account of his eventful career must be taken with many grains of salt, as a traveller's, as an Arab's, and as a savage's tale—all three proverbially given to boastful mendacity. For Tippoo Tib, it must be remembered, had much of the savage in him hereditarily, being of mixed Arab and negro descent—the negro, judging by his portrait in the frontispiece, showing itself as the overwhelmingly predominant element in the mixture. Among other staggering statements in the autobiographical portion of the volume is Tippoo Tib's account of his accession to the Sultanate of Utetera. This account, which struck me when I read it as being incredible as a fairy tale, is admitted by Sir Charles Eliot, who contributes a preface to the volume, to be a little staggering. Tippoo Tib, having heard casually from a Shensi savage that the two sisters of the aged monarch of Utetera had been abducted years ago by a more powerful potentate, took it into his head to personate the grandson of one of these ladies, and to claim the throne of Utetera in right of this collateral relationship to the reigning Sultan. The reigning Sultan—according to Tippoo Tib—was so touched by the pretender's narrative of his pilgrimage through deserts and forests, and all the dangers of famine, pestilence, and war, only to see the home of his grandmother and the face of his grand-uncle, that he resigned to him his throne the very morning after the pilgrim's appearance! In this romantic version of his peaceful and graceful accession to the Sultanate of Utetera, you cannot help the misgiving that Tippoo Tib is imposing upon you a fabrication as monstrous as that he boasts of having imposed upon the reigning Sultan. But if Tippoo Tib is lying here, where he could be romancing only for the sake of the romance, what reliance is to be placed upon statements of his made either in his own justification or in his own glorification? By the way, you are not told whether Tippoo Tib's ascent of the throne of Utetera was consecrated by the imposing ceremonies which accompanied that of the friend, Pange Pondo, who assisted him in his imposition, and whom he rewarded for this assistance by replacing him in a Sultanate he had forfeited.

Then was Pange Pondo restored to his inheritance with great pomp. The coronation was performed in this way. His subjects, having clapped moist clay on his head and strewed flour over it, proceeded to hang round his neck a chain with ten living chickens—an ornament he had to wear for ten days, without regard to the fact that the birds died off meantime.

It was during his reign as Sultan of Utetera that Tippoo Tib met and helped Cameron, Stanley, and Wissman, and it is his relations with these famous explorers which give its chief interest to his autobiography. It is, again, his account of these relationships which made me lay stress upon the question of Tippoo Tib's veracity or unveracity. Are we, e.g., to believe, on Tippoo Tib's sole evidence, that Stanley lied unconscionably in some of the most material points of his narrative? Tippoo Tib, whether justly or unjustly, thought that Stanley repaid most scurvily his invaluable service to that explorer, and the sense of this ingratitude may have inspired Tippoo Tib's denunciations of the discoverer of Livingstone and the rescuer of Emin Pasha. At the same time, I am glad to think true Tippoo Tib's contradiction of that appalling story of Stanley's which horrified all Europe some sixteen years ago—that his lieutenant, Jameson, having bought a slave girl, had her killed and devoured by cannibals under his very eyes:—

Tippoo Tib was beside himself when he heard of this charge against Jameson, and gave vent to his feelings in the following terms:—"The story is a lie. I was not there, certainly; but I neither saw nor heard anything of it till to day among you. That he, Jameson, could do such a thing is absolutely impossible. Or do you think that I would tolerate such a thing? But I have never seen a European or any other fellow that could lie like this Stanley."

When you turn from Tippoo Tib's account of his relations with Stanley to Dr. Heinrich Brode's account of Stanley's relations with the Belgian Government, you get a hardly more favourable picture of the great explorer. After the utter failure of Stanley's first splendidly equipped Belgian commercial expedition to the Lower Congo, he returned to Brussels and persuaded the Government to establish political stations there.

Rights of sovereignty were acquired from the various chiefs, and the newly created stations sprang up like mushrooms from the soil. Forty of them were to be counted as far as the Stanley Falls. Their establishment, it is true, cost £600,000, and after a short time all but a few of them were given up, and Stanley was superseded in the conduct of these Belgian enterprises by the English Colonel, Sir Francis de Winton.

Probably King Leopold justifies to himself his blood-stained exactions on the Congo by the remembrance of the immense sums Stanley induced him to fling fruitlessly away there.

I wonder on which side will your sympathy be enlisted in Miss Willcocks' "The Wingless Victory" (2). Some side it must take vehemently, so singularly powerful and so intensely powerful are its portraits of hero and heroine. For my own part, I could not help

(1) "Tippoo Tib." The Story of his Career in Central Africa. Narrated from his own Accounts by Dr. Heinrich Brode, and translated by H. Havelock. With a Preface by Sir Charles Eliot, K.C.M.G. (London: Edward Arnold. 10s. 6d. net.)

(2) "The Wingless Victory." By M. P. Willcocks. (London: John Lane. 6s.)

(3) "Conflict." By Constance Smedley. (London: Archibald Constable and Co. 6s.)

(4) "The Long Road." By John Oxenham. With a Frontispiece in Photogravure by Harold Copping. (London: Methuen & Co. 6s.)

(5) "A Rock in the Baltic." By Robert Barr. (London: Hurst and Blackett. 6s.)

being repelled by what seemed to me the selfish flirtations and the morbid self-tormentings of the heroine, but both at least are almost hysterically feminine. Her very soul is vivisected under your eye, and you recognise the naturalness even of that part of it which seems to you diseased. Then, all the other characters, including that of the much-tried hero, the doctor, are admirably drawn, while the West-country atmosphere of the story is no less skilfully rendered. "To be up and doing—clean, brave, and strong; out in the glare of the highway, out of the heavy-scented garden where the flowers languished for their captor—man," cries the heart of the heroine of "Conflict" (3), and the cry adequately suggests the moral of this fine novel. Business and the stress and strain of an absorbing life are a moral tonic to the heroine, while giving her a wider and wiser view of life than that which left Mrs. Ellestree a victim to the fascination of such a brute as Cuvier and to her own brute passion—"raw, elemental, hideous." This outburst of brute passion is wonderfully well described, and no less skilful is the contrast between the luxury-bred weakness of this woman and the self-contained strength of the heroine due to her more bracing environment. Here are two Russian stories which will, I think, interest you, though in different ways, Mr. John Oxenham's "The Long Road" (4) and Mr. Robert Barr's "A Rock in the Baltic" (5). "The Long Road" is founded upon a decree which, however incredible, was, Mr. Oxenham assures you, really promulgated by a satanic Governor of Siberia—that an innocent victim of his malice should never be allowed to stay anywhere more than ten days. The story is terrible, as Russian stories usually are, but its sepulchral gloom is relieved by the charming love scenes between its hero and heroine. Surely Mr. Oxenham might have spared his hero and us the deaths of the heroine and of their two children. Mr. Barr's story is much brighter in itself and in its ending. It is a kind of Monte Cristo tale of the imprisonment and the escape from their prison on a Russian rock of a young English officer and a Russian prince—a thrilling tale well told—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours, very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

President Roosevelt contributes an introduction to the book in which Commander Peary relates the thrilling story of his endeavours to reach the North Pole. He managed to get nearer than any of his predecessors—hence the title, "Nearest the Pole." The volume, which will be published in England by Messrs. Hutchinson and Co., will have numerous illustrations from photographs taken by the author.

"The Escorial" and "Murillo" are two volumes (price 3s. 6d. net each) just issued in Mr. John Lane's new Spanish series. This series of volumes, which is under the editorship of Mr. Albert F. Calvert, the author of "Moorish Remains in Spain," will deal with the country in its various aspects—its history, its cities, its monuments, and its art—and a special feature will be the copiousness of the illustrations. Mr. Calvert's historical and descriptive account of the Royal Palace and Monastery of the Escorial is, for example, accompanied by no fewer han 278 admirable illustrations, while the biography and appreciation of Murillo is embellished with over 165 reproductions from photographs of his most celebrated pictures.

Though the title page of "Pen, Patron, and Public" (Greening and Co., price 5s.) bears no author's name, the reader will probably not be mistaken if he ascribes the book to one of the most brilliant writers of "the leading article of the old régime" whose disappearance he laments. Whoever the author may be, this "critical survey" exhibits an intimate knowledge of journalistic life in London during the last thirty or forty years. He does not attempt to conceal his detestation of the changes that have occurred, and on the subject of "the syndicate boss who personifies the new type of newspaper proprietorship," he writes with special bitterness:—

> By two expedients the Fleet Street operator of the twentieth century has safeguarded himself against the risk of social rivalry on the part of the poor devils of scribblers whom he sweats; he has not only disestablished the leading article as an institution; he moves his writers about so quickly from one of his journalistic properties to another that none of his staff has the time for making his mark upon any particular journal of the group; to-day the writer is at work on the Banner; to-morrow he is told off to Buttered Buns or the Keyhole Autolycus.

However, it is for its interesting sketches and anecdotes of the old journalism and the Bohemian journalists of the Victorian age, rather than for its acrid reflections on the new order of things in the newspaper world, that the book will be generally read.

Mr. Guy Eden is the author and "Bush Ballads" the title of a volume of poems mainly dealing with Australian life which is announced by Messrs. Sisley.

In a story entitled "The Fool Hath Said," which Mr. John Long is publishing, the author of that popular book, "When It was Light," deals with the New Theology identified with the name of the Rev. R. J. Campbell of the City Temple. The author's view of the New Theology may be gathered from his allusion to "the second-hand heterodoxies of Holborn Viaduct."

"'Oh, no, madam!' said the draper to the customer at the clearance sale, 'there is nothing against these pieces except that they are what we term odd lengths. They are quite our best materials—you can see for yourself. Just odd lengths.'" It is with this little introduction that Mr. W. B. Maxwell's new volume "Odd Lengths" (Methuen and Co., price 6s.) is submitted to the reader. In this volume the author of that clever and successful novel "Vivien" presents a collection of stories, long and short, grave and gay.

Mr. J. A. R. Marriott's "Life and Times of Lucius Carey, Viscount Falkland," is published by Messrs. Methuen this week. It is a critical estimate of the political career and personal character of one of the most fascinating and romantic figures upon the stage of the Puritan Revolution.

Mr. S. Baring Gould's "A Book of the Cevennes," which Mr. John Long is publishing, is uniform in scope and size with the author's well-known volumes on Cornwall, Brittainy, the Riviera, etc. There will be forty illustrations on art paper, printed in sepia, with eight plates in colours.

Mr. John Lane has issued the first number of the Albany Review, a half-crown monthly which takes the place of the Independent Review. Mr. Charles Roden Buxton is the editor, and among the contents of an excellent number are a poem by Thomas Hardy and articles by Mr. G. W. E. Russell, Mr. Andrew Lang, Mr. Harold Spender, and Mr. Oscar Browning. In politics the Review is on the side of Liberalism.

One of the most interesting literary events of the season will be the publication (by Mr. Murray) of Walter Savage Landor's "Commentary on Charles James Fox," which has been reprinted from the only existing copy of the original edition, which was carefully suppressed. This copy, which belongs to Lord Crewe, had been given by Landor to Southey, after whose death it was purchased by Lord Houghton, and it was for many years regarded as one of the most interesting of the numerous curiosities in the library at Fryston.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Has spring ever rushed out in such a hurry in any previous year? On a recent Wednesday the syringas and the rose-bushes were brown without a hint of green. On the Wednesday following they were green with hardly a trace of brown. Spring is always a miracle, but in this good year of 1907 it seems more miraculous than ever. It seemed as though she had wakened suddenly from her winter sleep, and said: "Why, Easter's here," and thereupon proceeded to hurry up her daffodils, her primroses, her tulips, and her hyacinths. "Get into your green frocks," she whispered to the rose-trees, and "Busk ye, busk ye" to the larches, the chestnuts, and the lovely almond blossom. It has all been an enchantment down here by the river, and the loveliness of everything is indescribable.

I always think, though, that we humans worry Nature dreadfully about her grass. She intends it to grow long, to run to seed, and when the seed is ripe enough to have it scattered by the wind ready to make more grass for next year. But what do we do? We turn it into turf by clippings and coercings, mowings and rollings, and chop off the heads of even the daisies directly they open their eyes upon a world militant. Have we not a special tool for rooting the poor things out? Pathetic is the persistence with which they come up again and again, forgiving us until seven times seven, only to find us down upon them remorselessly.

Our gardener was watering the rose-trees, and, noticing that he left two of them unwatered, we pointed his omission out to him. "They's furriners," was his explanation. When we had recovered from this surprise I said: "But they are just as thirsty as the English. Won't you water them?" "English roses is good enough for anybody," he remarked, as he disdainfully flicked a few drops upon the poor "furriners." And, after all, they were foreign in name only. But does not the little incident illustrate the British frame of mind towards anything that is not British? I only wish it would spread to manufactures and industries.

Richard and I were sowing mignonette the other evening in all our favourite spots, and we noticed that the robins and blackbirds and thrushes actually left off singing, so that they might give us their full attention and accurately note the precise localities where they would come next morning to eat the seeds. Richard has fed them all through the winter, and his reward is that they eat our flower seeds, and, later on, will have all the best of our fruit. And yet we cannot call them ingrates, can we?

What an effect our clothes and ornaments have on us! We dined with the Freddie Fontenelles last week, and for a long time I could not imagine what had come to my hostess. Instead of being fluffy and restless, she held her head steadily and erect, and wore her hair slightly parted in the middle and piled on high. The improvement was immense, and it all sprang from her new hair-ornament! Freddie gave her on her birthday a lovely thing—a wreath of long, slender leaves, in dull silver, clasping a great blister pearl in front. So, of course, she had to do her hair to show it, and she has done too much in private theatricals not to assume the right manner, too. She even used less slang than usual. She has a pendant to match, and she showed us the third portion of her present—a comb in green "Venus ear" pearl, mounted as wings. They are the work of an English lady, Mrs. Palotta, and Mrs. Freddie raved so about them when she saw them at the English Women's Home Industries Exhibition, of which I wrote to you, that her model husband quietly went off to 76, Upper Gloucester-place and got all the particulars from headquarters. Mrs. Freddie looks much nicer in her new little air of stateliness, to say nothing of the ornaments themselves. We are swayed by trifles, particularly sartorial trifles. Chester, for instance, always talks louder in tan boots than black. I have often noticed it.

We have all been reading a book by a French lady about England, and our conversation is sprinkled with "Pierre de Coulevain says so-and-so in 'L'Ile Inconnue.'" Although the book is in its fifty-second French edition, and has been translated into all European languages, it is only now being prepared for publication in English. We admire the generosity involved in the warm reception given to it by the French, for "Pierre de Coulevain" does not spare her countrymen. Even if it is flattering to one's reputation as a gay dog to be accused of sensuality, it cannot be anything but annoying to be told one does not wash enough! The author is evidently very desirous, as she wittily puts it, of being just to the English, and impartial to the French—"c'est bien plus difficile!" She wholeheartedly approves of our fresh air, our policemen, our nurseries, and our bathrooms, which astonish her very much, but not so much as the "enormous" cisterns which "render possible a bath every day." I read that out to Richard, to see what would happen. After an expressive glance, he asked me if I remembered the pretty little cream-jug and saucer provided for his daily bath in the hotel at St. E—— three years ago. I do remember it well, because when he tried to wash his hands he became so unmanageably homesick that he cast a gloom over our first evening away.

It was unfortunate that Pierre de Coulevain should have encountered at luncheon a party of English who stiffened when they heard she (Pierre is a woman) had been staying at Wimbledon, and warmed when they learned she was then putting up at Claridge's. For the honour of Britain one would have preferred her to fall in with some of the ordinary English folk, who can hear without excitement that a fellow-guest is staying even at such a home of kings as Claridge's, or who have at least the elementary self-control which would enable them to hide their increase of cordiality. But Mme. de Coulevain is much impressed with the prevalence of "le snobisme" in England. However, she finds an excuse for it in the high standard of manners it imposes on the middle classes. Some of the Gallicised exclamations made us laugh. Can you imagine any Englishman in ordinary unmoved conversation saying "Ah, bah!" or "Là . . . là!"?

But often the author is not at all fair. She relates her experiences at a private view of gowns named after erotic emotions, and then calls it "cette exhibition si anglaise." Nothing could well be less English, even according to her own very interesting analysis of the English character. Nor is it fair to describe us as Anglo-Saxons, without taking into consideration that the United Kingdom contains nationalities as widely varied as those between the Basque and the Belgian provinces. In analysing French character allowance is made for this complexity, but "les Britishers" (dreadful phrase!) are described as one race. Think of the man from Cork, the man from Glasgow, and the Cockney, being put in one class. I wonder which would be the most disgusted? The author finds us very male, in distinction to the Latin femininity, which she is careful to distinguish from effeminacy.

But in spite of a broad outlook, and a liking for the English, and a high opinion of Englishwomen, Mme. de Coulevain is hardly flattering to us. For instance, her unbounded admiration is given to the directors of the Lyceum Club for "risking a hundred thousand francs of rent yearly, to be paid only by the brains of women!" It seems curious that the placard, "Silence Room" should displease any one, but our critic finds it not only impertinent, but, among women, satirical. It is very broadening to see ourselves through the eyes of our neighbours, and find out which are the things that seem strange to them. Naturally, there are some points which do not please us, but Mme. de Coulevain gives us credit for more charms than France has willingly conceded to England until the Entente. Englishmen, in her pages, appear as large, rather dense persons, good-natured, sensitive, mildly humorous, devoted to their country and the welfare of their race, solid but not stolid, born fighters, very lordly but very kind to their womenfolk, very vain, and astoundingly clean. Englishwomen are big, rather clumsy, badly dressed, sensible, devoted to sport; passionate, but quiet; domestic, inclined to be stupid; without humour, with a leaning to sarcasm—and astoundingly clean! The English, taken as a whole—which "les Britishers" could not be—are hospitable, charitable, snobbish, kindly, proud, brave, plain, ungraceful, reserved, good-hearted, well-bred—and, above all things, CLEAN! Is the rest of the world wallowing in dirt, or are we really batho-maniacs? Mme. de Coulevain has a fascinating way of getting to the back of things, and looking at the pattern from there. Thus she finds that nature, not religion, presided over the sailing of the Mayflower, and that, the exiled portion of the race having acquired fresh energy, the present feminine American invasion is merely the second part of nature's plan for re-charging the ancient English stock with vitality. But oh! what would America say, at being thus denied any independence of action? How the eagle would shriek, to be told that it was a lion-cub all the time! Just the same, the theory is illuminating. You must read the book for yourself; it is exceedingly interesting, and what Mme. de Coulevain calls "very Latin." I hope, when the corresponding volume is written by an English author on France, that it will be as kind to Gaul as "L'Ile Inconnue" is to England; but I am afraid, if it is as unflattering to England as Mme. de Coulevain is to France, that it will not run to fifty-two editions here!

REDFERN.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—REDFERN, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

"LA SAMOTHRACE."—Every corset of the LONDON CORSET CO., 28, New Bond-street, W., is made in Paris. The very latest models. Not connected with any other establishment.

When out driving the other day we met Ethel on her Rudge-Whitworth, and admired the way in which she skimmed down a steep hill like a bird. We overtook her, however, on the corresponding upward slope, and remarked on her prowess. She told us that she has had her bicycle for over ten years, and that it is just as good to-day as it was when she first bought it. It has saved her endless money in railway fares, and done wonders for her health, for who could compare the air in a railway carriage, even when your fellow-passengers allow you to keep the windows open, with that of the free and breezy out-of-doors? Fred told her that if she ever should want to sell it she would get good money for it, as the Rudge-Whitworth bicycles are made of such good materials that they wear practically for ever. We recommended her to make it an heirloom, but I suppose the next generation will be getting about in air-machines.

Whenever I visit Waring's I think that the motto of this firm ought to be "Home-making made easy," that task is so greatly simplified by an inspection of the ready-furnished rooms of every kind to be seen in the unparalleled new galleries in the great Oxford-street house. One of the achievements of the firm is the combination of comfort, good taste, and beautiful colour and design in their furniture. In the case of young couples who are making their home nests quite a world of trouble must be saved. Waring's lists of requisites for the complete equipping of a house are invaluable, and, being graded to suit all varieties of income, are as indispensable to the owner of a moderate income as to the wealthy. One of the charms of Waring's is the flood of new ideas on home-making that pours in on the mind in a single saunter through the premises. And then everything necessary can be bought there, even down to glass cloths and dusters and roller-towels.

I see that Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, who is a great lover of cats and has a valuable collection of them, visited Miss Muriel Hunt's exhibition of pictures of cats and dogs at Messrs. Grundy and Robinson's, 89, Mount-street. Her Highness bought one of the pictures called "The Angel Cat," owing to the seraphic expression of the Persian pussy portrayed. The exhibition closes on the 20th. Part of the proceeds are to be devoted to the rebuilding fund of Lower Brixham Parish Church.

An old bachelor friend has sent me a collar of very pretty lace made in far away China. He wishes it to be compared with British work of a similar kind, and I am writing to tell him that it is in no way inferior. The variety of the stitches is just as great, and the fineness of the work most admirable. The design, too, is pronounced by an expert to be "clear and coherent, with a single thought running through it and cleverly elucidated." The finest drawn thread-work I ever saw came from Swatow, so the Chinese must, I think, be as clever with the needle as the women of the Faroe Islands, whose work is so wonderful. Perhaps one reason of the superior skill of the Chinese may be that with their poor cramped feet, they are more willing to sit still for hours than we, their Western sisters, whose energies are apt to run to walking. The lace collar is lovely work, and I am greatly pleased with it. I am writing to ask "Old Bachelor" if the braid in it is hand-made. Even the expert could not say. If it is really made by hand, the lace is quite a triumph of needlecraft.

Here is a delicious letter received by an English lady in India, all in the way of business:—

Vaniste,—We hope you will be happy and healthy, and we are, too.

Kindly we draw your attention towards one sum of Rs. 51 annas 8, owing to you.—Yours faithfully, ——

To the regret of many members the Green Park Club, 10, Grafton-street, is being dissolved, the proprietress, Mrs. Luther Munday, desiring to be relieved of the duties of management, which she has carried out with so much success for the past thirteen or fourteen years. An arrangement has been made which will enable members to transfer their membership to the Grosvenor-crescent Club, Hyde Park Corner, where they will have the advantage of more spacious premises. In recognition of the services of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Munday to the old club a complimentary theatrical and musical matinée is being organised by a committee of ladies. Applications for tickets should be addressed to Constance, Countess of Romney, President of the Green Park Club, at 10, Grafton-street.

I have received the following letter from Mona:—

My Dear Madge,—You ask me whether it would not be better to leave your roses unpruned. There are many questions to which it is impossible to return a plain "Yes" or "No," and this is one of them. To answer it I should have to ask you to tell me, among other things, which you prefer—a small number of large flowers or a large number of small flowers. The latter is the object generally aimed at in the treatment of climbers, for, as they are high up, masses of flowers are of more importance than individual size. For this reason it is usual to prune them very little, though even in their case some pruning is advisable. For the habit of the rose is to keep on throwing up young shoots from the base, and as these form the easiest channels for the sap, it naturally follows the lines of least resistance, and in time the older and harder shoots are starved to death. But long before this stage is actually reached there must come a time when such shoots are worthless—when they are giving no adequate return for the sap which they are taking from more profitable wood—and it is just here that the gardener should step in with his knife and remove them. In other words, his business is to encourage strong flowering shoots and to cut away all others. If there are too many of them he must thin them out, not merely to prevent an excessive dissipation of the sap, but also to let in light and air, which are essential to the ripening of the wood and therefore to flowering; if some are badly placed they also must be sacrificed. It is not possible, however, to lay down any general laws which are applicable to all roses, for different varieties, and sometimes even different individuals, have different peculiarities, which can be learnt only by careful study. For example, while many flower on the old wood, some flower on the new, the wood of the previous year. Among the latter is the beautiful Maréchal Niel, the finest yellow in existence, though more satisfactory in the conservatory than in the garden outside. Here, if you cut away last year's wood, you lose your crop of flowers.

There is another important point in the management of climbing roses, and that is the distribution of the flowers over the whole area covered by the plants. It is quite common to see them only high up, yet with care this fault may be avoided. Some varieties, it is true, have a natural tendency to bloom near the extremities of the shoots, among them being Crimson Rambler, Carmine Pillar, and Aglaia. As the shoots cannot be shortened without a corresponding loss of flowers, the best thing to do is to bend some of them down and to train them underneath. There is one alternative—to combine with them some of the less vigorous climbers, such as the Austrian Briars, Grüss an Teplitz, and l'Ideal, which naturally flower near the base. Gloire de Dijon and other very strong growers of the same class, such as Gloire Lyonnaise, may, if you wish, be treated differently. If the thick shoots which issue from the base every year are left to themselves they also will flower mainly towards the tips, but if they are cut back to different lengths, the plants will be furnished with flowering wood from bottom to top.

Important to Ladies. — You can get the real genuine Horrockses' Longcloths and Flannelettes if you insist on seeing this stamp on the selvedge: 'Horrockses.' Obtainable from the principal Drapers. Over a century's reputation.

Corset Krutoid.—The latest nouveauté Parisien in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Royal Anatomical Corsetières. 280, Regent-street, London.

In the case of dwarf or standard roses grown for garden decoration and not for exhibition, much the same principles apply. Severe pruning is not advisable for them any more than it is for climbers. If ever you have a doubt as to whether to cut or not, give the plant the benefit of it. That is what I tell David, for though Brada and I, with thick gloves on our hands, do most of the pruning ourselves, we are obliged to let him do a little, so that if at any time it should be necessary he may be able to do it all. The first thing is to clear away all dead wood, then old and useless wood, and then badly placed wood, which crosses and frays other branches or shuts out light and air. When that is accomplished it will be easier to determine how much more pruning is wanted. As a rule, last year's shoots may be reduced to from four to eight buds, according to their strength and the object in view.

This may seem terrible waste, especially when a good deal of new growth has already been made. But it concentrates the energies of the plants on the strongest shoots, and thus produces better results than would otherwise be possible, and even the new growth is not wasted, for it serves in the early months of the year as an outlet for the sap, and in this way enables the buds nearer the base to remain dormant until pruning is done, when they may start without much risk from frost. When the pruning is deferred until early April, as it should be in the case of the tender teas and hybrid teas, it must sometimes happen that very few buds are dormant. In this case, should all the buds that have started be cut away? One of the largest growers in the kingdom advises against it. He says it would cause such a severe check to the roots that the plant would be injured, and he consequently recommends that, under such circumstances, some of the newly-started growths should be left "to draw the sap." I would suggest another reason for leaving these growths, and, indeed, for not pruning at all a shoot or two on some, at least, of a collection of roses. They may gradually prolong the flowering season. There is, of course, the possibility—it may be, the probability—that they will be damaged by frost; but if they escape they will come into flower long before the shoots which do not start until after pruning. This prolongation of the flowering season is surely worth striving for in every possible way. One way in which I manage it is by bringing into the conservatory a strong shoot of a Devoniensis which is growing outside, and this shoot produces its beautiful flowers more than a month earlier than the rest of the plant. In this case, you see, I am not afraid of frost.—Your affectionate cousin,

MONA.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

DEAREST MADGE,—If only we all did our duty habitually, with as much nobility as the past Easter did, we should not find the world so full of hard ways to walk through. "No sun upon an Easter day" ever kept more faithfully to his tradition of dancing, nor shone throughout the whole day with a better grace and heartier goodwill. And even the appearance of fickle April on Monday had no influence on his sunny mood. Such steadfastness in amiability was glorious. Do not think that the Easter sunshine was only a thing of joy to those who went forth on their holiday; it was a delightful accessory to a stay-at-home holiday as well. It got one into the very frame of mind most suitable for quiet contemplation and the activities of peaceful solitude. The sunny mood in which everything seems to be for the best in the best of all worlds, and the future full of hope and cheerfulness. Indeed, it is an undoubted advantage which the stay-at-home holiday has over the more active one; bad weather has no penitential or disturbing effect on the former as on the latter, whilst sunshine considerably heightens its attractions. And then the stay-at-home need only have the world with him or her, according to special taste. Books are as modest and unselfassertive as violets, and newspapers, even in a pushful world, have limits to their pushfulness; they cannot force our attention; their world-searching records of all the worlds within the world are for us to read or not at our own good pleasure.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen had a quiet week at the Viceregal Lodge, where Lady Aberdeen, under the influence of the Easter sunshine, made good progress towards convalescence. The Secretary of State for Scotland and Lady Marjorie Sinclair were with the family party at the Viceregal Lodge, as were also Miss Grace Ridley, Miss Drummond, and Mr. Dudley Gordon. Lady Aberdeen has had a severe attack of rheumatism.

The Fairy House race meeting assembled together the festive elect and many others of the sporting world. A very numerically great world it is in this country, and one in which all variations of politics mingle pleasantly together, orange and green, with all the different shades lying between. If only we could combine in the cause of ourselves, as we do in that of the horse, might we not perhaps make as great a success of ourselves as we have made of the horse. Other race meetings of Easter week which were of social importance were the Point-to-Point Races of the 11th Hussars held on Thursday at Ratoath, in the county of Meath, and the Phœnix Park races on Saturday. These meetings were entirely suitable to a week, which, when all is said and done, is chiefly regarded as a prelude, a period of preparation for this, the historic "Punchestown Week." The weather at the end of last week was very disturbing, in particular to our sex, with regard to arrangements and preparations for Punchestown. What to wear on the occasion—always a crucial question—became as acute as our national one almost, in some of its critical phases. It required a very hopeful nature to prepare for a return of Easter sunshine. Many of us are hopeful, however, and Punchestown has a renowned fair weather tradition, besides which we like to get new frocks, weather or not. Even though it may be too dainty and delicate to face rough weather, the consciousness that the latest thing in smart costumes is lying safely in one's wardrobe is never otherwise than pleasant. Dublin is crowded for this week, of course, the hotels are full, and visitors in many houses. Lord and Lady Pembroke, with several members of their family, have taken up their residence at Mount Merrion, some four miles from Dublin on the south side. They have a party for Punchestown, as Lord O'Brien also has at Airfield, two miles nearer the capital, on the same high road. Lord and Lady Massareene have taken a house in Dublin for the week, where they will entertain a large party of guests. Lord and Lady Grenfell are also entertaining at the Royal Hospital. The record of Irish hospitality is well kept up throughout the week, entertaining being the order of the day, and of the night as well. The ball given on Monday evening by General Lawson was a farewell one, as he is leaving Dublin shortly. His departure is much regretted, his friends being many over here, where his father was a distin-

THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION.*

SUCCESS OF DR. ALABONE'S TREATMENT.

During the past forty years Dr. Alabone's method of cure has been successful in restoring thousands of sufferers to health, many of whom had previously been discharged from Chest Hospitals and Sanatoria as "beyond hope of cure." Fortunately, however, this cruel verdict has, in many instances, been reversed, as will be seen from the following letters, which are taken from hundreds of similar communications addressed to the Editor of the Christian World:

Sir,—Seeing a notice of Dr. Alabone's treatment of Consumption in your paper, I must cordially endorse the opinions therein expressed.

I have personally watched cases of tubercular disease which had been pronounced as "absolutely incurable" by our greatest specialists completely recover under his treatment. I trust the time is not far distant when Dr. Alabone's discovery will be unanimously adopted by our profession. Such a procedure would be a boon to many sufferers who can now only look forward to a lingering death.—I am, yours faithfully, W. D——, M.D., L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S.

Bloomsbury, W.C.

Sir,—No less than ten different doctors pronounced me to be suffering from "rapid Consumption," and simply prescribed medicines "to ease my last moments," as my case was "incurable and hopeless." Finding no benefit I placed myself under Dr. Alabone's care, and was indeed agreeably astonished to find a change for the better, which continued. I am now quite better and a wonder to all who knew me.

Yours faithfully, J. CONWAY.

We would recommend those of our readers who may unfortunately be suffering in Consumption to write to Dr. Alabone for particulars of his treatment, which he has kindly consented to send on application.

* "The Cure of Consumption, Chronic Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Loss of Voice, illustrated by numerous cases" (pp. 320), by Arthur Alabone, M.D.Phil., D.Sc., ex-M.R.C.S.Eng., late House Physician, Hospital for Consumption, Brompton, 38th edition, 175th thousand, price 2s. 6d., post free. Author: Arthur Alabone, M.D.Phil., D.Sc., ex-M.R.C.S.Eng., late House Physician, Hospital for Consumption, Brompton, Consulting Physician, Alabone Institute, Queen Anne Street, Cavendish Square, London, W. By the same Author: "Testimonials of Patients, with Comments on the Open-Air Treatment," price 1s.

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

guished member of the Irish judiciary. On Thursday the Lord Chancellor and Lady Walker give a ball in their fine residence, Pembroke House invitations being issued "to have the honour to meet Their Excellencies." Next week you shall hear of Punchestown and Leopardstown.—Yours truly, CLARE.

Do you like veal? If so, try it dressed à la Marian, a new recipe:—

Take from 3 to 4 lbs. of loin of veal, remove the surplus fat and fill the flap part with a farce made of pounded veal, mixed with 2 oz. of butter, 2 oz. of pounded, shred, beef suet, 4 oz. of scraped fat bacon, all seasoned with pepper and salt. When it is well mixed and smooth, mix in 2 whole eggs and 2 tablespoonfuls of mushroom purée, secure the flap so that the farce does not escape. Remove the skin from the top of the fillet and lard it with alternate strips of fat bacon and strips of pickled gherkin. Fry the veal with vegetables and butter in a stewpan until it acquires a golden colour, add half a pint of white wine, a quart of stock, and vegetables and herbs to season; cover it with a buttered paper, and braise it in the oven for about 3 hours. Remove the paper to dry the larding, strain the stock, (taking off the grease), and convert it into sauce with chopped mushroom. Simmer it for 20 minutes, squeeze it through the tammy, and re-heat it, adding a squeeze of lemon juice. Glaze the veal and serve it garnished with artichoke bottoms, alternately filled with purée of mushroom and scallops of cooked cucumber.

These escallopes de Veau à la Valenciennes will certainly please:—

First prepare a border thus: Fry a minced shalot with an ounce of butter, without allowing it to brown, add a gill of tomato purée and 3 gills of stock, and when it is boiling shower in 4 oz. of Carolina rice, replace the lid, and simmer it incessantly, without stirring, for two hours, when the rice should have absorbed all the stock, season it and put it into a well-greased border mould. Trim six small round scallops of veal, dip them in well-beaten egg, sprinkle them thickly with chopped tongue, then with bread crumbs, and fry them in hot salad oil. Arrange the scallops on the border with alternate scallops of cooked red tongue, previously warmed between two plates in the oven. Pour good tomato sauce round it, and garnish the centre with mushrooms dressed in this way: Peel a pound of white mushrooms, chop them finely, sprinkle them with lemon juice to preserve the colour, cook them with butter in a stewpan, add a spoonful of thick white sauce, a spoonful of bread crumbs, salt, pepper, of squeeze of lemon juice, and a little cream.

Timbale of macaroni à l'Indienne is a welcome change for vegetarians:—

Boil 4 oz. of Genoa macaroni until tender, but not broken, strain, and cut it into pieces half an inch long, beat 2 eggs with a gill of milk, adding salt, pepper, and a pinch of cayenne pepper, and a tablespoonful of grated Parmesan cheese; add the cut macaroni and steam it in a well-buttered timbale mould. Serve with curry sauce poured round. To make which, fry a large minced onion with 2 tablespoonfuls of salad oil in a stewpan until brown, add a large apple, cut in quarters, and a large ripe tomato, cover closely, and cook on the stove until the fruit is soft, then mix in a dessertspoonful of curry powder, one of curry paste, a tablespoonful of chutney, a dessertspoonful of Worcester sauce, a tablespoonful of flour, and a tablespoonful of French vinegar, stir in a pint of milk and a little water, stir until boiling, and simmer until reduced to half a pint; rub through a hair sieve, or the tammy, and re-heat in the stewpan, with the addition of half a gill of cream.

And finally, here is a delicious pain de fruit and cream:—

Mash a couple of pears from a tin of "pears in syrup," add the pulp of an orange and a couple of bananas, rub the fruit through a hair sieve, and mix the purée with a gill of strained rhubarb syrup, mix in half an ounce of dissolved gelatine, sufficient cochineal to make it a delicate pink colour, and half a wineglass of old sherry. Set it in a pipe mould, and when turned out, serve whipped cream in the centre.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS

Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,

17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

THE MUTUAL LIFE

INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Announces the issue of

NEW FORMS OF CONTRACT

providing for

ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS

with several options each year.

Liberal Loan and Surrender Values and Various Modes of Settlement.

FUNDS OVER £100,000,000 SECURELY INVESTED.

Apply for particulars Head Office for the United Kingdom—

16, 17, 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

J. H. HARRISON HOGGE, General Manager

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

SICKNESS, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY & FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

CAPITAL (fully subscribed) £1,000,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

CLAIMS PAID £5,000,000.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

KENSINGTON PALACE GARDENS.

TWO LARGE detached TOWN MANSIONS, just erected, and known as "ARUNDEL" and "ESTCOURT," to be SOLD (Crown lease), or would be LET on LEASE. For particulars apply—

Holloway Bros., 43, South Audley-st., Grosvenor-sq., W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars, Schools also recommended. Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street. Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard.

ENGINEERING.

A limited number of PREMIUM PUPILS are received at the LOUGHBOROUGH WORKS of the BRUSH ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING COMPANY, LIMITED, as an introduction to professional employment with associated companies at home and abroad. Pamphlets describing two courses—

(a) ELECTRICAL AND MECHANICAL ENGINEERING;

(b) TRACTION ENGINEERING (STEAM, PETROL, and ELECTRIC)—

will be sent on application to Colonel HILTON, Superintendent of Pupils, Falcon Works, Loughborough.

DIRECTORS.

Lord Vaux of Harrowden, G. A. Cornwallis West, C. S. B. Hilton, W. L Madgen.

INCORPORATED ACCOUNTANTS' EXAMINATIONS.

THE Council of the Society of Accountants and Auditors (incorporated 1885) announce that the next Examinations for Candidates resident in England will be held in London and Manchester on the following dates:—

Preliminary Examination on June 4 and 5.
Intermediate Examination on June 5 and 6.
Final Examination on June 4, 5, and 6.

Candidates desirous of presenting themselves must give notice on or before May 18.

Forms of application and all information may be obtained of—

JAMES MARTIN, Secretary.

4, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.

TO Contributors to the "TRUTH" DOLL SHOW.—A lady desires assistance in dressing dolls in character for an educational purpose.—Inquiries to Miss SEWELL, King's Langley.

AUTHORS' MSS. REQUIRED.—Novels, Short Stories, Essays, or other Original Compositions, for publication in book or pamphlet form.—S. DAVIS & CO., Publishers, 30, St. Swithin's-lane, E.C.

SOUTH KENSINGTON HOTEL

Noted for its Comfort and Convenience. QUEEN'S GATE TERRACE, S.W. One of the most fashionable Hotels in London.

Telephone No. 573 Kensington. Telegrams—"South Kensington Hotel, London."

ROWLAND'S
MACASSAR OIL FOR THE HAIR

Unsurpassed. Unequalled.

Use it for your own and your children's hair and you will find it Preserves, Nourishes, Enriches, and Restores it more effectually than anything else. Golden Colour for fair or grey hair.

Bottles, 3/6, 7/-, 10/6. Sold by Stores, Chemists, Hairdressers, and ROWLAND'S, 67, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON.

Self-Developing Plates.

Amateurs and Professionals should use the WELLINGTON

'WATALU' SELF-DEVELOPING PLATES.

MANUFACTURED UNDER LICENCE FROM SELF-DEVELOPING PLATE CO., LTD.

WATER ONLY required in Development!
NO messy chemicals!
NO expensive stock solutions!
JUST plain water.

Sole Manufacturers:
WELLINGTON & WARD,
ELSTREE, HERTS.
Retail Agents everywhere.

You cannot possibly have a better Cocoa than

EPPS'S

A fragrant, delicious, and most healthful beverage.

COCOA

You will find it the very Cocoa you want.

THE CYCLE WITH A NAME
and reputation, guaranteeing its future behaviour and its owner's comfort and ease, is after all
THE BEST INVESTMENT.
For upwards of 30 years
OUR FAMOUS
Singer CYCLES
have been giving unlimited satisfaction in every corner of the globe, yet the price is no more than much of the comparative rubbish.
The "Singer" perfect oil bath case makes cycling a luxury.
— LISTS FREE. —
Dept. T, SINGER & CO., Ltd., COVENTRY.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

COWES.—Messrs. MARVINS, Princes Buildings. Agency for Sale, Purchase, or Charter of Yachts. Also House and Estate Agency for Isle of Wight. Established 1858 and patronised by Royalty.

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—Messrs. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8. Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

Have you read - -
The Gold Worshippers
By J. B. HARRIS BURLAND? 6s.
If not, kindly note the name and put it on your list.
Here are a few Press Notices.

The Tribune.—"It is a marvellous story."
Daily Mail.—"Mr. Harris Burland has forced his way to the head of the writers of mystery. . . . As a real 'thriller' this tale will be hard to beat among books of its kind."
Daily Express.—"A well-told 'thriller.'"
Newcastle Journal.—"Mr. Harris Burland places himself in the front rank of modern novelists."
Notts Guardian.—"It is an intensely sensational story, cleverly illustrating the world-old theme of the madness for gold."
"There is," says the Morning Leader, "the proper thrill in it, and one does not want it to end."
Glasgow Herald.—"The author keeps us interested throughout."
Publisher and Bookseller.—"The book contains as many thrills as it does pages."
Northern Whig.—"There is not a dull line in it."
Truth.—"A 'thriller' of the most effective kind."

The Gold Worshippers
GREENING & CO., LTD., Charing Cross Mansions.

From Chatto & Windus's Spring List.

VENICE.

By BERYL DE SÉLINCOURT and MAY STURGE-HENDERSON.

With 30 Plates in Colours after REGINALD BARRATT, A.R.W.S., 10s. 6d. net.
300 Large-Paper Copies, parchment binding, 21s. net.

Scotsman.—"The authors invoke with good effect the spirit of the place. Mr. Reginald Barratt's pictures do the same in their own more direct fashion."

FUTURE LIFE, IN THE LIGHT OF ANCIENT WISDOM AND MODERN SCIENCE.

By LOUIS ELBÉ.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. net.

British Weekly.—"So translated as to preserve the grace and lucidity of the original . . . . A timely and stimulating contribution to the solution of a question which must ever be attractive and important to mortals."

MOLIÈRE: A BIOGRAPHY.

By H. C. CHATFIELD-TAYLOR.

With 10 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

Scotsman.—"A work at once readable and interesting as a study of genius."

Telegraph.—"Scholarly and popular . . . thoroughly workmanlike . . . engagingly interesting."

JULIE DE LESPINASSE.

By The MARQUIS DE SEGUR.

With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

SPECTATOR.*—"One of the most enthralling and touching books that have been published of late years."

Truth.—"A fascinating biographical study."

Standard.—"As in a mirror in these pages the brilliant society of that wonderful epoch is depicted."

Daily Telegraph.—"A valuable work . . . . Something of her history . . . has been used by Mrs. Humphry Ward in 'Lady Rose's Daughter,' but here is a case in which truth is at least as strange as fiction."

New Fiction.

HER HONOUR.

By ROBERT MACHRAY. 2s. 6d. net.

LOVE WILL VENTURE IN.

By AMELIA BARR. 2s. 6d. net.

The DREAMS of SIMON USHER.

By ALGERNON GISSING. 2s. 6d. net.

Scotsman.—"Engrossing novel . . . strong and able book which soon sets going a quiet intensity of interest that remains unbroken to the end."

MONSIEUR DE PARIS.

By MARY C. ROWSELL. 2s. 6d. net.

World.—"A brisk and picturesque story."

HIS WIFE'S REVENGE.

By G. R. SIMS. 2s. 6d. net.

Court Journal.—"Mr. G. R. Sims is the greatest living writer of sensational stories. . . . From the beginning the reader will inevitably become absorbed."

THE OBLIGING HUSBAND.

By FRANK BARRETT. 2s. 6d. net.

Daily Chronicle.—"It is tenderly written and its sympathies are warm."

A FREE SOLITUDE.

By ALICE PERRIN. 2s. 6d. net.

The Standard.—"Marked by all the delicacy and restraint and charm of 'East of Suez.'"

THE SPANISH NECKLACE.

By B. M. CROKER. 2s. 6d. net.

Glasgow Herald.—"Rivets the attention, and will only be put down when the last page is read."

THE BELTED SEAS: A ROMANCE.

By ARTHUR COLTON. 3s. 6d.

Athenæum.—"The book is distinctly entertaining. . . . The narrator . . . serves us generously from a full dish of incident, humour, and adventure."

Chatto & Windus, 111, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

Mr. Putnam Weale's New Book.

THE TRUCE IN THE EAST; AND ITS AFTERMATH.

Being a Sequel to "The Re-shaping of the Far East."
With Illustrations and Maps. 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

The Daily Telegraph.—"This able and interesting volume. . . . It should be read by all who would know anything of the changing situation in the Far East."

17th Edition Revised.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION.

By Sir EDWARD CREASY. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

NEW 6s. NOVELS.

JOHN GLYNN.

A Story of Social Work.

By ARTHUR PATERSON.

HER MAJESTY'S REBELS.

By SIDNEY ROYSE LYSAGHT.

HOW DOTH THE SIMPLE SPELLING-BEE. By OWEN WISTER.

Illustrated. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

MADAME DE TREYMES.

By EDITH WHARTON. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

ONE OF THE GRENVILLES.

By S. R. LYSAGHT,
Author of "Her Majesty's Rebels," &c.
New and Cheaper Impression. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SALE OVER 4,700,000 COPIES.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, bound in green cloth, price 2s. each; bound in red cloth, price 2s. 6d. each. May be obtained at all Booksellers', where a complete List of the Thirty-eight Stories may be seen.

MACMILLAN & CO., Ltd., London.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

☞ FIRST IMPRESSION NEARLY SOLD OUT.
SECOND IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

POISON ISLAND.

By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH ("Q").

THE MORNING POST says: "No one who loves to read of gay adventures will regret 'Q's' daring on falling back on the oldest of themes . . . . The story is not only exciting and full of rare humour, but also full, even as 'Treasure Island' itself, of the true spirit of adventure."

THE ULTRAMARINES:

A Story of Colonial Life.

By COLONEL A.

THE SPECTATOR says: "Written with humour, with the full knowledge which makes reticence possible, and with irony which is never unpleasant . . . . In addition to the instructive picture of colonial life there is a skilfully managed love-story."

THE PRINCE'S VALET.

By JOHN BARNETT. [Just Published.

 The story of a servant of Charles Edward, relating with spirit and success various adventures of the Prince. It is a very striking and convincing picture of one of the most romantic figures in history.

AMALIA. By GRAHAM HOPE.

THE PALL MALL GAZETTE says: "This delightful novel will undoubtedly have a wide success. It is most charmingly written."

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

Messrs. HURST and BLACKETT

PUBLISH TO-DAY

A NEW COMPLETE NOVEL

By MORLEY ROBERTS,

THE FLYING CLOUD.

Crown 8vo, price 6s.

Next Week.

THE SECRETS OF THE VATICAN.

The only Complete Account of the Papal Palace in English, with an Account of the Papal System and the Organisation of the Vatican Hierarchy.
With 60 Illustrations, reproduced from Photographs and Old Prints.
By DOUGLAS SLADEN,
Author of "In Sicily," "Queer Things about Japan," &c.
Royal 8vo, 21s. net. Detailed Prospectus on application.

NEARLY READY.

NEW VOLUME OF STORIES

By W. W. JACOBS.

SHORT CRUISES.

With 38 Illustrations and a Cover Design by WILL OWEN.
Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.

MALCOLM CANMORE'S PEARL.

By AGNES GRANT HAY.
Crown 8vo, Cloth, with a Frontispiece, price 6s.
First and Second Editions Exhausted. Third Edition Now Ready.

INDISCREET LETTERS FROM PEKING.

Edited by B. L. PUTNAM WEALE,
Author of "Manchu and Muscovite," &c.
1 vol., Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"These remarkably 'indiscreet' letters are more exciting than ninety-nine novels out of a hundred."—Daily Graphic.

"The writer roughly drags aside the veil which a discreet diplomacy has drawn over the truth, and gives us . . . . . a book remarkable alike for its sincerity, its dramatic power, and its amazing indiscretion. The lurid account here given of the sack of Peking by the Allied Armies is an appalling revelation of the demoralisation into which the troops fell."—Morning Post.

Just Published. Invaluable to Amateur Horse-dealers.

THE HORSE:

Its Selection and Purchase.

Together with the Law of Warranty, Sale, &c.
By F. T. BARTON, M.R.C.V.S.,
Author of "Our Friend the Horse," &c., &c.
With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

OLD ST. PETER'S AND THE CRYPT OF ST. PETER'S AT ROME.

By DOUGLAS SLADEN. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

"The picture is drawn with admirable fidelity and skill and painted in charming and realistic colours."—Scotsman.

A GALLANT OF GASCONY.

A Romance of Marguerite de Valois.
By PHILIP L. STEVENSON,
Author of "A Gendarme of the King," "The Black Cuirassier," &c.

"A graphic and stirring piece of work."—Times.

A ROCK IN THE BALTIC.

By ROBERT BARR,
Author of "The Prince of Good Fellows," &c.

THE HOUSE OF REST.

By Mrs. FRED REYNOLDS,
Author of "Hazel of Hazeldean," "In Silence," &c. Second Edition.

MY LADY NAN.

By BESSIE DILL,
Author of "The Lords of Life," "The Final Goal," &c.

A JURY OF THE VIRTUOUS.

By PATRICK HOOD.

THE WHEEL.

A Book of Beginnings.

By M. URQUHART,
Author of "A Tragedy in Commonplace."

THE WORLD OF CRIME.

By M. GORON, late Chief of the Paris Detective Police.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 182, High Holborn, W.C.

PROSPECTS OF THE BUDGET

By HAROLD COX, M.P.
With special reference to the reduction of Income tax,
See this month's
"Financial Review of Reviews."

"WILL CONSOLS RECOVER?"

By HENRY LOWENFELD.

J. HOLT SCHOOLING, F.S.S.

on

WORLD TRADE and the GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF CAPITAL.

and a SPECIAL ARTICLE on the

INVESTMENT OF TRUST FUNDS,

By OSMAN H. GIDDY, F.I.S. (of Messrs. Giddy & Giddy).

IN THE APRIL NUMBER,

"Financial Review of Reviews,"

of all Booksellers, or from the Publisher, at 2, Waterloo-pl., London, S.W.

Price 1s.

Annual Subscription, 10s. post free, starting with any issue.

ROBERT W. CHAMBERS'S NEW NOVEL.

THE TRACER OF LOST PERSONS.

6s. "Mr. Chambers has hit upon a distinctly clever move in this delightful series of short stories."—STANDARD.

J. S. FLETCHER'S NEW NOVEL.

DANIEL QUAYNE.

6s. "The author of 'The Threshing Floor' has given us a really remarkable successor. . . . . The story has a fresh and an earnest note of its own, and it grapples manfully with some peculiarly profound and neglected problems in human passion and declension.—STANDARD.

Miss PHYLLIS BOTTOME'S NEW NOVEL.

THE IMPERFECT GIFT.

6s. By the Author of "Raw Material."

This powerful novel, by HORACE A. VACHELL, Author of "THE HILL," "BROTHERS," &c., entitled has three of the essentials of success: a theme of unselfish love, a plot of unforced originality, and an interest cumulative to the last page. 6s.

HER SON

JOHN MURRAY,
Albemarle St., W.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition just published. Post free, 3s. 9d.

London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch-street.

"TRUTH"

Can be obtained at THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

Cassell & Co.'s New and Forthcoming Volumes.

RED RUSSIA. By John Foster Fraser.
With 48 Full-page Plates from Photographs. 6s.
"Red Russia" takes us right behind the scenes of Russia's tragedy. We are given a truthful view of Russian life. The happenings in the land of the Czar wear a new aspect when we view them through the pages of Mr. Foster Fraser's book. It is as interesting as a novel to the reader who would know his Russia as it really is. (Ready April 26.)

LORD BEACONSFIELD & OTHER TORY MEMORIES. By T. E. Kebbel.
With Portrait Frontispiece. 16s. net.
The largest section of these "Memories" is made up of intimate talks with, and reminiscences of, Lord Beaconsfield, which throw new light upon such questions as his attitude towards the Church of England and towards Parliamentary Reform, as well as upon his personal tastes and literary predilections. Abounding as it does in piquant stories, the volume is as interesting to the general reader as it is valuable to the student of political affairs. (Ready April 19.)

WORRY—THE DISEASE OF THE AGE. By Dr. C. W. Saleeby. 6s.
In his book Dr. Saleeby demonstrates the futility of worry and its relations to disease, work, and the religious life. He shows the affinity between worry and physical disease, and deals with the evil effects of drugs and drinks and the abuse of hypnotics and narcotics. (Ready April 19.)

A SEA DOG OF DEVON: A LIFE OF SIR JOHN HAWKINS. By R. A. J. Walling.
Containing Introduction by LORD BRASSEY. With Frontispiece.
6s. net.
This book is the first attempt at a biography of Sir John Hawkins. His career included many of the most thrilling exploits in the annals of sea warfare. The parts played by Hawkins in the Feria Plot, in the building up of England's naval greatness, and in the defeat of the Spanish Armada are all examined in detail. (Ready April 19.)

BEAUTIFUL GARDENS. By Walter P. Wright.
With 2 Coloured and 48 Half-Tone Plates. Price 6s. net.
How to make flower gardens of rich and original beauty, how to make them quickly, and how to make them cheaply, are shown with pen, sketch, and photograph. The work is enriched with a series of practical plans and diagrams, in addition to a large number of exquisite garden photographic pictures. (Now Ready.)

NEW FICTION NOW READY.

THE SOUL OF MILLY GREEN. By Mrs. Harold Gorst.
It is by unflinching dealing with facts, by refusing to blind herself to the evil which stares us in the face every day, that Mrs. Gorst endeavours to bring home to her readers the tragedy of sordid lives. But her pages are also full of humour; it is mostly in broad outline that she deals with the black side of existence.
With Photogravure Portrait of the Author. 6s.

THE DIAMOND SHIP — By MAX PEMBERTON.	6/-
PRINCESS MARITZA — By PERCY BREENER.	6/-
A STRONG MAN'S VOW — By JOSEPH HOCKING.	3/6
THE RED LIGHT — By C. E. C. WEIGALL.	3/6
THE KINGMAKERS — By ARMIGER BARCLAY.	6/-
THE BACHELORS — By CHARLES EDDY.	6/-
A LOST SUMMER — By THEO DOUGLAS.	6/-
THE LATE TENANT — By GORDON HOLMES.	6/-
HER LADYSHIP'S SILENCE — By MARIE CONNOR LEIGHTON.	6/-
THE QUEST OF EL DORADO — By WILMOT WARING.	6/-
THE FROZEN VENUS — By HARRY LONGLEY LANDER.	6/-

CASSELL & CO., Ltd., London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne.

THE CARE OF THE HAIR.

A Warning against the use of "Cure-all" Hair Remedies.

Do you know that there are scores of different ways in which your hair may be attacked, and which lead in the long run to baldness, or greyness, or scurf, or scalp irritation?

It may be attacked in the root, in the shaft, or even in the sac or follicle in which it grows.

You may be rendered bald through the action of some microbe, or some minute vegetable organism, or through the action of scurf, or through atrophy of the hair-bulb.

Your hair may be too greasy or it may be too dry, it may be planted too tightly in the skin of your scalp or too loosely; greyness or discoloration may be due to several different reasons, irritation of the scalp to half-a-dozen others.

Greyness, baldness, scurf, and irritation of the scalp are not the same disorders, nor are their causes alike. The same remedy cannot cure them all.

If you wish to possess, cultivate, or keep a good head of hair you must know something about its structure and its nature. This is fully explained in a most interesting book entitled "The Hair: its Growth and its Disorders," which every reader of "Truth" who is suffering from any hair complaint may obtain free of all charge by writing to Mr. Warner Oliver, consultant on the hair, of 4, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London, W.

This book contains no puff or advertisement of any of the specific, so-called "cure-all" hair restoratives, whether for external or internal use, and nothing is offered for sale—therefore its readers can rely upon the advice which it gives as regards the general treatment of the hair, and the steps to be taken when hair trouble exists. All that is necessary when writing is to mention "Truth," and to state whether you are Mr., Mrs., Miss, Rev., or titled, and a copy will be sent to you gratis and post free.

CONCERTS.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
QUEEN'S HALL.
SATURDAY NEXT, at 3.
Conductor, HERR ARTHUR NIKISCH.
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d. (all 1s. tickets sold), at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall; usual Agents'; and L. G. Sharpe, 61, Regent-street, W.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
ELENA GERHARDT and ARTHUR NIKISCH.
FIRST RECITAL THIS SEASON.
THURSDAY NEXT, April 11, at 3.15.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall, and usual Agents'.
CONCERT-DIRECTION DANIEL MAYER,
Chatham House, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

OLD WELCOME CLUB, Earl's Court, S.W.
In connection with
BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION.
President:
Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS, V.C., K.G., K.P., O.M., &c
Chairman:
PAUL CREMIEU-JAVAL, Esq., J.P.
Committee:
The Earl of Warwick and Brooke.
The Lord Burton, K.C.V.O.
The Lord Burnham, K.C.V.O.
The Right Hon. Sir Edward Carson, K.C., M.P.
The Right Hon. W. G. Ellison-Macartney.
Capt. the Hon. Alwyn H. Fulke-Greville, M.V.O.
Sir William Robinson, G.C.M.G.
Sir Thomas Sutherland, G.C.M.G.
Major-General Sir Owen Tudor Burne, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.
Sir Eyre Massey Shaw, K.C.B.
Sir Richard R. Awdry, K.C.B.
Sir Henry Bergne, K.C.B., K.C.M.G.
Admiral Sir Albert H. Markham, K.C.B.
Sir Charles Malcolm Kennedy, K.C.M.G., C.B.
Sir George C. M. Birdwood, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., M.D., LL.D.
Sir Manchergee M. Bhownaggree, K.C.I.E.
Sir Walter Roper Lawrence, Bart., K.C.I.E.
Colonel Sir Augustus FitzGeorge, K.C.V.O.
Admiral Sir Adolphus FitzGeorge, K.C.V.O.
Sir John Furley, C.B.
Sir Arthur J. R. Trendell, C.M.G.

The Exhibition, which is under the patronage of H.M. the King of Servia, H.R.H. the Prince of Bulgaria, and H.R.H. the Prince of Montenegro, will be opened on May 4.

The Committee are now prepared to receive applications for membership. Members of the principal London clubs are eligible for election without being proposed and seconded. All other candidates must be proposed and seconded by members of the Club.

Subscription for the season, including admission to exhibition and special badge, three guineas.

Members are permitted to introduce as visitors three ladies and two gentlemen to the Club on every day that the exhibition is open to season ticket-holders. Members can also have the season tickets of their wives, daughters, and sisters resident with them endorsed as available for the Club.

Particulars and forms of application can be obtained from the Secretary, the Old Welcome Club, Exhibition-buildings, Earl's Court, S.W.

AMUSEMENTS.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES. EVERY EVENING at 8. (Doors open 7.40). MATINEE, SATURDAY NEXT, at 2 (doors open 1.40). THE NEW ALADDIN, a musical extravagance. Box-office open daily from 10 to 10.

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.—Managers, A. & S. GATTI. EVERY EVENING at 8.0, THE BELLE OF MAYFAIR, by Charles H. E. Brookfield and Cosmo Hamilton, the Music by Leslie Stuart, 2nd Edition. MATINEE WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2. (Last Week).

SAVOY THEATRE. — TO-NIGHT (Wednesday) 8.25. PATIENCE. Also April 11, 13, 15, 16, 18, 20, 22, 24, 26, 29, 30, May 2, 4. Sat. Mats., April 6, 13, 27. THE GONDOLIERS, April 17, 23, 25, May 1, 3, 8.25. Sat. Mat., April 20. THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD, April 12, 19, 27, 8.25. Sat. Mat., May 4.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr. George Edwardes. Every Evening at 8.15, Matinee Every Saturday at 2.30, a new Comedy Opera entitled
THE LADY DANDIES (The Merveilleuses).

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30 in "Mr. SHERIDAN."
A Comedy in four acts by Gladys Unger.
MATINEE every Saturday, at 2.30.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. MATINEE, WEDS. and SATS. at 3 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman), CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. At 8.20 and 2.20, THE DRUMS OF OUDE. All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, for 4 nights only,
MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE.
Mr. LEWIS WALLER. Miss EVELYN MILLARD.
MATINEE TO-DAY (WEDNESDAY) and SATURDAY NEXT at 2.30.

New Production, CLANCARTY, April 16.

ALDWYCH THEATRE, Strand.—Sole Lessee and Manager, CHARLES FROHMAN. At 8, CHARLES FROHMAN presents
EDNA MAY in NELLY NEIL.
Matinee Saturdays at 2. 2nd Edition. New Songs. New Dances.

WALDORF THEATRE. Aldwych, W.C.
Sole Lessees—THE MESSRS. SHUBERT.
TO-NIGHT and Every Evening at 8.15, Mr. Benbrick Blanchard presents
MISS SYBIL ARUNDALE
In a new Musical Play by Claude Arundale, entitled
THE GIPSY GIRL.
Mr. Gordon Cleather, Mr. Aubrey Fitzgerald, Mr. Fred Eastman, Miss Grace Arundale, Mlle. Andree Corday, Miss Annie Esmond. Mat. every Sat. at 2.30. Box-office, 10 to 10. Tel., 3330 Ger.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Alexia, Danseuse de Genre; Millman Trio, Mlle. Bresina, Kitty Traney, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, "L'AMOUR," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45. Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—ADA REEVE, Bransby Williams, Living Pictures, THE DEBUTANTE, New Grand Ballet, Mlle. Genee, Première Danseuse, Miss Marquis, Leon Rogee, the Biograph, &c. Every Evening at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—TORTAJADA, MARGARET COOPER, NIBLO, MAS ANDRES, &c. GRAND NATIONAL, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). Special Priced Mats., Sats., 2.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Portrait Model of the Rev. R. J. Campbell. The Late Baroness Burdett-Coutts. Realistic Tableau, Scene from Robin Hood. Delightful Music. Afternoon Teas. Open 10 till 10.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY,
at 2 and 8 p.m.
AN ENTERTAINMENT OF UNEXAMPLED BRILLIANCE.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES.—St. George's Hall, Langham-place, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. Mr. J. N. Maskelyne and £1,000 Ghost. Long and varied Holiday programme. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 4s., 5s., unreserved 1s. Children under 12 half-price. Babies not admitted. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

HENGLER'S CIRCUS.—TWICE DAILY, 2.30 and 8. Grand new Fairy Spectacle, "BEAUTY AND THE ENCHANTED PRINCE." Circus programme includes Martialo, the wonderful Continental Juggler, Celest on the high wire, Yelding in Blindfold Jockey Act, Hengler's Clowns, &c. Prices 1s. to 5s. Children half-price. Balcony, 6d.

EXHIBITIONS.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

DORE'S GREAT MASTERPIECES. — Raphael's lost Masterpiece "The Holy Family"; Pastels, Oils, and Water Colours by ANDRE SINET; Water Colours of Devon and Cornwall, by J. SHAPLAND; Water Colours by J. H. LEONARD, &c.
DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

Extraordinary Values
IN Carpets

Waring's Special Spring Show

Now is the season of house renovations, when many people are looking for Carpets which have such a combination of artistic distinction with moderate price as will ensure delightful results at a comparatively small outlay.
This can be achieved nowhere so well as at who, in pursuance of their definite policy of making artistic furnishing as economical as possible, have just laid in a unique stock of new Special Carpets, which for style and price surpass anything ever put upon the market, characterised by dignity of design and possessing the distinctive cachet of Waring refinement.

WARING'S

The "Orient" Dining-Room Carpet

(Suitable for a room having a linoleum surround). This is a seamless Axminster reproduced from the old-fashioned or original Turkey carpet, and having all its brilliance of colour. Size 14 ft. 6 in. by 11 ft. 3 in.

Price £2 17s. 6d.

The "Khymera" Carpet

Wonderful reproductions of old Persian carpets, for Hall, Library, Morning or Dining Room. Size 10 ft. by 6 ft.

Price £3 5s. 0d.

These rugs have all the soft richness and effect of the originals, and are equal in appearance to those which cost from £10 to £20.

These are only a few out of scores of examples of the wonderful Waring value. All varieties and grades of Carpets are kept in stock, and every requirement can be satisfied.

NEAR OXFORD CIRCUS, W.

THE Equitable

LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY

OF THE UNITED STATES.

PAUL MORTON, President.

The following are the principal figures from the Society's Annual Report.

TOTAL ASSETS at Dec. 31, 1906	£89,223,607
SURPLUS OVER ALL LIABILITIES, including amounts held awaiting apportionment upon deferred bonus policies	£14,122,028
CASH BONUSES PAID TO POLICY-HOLDERS in 1906, being the largest amount of Cash Bonuses ever paid by any Company in a single year	£1,523,771
TOTAL PAYMENTS TO POLICY-HOLDERS in 1906	£9,163,644
THE NUMBER OF POLICIES ISSUED and PAID FOR during the year was 34,717, representing new assurance amounting to	£17,127,013
A Decrease has been effected in Commissions of	£474,255
and in General Management expenses of	£348,166
Making a TOTAL DECREASE IN EXPENSES of	£822,421

The ratio of expense to premium income was reduced from 22·6% to 19·34%.
The ratio of total expenses to total income was reduced from 17·38% to 14·48%.

Income from Interest, Dividends, and Rents in 1906	£3,751,245
The Income from Interest increased by	£357,710

The rate of interest on Society's Funds showed an increase from 4·03 to 4·26 for 1906.
The Society's accounts for 1906 have been verified and certified by Messrs. Haskins & Sells, Accountants, of London & New York.

Extract from President Morton's recent circular to policy-holders:—"THE EQUITABLE SOCIETY has never, since its existence, been in better financial condition than at the present time. Its assets were never more securely invested."

Before increasing your assurance send postcard for full particulars of the Society's new Standard policies, drafted by the New York State Legislature solely in the interests of the policy-holder, and including more privileges than ever before offered to assurers.

BRITISH BRANCH (Established 40 years). All the advantages of a local office. Policies issued and claims paid from London. Payments to British Policy-holders in 1906 over £400,000.

Head Office for United Kingdom:* 6, PRINCES STREET, LONDON, E.C.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

ALASSIO.—GRAND HOTEL, Alassio. The leading first-class house in the finest position. Electric Elevator.—A. MARSON, Prop.

ALASSIO.—HOTEL MEDITERRANÉE. Large garden. Sea view. Sheltered position. Auto. Garage. Moderate charges.—E. BOGLIOLE, Prop.

ALASSIO.—THE SALISBURY. Proprietor, Mr. JOHN CONGREVE.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop. A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BORDIGHERA. — HOTEL ANGST. Leading hotel. Patronised by English Society. Luxuriously furnished. English sanitation.—Proprietor, ADOLFO ANGST.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL ROYAL. High-class hotel. Full South. The most fashionable house. Garden.—L. PALOMBI, Prop.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL BELVEDERE LOMBARDI. The favourite English hotel.—Prop., G. WUNSCHMAUN. Madame is English.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CANNES.—GRAND HOTEL BRISTOL, CENTRAL. First-class hotel, situated in a most charming position.—Pr., T. SCHAER.

CANNES. ROST'S CONTINENTAL HOTEL. One of the finest hotels on the Riviera. Unrivalled Sea view.—Prop., H. ROST.

CANNES.—PRINCE DE GALLES HOTEL. First-class. Suites with private baths. Central heating. Large garden.

CANNES.—GRAND HOTEL DE PROVENCE. First-class, quiet and select quarter. Large gardens. English house.

CHEMIST. — GINNER & CO., Court Chemists. The English Pharmacy, 40, Rue d'Antibes, Cannes. Tel. 527.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHATEAUX D'OEX.—GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,000 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ. — GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN. — HOTEL BELLEVUE. — World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL ROYAL GRANDE BRETAGNE. First-class. Full south. Open all the year.—CHIOSTRI, Props.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GENOA.—GRAND HOTEL ISOTTA. Best central situation. All modern improvements. Hot water heating.—E. MOSER, Dir.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

GRASSE. — GRAND HOTEL. Patronised by her late Majesty.—Proprietor, F. ROST. Open from Sept. 16 to July.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also Pavilias. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. All comforts.

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors. W. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD). — HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BEAU RIVAGE. First-class family house. Write for illustrated pamphlet.—C. GIGER, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church

MENTONE.—HOTEL DES ANGLAIS. Leading English house. Two English billiard tables. Garage.—Proprietress, Madame ARBOGAST. P. GIORGI, new Manager.

MENTONE.—RIVIERA PALACE. Suites with private baths. 300 rooms.

MENTONE.—HOTEL MONT FLEURI. First-class. Central. Heating. Lift. Electric light. Charmingly situated on elevated position.

MENTONE.—BEAU RIVAGE. First-class hotel at moderate prices. Full south, facing sea.—KASPAR TREPP, Proprietor.

MENTONE.—HOTEL DE TURIN. Central position, full south. Large garden. Modern comfort.—J. WARTH, Proprietor.

MENTONE.—ALEXANDRA HOTEL. First-class. Under new management. Reorganised. Redecorated throughout.

MENTONE.—ANGLO-AMERICAN ESTATE AGENCY. Complete list of Villas, Flats, Apartments for rent and for sale.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First-class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths.

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTE CARLO.—HOTEL DU HELDER. Modern comfort. Central heating. Situated close to Casino.—A. BREMOND, Prop.

MONTE CARLO.—HOTEL HARTER ET MEDITERRANEE. First-class. Facing sea and Casino.—Prop., CH. HARTER.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES. — GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Recommended for its cuisine, position, and comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE — GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

NICE, Cimiez.—WINTER PALACE. One of the finest and most comfortable hotels in Europe.—J. AGID, Director.

NICE.—MEYER'S PARK HOTEL, Villa Arson. First-class. Situated in its own magnificent Park. Moderate terms.

NICE.—HOTEL TERMINUS. Opposite railway station. First-class, up-to-date. New winter garden.—H. MORLOCK, Prop.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Props., HILLBRAND & BROWN.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

FOREIGN HOTELS, &c.—contd.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PISA.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL DE LONDRES. The only hotel with central heating in Pisa.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLAVISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

RAPALLO.—VERDI'S HOTEL. Favourite English house. Charmingly situated. Electric light. Modern comfort.

ROME.—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Situated on famous Via Nazionale, in finest part of Rome. Every modern comfort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date.
BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME.—WINDSOR HOTEL. Full south, via Veneto. Suites of apartments. Baths. Cent. heat., mod. comf.—CASTELLI & LANTENAY.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL.
The English House.

ROME.—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL BELLEVUE. The most fashionable, of renowned reputation.—JULES LIPPERT, Proprietor.

SAN REMO.—SAVOY HOTEL, opened 1900. Most luxurious modern hotel. Elevated position.—Proprietor, PAUL MARINI.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL ROYAL. The most "UP-TO-DATE" Hotel of the place. Garage.—M. BERTOLINI, Prop.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL, HOTEL DES ANGLAIS—AD. SCHREIBER, Proprietor.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, Fr. 11 to 18.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate terms.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up to-date.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. (Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

HYERES.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. Full South, with modern comfort. Orchestra. Lift.—E. CASTUEIL, Prop., Director.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of 'Burns,'" and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water Swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaveroch Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL (only 2½ hours from Paddington) facing due S., offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. Central for Croome and Ledbury Hounds, loose boxes, hunters. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resid. Prop., F. MOERSCHEL.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

ALEXANDRA HOTEL.
Best position on Sea Front.
ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.
Faces due South.
An Ideal Autumn and Winter Resort.
Patronised by the leading Families in the Kingdom.
Telephone No. 64.
Moderate Tariff; inclusive if desired.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic
Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management. Just RE-OPENED.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
Entirely RE-BUILT and EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—The treatment of Rheumatism, Gout, Dyspepsia, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Obesity, &c., is greatly shortened by the LATEST ELECTRICAL METHODS. ALL THE NEWEST BATHS. The Cure Department is under the direction of E. NEU, M.D. (Bonn University).

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Spring Resort. Centre of beautiful and Historic Country. Enlarged, remodelled. Large Stable & Garage. Mod. Tel. 0659 & 109 Leamington.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500ft. alt. Bracing air, lovely scenery, 9-hole Golf course. Static Electricity. High-frequency Currents. Radiant Heat X Rays. Vibratory Massage.—J. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

R.M.S.P. THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,
LUXURIOUS TRAVEL.
Brazil, £50; Argentina, £62; West Indies, £38.
SHORT TRIPS TO
Spain, £9 15s.; Portugal, £12.
Apply to 18, Moorgate-street, E.C.; or 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

Robinson Brown's Silks & other choice Fabrics

PATRONIZED BY H. M. THE QUEEN AND H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES

YOU CAN NOW BUY YOUR

New Summer Materials

AT FIRST COST

PATTERNS POST FREE on Approval.

A magnificent array of the newest materials in the choicest designs colourings, and textures at popular prices.

THE 'Medona' 15/9d.

You must see the new productions, which include, amongst hundreds of other charming novelties,

Very handsome Rich Glace SILK UNDERSKIRT, with deep tucked flounce and full gauged frill, perfect in shape, and cut very full. In Grey, Reseda, Electric, Turquoise, White, Cream, Brown, Navy, Pink, Dark Green, Biscuit, and Black. Also made in Bright Moirette, at 7/6, & in Black Rom. Satin at 3/9.

Lovely ENGLISH SILKS, in the new checks and stripes, from 1/- per yd.

Smart BRITISH BLOUSE SILKS, in all the newest colourings, from 1/- per yd.

Rich BLACK DRESS SILKS, plain & brocaded, from 1/- to 6/11 yd.

Stylish WOOLLEN MATERIALS, comprising Tweeds, Serges, Vicunas, Voiles, Eoliennes, Crepolines, in the most tasteful checks and stripes ... ... from 10½d. to 5/11 per yd.

Dainty BLOUSE FABRICS, including Delaines, Muslins, Lawns, Zephyrs, Delainettes, ideal summer wear in endless variety from 3½d. to 1/11½ per yd.

Any Length Cut. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

WRITE FOR PATTERNS AND ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST POST FREE.

ROBINSON BROWN
Dept. 14 Royal Silk Works MACCLESFIELD

Robinson & Cleaver,

BELFAST. LTD.

Regent Street & Cheapside, LONDON; and LIVERPOOL.
Manufacturers to His Gracious Majesty The King, H.R.H. The Princess of Wales, &c., &c.
Carriage paid on Orders 20s. upwards in United Kingdom.

CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples Post Free.

BORDERED.
Children's .. .. .. 1/3 per doz.
Ladies' .. .. 2/6 „
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/6 „
HEMSTITCHED.
Ladies' .. .. 2/9 per doz.
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/11 „

IRISH COLLARS, CUFFS, & SHIRTS.

Illustrated Price Lists Post Free.

Collars—Gentlemen's four-fold, from 4/11 per doz.
Cuffs for Ladies, 5/11; Gentlemen's, from 6/11 per doz.
Matchless Shirts, with four-fold Fronts and Cuffs and bodies of Fine Longcloth, 35/6 the half-doz. (to measure, 2/- extra).

OLD SHIRTS made good as new with good materials in neckband, cuffs, and fronts, for 14/- the half-doz.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2/11 per doz.
Dinner „ 5/6 „
Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2/11 each.
Table Cloths, 2½ by 3 yds., 5/11 each.
Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each.
Linen Sheeting, 2 yards wide, 1/11 per yard. Surplice Linen, 10½d. per yard. Dusters, from 3/3 per doz. Glass Cloths, 3/11 per doz.

N.B.—To prevent delay, all Letter-orders and Inquiries for Samples of these goods should be sent direct to 40, W. Donegall Place, Belfast.

Invisible Eye-glasses

A New Era for Spectacle Wearers.

Do you wear glasses? If so, Dollond's Patent "Fairy" Frameless (Featherweight) Eye-glasses will appeal to you. They are delightfully easy and firm on the nose, and practically invisible. They are different to any other kind of eye-glasses, and quite unique in their daintiness. Being invisible they do not mar the smart appearance of the wearer, and in the words of the Baroness Orczy, "no well-dressed lady, who from necessity wears glasses, can afford to be without a pair."

Ask your Optician to show you a "Fairy," or write to us for an Illustrated and Descriptive Booklet.

DOLLOND & Co.

Established 1750.

Opticians to the Royal Courts of Europe.

223, Oxford Street, W. 113, Cheapside, E.C.
35, Ludgate Hill, E.C. 62, Old Broad Street, E.C.
5, Northumberland Avenue, Charing Cross.
83, Powis Street, Woolwich.

NOTE.—The "Fairy" Patent are the only frameless eye-glasses which give absolute satisfaction in wear. See the name "Fairy" on every mount, and firmly refuse any substitute.

"THE QUEEN OF

Apollinaris

TABLE WATERS."

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

"Erasmic" Soap

"The Dainty Soap for Dainty Folk."

4d. per Tablet; 1s. per Box.

Guaranteed absolutely pure; deliciously fragrant.

Send two penny stamps, and we will forward post free Two Dainty Bijou Sample Tablets.

THE ERASMIC CO., Ltd., Dept. 84, Warrington.

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING
and H.M. The QUEEN.

179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.

No. M 240.

Diamonds and Rubies, £18.

Ditto, three rows Gems, £12 10s.

No. M 246.

Diamonds, Rubies, & Pearls, £16.

Diamonds, Emeralds, and Pearls, £18 18s.

No. M 244.

Diamonds and Rubies, Only £19 10s.

Novelties for Wedding, Bridesmaids', and Birthday Gifts in Jewellery, Gold and Silver Ware, Leather Goods, Watches, Clocks, Fans, Umbrellas, Walking Sticks, Dressing Bags, Suit Cases, &c.

THE . . .

NEW SCOTCH TARTAN SKIRT

COPLAND & LYE'S

"Highland" Skirt.

Smart Walking Skirt in All-Wool Tartan. May be had in the principal Clan Tartans.

PRICE 42/- Carriage Paid in Britain.

Bodice Material 10/6 extra.

COPLAND & LYE,

Caledonian House, GLASGOW.

The Leading Specialists in Scotch Textiles.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

"Clachan" Scotch Tweeds, 58 in. wide ... ... 4/11 per yard.
"Kelvindale" Cheviot Tweeds, 54 in. wide ... 3/11 " "
"Hebridean" Scotch Tweeds, 56 in. wide... ... 3/6 " "
"Caledonian" Winceys ... .. from 11½d. to 2/2 " "

Patterns Post Free on Request.

COPLAND & LYE, 165, SAUCHIEHALL STREET, GLASGOW.

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6/9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets, Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, post free.

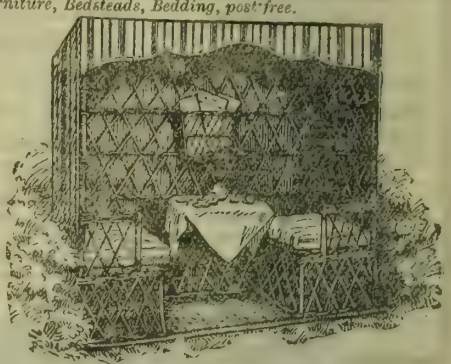
THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.

With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position.

Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick...£3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6

Catalogue Free.



GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., NOTTINGHAM.

Plasmon Cocoa

is the FOOD COCOA.

No other contains so much Nourishment.

BE SURE IT IS PLASMON

Tins, 9d., 1/4, 2/6. At all Stores.

HITCHING'S GOLD MEDAL BABY CARS

Under the Patronage of the English Royal Family.

LONDON.

86, NEW BOND STREET; 329, 331, OXFORD STREET (Corner of Bond-st. and Oxford-st.); 45, KNIGHTSBRIDGE, S.W.

LIVERPOOL.

74, BOLD STREET.
165, DUKE STREET.

MANCHESTER.

15, ST. MARY'S GATE.

BANKERS:—
LONDON CITY AND MIDLAND BANK.

HITCHINGS, Ltd., are the Premier Manufacturers of High Grade Baby Carriages in the World, having special facilities for the supply of High Grade Carriages at the lowest prices.

BABY CARRIAGES from 3 to 25 Guineas.
BABY CARS from 2 to 20 Guineas.
Pictorial Lists Post Free.

Telegrams: "HITCHING, LONDON." Telephone: 2543, GERRARD.

FREEMAN'S CHLORODYNE

For 60 Years Best Known Remedy for

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, DIARRHŒA, NEURALGIA, &c.

Of all Chemists, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each.

TRADE MARK

TRADE MARK

CAUTION To prevent disappointment, purchasers are cautioned against accepting any imitations that may be pressed upon them, as "being the same thing," just as good, &c. Every bottle of the genuine Freeman's Chlorodyne has the Trade Mark "The ELEPHANT" printed on the wrapper, &c., and the words Freeman's Original Chlorodyne engraved on the Government Stamp, which is the only TRUE CHLORODYNE.

IDRIS SODA WATER

AS SUPPLIED TO H.M. THE KING

SALE £150000 SALE

The Opportunity of the Century,

Great Inauguration Sale

Commencing MONDAY, APRIL 15.

The Entire Furnishing Stock

Amounting to about £150,000

WILL BE OFFERED

At Immense Reductions.

OETZMANN & CO., Ltd.

OETZMANN & CO., in order to promote increased efficiency and to facilitate further development and extension, have converted their business into that of a Joint Stock Company, and the Directors have decided to give their clients the full benefit of the very large discounts off the actual cost to manufacture at which the Stock has been transferred.

£30,000 given away in Reduction of Prices.

THE STOCK OFFERS AN IMMENSE CHOICE OF MODERN GOODS AND UP-TO-DATE DESIGNS.

10 Per Cent.

is the minimum reduction on any article in stock at commencement of Sale, whilst in many instances the reduction is as great as

50 Per Cent.

An Early Visit is Desirable.

OETZMANN & CO

HAMPSTEAD ROAD W.

continuation north of Tottenham Court Road

THE RANDFONTEIN ESTATES GOLD MINING COMPANY, WITWATERSRAND, LIMITED.

Distribution to Shareholders registered on the 31st December, 1906, and to Depositors of Share Warrants to bearer, of a portion of this Company's Capital Assets, consisting of 300,000 Randfontein Estates Trust Limited Shares.

Referring to Public Notice of the 21st December last, Shareholders registered on the 31st December, 1906, are hereby informed that the above distribution having been duly confirmed, the proportions due to them will be sent from this office by registered post to their registered addresses on Monday, the 18th March.

Depositors of Share Warrants to Bearer are also informed that the proportion due to them is in course of preparation in the order of dates of Lodgment of Warrants, and will be sent to their addresses by registered post as soon as ready.

By order,
J. H. TILEY,
Transfer Secretary.

Head Transfer Office,
Mayfair and Robinson Buildings,
Johannesburg, March 14th, 1907.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY

(LIMITED),

HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

Goddard's Plate Powder For Cleaning Silver Electro Plate &c Sold everywhere 1/- 2/6 4/6

Jewsbury & Brown's ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE.

In Pots and Tubes.

A MASTER KEY

of this size.

BRAMAH LOCKS

FOR ALL PURPOSES can be made to a Master Key in suites, with subordinate keys for BUTLER, MAID or VALET, GARDENER, &c., &c., each suite independent of the other, but all opening to the MASTER KEY.

A choice selection of Despatch and Jewel Boxes, Travelling Requisites, strong and light, with real Bramah Locks, Steel Jewel Safes, &c., &c.

Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

BRAMAH & CO.,

By Appointment to H.M. the King. Sole Makers of the Genuine BRAMAH LOCKS.

100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

LINOLA

Regd

HEALTHIER HOMES

result if dust and its attendant germs are repelled. Dust, as every medical man will tell you, is a vehicle for disease germs. The point is, counteract the attacks of dust. That is best done by covering the floors with Li-nola, Cork Lino with a rich border. This material is the handsomest low cost floor covering you can buy, and it is the most hygienic. Allow us to forward samples post free.

Catesby and Sons,

Desk 12, Shipping Dept., Tottenham Court Road,

LONDON, W.

The Best Tonic

For the restoration of energy and vitality; the relief of mental and nervous exhaustion, impaired digestion or appetite, there is no remedy so beneficial as

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

(Non-Alcoholic.)

It is a scientific and carefully prepared preparation of the phosphates that provides the tonic and nerve food needed to improve general health.

If your chemist does not have it in stock he can obtain it from Bovril, Ltd., 152 Old Street, London, E. C.

HACKNEY

Furnishing Company, Ltd

No connection with any other firm.
A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

EASY INSTALMENT SYSTEM.

CHEAPEST, BEST, MOST ECONOMICAL. NO DEPOSIT REQUIRED.

£10 worth	£0 7 0 per month	£50 worth	£1 9 0 per month
£20 „	£0 12 6 „	£100 „	£2 5 0 „
£30 „	£0 18 0 „	£200 „	£4 10 0 „
£49 „	£1 6 0 „	£500 „	£11 5 0 „

10 per cent. discount for cash. No large first payments. A full three years' credit. All goods delivered free in private vans. Carriage paid up to 300 miles. CATALOGUE POST FREE.

Compare our prices. No middle profits to pay.

TOWN HALL BLDGS., MARE ST., HACKNEY, LONDON, N.E.

N.B.—HOURS OF BUSINESS, 9 till 9. On THURSDAYS we close at 4 o'clock. Telegrams—"Furniments, London." Telephone No. 84, Dalston. On leaving Hackney Station ask for the New Town Hall. Our extensive premises adjoin.

Caution.—We supply all our goods at the prices advertised, and strictly adhere to our TERMS.

Nine Large Shops next to each other.

LETTERS FROM CELEBRITIES.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET ON NERVOUSNESS.

"Industrial Farm Colony,
"Duxhurst,
"April, 1907.

"Dear Friend,—Your letter is one of many which I constantly receive begging me to tell of something which can help to restore tired nerves and over-worn strength, and you ask me to do so because I come in contact with so many who for these very reasons fail in the race of life, having sought the wrong remedy for such loss of nerve-power.

"The description which you give me of your difficulty scarcely varies from that of which I am so often told. Work has become a drudgery, and life a heavy thing. You tell me that you go to bed feeling tired, and that you wake in the morning almost equally tired, that your food is distasteful to you, and that little things which used to sit lightly upon you have become heavy burdens; that even pleasure is toil. I know you have worked hard through many years, and have had much mental strain. This may in a measure account for your weakness, which is not brought about by any condition of actual disease, but which seems to arise from an even greater trouble—namely, that your nerve-force is seriously overspent.

"It is important to understand that in these days of worry and over-excitement, the over-work (mental and physical) to which most of us are subject calls forth an undue expenditure of strength, and that to recuperate the vigour we have lost we must consider what sort of food or remedy we require.

"Of course, the whole question of proper nourishment requires much thought and experience. Many forms of food and many restoratives are recommended, but having had to do with a great many people who have impaired their digestive organs and whose nerve-power has been seriously undermined, I do not think that I have come across anything which I believe a more suitable nutrient for all forms of weakness than Sanatogen. I do not know if you have tried it, but it seems to me, under the conditions such as you have described, an ideal preparation, because it provides a valuable tonic-food in the most suitable form. It consists, I believe, in the nourishing element of pure cows' milk, incorporated with which is a special nerve-tonic containing phosphorus. It has an invigorating power on worn-out nerves, and gives tone to exhausted tissues to a surprising extent. The feeblest system and the poorest digestive organs are able to assimilate it when they can really touch little else. I am strongly of opinion that you cannot do better than begin a course of Sanatogen if you wish to regain your strength.

"Sanatogen undoubtedly restores sleep and invigorates the nerves, and it braces the patient to health, for I have noticed that with the restoration of the digestive organs the mind becomes more quickly active, and work, both mental and physical, becomes more easy, and the freshness and keenness which such people have lost (apparently altogether) return gradually, and bring with them an enjoyment of life and a feeling of hopefulness not hitherto experienced.

"When the body is subjected to a course of Sanatogen the blood condition improves, the skin assumes a more healthy colour, the invigorated nerves are braced to a more healthy tone, and the whole human machinery is made fit for exercise and work and for fulfilling its functions in the most perfect manner. . . . ."

The above is an abstract from a letter addressed by Lady Henry Somerset to an intimate friend. In view of the public interest associated with the subject of the letter, the recipient has obtained her Ladyship's gracious permission to make the contents more widely known. Additional information and interesting literature on the same subject may be obtained free of charge on application to the Sanatogen Company, 83, Upper Thames-street, London, E.C. Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, in packets, at 1s. 9d., 2s. 9d., 5s., and 9s. 6d.

OUR PUZZLES.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Building, Carteret street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new Competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLES, No. 1,465 & 1,466.

The awards in the above are unavoidably held over to next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,472.

The question of Capital Punishment its desirability or otherwise—has been freely mooted, of late, in the Press, in connection with a recent murder case, and has evoked a wide-spread interest. I do not propose to express any opinion on the particular case out of which this discussion has arisen, nor am I asking my Competitors to do so. But it would be interesting to hear what they have to say on the question of Capital Punishment generally, regarded as one of abstract principle.

I offer, therefore, the usual Prize of Two Guineas, this week, for

THE BEST ANSWER TO THE FOLLOWING QUESTION: "IS THE ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER DESIRABLE?"

Competitors are required to answer the question either with simple "Yes" or "No," and then to set forth, as pithily and pointedly as possible, the reasons which have guided them in forming their opinion.

No "Answer" must contain more than one hundred words, all told. And the Prize will be awarded to that Competitor who adduces the best reasons for his "Yes," or his "No," as the case may be, within these limits.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i) No Competitor must send in more than one "Answer."
(ii) All "Answers" must reach TRUTH Office by the first post on Monday, April 22, at latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

BEL DEMONIO.—Your real name and address were printed in TRUTH of March 27 last

QA' APPELLE.—I much regret that your solutions of Puzzles Nos. 1,467 and 1,468 were received too late, in both cases, to be included in the competition.

R.Y.H., PEREGRINE, TIP-TOP, NEMO.—I much regret that the solutions of Puzzle No. 1,468 sent in by the above four competitors were received too late for inclusion.

DIANA, MILLINER, SPHINX, MARY, CRANK.—I have been compelled, though with much regret, to exclude the solutions sent in by these five competitors for Puzzle No. 1,469, as each of them has forwarded two lists of greatest men; whereas, by the published conditions of the Puzzle, only one was allowed. I am sure the competitors mentioned will understand the paramount necessity of my insisting strictly on the conditions laid down.

ENOCH.—There is something in what you say; and possibly, at some future date, I may set a puzzle of similar character, to be adjudicated upon in the manner which you suggest. At the same time, the responsibility of pronouncing upon so large and comprehensive a question is a thing only to be undertaken with fear and trembling—even by a Puzzle Editor who admits, to some extent, the soft impeachment of having received a tolerable education. Moreover, though the judgment of the hoi polloi on the greatness, or otherwise, of their contemporaries is often at fault, I think that in reference to that of historical characters it is, in the main, usually right.

RIMABEL.—Thanks for your amusing letter. You will have seen by my note in last week's TRUTH that your solution of Puzzle No. 1,467 was received too late for inclusion.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,469.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

THE FOUR GREATEST MEN IN HISTORY PRIOR TO THE CHRISTIAN ERA; AND THE FOUR GREATEST MEN IN HISTORY SINCE THAT DATE.

N.B.—Ten Competitors who have sent in solutions of the above have included the name of Jesus Christ in their lists. For this reason I am not printing their solutions, as I am convinced that the mention of the Saviour's name in this connection is, to say the least of it, undesirable.

Before: Moses, Socrates, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Shakespeare, Isaac Newton, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Eboracum.

Before: Moses, Homer, Socrates, Julius Cæsar After: Shakespeare. Newton, Cromwell (the Protector), Luther.—Pagan.

Before: Moses, King David, Alexander the Great, Homer. After: Julius Cæsar, Mahomet, Napoleon, Shakespeare.—Djalli.

Before: Ramesès II. (a Pharaoh), Moses, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Christopher Columbus, Martin Luther, Shakespeare, Napoleon I.—Denmore.

Before: Homer, Plato, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Alfred the Great, Columbus, Luther, Shakespeare.—Eillom.

Before: Archimedes, Plato, Julius Cæsar, Homer. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon, Frederick the Great, William Pitt (younger).—Carpathia.

Before: Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Homer, Plato. After: Shakespeare, Michael Angelo, Newton, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Hermione.

Before: King David, Alexander the Great, Socrates, Homer. After: Wilberforce, Nelson, Wellington, Lord Beaconsfield.—Puck.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Hannibal, Sophocles, Buddha. After: Shakespeare, Nelson, General Booth, Gladstone.—Wings.

Before: Homer, Abraham, Socrates, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Mohamed, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Nurse.

Before: Buddha, Pericles, Socrates, Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Martin Luther, James Watt, Drake.—Viking.

Before: Alexander, Plato, Julius Cæsar, Homer. After: Napoleon, Shakespeare, Newton, Michael Angelo.—Hawksure.

Before: Homer, Socrates, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Francis Bacon, Sir Isaac Newton, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Pan.

Before: Moses, Homer, Alexander the Great, Confucius. After: Raphael, Galileo, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Fish.

Before: Moses, Homer, Aristotle, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Shakespeare, Napoleon I., Darwin.—Enoch.

Before: Alexander the Great, Publius Cornelius Scipio Africanus major, Julius Cæsar, Socrates (as a philosopher). After: Alfred the Great, Nelson, Wellington, Shakespeare (as poet).—Simplex.

Before: Siddartha (Buddha), Moses, Pericles, Julius Cæsar. After: Mohammed, Napoleon I., Shakespeare, Goethe.—Cabul.

Before: Moses, Homer, Plato, Alexander the Great. After: Martin Luther, Napoleon I, James Watt, Columbus.—Caw.

Before: Moses, Confucius, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Luther, Columbus, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Mab.

Before: Moses, Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon I., Nelson.—Golliwog.

Before: Buddha, Mahomet, Socrates, Julius Cæsar. After: Napoleon Bonaparte, Frederick the Great, Alfred the Great, George Washington.—Windhill.

Before: Moses, Buddha, Socrates, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Napoleon, Shakespeare, Christopher Columbus.—Petite.

Before: Homer, Socrates, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Antoninus Pius, Cortés, Shakespeare, Wellington.—Sceptic.

Before: Confucius, Moses, Julius Cæsar, Aristotle. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon I., Voltaire, Abraham Lincoln.—Myrmidon.

Before: Leonidas, Socrates, Plato, Cæsar. After: Sir Francis Bacon, Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton, Napoleon Bonaparte.—J. McGrigor Allan.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Plato, Homer. After: Napoleon Bonaparte, Mahommed, Shakespeare, Darwin.—Espérance.

Before: Homer, Buddha, Moses, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Shakespeare, Napoleon, George Stephenson.—Polly Wog.

Before: Confucius, Alexander the Great, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Peter the Great.—Popacoo.

Before: Homer, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Moses. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon, Mahomet, Luther.—Bert.

Before: Homer, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Moses. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon, Mahomet, St. Paul.—Alicujus.

Before: Moses, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar, Socrates. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte, Gladstone, Milton.—Churchill.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Socrates, Alexander, Plato. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon, Michael Angelo, Sir Isaac Newton.—Petronille.

Before: Moses, Homer, Socrates, Alexander the Great. After: St. Paul, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Darwin.—Nest.

Before: Homer, Confucius, Plato, Julius Cæsar, After: Mahomed, Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton, Napoleon.—Sheila.

Before: Homer, Alexander the Great, Socrates, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon I., Richelieu, Nelson.—Peter Pan.

Before: Homer, Confucius, Buddha, Plato. After: Mohammed, Christopher Columbus, Shakespeare, James Watt.—Gimcrack.

Before: Buddha, Homer, Plato, Confucius. After: St. Paul, Mahomet, James Watt, Nelson.—March Hare.

Before: Homer, Moses, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Mahomet, Napoleon, Saint Paul.—Will.

Before: Moses, Alexander, Plato, Gautama. After: St. Paul, Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Asthore.

Before: King Solomon, Julius Cæsar, Socrates, Alexander the Great. After: St. Augustine, Charlemagne, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Erbie.

Before: Isaiah, Gautama Buddha, Plato, Augustus. After: St. Paul, Mahomet, Martin Luther, Charles Darwin.—Forest.

Before: Homer, Archimedes, Socrates, Hippocrates. After: Sir Isaac Newton, Shakespeare, Copernicus, Columbus.—Clerici.

Before: King Solomon, Julius Cæsar, Socrates, Alexander the Great. After: St. Augustine, Charlemagne, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Pilly.

Before: Pericles, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar, Cicero. After: Cromwell, Frederick the Great, Napoleon Bonaparte. George Washington.—Sincérité.

Before: Moses, Solomon, Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great. After: Columbus, Martin Luther, Shakespeare, Nelson.—Omega.

Before: Homer, Plato, Hannibal, Alexander the Great. After: Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton, Napoleon the Great, the Duke of Wellington.—Queensholme.

Before: Alexander the Great, Socrates, Hannibal (the Carthaginian), Pythagoras. After: Shakespeare, the Emperor Charles V., Wellington, Sir Isaac Newton.—Stow.

Before: David (King of Israel), Demosthenes (the orator), Alexander the Great, Caius Julius Cæsar. After: Martin Luther, Oliver Cromwell, Duke of Wellington, Napoleon the First.—San Fil.

Before: Moses, Mahomet, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Caxton, Christopher Columbus, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Cantab.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Plato, Hannibal. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon, Sir Isaac Newton, Lord Bacon.—Renwick.

Before: Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Homer, Hannibal. After: Charlemagne, Alfred the Great, Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Hypatia.

Before: Moses, Homer, Plato, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Luther, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Pyrrhus.

Before: Homer, Plato, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Dante, Shakespeare, Milton, Sir Isaac Newton.—Verbam Sat.

Before: Moses, Plato, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton.—Verbum Sat.

Before: Julius Cæsar, King Solomon, Homer, Cicero. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte, Michael Angelo, Goethe.—Spartan.

Before: Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Homer, Marcus Tullius Cicero. After: W. Shakespeare, Martin Luther, Michael Angelo, Napoleon Bonaparte. Rhody.

Before: Moses, Socrates, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Nelson, Napoleon.—Pibwob.

Before: Homer, Plato, Aristotle, Alexander the Great After: Shakespeare, Leonardo da Vinci, Michael Angelo, Napoleon.—Rimabel.

Before: Homer, Plato, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton, Milton, Napoleon the First Bonaparte.

Before: Moses, Plato, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Oliver Cromwell, Nelson, Napoleon.—Rowrah.

Before: Moses, Homer, Alexander the Great, Socrates. After: Mohamet, Luther, Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Hopscotch.

Before: Moses, Solomon, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Alfred the Great, Christopher Columbus, George Washington, General Booth.—Echo.

Before: Moses, Homer, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Oliver Cromwell, Napoleon Bonaparte, the Duke of Wellington.—Thersites.

Before: Socrates, Aristotle, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar. After: Christopher Columbus, Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton, Napoleon.—Shelmartin.

Before: Buddha, Alexander the Great, Plato, Socrates. After: Paulus (the Apostle), Luther, Shakespeare, Columbus.—Duesseldorf.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Buddha, David. After: Washington, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Christopher Columbus.—Bob Nick.

Before: Socrates, Alexander the Great, Homer, Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon, "General" Booth, Marconi.—The Prebend.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Socrates, Moses. After: Washington, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Charlemagne.—Vigo.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Solomon, Mahomet. After: Alfred the Great, Shakespeare, Washington, Napoleon.—Tommy.

Before: Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Moses, Plato. After: Gladstone, Napoleon, Nelson, Shakespeare.—Bibbs.

Before: Homer, Gautama Buddha, Confucius, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton, Napoleon Bonaparte, Mahomet.—Ainsty.

Before: Moses, Solomon, Elijah, Hannibal. After: King Alfred the Great, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Bismarck.—Six Knobs.

Before: Homer, Aristotle, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Leonardo da Vinci, Isaac Newton, Napoleon I.—Zagobla.

Before: Alexander the Great, Cæsar, Homer, Socrates. After: Napoleon, Cromwell, Shakespeare, Michelangelo.—Asinine.

Before: Moses, the Founder of Buddhism, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Charlemagne, Martin Luther, Napoleon.—Stoke.

Before: Moses, Alexander the Great, Homer, Plato. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon, St. Paul.—Northlander.

Before: King Solomon, Socrates, Homer, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, William Shakespeare, Lord Nelson, Duke of Wellington.—Cherrypicker.

Before: Moses, Alexander the Great, Confucius, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomed, Charlemagne, Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Early Morning.

Before: Homer, Alexander the Great, Moses, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Christopher Columbus, Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Hobbinol.

Before: Moses, Homer, Buddha, Confucius, After: Julius Cæsar, Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Klondyke.

Before: Moses, Confucius, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Michael Angelo, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Westcliffe.

Before: Plato, Aristotle, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Charlemagne, Newton, Napoleon, Darwin.—Tony.

Before: Moses, Gautama Buddha, Socrates, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Martin Luther, Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Beginner.

Before: Moses, Homer, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Charlemagne, Shakespeare, Newton, Napoleon.—Etwall.

Before: Buddha, Confucius, Socrates, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon I.—Alpha Beta.

Before: Homer, Socrates, Hannibal, Alexander the Great. After: Shakespeare, Lord Nelson, the Duke of Wellington, Napoleon the First.—Margate Hoy.

Before: Moses, Julius Cæsar, Socrates, Hannibal. After: Napoleon, Shakespeare, St. Paul, Sir Walter Scott.—Dobbin.

Before: Abraham, Moses, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Luther, Cromwell, Napoleon.—Frances.

Before: Moses, Buddha, Socrates, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Dante, Charlemagne.—Davy.

Before: Moses, Virgil, Aristotle, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon the Great, Michel angelo, Christopher Columbus.—Almaviva.

Before: Alexander, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar, Scipio Africanus. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon, Nelson, Beaconsfield.—Loretta.

Before: Moses, David, Elijah, Julius Cæsar. After: Paul, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Wellington.—The Mac.

Before: Demosthenes, Cicero, Julius Cæsar. Alexander the Great. After: Nelson, Pitt, Gladstone, Stevenson.—Neale.

Before: King Solomon, Homer, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Alfred the Great, Charlemagne, Shakespeare, Napoleon I.—A. M. E. L. M.

Before: Moses, Buddha, Homer, Plato. After: St. Paul, Mohammed, Shakespeare, Dante.—Iris.

Before: Adam, Abraham, Moses, Solomon. After: Columbus, Napoleon, Nelson, Wellington.—Game B.

Before: Adam, Abraham, David, Solomon. After: St. Paul, Martin Luther, John Wesley, General Booth.—Mrs. Game B.

Before: Moses, Mahomet, Homer, Alexander the Great. After: Gutenberg, Columbus, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Leaf Rule.

Before: Homer, Archimedes, Euclid, Virgil. After: Shakespeare, Oliver Cromwell, Copernicus, Edward Jenner.—Turtle.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander of Macedon, Homer, Socrates. After: Napoleon, Shakespeare, Sir Isaac Newton, Oliver Cromwell.—Quilp.

Before: Moses, Pericles, (Junius) Brutus, Julius Cæsar. After: Chrysostom, Columbus, William the Silent, Washington.—H.

Before: Solomon, Homer, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Alfred the Great, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Wellington.—Sclanidge.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Homer, Solomon, David. After: Napoleon I., St. Paul, Nelson, Shakespeare.—Japstang.

Before: Socrates, Julius Cæsar, Confucius, Solomon. After: Peter the Great, Napoleon Bonaparte, Nelson, Shakespeare.—Muz Muz.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Elijah, King David, Socrates. After: King Alfred, Raleigh, William Pitt, Jun., Napoleon.—Trammy.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Homer, Socrates. After: Napoleon, Shakespeare, Washington, Nelson.—Israfil.

Before: Buddha, Confucius, Solomon, Alexander the Great. After: Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon I., Frederick the Great.—Tom Nissed.

Before: Moses, Pericles, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare (or, if literary celebrities are not eligible, Gladstone), Oliver Cromwell, Napoleon, Bismarck.—Minos.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Moses, Confucius. After: Shakespeare, Washington, Napoleon, Alfred the Great.—Student.

Before: Joshua, Samuel, Joseph, Moses. After: Shakespeare, Wolsey, Wellington, Dickens.—Celt.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Moses, Buddha. After: Shakespeare, Washington, Napoleon, Christopher Columbus.—Scotus Viator.

Before: Moses, Julius Cæsar, Buddha, Alexander the Great. After: St. Peter, Charlemagne, Christopher Columbus, Shakespeare.—Bob.

Before: Homer, Buddha, Plato, Alexander. After: St. Paul, Mahomet, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Jackpot.

Before: Homer, Alexander the Great, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar. After: Martin Luther, Shakespeare, Horatio Nelson, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Burbage.

Before: Moses, Aristotle, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: St. Paul, Charlemagne, Shakespeare, Napoleon.—Barmarbo.

Before: Homer, Aristotle, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Alfred the Great, Shakespeare, Milton, Frederick the Great.—Hyde.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Socrates, Moses. After: Napoleon, Nelson, Pitt, Shakespeare.—Passe.

Before: Moses, Homer, Pericles, Julius Cæsar. After: Martin Luther, Shakespeare, the first Earl of Chatham, George Washington.—Arundo.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Homer, Archimedes. After: Napoleon, Charles V of Spain, Sir Isaac Newton, Pitt.—Dora.

Before: Julius Cæsar, Homer, Alexander the Great, Solon. After: King Alfred, Napoleon, Shakespeare, Duke of Wellington.—Bee.

Before: Moses, Alexander the Great, Homer, Archimedes. After: Michael Angelo, Shakespeare, Napoleon I., Christopher Columbus.—Ricardo Hess.

Before: Moses, Julius Cæsar, Alexander the Great, Virgil. After: Caxton, Columbus, Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte.—Robin Adair.

Before: Moses, Julius Cæsar, Mahomet, Hannibal. After: St. Paul, Napoleon I., Nelson, Shakespeare.—Dullard.

Before: Moses, Buddha, Confucius, Alexander the Great. After: Mahomet, Bonaparte, Shakespeare, Martin Luther.—Outsider.

Before: Moses, Plato, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Mohamed, Washington, Napoleon.—Blair.

Before: Moses, Hannibal, Alexander, Cæsar. After: Luther, Shakespeare, Nelson, Napoleon.—Nemesis.

Before: Plato, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, Socrates. After: Shakespeare, Napoleon Bonaparte, Charles Darwin, Marcus Aurelius.—Khayyam.

Before: Moses, Buddha, Confucius, Julius Cæsar. After: Mahomet, Bonaparte, Shakespeare, Martin Luther.—Togo.

Before: King David, King Solomon, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Oliver Cromwell, Nelson, Emperor Napoleon.—Sugar.

Before: Homer, Alexander the Great, Moses, Buddha. After: Columbus, Mahomet, Newton, Lord Kelvin.—Bucks.

Before: Socrates, Alexander, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar. After: Alfred, Cromwell, Napoleon, Wellington.—Nemo.

Before: Moses, Hannibal, Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar. After: Shakespeare, Frederick the Great, Napoleon Bonaparte, Admiral Nelson.—Dick Maisch.

APPEAL.

CITY OF LONDON TRUSS SOCIETY

For the Relief of the Ruptured Poor throughout the Kingdom.

ESTABLISHED 1807.

Patron: His Majesty the King.

Vice-Patron: H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G.

This Charity, which relieves nearly 10,000 Patients annually, celebrates its Centenary this year, and the Committee earnestly APPEAL for £5,000 to enable them to pay off the Loans from the Society's Bankers, and to continue the good work which has been carried on for the last 100 years. SUBSCRIPTIONS, DONATIONS, and BEQUESTS will be thankfully received at the Institution by 35, Finsbury-square, E.C. W. K. TAUNTON, Secretary.

WAUKENPHAST

HAND SEWN GOLFING BOOTS

Brown BUCK CALF (our own speciality).
Fly Front, ⅜ Sole with square-headed nails
Leather lined. Thoroughly waterproof.

PRICE - - 50/-

(Carriage Paid).

BUCK CALF Brogue Shoes, Price 42/-

125, NEW BOND ST., LONDON.

Boot No. 71.
Shoe No. 52.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

SPRING TOURS.

ITALY, SPAIN, and the ITALIAN LAKES.

COOK'S SELECT CONDUCTED TOURS.

RIVIERA and ITALY.

Leaving London on May 3, visiting CANNES, NICE, MONTE CARLO, PISA, ROME, NAPLES, VESUVIUS, POMPEII, SORRENTO, CAPRI, FLORENCE, VENICE, the ITALIAN LAKES, LUCERNE, &c.

SPAIN and TANGIER.

Leaving London on April 30, visiting BIARRITZ, BURGOS, EL ESCORIAL, MADRID, TOLEDO, SEVILLE, ALGECIRAS, GRANADA, THE ALHAMBRA, CORDOVA, BARCELONA, &c.

THE ITALIAN LAKES.

Leaving London on May 8 and 29, visiting TURIN, STRESSA, LAKE MAGGIORE, THE BORROMEAN ISLANDS, LOCARNO, LAVENO, VARESE, COMO, CERNOBBIO, BELLAGIO, MENAGGIO, LUGANO, LUCERNE, PARIS, &c.

Inclusive Fares, providing travel tickets, hotel accommodation, carriage drives and excursions, fees to hotel and railway servants, omnibus transfers, baggage, competent conductors, &c. Illustrated Programmes post free.

THOS. COOK & SON,

Ludgate Circus, London, and Branch Offices.

Channel Crossing, Sea-Sickness.

"'YANATAS,' a preparation which goes direct to the seat of the trouble by allaying the irritation of the pneumo-gastric nerve acting through the brain upon the stomach."—Chambers' Journal. "YANATAS" on sale at Chemists, 2/9; or 3/- (p.p.) from STARKIE, Chemist, Trafalgar Sq., London, S.W.

ALFRED B. PEARCE & Co.

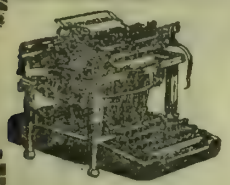
ONLY ADDRESS: 39, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

We cordially invite a personal inspection of our choice and thoroughly up-to-date stock. If that is not possible, write for a copy of our NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, containing Faithful Reproductions in Colours of a wide selection of our goods.

CHINA & GLASS

Both Useful and Ornamental.

TYPEWRITERS



Send £6 or £8 and have a Smith-Premier or other machine on approval for a week—

You will not return it.

TAYLOR'S, Ltd.,
74, Chancery Lane, LONDON.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Latest Methods. Lowest Fees.

Five years' Warranty.

"Originators of popular GUINEA Sets."—Vide Dispatch.

MR. LABOUCHERE in "TRUTH" writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world. Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."

PAMPHLET POST FREE,

GOODMAN'S, Limited, 2*, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

and West End Branch, 61, Seymour-street, Edgware-road End.

BRIGHTON: 10, Castle-square.

Est. nearly Quarter of a Century.

W. EVANS & CO.

Telephone: 327, Mayfair.

TRUTH says:—"Our latest discovery in tailoring is Evans, 77, Great Portland-street, London, W., who can actually fit."

We have a large clientele at home and abroad, and have received thousands of testimonials.

The following just to hand (original can be seen),

"Dear Sir,—I am much obliged for your prompt attention. For some years I have been dissatisfied with the various Tailors that have supplied me. I could get none to give me a good fit. I am therefore very pleased to find that you answer to your advertisement, and shall in future be at no loss to know where I can get so well supplied. "Yours truly, (Signed) W. C.

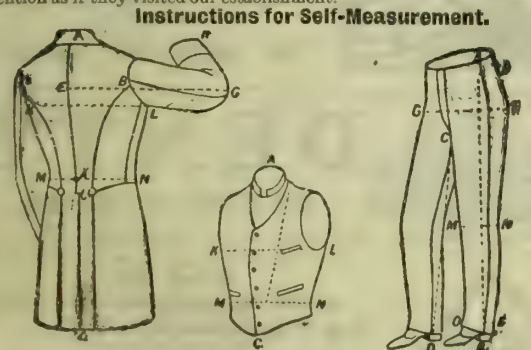
"W. Evans & Co."

COUNTRY ORDER DEPARTMENT.

Customers sending for any of the following clothes, stating colours, and the kind of garments required, enclosing a draft or P.O.O. (crossed London and South-Western Bank, Ltd.), will save considerable time, as all orders will be executed and despatched in about a fortnight from the date of receiving same.

Gentlemen living in any part of the world can rely on having same fit and attention as if they visited our establishment.

Instructions for Self-Measurement.



FOR COATS OF ANY DESCRIPTION.

A to C.....Inches. Breast, fairly tight, over
C ,, D..... ,, waistcoat.....Inches.
E ,, B..... ,,
B ,, G..... ,, Waist, over
G ,, H..... ,, waistcoat ..... ,,
FOR WAISTCOATS: A to C ..... ,,

FOR TROUSERS AND BREECHES.

Side from A to N.....Inches. Round seat G H.....Inches.
,, ,, A ,, B..... ,, Round knee M to N ..... ,, Leg seam C ,, D..... ,,
Round waist A ..... ,, Round foot O ,, P ..... ,,

ADDITIONAL FOR KNICKERBOCKERS AND BREECHES.

Round small, just below (tight) knee .....Inches. Round widest part of Calf ...Inches

Desirable to know: Height, weight; whether erect or normal.

Tweed and Blue Serge Suits, £3 3s., £3 15s., £4 4s., £4 15s., £5 5s.
Norfolk Jackets, £2 6s. 6d., £2 15s., £3 5s.
Knicker-Breeches, £1 5s., £1 10s., £1 15s., £2 5s.
Riding and Hunting Breeches, £2 5s., £2 15s., £3 5s.
Evening Dress Suits, silk lined, £5 5s., £6 6s., £7 7s., £8 8s.
Morning Coats, £2 15s., £3 5s., £3 15s., £4 4s.

77, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, London, W.

(Adjoining Queen's Hall.)

MADAME TENSFELDT'S PROCESS

Electrolysis

HOME TREATMENT

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Everything that grows in nature depends upon a root for its growth, and until that root is destroyed the growth will continue.

When ladies realise this thoroughly, they will know how useless all liquids, pastes, &c., are for removing hair for ever.

The "Tensfeldt Apparatus" is Electrolysis simplified, and with it you can in the privacy of your own home kill the roots without leaving the slightest mark or disfigurement.

On receipt of 1d. stamp for postage, I will forward a copy of my book "The Face Perfect"—giving full particulars of this treatment—to all sufferers from this dread scourge of superfluous Hair.

Permanent Cure Guaranteed

All Letters Strictly Confidential.

MADAME TENSFELDT, 28, Shandwick Pl., EDINBURGH.

Turkey Carpets

¶ The best productions direct from the East, at quite different prices to those quoted elsewhere

4000 Oriental Carpets in Stock

Examples and Prices.

ft.	in.		ft.	in.	£	s.	d.
9	3	x	7	9	4	15	0
10	3	x	7	5	4	16	0
11	7	x	8	3	6	11	0
11	10	x	9	3	7	18	0
13	10	x	10	9	10	3	0
14	3	x	10	10	10	5	0
16	2	x	12	5	13	15	0
17	0	x	12	0	14	0	0

4000 Oriental Carpets in Stock

MAPLE & CO

London Smyrna

HAMPTONS

All who purpose selecting new Wall-Papers should call and view Hamptons' special display of the most tasteful

Wall Papers

yet produced, comprising innumerable examples of every style and period now in vogue, and ranging in price from 1/- to 70/- per 12-yard piece. Hamptons carry out at Strictly Competitive Rates every description of Spring

Renovations

of Houses, Furniture, Carpets, Blinds, Curtains, &c. Plain Painting. Interior Decorating. HAMPTONS Furnish Free of charge Estimates for Renovations, together with Schemes for Re-decorating. Hamptons invite every reader of "TRUTH" to view their latest productions in made-up

Curtains

Chintzes, Cretonnes, Printed Linens, Taffetas, Tapestries, Damasks, Brocades, and other Furnishing Fabrics, specially produced for the 1907 Season. These include many exclusive Designs and Colourings, which surpass in artistic effect and in value for money the best examples hitherto produced. Hamptons' range of New Duchesse and Lace Trimmed comprises many most effective examples of the application of Cluny and Arabe Laces. They are also showing a number of specialities in Flounced Duchesse Blinds. Samples of any of these Blinds at prices ranging from a few shillings upwards will be submitted free of charge on application. Every Householder who is about to select new should call at once and view HAMPTONS' latest exclusive productions in tasteful and high-class Scotch Net Curtains, Swiss Embroidered Curtains, &c., &c.

Blinds

Lace Curtains

Hamptons pay Carriage to any railway station in Great Britain, and deliver free in their Motor Box Vans within 30 miles of Charing Cross.

HAMPTONS

Head Offices and ONLY SHOWROOMS:

PALL MALL EAST, S.W.

Countless Thousands are afflicted with some slight trouble. It may be discomfort after food—or before a meal: perhaps a periodic headache: maybe constipation and consequent irregularity: possibly pains in the back arising from disordered conditions of the Liver and Kidneys. Now no such depressing sensations are experienced by those

Who Enjoy Perfect Health

It will be found on enquiry, that the majority of those happy ones owe their immunity from illness to BEECHAM'S PILLS. There is no doubt about the efficacy of this medicine. It has earned for itself a magnificient, world-wide reputation. BEECHAM'S PILLS act at once on the stomach and enable you to properly digest and enjoy your food. To remove constipation; to assist Nature in her curative efforts; to put the Liver and Kidneys in good order, you need

Take no Medicine but

BEECHAM'S PILLS

They will ensure a spotless skin, a clear complexion, and the delightful consciousness that all is well with you.

Sold in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills).

"This is Genuine Cocoa."
—THE LANCET.

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

Guaranteed Absolutely Pure Soluble Cocoa only.

THE COCOA FOR INVALIDS.

DENT'S

WATCHES & CLOCKS.

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO THE KING.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock "Big Ben," and Sole Custodians Since its Erection.

Send for NEW ILLUSTRATED C & W CATALOGUE FREE.

DENT
TRADE MARK

No instrument, from No. 38,000 upwards, is genuine without the above Trade Mark.

CAUTION.

E. DENT & CO., Ltd.,

Find it necessary to inform the public that their ONLY ADDRESSES are—

61, STRAND, & 4, ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.

FOR POLISHING METALS, especially BRASS,

There is nothing better than

"LA BRILLANTINE" METALLIC POWDER.

As used by the Army, London Fire Brigade, &c.
TRY IT AND CONVINCE YOURSELF.
Sold everywhere in 6d. and 1s. Boxes.

PROPRIETORS:
J. F. BAUMGARTNER & CO.,
(1) 74, Newman-st., Oxford-st., London, W.
Absolutely refuse imitations.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.

Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y. Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1581. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, April 17, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE King is expected to arrive at Buckingham Palace from the south of Europe about Friday, the 26th, or Saturday, the 27th. His Majesty will probably go to Newmarket on the morning of Wednesday, May 1, for the last three days of the First Spring Meeting. If the Queen and Princess Victoria come home by sea they will land at Portsmouth about Thursday, May 2.

His Majesty's rank of Captain-General in the Spanish Army is rarely conferred upon foreigners, and it had previously been held by only two Englishmen (Irishmen really), the first Duke of Wellington, and his contemporary Marshal Beresford, upon whom it was conferred in recognition of their services during the Peninsula War.

The Court ceremonials of the season will include two State Balls at Buckingham Palace, for each of which invitations are to be issued by the Lord Chamberlain for about 2,200 guests; also two more Drawing-room Courts, and two State Banquets, each of which will be followed by a diplomatic and official reception. The King will hold a large Investiture at Buckingham Palace about the middle of July. At St. James's Palace there are to be two more Levees, both of which will be held by his Majesty. The first State Banquet will be for Prince Fushimi of Japan, and the second is to be in honour of the King and Queen of Denmark.

There is to be a review at Aldershot in honour of the Japanese Prince on Thursday, May 9, which will be attended by the King and Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and other members of the Royal family. It is expected that Prince Fushimi will be present at the Naval Review in the Solent on Saturday, May 4, and during his stay at Portsmouth he is to be conducted over the dockyard.

The King has lent Barton Court House, the Royal residence on the Osborne estate, to Lord and Lady Suffield for a few months. Barton Court is a picturesque gabled house, which was rebuilt by Queen Victoria, but the fine old fronts were not meddled with. There are pleasant gardens and grounds, and the place commands extensive views, while Osborne Park affords endless and very charming walks. The manor of Barton was owned by the see of Winchester, until Bishop Waynflete presented the property to Winchester College, to which it belonged until it was purchased by Prince Albert for the Queen about sixty years ago. It was on the Barton estate that Prince Albert established his once famous model farm of 800 acres, which was admirably managed on a thoroughly practical system, based upon scientific principles.

The statement that the Prince of Wales is expected to visit Newmarket the week after next during the First Spring Meeting is incorrect. The Prince goes to the Isle of Wight on Wednesday, May 1, when he will accompany Prince Edward to the Royal Naval School at Osborne. The Prince of Wales is to stay at Osborne until Saturday, May 4, and before returning to London he will witness the naval display in the Solent on the occasion of the visit of the Colonial Premiers to Portsmouth.

The Prince and Princess of Wales will reside at Marlborough House until Saturday, May 18, except from Monday, the 22nd, until Friday, the 26th, when they are to be absent in Scotland on a visit to Lord and Lady Blythswood at Blythswood House. The Prince and Princess will spend the Whitsuntide holidays at Frogmore House, where they are expected to stay for ten days, and they will be again in residence there from Saturday, June 15, until Monday, the 24th, for Ascot race week. Last year the Prince and Princess were away in Norway during the race week, and Frogmore was closed. Their Royal Highnesses are not expected to return to Sandringham before the middle of October, and they will spend about five weeks from the end of August at Abergeldie Castle.

Blythswood House is situated in a district of great industrial activity. The old house of Blythswood, which dated from the middle of the seventeenth century, was pulled down in 1820, when the present handsome and comfortable mansion was built by Major Archibald Campbell. There are pleasant "old-world" gardens and grounds, which are surrounded by fine woods extending to the river Cart. Blythswood is a place with many historical and literary associations, and it has long ago earned a wide reputation for kindly and abundant Scottish hospitality. Queen Victoria stayed at Blythswood during her last visit to Glasgow in 1886, and the Prince of Wales was himself a guest there in 1876, when he accompanied his parent to Glasgow, and the King (then Prince of Wales) laid the foundation-stone of the new post office in George square.

Lord Blythswood is a son of the late Mr. Archibald Douglas, who assumed the name of Campbell on succeeding to the Blythswood estates, which are enormously valuable, the property lying in and round Glasgow. He was made a Baronet in 1880 by Lord Beaconsfield, and Lord Salisbury raised him to the Peerage in 1892. He is married to a sister of Lord Carrington, but they have no family. The peerage will pass under a special remainder to Lord Blythswood's brother, the Hon. Sholto Douglas-Campbell, of Douglas Support, Lanarkshire, who is heir to the family estates. He is a son-in-law of the late Lord Alfred Paget.

I hear that the King will commission the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to represent his Majesty and the Queen at the celebration of the golden wedding of the King and Queen of Sweden, which is to take place at Stockholm during the first week in June. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught will be accompanied to Stockholm by Prince Arthur and Princess Patricia.

The King and Queen of Sweden were married on June 6, 1857, at the well-known Schloss of Biebrich, on the banks of the Rhine, one of the seats of her Majesty's brother, the late Grand Duke of Nassau. One of the Queen's sisters was the late Princess of Wied, and another was the late Princess of Waldeck-Pyrmont, mother of the Duchess of Albany and of the Queen Dowager of the Netherlands. It is believed at Stockholm that King Oscar intends to abdicate in favour of the Crown Prince after the celebration of his golden wedding.

For Appeals, see page 977.
For the Truth Hotel List, see page 985.
For Special for Ladies, see page 987.
For Selected Foreign Hotels, see pages 984, 985.
For Amusements, see page 983.
For Our Puzzles, see pages 989, 990.

The Daily Mail published on Saturday a telegram from Paris announcing that the Duke of Connaught is to be appointed Commander of the Garrisons in the Mediterranean, and it was added that the arrangement "has the concurrence of the French, Spanish, and Portuguese authorities." Why such news should come from Paris is not apparent, and it is something quite new to hear of foreign Governments expressing "concurrence" in our military appointments. The selection of the Duke of Connaught for the Malta command has been talked of for months past, but the rest of the story is obviously nonsense.

It was announced in Truth a fortnight ago that the Emperor William will probably visit Cowes in August during the regatta week, and an account was given of the contemplated arrangements during his stay in England. The paragraph was appropriated by some of the Berlin papers, and I was amused last week to see it generally reproduced in our own press, as it had been telegraphed from Berlin to a news agency, and here it was quoted from the German journals. Nothing is definitely settled as to the Emperor's visit to Cowes, but it is quite certain that if he comes to England he will not visit either London or Windsor.

TO THE COLONIAL PREMIERS.

Welcome, ye children of Albion's daughters,
Welcome, our kinsmen from over the waters,
  Welcome to home, whence your sires once went forth!
Welcome, or come ye from mainland or island,
From tropical plain, or from ice-prisoned highland,
  From East, or from West, or from South, or from North.

The seas, which divide, in dividing, requite us:
They roll not to sever, they roll to unite us;
  For Ocean's our highway and ours are the keys.
From shore unto shore, whencesoever you're hailing,
You come by the road where our flag flies prevailing,
  The flag of your parent, the Queen of the Seas.

Then meet and confer ye, as brother with brother;
Yea, meet ye, at peace, in the House of your Mother;
  Let factions and jealousies stand far apart.
Not meagre self-interest the true, lasting tether;
Not tariffs most surely shall bind us together,
  But the heart that goes out to the answering heart.

Punchestown week in Ireland was not favoured by the weather this year. Considering the bad days which followed, the national race meeting was lucky in experiencing neither rain nor storm on Tuesday and Wednesday. It was, as usual, largely and fashionably attended, society in its modern enthusiasm for fresh air being inured to the enjoyment of outdoor pastimes, however severe the climatic conditions may be. The Lord Lieutenant, with a large viceregal party, attended Punchestown on both days in State.

The Leopardstown Race Meeting met with a much more unlucky fate; arctic temperature on both days, and in addition on Saturday storm and heavy rains, in spite of which many enthusiasts filled the stands on each day. Although the distresses of a distressful country in bygone times are held accountable for the destruction of industrial tastes in Ireland, they had no malign effect on the taste for sport. The sporting industry required no spur to its activities, and no extraneous sympathy to develop them.

The Chief Secretary did not remain in Ireland for the Punchestown week, but left for the opening of Parliament, after his short holiday visit, rather than holiday, in the country. Sir Antony MacDonnell also left for England at the same time. Mr. Birrell, with his family, is expected to take up his residence at the Chief Secretary's Lodge, when the Parliamentary Session is over. The Viceregal Lodge, the Chief Secretary's, and Under-Secretary's Lodges are within a few minutes walk of each other in the Phœnix Park.

Last week was also "Synod week" in Dublin. Dr. Alexander, the Primate, presided at the meetings of the Synod of the Irish Church, which were held daily. Most of the leading dignitaries of the Church were present. Dr. Alexander officiated with great dignity, and spoke, notwithstanding his great age, with unfailing eloquence and energy.

Everybody who knew "Jimmy" Davis will have been sincerely grieved at his unexpected death. I never knew anybody of whom it might be said more truly that he was nobody's enemy but his own. He had an extra share of the cleverness of a very clever family, and but for the lack of any serious purpose in life—except to spend every shilling he earned as soon as he earned it, and, if possible, sooner—he might have achieved something much better than the invention of musical comedy. When I first knew him he seemed to have in him the making of a highly successful solicitor. When he gave up the Law and started the once famous Bat, I thought, for about a fortnight, that he was going to make a highly successful journalist. When he facetiously christened himself "Owen Hall," and produced the "Gaiety Girl," I thought he was going to eclipse Mr. W. S. Gilbert. So far as brains went, he was capable of any of these things.

I shall always remember Davis as having the greatest gift for getting through money of anybody I have known. I knew him when he was making none and when he must have been making a great deal, but I never knew him when he was not in want of it. Whether he was up in the world, however, or whether he was down, he was always cheery and witty, and the best of company. I should imagine that he enjoyed himself thoroughly all through life, and he certainly helped his friends to enjoy themselves—except when he borrowed money of them. If he had written his reminiscences they would have made a most entertaining volume. He once told me that when he was running the Bat one of the evening papers used to keep the heading, "The Bat in Trouble Again," always standing in type ready for use; and no journal ever packed more excitement into an equally brief career.

The flight of the Bat terminated in consequence of criminal proceedings for libel, which necessitated the retirement of the proprietor to Paris for a year or two. When he came back he was an undischarged bankrupt, and he seemed thoroughly to enjoy that position. He told me on one occasion that the status of an undischarged bankrupt had many advantages, and he went on to explain that he found it much less difficult to obtain credit in that character than when he was ostensibly solvent. When ordering any costly article that he fancied he was always careful to disclose his legal status, and the straightforward honesty of his confession so captivated tradesmen that they never hesitated to supply the goods. There may have been a little exaggeration about this, for he was a man of vivid imagination; but when I hinted my suspicion of this he offered to back himself to obtain, without committing an offence under the Bankruptcy Acts, any article I chose to select from a jeweller's window in Bond-street. I did not take the bet, for I had not the slightest doubt that he would have won it.

The early death of Major Adam, Scots Guards, Military Secretary to the Viceroy of India, is deeply regretted by a large circle of friends. He was a very able man, and an excellent and most popular officer. Major Adam belonged to an ancient and highly distinguished Scotch family. He was the third son of Mr. W. P. Adam, who died in 1881 when Governor of Madras, and younger brother of Sir Charles Adam, of Blair Adam. His father sat for many years in the House of Commons, and he most efficiently filled the office of Liberal Chief Whip. The triumph of the Liberal Party at the General Election of 1880 was due, in a great measure, to Mr. Adam's excellent management, and Mr. Gladstone's candidature for Midlothian was originally suggested by him.

Mr. Albert Pell, who died at Torquay last week, sat in the House of Commons as Tory member for South Leicestershire from 1868 until 1885, when he retired. He was a frequent speaker in Parliament on agriculture, local government, and Poor Law administration, these being subjects which he thoroughly understood. His name is permanently associated with the excellent Casual Poor Act of 1882. He was really a great agricultural authority, and a warm but thoroughly practical friend of that industry. Mr. Pell did good work in Northamptonshire as a very active Guardian of the Poor in the Brixworth Union. He was most zealous in his efforts to abolish outdoor relief, of which he most strongly disapproved, and he severely censured careless and indiscriminate charity. Mr. Pell was a frequent attendant at agricultural meetings, and at Church Congresses. He will be much missed in Northamptonshire, as for over half a century he had been one of the most prominent and useful public men in the county, having constantly devoted himself to administrative work.

Know HUMPHREYS, and be well dressed. HUMPHREYS, opposite South Kensington Station, one of the biggest and best Dressmakers. Unusual originality combines with sensible, not fancy prices.

I knew the late Mr. Thomas H. Wakley of the Lancet for a great many years, but only in the later of them have I come across him regularly. The most striking thing about him in that period was his amazing vitality. Unlike the majority of men, he made no secret of his advancing years, but was uncommonly proud of them. He used to boast of them and of his health whenever one asked him how he was, and well he might, for there was little sign of infirmity about him until his last illness set in, and that was only a few weeks before his death—at the age of eighty-six. He always seemed extremely keen on his business, and remained in close touch with it to the last. He was a shrewd and genial man, with an inexhaustible fund of conversation, and though he devoted himself entirely to medicine until he was past forty, I should say that he developed into a thorough journalist.

I am glad to see that the manner in which registered baggage has for several years been opened and rifled whilst in transit in Italy has been discovered. As was obvious to any one, except the Government, it must have been done by the railway employees. Now a highly respectable guard has been arrested with a mass of false keys and an instrument to pick locks in his possession, and it has come to light that there was an association amongst the railroad employees to rob in this fashion.

In Italy, the lines and the rolling stock of a railroad were formerly the property of the Government, and they were let to companies at a fixed rent. Whether they were in good or bad condition did not affect the rent paid. The Government, therefore, scamped everything. There was one line of rails where two were needed, the sidings were few, and the rolling stock was not sufficient for requirements. Now that the State has ended the leases and itself works the railroads, it is admitted that a loan of at last twenty millions will be needed to put things in proper order. The sooner that the money is spent the better it will be for the country. Trade is impeded by the delays in forwarding goods, whilst many travellers avoid Italy, because they do not like to risk life and limb, to be usually a couple of hours or so late in reaching their destinations, and to have their trunks broken open and goods abstracted.

SLIP THE ANCHOR.

The Anchor Cannon will, I think,
  Except some law they pass
Restricting it, make billiards sink
  To just a sorry farce.

As once before 'twas needful found
  To cut the spot-stroke canker,
So now they'll run the ship aground
  Unless they slip the anchor.

Jeffrey & Co.'s Artistic Wall Papers are on view at their New Showrooms, The Wallpaper Gallery, 31, Mortimer st, W. To be had of all decorators.—Factory, 64, Essex-rd., Islington, N.

Our friends across the Channel have long held a reputation for thrift, which they are determined not to lose. Such, at least, I take it, is the moral of a pleasant story which is being told of the Paris Bar. It seems that, in order to honour worthily the funeral of the great chemist, M. Berthelot, the President ordered that all the magistrates of the Courts should attend it in their robes. To enable them to follow the procession thus attired, and to take part in the ceremony at the Institut, it was obvious that carriages would be needed. And to take all the magistrates, thirty landaus would have to be hired at a cost of 900 francs. Now the Cour de Paris understands the virtues of thrift, and legal eyes and hands were raised in horror at such extravagance. Long and anguished consultations were held, and at last it was decided that only sixteen counsellors and four members of the Parquet should attend, the whole twenty being packable into five landaus, the hire of which would be but 150 fr. Any others who wished to go must do so unofficially, and pay their own cab fares, which was done accordingly. Are bills of costs prepared upon similarly thrifty lines in Paris, I wonder?

Unfortunately, it does not always seem so easy to economise, even in France. Recently an ukase was given out to the heads of the permanent staff in the various Ministries that something must be done to reduce expenses, in view of budgetary deficiencies. Accordingly, the Under-Secretaries wrestled mightily with the problem. What is more, they even, in the end, saw daylight—though not much. There was one possible economy they decided, and only one. It was that official letters, from the various Ministers to senators, deputies, and others, should be written, in future, upon single, instead of double, sheets of notepaper. "Nascitur ridiculus mus!"

The late lamented M. Thomas, whose gigantic thefts from the Beaux Arts collections entrusted to his care, have caused such a nine days' wonder in Paris, seems to have had a sense of humour. One of the causes, I am told, which gained for him the absolute confidence of successive Governments, was the severity with which he punished the slightest dereliction or carelessness on the part of his subordinates. About ten years ago it was found that several rare volumes which appeared in the Library Catalogue had disappeared. M. Thomas instituted an exhaustive inquiry, severely cross-examined the librarians, and although they were able to prove themselves innocent of any share in the robbery, reduced several of them and reprimanded the rest. The missing volumes have now been found—in M. Thomas' collection!

Reference was made in Truth a few weeks ago to a concern called the Where-to-Stay Bureau, Limited, of Baker-street, and in consequence of it I have received several further communications respecting this company. The Gordon Hotels issue, under the title "Where to Stay," a very useful little handbook, which is practically an hotel guide for the whole world, or at any rate those parts of it which are frequented by tourists. As the name of the Where-to-Stay Bureau and the various local handbooks which it issues correspond so closely to that of the Gordon Hotels publication, the hotel company who were the first in the field, have naturally objected to the use of the title by the Baker-street office; but their remonstrances have been in vain. In another case that I have heard of, the Where-to-Stay Bureau has treated copyright illustrations in the same unceremonious style.

In my former paragraph it was mentioned that a lady who had been induced to invest £100 in the Where-to-Stay Bureau in order to obtain an appointment as secretary, threw up the appointment because the business was conducted in such a way that she did not care to be further connected with it, and that she lost her £100 in consequence. A case heard last week before Judge Emden shows that the business is not always conducted in a manner satisfactory to the customers. The action was brought by the Bureau against a customer who objected to pay for an advertisement. The defence was that the advertisement was ordered for a special publication which Mr. Powell, the proprietor, was promising to bring out, and that it had been placed in one of his local handbooks, the promised publication not having been issued at all. The Judge found for the defendant. The remarkable thing about the case is that Powell should ever have brought it into court at all, and I repeat that all the proprietors of hotels and boarding houses who are advertising through this company would do well to satisfy themselves what they are getting for their money.

THE PERPLEXED TIPPLER.

I read the papers yesterday,
  Wherein some doctors made it clear
They'd nothing but what's good to say
  Of moderate use of wine or beer.

But now to-day those papers swarm
  With other doctors' letters thick,
Who, cocksure, state that any form
  Of alcohol's the very Nick.

When doctors wise thus disagree,
  Who shall decide the question nice
If drink a wholesome virtue be,
  Or if a pestilential vice?

Myself, at meals I always take
  A glass of burgundy or port,
And eke, before for bed I make,
  Some whisky of the "special" sort.

So till agree these doctor men,
  Methinks I'll still thus mildly tope,
And then, I vow, though not till then,
  To go and join a Band of Hope.

Mr. H. C. Lea called attention last week to the fact of Mr. Thomas Kingscote acting as representative of an eminent Rheims champagne firm while occupying rooms in St. James's Palace by virtue of his position in the King's Household. The thing does not look quite comme il faut, but, of course, the propriety of it depends entirely upon the use which the gentleman makes of his position outside the Royal Palaces. I do not understand Mr. Lea to suggest that Mr. Kingscote is doing a general wine business. It was different some years ago, when he was a partner in the London firm representing Messrs. Moët and Chandon. As a matter of fact, I was thinking of calling attention to the matter in those days, but the partnership was dissolved at the moment, and although Mr. Kingscote afterwards became connected with Messrs. Mumm, the position seemed to have become different. The Royal Warrant was transferred at the same time from one firm to the other, but that was a matter chiefly concerning the taste of the august personages who might drink the wine, and I should hesitate myself to decide between the rival merits of Mumm and Moët and Chandon.

Prince Robert de Broglie and his "Princess" have not had a warm welcome at a music hall in Rome. The Prince was considered to be led by the orchestra rather than to lead it, and the voice of the "Princess" did not find favour. After a few performances at which there was a good deal of rioting, further performances were forbidden by the police. At the last one, according to the Italian papers, the "Princess" met the demonstration against her by putting her thumb to her nose and extending her fingers towards the audience, which, as the papers say, was hardly the habit of Princesses.

The Prince was married to his first wife in France by a priest. The father refused to give his assent, and as the son was not twenty-five the civil marriage could not take place. Why the father did refuse his consent is not clear, for the lady was wealthy and most respectable. The pair therefore came over to England and were legally married here. Then the Prince deserted Number One, and picked up with Number Two. They went to America and were married there. Assuming the marriage to have been legal in America and the Prince to have fulfilled all the requirements of the French law, the second marriage would be legal in France. But in every country except France, Number One is his wife and not Number Two. The only legal marriage is the first one. Those, therefore, who went to hear the "Princess" de Broglie sing in a London music hall because she was a Princess heard no Princess, whilst the Prince who conducted the orchestra was a bigamist, illegally passing off a lady as his wife when he had been previously married to another lady who is still alive.

The Board of Manufacturers at Edinburgh have now ceased to manage the National Gallery of Scotland, which will in future be under the control of the Government. Mr. Gibb, who has been the very efficient curator of the gallery for twelve years, has retired, and he is to be succeeded by Mr. J. L. Caw, the present curator of the Scottish Portrait Gallery, on the recommendation of the Secretary for Scotland. The selection of Mr. Caw has given much satisfaction, as he is a distinguished authority on art, and he has published some excellent monographs, including one on Sir Henry Raeburn.

Under the old system this office could be held only by a member of the Royal Scottish Academy, but this inconvenient restriction has been abolished by the National Galleries Act.

During the last few weeks many people in London have been annoyed by having a bulky volume left at their doors, accompanied by a circular from the Granville Press, Limited, of Eagle-street, London, W.C. The circular says:—

> We are taking the liberty of sending you herewith a copy of "Pannell's Reference Book," which has caused so considerable a sensation in the book market. . . . . We send the book for your kind examination, firstly, because no mere description of it can give an adequate idea of its comprehensive character and practical value; and, secondly, because the price at which it is issued leaves no margin of profit for extensive advertising. . . . .
>
> Our representative will call in a few days, and in the event of your deciding to purchase a copy, the money (10s.) can be paid to him, and he will give you a receipt on one of our official forms. . . . . .

How a volume which has not been put on the book market in the ordinary way can have caused a considerable sensation in that market, is not evident; and, as a matter of fact, it must cost as much to hawk volumes from house to house in this way, and call for them again afterwards, as it does to issue them through the trade and advertise them. The method which the Granville Press adopts has the further disadvantage of causing widespread trouble to householders; and the best way in which they can protect themselves is by refusing to assist it in any way.

The Rev. J. W. Rhodes, Vicar of Whaplode, Lincolnshire, has issued a pamphlet setting forth the grievances of himself and his parish against the Governors of Uppingham School. He calls it "The Uppingham-Whaplode Church Scandal," and the title does not exaggerate the character of the case. The facts in relation to this matter were fully set forth in Truth in August, 1903. The great tithe of the parish of Whaplode, now valued at £1,600 a year, is vested in a body of Rectors, who are practically identical with the Governors of Uppingham School, and the income forms part of the endowment of that school. The parish is impoverished for all ecclesiastical purposes by the diversion of this money; the Rectors recognise no responsibility for the maintenance of the parish church or the Vicar's work; and, as Mr. Rhodes puts it, "this poor, dilapidated, but otherwise grand Norman church, and the miserable group of tumble-down cottages around it are such as they are, because the great and affluent have given their sons an expensive education under cost price at Uppingham Schools (which were founded and endowed for poor scholars, but which have been 'annexed' by the rich), and poor Whaplode Church has been made to pay some of the difference out of the endowments given for its maintenance."

It is interesting to note that among the ex officio members of the Uppingham Trust are the Bishops of London and Peterborough, the Deans of Westminster and Peterborough, the Archdeacon of Northampton, and the Masters of Trinity and St. John's, Cambridge. Mr. Rhodes states that he has represented the case to them individually and collectively, but without result, and two of the most eminent of the dignitaries above mentioned were unaware that they were Rectors of Whaplode until he called their attention to the fact!

Canon Lonsdale, who died last week at the age of eighty-nine, had held a residentiary stall in Lichfield Cathedral for nearly fifty-two years. He was a son of the well-known Bishop of Lichfield, and a brother-in-law of the late Lord Grimthorpe. Canon Lonsdale, who was warmly interested in education, held the office of Secretary to the National Society for seventeen years, and he was then actively concerned in the protracted negotiations between Church dignitaries and successive Governments in reference to subsequent legislation. He was Canon Ainger's predecessor as Reader in the Temple Church, and held that post for fifteen years. He was a very able man, and a thoroughly sound scholar, and inherited a full share of the shrewd common sense for which his father was so eminently distinguished. His standing as a theologian was proved by the fact that he acted as examining chaplain to four successive Bishops of Lichfield: Dr. Lonsdale, Dr. Selwyn, Dr. Maclagan (the present Archbishop of York), and Dr. Legge. Residing constantly at Lichfield, Canon Lonsdale was successful in reviving the activities of Cathedral life, and in giving it a prominent place in the work of the diocese. He was much aided in this task by Dean Bickersteth and by the present Dean. He was greatly beloved at Lichfield, and was held in the highest esteem by all classes and parties.

The stall in Lichfield Cathedral which Canon Lonsdale's death has vacated is worth £500 a year, with an excellent prebendal house in the Close, and is in the gift of Bishop Legge.

The Bishop of London has filled up the vacant prebends of St. Paul's Cathedral. The Rev. Algernon Lawley, rector of Hackney, a younger brother of Lord Wenlock, succeeds to the stall of Chamberlainewood, vacant by the death of Prebendary Kempe. Prebendary Stuart, who has been appointed by the Crown to a canonry in Canterbury Cathedral, is replaced in the stall of Mapesbury by Dr. Wood, head master of Harrow. In the old days a prebendal stall in St. Paul's Cathedral was worth from fifteen hundred to seven thousand a year. When leases fell in on property annexed to the stall very large sums were paid in fines and other dues to the Prebendary in possession. In 1856 Bishop Percy, who held the stall of Finsbury along with the see of Carlisle, received £80,000 in consequence of the leases on the prebendal estate falling in, a windfall which took place only a week or two before his sudden death.

The announcement that the vacant canonry at Ripon is in the gift of the Prime Minister is incorrect. The patronage falls to the Bishop of Ripon, the stall being worth £500 a year. A house is provided only during the three months of residence, this arrangement being the same as at York. Mr. Gladstone appointed Canon MacCall because Canon Birch happened to die during the interregnum between the death of Bishop Bickersteth and the enthronement of Bishop Boyd-Carpenter, so the patronage passed to the Crown for that turn.

---

Readers will do well to secure a copy of the Business Blue Book. A glance at the contents set on page 979 of this number will clearly demonstrate its usefulness.

It was mentioned in Truth last week that Dean Wace was to have left Canterbury on Easter Monday, but was obliged to postpone his departure on finding himself the only member of the Chapter in residence. If I may believe a correspondent in Canterbury, the departure of all his colleagues at this juncture was by no means accidental, but was designed to signify their disapproval of the abolition of the three hours' service on Good Friday, which the Dean has arbitrarily effected without regard to the views and wishes of the Chapter generally. I gather from the same source that the Dean himself has become conspicuous beyond all the Chapter by his absences both from Canterbury and from the Cathedral services, and that the method taken by his colleagues of indicating their sentiments by leaving him in the lurch during the Holy Week and Easter services, and on the eve of his contemplated departure for the Continent, is regarded in the locality as rather a good joke.

The Hospital, which has hitherto been primarily devoted to the interests of hospitals and the nursing profession, has enlarged its sphere of usefulness, and comes out this week as a "modern medical journal," retaining all its traditional features, but giving a wider attention to general scientific and professional questions, and laying itself out specially to serve the general practitioner. The paper has always been very ably conducted. It has been less apt than some of its older contemporaries to regard the world as made for the doctors, and to treat the interests of the medical profession as identical with the interests of Cavendish-square and Harley-street. In its more ambitious character, therefore, it is likely to be of service to the public as well as the profession.

No doubt many old Etonians of a later generation than mine will remember "the little dark-eyed assistant who was for twenty-five years in Kitty Fraser's shop at Eton," and who is now Mrs. Mary Uffindell, of 77, Canbury Park-road, Kingston-on-Thames. Mrs. Uffindell, who is helpless through rheumatoid arthritis, will be a candidate at the May election for the Royal Hospital for Incurables, Putney, and I have been asked to give further publicity to the appeal for votes that has been issued in her interest. A subscription of half-a-guinea to the hospital will secure two votes. The Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Duke of Leeds, the Duke of Wellington, and some other old Etonians have already responded to the appeal, and it is hoped that many more will yet do so.

Stammering cured only by personal tuition; interview on written application.—Mr. A. C. Schnelle, 119, Bedford Court-mansions. London, W.C. Pupils taken in residence.

The only point worth notice in the debate on Mr. Haldane's Bill was Sir Charles Dilke's contention that the new scheme means a good deal more expenditure. Mr. Wyndham's speech merely fulfilled the constitutional function of an Opposition, chiefly from the point of view of the Militia. Mr. Arnold-Forster's merely fulfilled the traditional function of Mr. Arnold-Forster, which is to denounce everything relating to the Army which Mr. Arnold-Forster has not proposed. But Sir Charles Dilke's view that the Territorial Force must cost some millions more than the forces which it absorbs, supposing that it is to be any more worth its keep than they have been, has good reason behind it, and it will be important to see what Mr. Haldane has to say in answer to him.

By a curious coincidence, while Mr. Arnold-Forster is convinced that Mr. Haldane is about to destroy such army as we at present possess, an officer who has read last week's article on "The Compulsory Service Craze," puts Mr. Arnold-Forster into the box as a witness for Mr. Haldane against the National Service League. He refers to the passages in his recent book, "The Army in 1906," where the late Secretary of State argues that what we want is "quality not quantity," and reckons up the number of men in the United Kingdom who have been trained to arms under the voluntary system of enlistment.

The passages referred to are to be found on pages 309-10 of the book in question, and are well worth bearing in mind by all who dislike, for whatever reason, the compulsory service propaganda. Mr. Arnold-Forster shows that in 1906 the number of men serving in the Regular Army, Army Reserve, Militia, Imperial Yeomanry, and Volunteers, after deducting colonial and native troops, was in round numbers 767,000. There were also 129,000 men in the Navy, and over 52,000 in the Naval Reserve and Volunteers, giving a grand total of 948,000 odd. He calculates, I should say correctly, that for every man actually serving, there were three who had been trained in these forces, which would give a total of 3,792,000 of men trained to arms in one shape or another under the voluntary system in the British Isles. To talk under these circumstances of voluntary enlistment being a failure, and of the necessity of enforcing military training upon the whole population, sounds like the ravings of delirium. What we need is not more men, but improved training and organisation, and to gain these it would be well worth while to submit to a substantial reduction of numbers.

In turning up Mr. Arnold-Forster's book for the figures given above, I came across the chapter in which he condemns the regimental system in its relation to the officering of the Army. I suppose Mr. Haldane has got enough on his hands for the next year or two without tackling this question. But it strikes me as the most important step now awaiting the army reformer of the future. Like others who have considered this question, Mr. Arnold-Forster makes a strong point of the difference between the Army and the Navy which the regimental system creates, and there can be no question that the example of the Navy is all against the present Army system. The example of foreign armies points in the same direction. There is probably no reform that is more certain to arouse intense and bitter hostility in the Service. Nevertheless, the change would be entirely in the interest of officers—at any rate, of all who mean business, and desire to rise in their profession.

A retired Indian officer, who has always interested himself keenly in the natives of the country, sends me the following letter. Between European and Asiatic there is always a gulf fixed, and not less between conquerors and conquered. But it is our obvious interest to bridge over the gulf as far as possible, and this ought to be understood by the Government and all its servants:—

A native gentleman in India writes to me by this mail: "I am afraid you are right in thinking that the gulf between Europeans and natives is widening, and for this perhaps Europeans are more to blame than natives. With a little tact and sympathy good results can be achieved, for there is no people in the world so easily satisfied as the natives of India. But the members of the British bureaucracy do not seem to realise this, or do not care to."

As I have been living in India most of my life, and agree with the above, and am sure that many old Anglo-Indians are of the same opinion, I write to you on this subject. The natives of India were all delighted to meet the Duke of Connaught once again during his recent visit, and they thoroughly appreciated the kindness and courtesy of the Prince of Wales last year. What they fail to understand is why the treatment they receive from civil and military officials should differ so much from that which they receive from our Royal princes. The higher ranks and the better educated class of natives resent keenly, though quietly, the little snubs they so often get from our public servants—chiefly junior military and civil officers—snubs not justified in any way, and quite out of place. It is this more than anything else that causes discontent and the widening of the unnecessary gulf between the British and native subjects of the King in India. Everyone resents snubs—especially from snobs.

A recent letter in the Pioneer draws a startling comparison between the pay of officers in the Indian Army and in the Forest and Police Departments. The writer gives a table showing the pay in each department year by year. In the first year the pay in the Army is Rs.225, in the Police Rs. 300, and in the Forests Rs. 380; and so on down to the twentieth year, when the three stand: Army Rs.800, Police Rs.1,600, Forests Rs. 1,250. As between the first and third, the aggregate difference in twenty years amounts to Rs.6,435; and it must also be remembered that the examination for the Army is far stiffer than for the other departments, and that a man who goes into the Police begins to earn his living at once after passing his examination. Nothing that has yet been said as to the insufficiency of Army pay in India is more convincing than this. Of course, the value of an officer, as of any other article, is what he will fetch, and as long as the Government can get the men it wants, it has no strong inducement to raise their pay. But it seems doubtful whether the men would be forthcoming if all the facts were sufficiently appreciated.

For a long time past there has been great dissatisfaction in the Indian Post Office at the favour shown to the Civil Service in the appointments as Postmaster-General. There are six of these appointments in India, and five of them are now held by members of the I.C.S., so that it may be taken to be the policy of the Government to reserve these billets exclusively for that service. The soundness of this policy seems open to much question, apart from considerations of justice to the postal service. The position of an Indian Postmaster-General, of course, bears no analogy to that of the Cabinet Minister who holds that position in England. He is a working head of the department, and there is no principle on which it is possible to justify the selection for such a post of a man who has previously been employed, say, as a magistrate or in the Revenue Department.

The Rev. W. Weinandy, who styles himself director of the Sodality Educational League, 3, Dhurrumtollah-street, Calcutta, is addressing a private and confidential circular to Army officers and N.C.O.s in India, inviting them to purchase tickets in his annual Derby sweepstakes "for poor and destitute children." In previous years I have called the attention of the police at Calcutta to the violation of the law by this reverend gambler. On the present occasion it would be more hopeless than ever to do this, for in view of the huge public lottery which was recently carried out under Viceregal patronage in Calcutta, it is manifestly difficult for the police to put the law in motion against a minor offender like the Rev. Mr. Weinandy. At the same time I may point out to the recipients of the circular that as a charity the Sodality Educational League shows itself quite unworthy of the support for which it appeals—indeed, if it is true that, as the promoter states, 80 per cent. of the money received will be distributed among the buyers of tickets, it is obvious that after payment of the heavy expenses of advertising, printing, and posting, practically nothing can be obtained for "poor and destitute children."

A correspondent in Egypt writes that a great many sergeants on coming out to join the Egyptian Army find on their arrival that the conditions are materially different from what they have been led to expect, and he mentions one or two points which may be worth noting. The first is that the pay of a sergeant in the combatant branches is actually below that of a private or corporal of a departmental corps; indeed, my correspondent states that the pay is the same for privates, corporals, and sergeants, which seems an extraordinary state of things. A second point is that no lodging allowance is granted in the event of quarters not being available, which sometimes happens. This seems to be contrary to the official terms of service, but my correspondent asserts that men who have not got quarters are never able to obtain lodging allowance in lieu. Another inconvenience mentioned is that all ranks, from warrant officers down to privates, in the Egyptian Army have to use the same mess-room—a state of things naturally very distasteful to a British N.C.O. Assuming these facts to be correct, it is well they should be understood beforehand by men thinking of exchanging into the Egyptian service.

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and à la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger. Open on Sundays.

The burden of the rates seems to be a universal grievance. The latest outcry has arisen in the Lucknow Cantonment in consequence of the United Provinces Government levying a water rate upon the occupiers of bungalows and other premises within the cantonment. Years ago a water supply was introduced for the benefit of the troops, and standpipes were placed in the public roads, though this convenience was not required by householders, as every house possesses at least one well in its compound. Now, however, it has been ordained that whether the public supply is used or not, the occupier of every house within 300 ft. of a standpipe—which means practically every house in the cantonment—shall pay a water rate of 7½ per cent. on the annual value of his premises. Rents are so high that this will be a serious charge upon Army officers and other tenants; and the fact that the proceeds of the rate are being appropriated by the Government instead of being given to the cantonment funds adds to the discontent which its imposition has aroused.

My attention has been called to the result of a district court-martial held a few weeks ago at Ranikhet, which illustrates the draconic punishment which occasionally follows a casual lapse from sobriety in the Army. The prisoner was a sergeant of the South Lancashire Regiment, with nearly twelve years' service—over nine years' as an N.C.O. He was charged with neglecting to obey a battalion order and with drunkenness, was found guilty on both charges, and sentenced to be reduced to the ranks. The conviction on the first charge was not confirmed by the General, but the punishment was allowed to stand. I understand that the prisoner had had no previous entry for drunkenness during his service. He had re-engaged to complete twenty-one years at the time of the court-martial; and it certainly seems a most monstrous thing that a man in this position should have his whole career in the Army ruined, and his chance of a pension forfeited, by a single indiscretion of this kind after he has served with credit for twelve years. In no other sphere of life would such an offence lead to such a punishment, and it is quite out of the usual course in the Army, for, as a rule, a man charged with drunkenness for the first time is merely admonished—and quite enough, too.

By an R.G.A. order published the other day at Sheerness it is laid down that in future "the passes of N.C.O.s granted permission to leave the station in plain clothes are to be initialled by the regimental sergeant-major." The effect of this seems to be that the discretion of a commanding officer to grant such a pass is made subject to the approval of the sergeant-major. In this particular instance the order is strongly objected to, for the simple reason that the regimental sergeant-major is personally opposed to the wearing of plain clothes by the men under his authority; and, rightly or wrongly, the opinion prevails that the warrant officer in question is at the bottom of the issue of this order. Whether this is so or not, it seems an odd way of carrying out the regulation which empowers the commanding officer to authorise the wearing of plain clothes. There are four companies of R.G.A. at Sheerness, each of them commanded by a major; and apparently the regimental sergeant-major is now empowered to veto any permission to wear plain clothes which these officers may grant to their N.C.O.s.

One of my Service readers points to the Dublin Fusiliers as a striking example of the obstruction of promotion in the non-commissioned ranks by the retention of men on the Permanent Staff for inordinate periods. He states that on the staffs of the Militia battalions there are at present twenty N.C.O.s with service ranging from twenty-five to twenty-nine years. As a result of this, men in the line battalions are debarred of all chance of earning a sergeant's pension, and one case is mentioned in which a man fully qualified for promotion in every way has actually held the rank of lance-sergeant for eight years. It is astonishing that more effectual measures are not taken to remove, or at least diminish, this grievance, which prevails in all parts of the Army, and is the more indefensible because it cannot be pretended that the retention of men of twenty-five or thirty years' service bears any relation to efficiency.

The regulations as to wearing plain clothes have lately been "reprinted for guidance" at Cape Town, with the notification that the words "camp and quarters" in King's Regulations, paragraph 1,955, mean "Cape Town and its suburbs (including Wynberg), and Simonstown." From a communication which I have received from Cape Town, I gather that for twelve months past N.C.O.s have enjoyed the privilege of wearing civilian clothes in this district without special permission, so that the order in the above shape really curtails this privilege considerably. There does not appear to be any special reason for this step, and it is difficult to understand why a much-valued privilege like this should be granted and then be capriciously cancelled at the end of a year or so, unless it is with a view to creating dissatisfaction.

A correspondent asks, "Will not compulsory training fill the ranks of the Territorial Force with men devoid of military or patriotic spirit, and thereby weaken its efficiency and fighting value?" It might not actually "fill" them, but it would introduce a considerable percentage of material of inferior value. That is the strongest point, of course, against compulsory service. One volunteer is worth a dozen pressed men; and there are not a few pressed men whose room would be far more serviceable to an army than their company. For this reason no rational being would dream of raising soldiers by compulsion until he had made sure that he could not get them voluntarily.

Cherry Whisky Fremy Fils (Chesky) The Original Brand.
Cherry Whisky Fremy Fils (Chesky). Beware of Imitations.
Cherry Whisky Fremy Fils (Chesky) Sold Everywhere.

An officer in the mercantile marine writes to express cordial approval of the proposal made by one of his comrades in these columns the other day for an old-age pension fund for sailors. He expresses the opinion that such a measure would have a valuable effect in attracting men to the Service, which is at present discredited by the fact that so many sailors are to be seen dependent on charity or the rates in their old age; and he points out that at present sailors have little opportunity or inducement for saving, while the circumstances of their life tend to make them improvident. He agrees with my previous correspondent that a contribution of 1d. a day from wages, from all ratings, supplemented in the way previously suggested, would be effectual for the purpose, but he points out that it would have to be compulsory, and authorised by statute, which was what I understood the original suggestion to be. He suggests that my first correspondent should elaborate his suggestions a little further. Unfortunately, he wrote to me from a distant port, and there is no saying in what part of the world he may be at the present moment, but should this meet his eye, possibly it may encourage him to go further into the question.

A naval paymaster forwards a circular received from a Liverpool concern called the Mead Cycle Company, inviting him to take up an agency for the sale of their machines on commission. If he is not disposed to undertake it himself, the company would be obliged if he would kindly pass the offer on to a friend. The paymaster asks whether the firm is within the law in making him such an offer. I know of no law to prevent them, but I suppose that an officer would not be within the King's Regulations if he accepted the job. The fact of such a proposal being made to a naval officer is chiefly interesting as showing the indiscriminate fashion in which advertising firms of this class chuck about their circulars.

A HINT TO A. CARNEGIE.

So Robert Crow has shot himself—
  Hear his sad case, I beg 'ee—
Because he'd not got so much pelf
  As wealthy A. Carnegie.

If this should move the millionaire
  To share his money gains out,
Lest other lads, in like despair,
  Should also blow their brains out,

I know a most deserving youth
  Who'd help friend Andrew "blow" it;
Which his address is "Care of TRUTH"—
  And mark the cover "Poet."

By the last mail from Dominica I have received particulars of the remarkable termination of the remarkable case of Davies v. the Attorney-General of the Leeward Islands, which was discussed in TRUTH a couple of years ago. Briefly, the facts were as follows:—In 1862 the Escheator-General of the Crown in this colony sold to a firm of merchants an escheated estate of 144 acres at the price of £152. The purchasers paid the money, and were given a title deed, but having no use for the land at the time, they allowed some years to elapse before they sought to take possession. It was then found that the land was in the occupation of other persons, who could not be removed. In 1880 the Government of the Colony settled the dispute that ensued by agreeing to convey to the purchasers 144 acres of Crown lands in a different part of the island, in lieu of the property for which they had paid.

In spite of their previous lesson, the purchasers, good, easy-going people, did not secure the possession which is nine points of the law, but accepted an official assurance that the land, which had been surveyed by the Surveyor-General, was at their disposal whenever they wanted it. Matters drifted on until 1900, when all the original members of the firm having died, the executor of the last survivor sold the 144 acres comprised in the grant of 1880 to Mr. W. Davies. This gentleman claimed the property, but it was then discovered that since 1880 the Government had granted it over again to other persons! The story seems almost incredible, but the facts were proved in an action which Mr. Davies brought against the Government in Dominica, and which, after much delay, due to official obstruction, was tried in 1904. The jury gave a verdict in his favour for the return of the £152 originally paid by his predecessors in the title in 1862, together with £255 for interest on that amount, and £50 for special damages. The Judge, however, disallowed the £255 on the ground that interest could not be awarded against the Crown.

There was a right of appeal to the Appeal Court of the Colony, but, having regard to the difficulties he had already encountered in getting a trial, Mr. Davies proceeded by way of petition to the Privy Council, and the case was eventually argued before the Judicial Committee last July. Lord Macnaghten expressed the opinion that interest ought to be paid to Mr. Davies, and the case was adjourned with a view to a settlement, but no settlement could be arrived at, and accordingly the petition again came before the Judicial Committee a month or two back. Judgment was then given for the Crown, on the ground that Mr. Davies ought to have appealed to the local court, and furthermore that the subject matter was not of sufficient importance to warrant the granting of his application by the Committee. In character with the rest of the proceedings in the case, this appears to be an extraordinary decision. From the point of view of the Crown the affair may have been of small importance, but to the petitioner the interest on the £152 was a substantial consideration, and it certainly seems monstrous that the Government of the Colony should have had the money for over forty years without paying for the use of it.

I was interested to see the other day the following notice in the Board of Trade Journal, for it seems to imply that Truth is read as it ought to be in Mr. Lloyd-George's Department:—

> The attention of the Board of Trade has been drawn by recent cases in the Bankruptcy Court, particularly in London, to the large number of aliens (principally Jews) of various nationality, who come to this country and commence trading on credit, and without capital, ultimately finding themselves in the Bankruptcy Court. Their stock has by this time disappeared, and as a consequence of the absence of books—which may or may not have been kept, but at any rate are not forthcoming—all attempts of the Official Receiver and the Court to obtain accounts of their dealings are met by the plea of inability; and while in many cases there may be strong grounds for suspicion as to the disposal of the goods which have been obtained, it is only in very exceptional instances that any evidence is obtainable which results in the recovery of any assets for the creditors.

The notice seems to be intended as a sort of warning, like those issued from Scotland Yard. In this sense no doubt it will be useful. But I trust that it also implies that the Board of Trade, having realised the extent of this evil, will take the earliest opportunity of promoting legislation on the subject. When the opportunity will come must, of course, depend upon the general legislative arrangements of the Government; but the Cabinet will do well to note that the reform of the bankruptcy laws is a question in which a very large and important section of the community is deeply interested.

Probably it is owing to the preoccupation of the public mind with the Thaw case that no public agitation has yet been commenced on behalf of Lord William Nevill. This unfortunate nobleman seems in every way a suitable object for public sympathy. When one takes into account his honourable ancestry, his public school education, his fairly comfortable circumstances, and his previous conviction, it is obvious that he must be a victim of uncontrollable criminal impulses for which he cannot justly be held responsible. Probably he suffers intermittently from "brain storm" of the same type as that which enveloped Thaw when he beheld Stanford White at the Maddison-square Theatre. Or it may be that "exaggerated ego" caused him to think that he had a perfect right to the jewellery which he had pledged, and that when a pawnbroker had the word of a Nevill for the repayment of his advance two pieces of coal were quite good enough as collateral security.

NURSERY RHYMES REVISED.

See-saw! Murder by Thaw!
Agree can't the jury upon it;
Which, with Rayner's reprieve,
Almost makes one believe
That the world's got a bee in its bonnet.

Mr. Cecil Coward is to be congratulated upon the lesson he has given to Lewis Teller and Sampson Jacob Goldberg, the usurers trading under the alias of "F. Lawrence and Co.," 119, Regent-street. Mr. Coward's youngest son, an undergraduate of Cambridge, not yet twenty years of age, fell into the toils of these harpies, borrowing £200 on a promissory note for £300, payable in four quarterly instalments of £75 each. The note contained the usual default clause, whereby on failure in the payment of any one instalment the whole amount outstanding became due at once, the interest in that event working out at 200 per cent. per annum. When Mr. Coward heard of the transaction he informed "Lawrence and Co." that his son was a minor, but they persisted in bringing an action against him, doubtless expecting that the father would pay rather than have the matter made public. That is an expectation which is generally fulfilled in these cases. Mr. Coward, however, refused to pay, in the hope that his refusal would be a lesson to such sharks as Teller and Goldberg. Accordingly, at the trial of the action on Saturday the Infants' Relief Act, 1874, was pleaded, and Mr. Justice Lawrence gave judgment for the defendant with costs, the promissory note being declared null and void.

It is to be hoped that in similar circumstances other parents and guardians will follow the example Mr. Coward has so courageously set. Bloodsuckers of the breed of "F. Lawrence and Co."—a firm which, by the way, has figured in my Cautionary Lists for the past two or three years—are encouraged to deal with minors by the ease with which they can extort the money from the relatives of the youthful borrowers. Many seem to be deterred from resisting such demands, not only by a foolish fear of an exposure in court, but by a mistaken idea that honour requires that the debt should be discharged. Really, the usurer's claim is as indefensible morally as it is untenable legally. No consideration whatever ought to be shown towards rascals who deliberately inveigle young fellows into ruinous loan transactions, and the loss of their money is a penalty that these pests richly deserve.

One or two correspondents have drawn my attention to a case before the Melrose J.P.s last week when a farmer in the neighbourhood was prosecuted at the instance of the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for having ill-treated and starved a cow, a horse, and ten pigs. It was alleged that the cow and the horse had died from starvation, and that the pigs were in a famished condition, but the J.P.s found that each charge was "not proven." The case is not one that can very well be tried over again in a newspaper. In view of the evidence that was given, however, I am not surprised to learn that the judgment of the magistrates is being severely criticised by supporters of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

At the Newark County Petty Sessions last week the Bench granted a vaccination exemption certificate to a conscientious objector, but the Chairman intimated that in future cases "they would expect evidence—and possibly medical evidence." Of course, their worships will have no right to do anything of the kind—indeed, the idea of requiring medical evidence in support of a conscientious objection is palpably absurd. To save the magistracy from making such fools of themselves as well as to prevent the injustice that arises from their muddle-headed misinterpretation of the Act, Mr. John Burns really should not any longer delay his promised Bill on this subject.

As a rule the magistrates who preside at Quarter Sessions do not exhibit the marked leniency to offenders against the person as compared with their treatment of poachers, petty thieves, and vagrants, which marks the administration of justice in the lower courts. But that there are exceptions to the rule is shown by the two cases which head my Legal Pillory this week. Though neither of the sentences can be described as either ferocious or vindictive, yet their comparison affords an admirable illustration of the point of view of many of the great unpaid whose names figure week by week in this column. A particularly glaring instance of misplaced leniency is supplied by the case heard at the Mansfield Police-court. To treat highway robbery with violence as a trivial offence adequately punishable by a paltry fine betrays a fatuousness rare even amongst the great unpaid.

Anglesey Quarter Sessions. Sir R. R. Williams-Bulkeley, Bart., presiding. Owen Thomas, charged with an indecent assault. Convicted of a common assault. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Anglesey Quarter Sessions. Before the same bench. Solomon Taylor, charged with stealing 11lb. of pork. One month's hard labour.

Nairn Sheriff Court. Before Sheriff-Substitute Lightbody. A farm-servant and his wife, charged with cruelty to their five children. The children were clad in a few rags, they were covered with vermin, and their bed stank. Fined 10s. each.

Hants Quarter Sessions. Before Mr. W. Holding and other magistrates. Albert Edward Smith, charged with stealing rags, value 2d., from a refuse heap belonging to a dust contractor. Six months' hard labour.

Southampton County Petty Sessions. Before Col. F. Willan and other magistrates. W. H. Meacher, charged with assaulting his mother-in-law. Her face was badly disfigured as a result. Fined 10s. and costs.

Bearsted Police-court. Before Mr. C. Whitehead and other magistrates. Joseph Brown, charged with damaging underwood to the extent of 1s. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Yeovil Police-court. Before the Mayor and Mr. J. K. Whitby. Arthur Chislett, charged with assaulting his mother. He struck her in the face and gave her a black eye. Bound over to keep the peace.

Fordingbridge Petty Sessions. Before Lt.-Col. Greenwood and Mr. R. Tindall. George Compton, charged with sleeping out. One month's hard labour.

Holt Petty Sessions. Before Mr. E. Bowyer Sparke, Sir A. Jodrell, Mr. C. J. T. Lynes, and Mr. W. Leggatt. F. Willimott, charged with assaulting his wife by striking her in the face with his fist. Fined 5s. and costs.

Bourne Police-court. Before Col. De Burton, and Messrs. Johnson, Mays, and Griffith-Dearden. J. Marvel and A. Woodward, charged with night-poaching. Marvel fined £2 and costs, Woodward one month's hard labour.

Mansfield Police-court. C. Musgrove and H. Riley, charged with stealing a number of articles from the person of Albert Mellor. Mellor was knocked down and robbed in the street. Each fined 21s., or a month in default.

Lymington Petty Sessions. Before the Mayor and Mr. Schreiber. G. James, charged with sleeping in a pig-sty. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Rotherham Police-court. J. F. Gill, charged with stealing two trowels. Two months' imprisonment.

St. Helens Police-court. Before Sir C. Gamble and other magistrates. Peter Travis, charged with being drunk and disorderly. He attacked a passing cyclist, trying to knock him off his bicycle. Fined 10s. and costs.

Gloucester Police-court. Hugh Jones, chauffeur to Prince Hatzfeldt, charged with driving a motor-car at a speed dangerous to the public. Evidence showed the car to be completely under control. Fined £20 and costs.

Romford Petty Sessions. Before Capt. H. J. Stone, Messrs. J. G. Broodbank and J. Smith. W. Butcher, W. Shaw, T. Potter, and C. Oxley, charged with cruelty to six cows and a bull. The beasts were prodded with an iron-pointed stick, their tails were twisted until they crouched down with pain, and they were cruelly beaten. Butcher fined 20s., and the others 10s. each and costs.

Dorchester County Police-court. Before Mr. H. B. Middleton, Col. the Hon. C. H. Law, and Messrs. A. R. Pope and E. W. Young. Samuel Willis, charged with fish-poaching. He caught a brace of trout with a piece of wire on a stick. One month's imprisonment, in default of paying a fine of £1 and costs.

Barnsley Police-court. Samuel Owen, charged with breach of colliery rules, and B. Smallbridge with cruelty to a pony. Smallbridge tied a thin rope round the pony's tongue and lower jaw, and while in this condition Owen worked it for two hours. Owen fined 10s. and costs, Smallbridge 40s. and costs.

Thingoe Petty Sessions. Before Rev. J. White and other magistrates. Percy Ford and William Ford, charged with using a gun for the purpose of killing a pheasant. One month each, in default of payment of a fine of 40s. and costs.

Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Nearly 8,000 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private," absolutely confidential.—Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

The prosecution of Edwin Phillips, of Railway Supplies Journal notoriety, resulted last week in a further sentence of nine months' hard labour. I hope it will do him good, but seeing that the result of the same sentence imposed upon him for the same offence in 1904 was only that he started at his old game as soon as he came out of prison, the hope is little more than a pious aspiration. From what I have heard of this old gentleman, I fear that he is incorrigible. At the same time, the people on whom he preys are themselves very much to blame.

It was stated by the police at the London Sessions last week that Phillips had obtained money from at least one hundred persons in all parts of the kingdom for notices in the Railway Supplies Journal. All these people supposed, on the strength of Phillips' circular, that they were going to get an advertisement which would be worth at least 10s. Even if he had brought out the paper, which he appears to have only done once in the many years that I have known him, the advertisement would have been worthless. As long as people are ready to spend money in this way on advertising, without the slightest attempt to ascertain for themselves the value of what they will get for their money, there will be people like Phillips ready to impose upon them. And I may point out that this form of imposition is not practised exclusively by the proprietors of non-existent publications. Many obscure journals which make their appearance regularly are no better than frauds on the advertisers who keep them going.

The Secretary of the Manchester Team Owners' Association has written to me with reference to the local prosecution under the Prevention of Corruption Act on which I commented last week. It will be remembered that it was a case in which a clerk to a firm of merchants was convicted of "corruptly" giving a carter a shilling to deliver "three bundles of cloth" at different warehouses, for which purpose the carter used his employers' horse and lorry. My correspondent explains that there were really twenty-eight (not three) bundles of cloth, weighing about a ton, and that the carter was engaged on the job for four hours, his employers losing his services and the hire of the lorry and horse for that time. This certainly shows that the offence was more serious than might have been supposed from some of the newspaper reports, and in view of the Secretary's statement that there has been a practice in Manchester of arranging with carters to carry goods without the knowledge of their employers, I am inclined to agree that the penalty inflicted by the stipendiary was not, after all, excessive.

Readers of Truth are familiar with the M. A. Winter Company, of Washington, which offers to anybody whose name it can get hold of "the chance of a lifetime," which is to be realised by retailing for the said company "the best and cheapest family medicines on earth." The communication which offers this matchless prospect begins:—

Dear Friend,—Your name came into our possession from such a reliable source that we do not hesitate for a moment in making you the proposition to become an independent representative for our goods in your vicinity. From what we have learned about you we are confident that you are just the person we are looking for. . . . .

Another communication now being circulated by the M. A. Winter Company explains precisely the nature of the "reliable source" from which the firm gets hold of the names of the peope to whom it addresses the above blarney:—

Gentlemen,—We would like to know if you have any old letters or postcards with the writer's full name and address given thereon that you would care to dispose of. If so, it is very probable we would like to purchase them, to use in our circularising department. We circularise extensively with names and addresses we take from old letters and cards to advertise a family or household remedy that we are endeavouring to introduce into the homes of your country. . . . . .

The names and addresses thus obtained—usually in the handwriting of their owner—are, of course, to be cut off and attached to the first-mentioned circular, in order to persuade the "Dear Friend" who receives it that the M. A. Winter Company really has been making inquiries about him, and has some reason for supposing him to be "just the person we are looking for." Is it not amazing to see the laborious ingenuity that is now devoted to the art of catching flats?

One more example of the same sort of thing is furnished by a circular, of which dozens of copies have been sent to me lately, issued by one William Ross, otherwise the Brahmo Lever Watch Company, now of 96, Newgate-street. The following is the substance of the document, which has attached to it in each case a slip of paper bearing the signature of the person to whom it is addressed:—

Esteemed Friend:—

We are anxious to obtain agents for our goods everywhere, and in order to introduce our high-class lines of watches and jewellery in your district we have decided to issue a gratuitous prize-list open to purchasers of our goods. We are pleased to be able to inform you that you have been fortunate enough to have your name therein.

We find on consulting the list that your prize is a Brahmo-Gold Watch—a real beauty. It has fine movement, with dust-resisting case, and very heavily cased, and should wear and last for years, having the appearance of a magnificent 18-carat Solid Gold Watch, and looks well worth £10. . . . .

Now, as a special offer to you, and as your name is on our prize-list, this watch is absolutely Free, subject to the easy conditions mentioned below—a gift from us. . . . . All you have to do is to send us 6s. 11d. for one of our finest quality Brahmo-Gold Chains to wear with the watch. These magnificent chains are warranted British made and are the admiration of everyone. . . .

Heartily congratulating you on your good luck, we are, etc.

Remember—We have no connection with any other firm in a similar line of business. The above offer is a strictly Genuine one, under a penalty of £100.

The concluding admonition is quite called for, inasmuch as all the tricks of the numerous "firms" in a similar line of business are incorporated in this circular. There is first the time-honoured trick of the "free" watch presented as a bonus to every purchaser of the chain; secondly, the more modern formula informing the mystified dupe that he has in some way unknown to himself become a prize-winner in the firm's list; thirdly, the latest up-to-date contrivance of enclosing his own autograph by way of suggesting to him that some letter he has written to somebody has been the cause of his receiving this valuable privilege. The meaningless flourish about the offer being "strictly genuine under a penalty of £100" is also no novelty. It is a pity that there are no penalties on the perpetration of elaborate hoaxes of this class, but the artfulness of the gentry engaged in such business is nowhere shown more clearly than in the skill with which they keep on the right side of the law.

A Mr. Leon Kendell is advertising largely at present as an expert delineator of character from thumb prints. The boobies who spend their money on such self-evident humbug are not deserving of much sympathy, but two of Mr. Kendell's delineations, which I have before me, reveal the swindle of the business. One is founded on the thumb prints of Mr. S., the other on those of Miss C. Both are in identical terms from beginning to end. They appear at first sight to be type-written, but are certainly reproduced by a reduplicating process, and no doubt many more dupes have received the same response from the oracle. Like all such oracular pronouncements, it is designed to suit all cases. This is the sort of thing:—

This is a strange and complex nature—one that would not be easily understood or appreciated by those around you. You are reserved and reticent, yearning for love and sympathy, but are not very demonstrative yourself. . . . .

There is respect for old age and customs; you would conform to rule and discipline, are very tenacious, love order and method. . . . . You have a love of power, fame, and public recognition; are impressionable, somewhat impatient, self-possessed (outwardly), emotional, imaginative, and self-reticent. . . . .

There is a tendency to get "the blues," and become depressed, which you must avoid. There are indications of a long life, yet you must never worry or become anxious, as the stomach is most easily affected, and gastric troubles, constipation, defective circulation, and rheumatism are ailments that you would be subject to. . . . .

I find much that is likely to be interesting and eventful in this life, but I cannot go fully into detail in this short free chart, as you will understand. I am making you, however, a special offer of an extended reading, particulars of which you will find enclosed.

Your Astral Colours are Green and Russet Brown. These should be worn, as they contain electric vibrations which attract to you the most beneficial planetary currents. . . . .

A gentleman who, I should say, has been studying the Truth Cautionary List, calls my attention to an interesting article in an old volume of Punch, which shows the antiquity of the home employment swindle. The article in question appeared so far back as November 23, 1861. It describes various sharpers' tricks, which still continue to flourish, and particularly the trick of swindling poor ladies of limited means by offering them remunerative employment subject to a preliminary payment of a few pence or a few shillings. The writer refers to a recent police case, in which a man named Graham had been perpetrating this swindle from an address at a tobacconist's shop, but he apparently had not been captured, and Mr. Punch thus expresses his views on the case:—

To expose a sneaking humbug and to smash a swindling scheme is a duty to Society that Mr. Punch will never shrink from, and if "Mr. Graham" will oblige him with his photograph, it shall be copied in these pages as the portrait of a scoundrel who lives by telling lies and cheating honest people who are in want of work. The fact that "Mr. Graham" and rascals of his breed aim mainly to impose upon poor, weak, and struggling women, who would eke out a small income by their own handiwork, adds a number of degrees to the hot wrath of Mr. Punch, and as he is at times of an irritable temperament, the chances are that if he catches any "shabby-looking" gent coming out of a tobacconist's with a short pipe and lots of letters, he will pounce upon the party as an advertising swindler, and will kick him all the way to the most distant of police courts, and there leave him to be dealt with as the law directs.

I do not know whether our old friend Mr. P. is as pugnacious in these days as he was in 1861, but there are plenty of parties carrying on the same game to-day, from tobacconists' shops and other addresses, who are well deserving of his attention if he feels in want of a little healthy exercise.

As I expected, it turns out that a great many people have had occasion to regret ordering newspapers from Mrs. Davis, lately of Helebridge, Bude, besides the victims whose case I mentioned last week. In one instance, I am sorry to say, a Liberal club ordered its TRUTH of the lady, in addition to other papers, and only received the papers for about a month. The most interesting communication I have had on the subject comes from the New Victorian Club, in Sackville-street. It shows that Mrs. Davis victimised impartially not only those to whom she sold papers, but those of whom she bought them. In consequence of an advertisement which she issued, the New Victorian Club undertook to supply her with TRUTH and four or five other weeklies when taken off the reading-room table. She was to pay monthly, but only paid for one month, and the club let the account run on till she owed £1, when, as she failed to respond to applications for payment, the supply was discontinued. Mrs. Davis and her husband have now left Helebridge, and I shall be obliged to any one who can say where they are to be found, as some of the victims are not disposed to "take this sort of thing lying down."

Curiously enough, one of my readers mentions that some time last year his wife was led by an advertisement in the Lady to order a paper of a Mrs. Staniland Davis, of Stratton Hall, South Petherton. The paper was paid for, but arrived very irregularly, notice of change of address was ignored, and complaints were answered by impertinent letters. Finally, delivery ceased altogether some time before the subscription ran out. If this is another Mrs. Davis, the resemblance of the modus operandi as well as the name is a singular coincidence.

When a "banker," of the name of Paul Goldenberg, writing from Hamburg, solicits your patronage on the ground that he is "a Britisher himself," you are naturally inclined to be sceptical—especially when you see your exiled compatriot displaying his familiarity with his mother tongue in sentences of this sort:—

> Don't hesitate please and consider you must very often risk hundred times the amount upon quite dubious business specs. without getting a comparatively fractional portion of an equivalent or the prospect of such.

As may be guessed, this self-styled "banker" is really one of those German lottery touts who, thanks to the complaisance of the English Post Office, are enabled to inveigle simple-minded Britishers into throwing away their money on practically hopeless gambles. The circulars issued by these gentry are grossly misleading, and the same remark applies to those emanating from Charles Kiss and Co., of Budapest, and other agents of the Hungarian lotteries. All of them dilate upon the number of the prizes, but, of course, none of them explains that the vast majority of these prizes are trumpery sums which only just suffice to pay for a ticket in the next drawing or class. A whole series of drawings, involving an outlay of from £6 to £10, in entrance fees, must be gone through before the punter gets his chance of winning one of the really big prizes, and then, owing to various ingenious conditions, the odds against him rapidly mount up in tens of thousands—indeed, the odds against him in the case of the biggest prize of all are usually over 100,000 to 1. I should be sorry to encourage betting. Really, however, the backing of any racehorse, chosen haphazard, is a sensible and promising method of gambling in comparison with that offered by these foreign State lotteries.

Viewed as gambles, the Irish ecclesiastical lotteries are open to the same objection; but in those cases the promoters appeal to your charity as well as to your cupidity. I referred some weeks ago to the lottery which is being got up "to aid the Vincentian missionaries to complete their church of St. Peter's, Phibsboro', Dublin." The Rev. Joseph Geoghegan, of this church, is now sending out books of tickets addressed to "The Foreman" at factories in all parts of England and accompanied by a circular expressing the hope that the recipient "will kindly assist us in the good work in which we are engaged," and promising an allowance of 2s., together with two complimentary tickets, if 10s. worth of tickets are disposed of. The foremen are, of course, expected to earn their reward by unloading the tickets upon the men working under them. It may surprise this worthy priest to learn that a great many people—including Roman Catholics—look upon this as a most undesirable and even disgraceful proceeding. But though it may surprise the reverend gentleman, I have not the least expectation that the practice will be stopped.

Next to the clergy, the committees of rowing clubs seem to be the busiest promoters of lotteries in Ireland. I alluded a few weeks ago to the widespread distribution of tickets for a Derby sweepstakes which is being held in aid of the funds of the Newry Rowing Club. Not content with this, the committee also made facilities for gambling one of the principal attractions at a bazaar which took place a few days ago, and the local paper gives a glowing and admiring account of the success of the roulette tables, a wheel of fortune, and other devices which "showed how many people approve of chance when it means doing good." If the police were to do their duty—but they will not—most of the local magistrates, clergy, and professional men who were present would be prosecuted in respect of these illegalities.

Your amateur moneylender is often a worse extortioner than the professional usurer. At Liverpool the other day, Eliza Kennedy, of China-street, was fined £5 and costs for failing to register herself under the Act of 1900. It seemed that she was in the habit of making small advances to working class borrowers at a charge for interest which was the equivalent of 866 per cent. per annum. Eliza set up the unsuccessful defence that she was not a professional but only an amateur who simply lent money in the way of kindness "to oblige neighbours." I wonder what rate of interest this female Shylock would expect on a loan granted in the way of business?

Not content with the distribution of circulars a blood-sucker named Edward Stewart, 1, Castle-street, Cardiff, has lately adopted the impudent course of sending a canvasser to the local schools with the object of inveigling the teachers into his toils. Complaints on the subject have been made to the Education Committee, and at the last meeting a suggestion that any such tout entering the schools should be thrown out neck and crop was heartily endorsed. Before he is ejected, however, the most muscular teacher on the staff ought to give him a good thrashing, and if the same treatment can be extended to Stewart himself, so much the better.

On one or two occasions warnings have been given in Truth against a business carried on by the Irish Pictorial Card Company of Cork. This firm induces people to buy picture postcards in order to retail them among their friends, and earn a "present" for themselves. It is the sort of business which, of course, is chiefly carried on at the expense of children; and it has several times come under my notice that, having failed to sell the postcards and returned them, the children have been badgered for the cash value of them, the climax of the badgering taking the shape of a printed communication from "Holmes and Holmes, Debt Recovery and Inquiry Agents," of George's-street, Cork, notifying that if the money is not paid within seven days "we shall serve you with a debt recovery writ."

In the latest case that has come to my knowledge, the Cork company had to deal with a very intelligent youth on this side of St. George's Channel, who noticed that the promise to give him a present was printed on the back of the form on which he was to notify his remittance of 6s. for the postcards and his selection of a present from the firm's list. He accordingly kept this form as evidence of the contract, and when he had sold six-shillingsworth of postcards, he wrote to the company informing them that he had the money and would remit it on receipt of an air-gun, which was the particular present he had selected. No notice, however, was taken of this communication, and for several weeks the youth has received at intervals postcards from Cork, demanding the money or the return of the goods, and winding up with the above-mentioned communication from Holmes and Holmes. It is perfectly evident that the last communication has been filled in and directed by the same hand which wrote the previous communications from the Irish Pictorial Card Company. Either, therefore, the firm of Holmes and Holmes is a myth, or, if the firm exists, it supplies the Pictorial Card Company with these threatening notices to send out to its customers. I hope that mention of these facts may lead people to keep their children from having any dealings with the Cork firm.

A letter appears in the Northern Whig calling attention to the observations in Truth upon the Betterment of London Association, in view of the fact that an individual has been at work at Portadown collecting subscriptions for the National Thrift Society. I trust that this letter will check the operations of the individual in question, who is, of course, merely a paid collector on behalf of Mr. Bowden Green. Anybody desiring to know more about the National Thrift Society cannot do better than follow the advice given him by the writer of the letter and communicate with the Editor of Truth.

In the meantime, I may mention that when some two or three years ago Bowden Green formed a company for the purpose of doing the printing and publishing of the Betterment of London Association, he actually transferred to this company the "goodwill" of the National Thrift Society. A more frank confession than this of the true character of the concern in question would be impossible. Green simply treated it as a profit-earning business, and himself as the "beneficial owner." Since that date he has established another concern of the same character called the National Thrift Society of Scotland, which I believe has its headquarters at Glasgow. I am interested to hear that he has collectors at work in Ulster, for it shows that he is busily pushing a swindle which I had supposed to be practically extinct.

A publication called the Domestic Advertiser is issued at 7, Beak-street, Regent-street, W., for the benefit of people requiring servants. It contains three or four pages of servants' advertisements, and is delivered post free for a subscription of 5s. per annum. In the issue of March 9 appeared an attractive advertisement of a parlour maid. A lady wrote to the address given, and received in reply a letter from the mother of the girl she had written to, stating that her daughter had obtained a situation a month previously through the medium of an advertisement in the Morning Post. This letter was written on March 30, but nevertheless the same advertisement re-appeared in the issue of the Domestic Advertiser for the same date. The advertisement is therefore obviously a bogus one, reprinted from the Morning Post in the first instance, and repeated subsequently in order to fill up a column, regardless of the inconvenience which must thereby be occasioned. The troubles of people in search of servants are not likely to be materially alleviated by practices of this kind.

Mr. H. J. Blight, of the Middlesex and General Conservative and Unionist Registration Office," is once more appealing for subscriptions. He writes on the margin of his circular, "Don't allow my name to discourage you!" No doubt he has good reason to fear that it may have that effect. But the fault is not so much with the name as with the owner. Since this Blight fell on the party, he has been repudiated by the official organisation in Middlesex, and his services to the "cause" have been a minus quantity. As a mere politician I should desire them to continue, but as an editor who regards the interests of all his readers with an impartial eye, I feel it a duty to warn my Conservative and Unionist friends against the blighter.

LORD CROMER.

All Britons, be their views whate'er
In Party warfare's jealous strife,
Consenting own 'tis hard to spare
This calm, strong man from public life—

This man, whose keen, perspective eye,
Whose steadfast, firm, impartial hand
Brought Order out of Anarchy,
Of desert made a smiling land.

Who found oppression, slavery, crime,
And all the evil things that lurk,
Like reptiles in congenial slime,
Beneath the Upas of the Turk;

Who leaves—but what he leaves 'twere not
The task of language to portray;
His record's writ in every spot
From Suez to Khartoum to-day.

Be this his monument alone,
Which elements nor years can tame:
Bronze may corrode, and crumble stone;
While Egypt lives, lives Baring's name.

Whatever one may think about the future of Egypt and the British occupation, there can be no two opinions about the marvellous ability with which Lord Cromer has guided the administration of that country. Few men have ever taken up a more difficult task than that which Egypt presented when he went out in 1883. The finances and the general administration of the country were in a state of chaos, the Government was covertly hostile, the Soudan was in revolt, the French element and the French Government were on the look out for the first opportunity of upsetting the British régime. It was a position in which a single false step meant disastrous failure and, possibly, a fresh international crisis. Lord Cromer overcame all difficulties by a rare combination of qualities—sound judgment and foresight, unfailing tact and good temper, indomitable tenacity of purpose, and, above all, imperturbable patience. It may be doubted whether a single statesman has ever accomplished more striking results in any country, and, remembering what the Egyptian question was five-and-twenty years ago, it must be acknowledged that he has rendered services to Europe generally as well as to Egypt.

Sir Eldon Gorst possesses many of the qualities which have made Lord Cromer so successful, and both by character and experience is probably better fitted than anyone else to carry on the Cromer tradition. It is a question, however, whether that tradition has not now served its purpose, and whether the time is not coming for a new departure. We are pledged not to reduce Egypt permanently to the position of a protected Indian State, and we have no valid reason for aiming at such a result. Admitting, as we must, that our tutelage is only temporary, the end of our policy must be to teach Egypt to stand on its own legs.

Unless in merely clearing the ground, Lord Cromer has done nothing in that direction. He has remained to the last firmly opposed to anything in the shape of "nationalist" aspirations, and for this reason the Egyptians are to-day the only people who have anything to say against him. Their sentiments are only natural, but a good sign, for no people with any inherent vitality will ever submit willingly to the rule of foreigners, however well the foreigners may do their work. Sooner or later a beginning must be made with the work of teaching Egypt to rule itself, and there is no reason against making a beginning now which will not exist, and be equally plausible, in all time to come. Indeed, the longer the beginning is deferred the more certain it is that discontent will grow, and will breed seditious movements, which will afford a pretext for deferring indefinitely any experiment in self-government.

In an article on Lord Elgin's circular, the Saturday Review boldly argues that it is a desirable and praiseworthy practice for ex-Governors of Colonies to associate themselves with the promotion or direction of joint-stock companies formed to exploit the natural resources of the colonies which they have administered. With even more boldness, the writer of the article, referring to the leading case of Sir J. West Ridgeway, and the Ceylon pearl fishery, commits himself to the following statement:—

> In the hands of the Government the Ceylon pearl fishery lost money; in the hands of the company it has made money. These we understand to be undisputed facts, from which certain inferences are drawn.

It would be difficult to imagine a more complete travesty of the "undisputed facts," which are on record in a Blue Book published last year. For many generations the Ceylon Government derived a profit from the working of the fishery. Barren seasons sometimes occurred, and there was an unusual succession of such seasons down to 1902, but a scientific investigation, which was made during Sir J. West Ridgeway's Governorship, showed that by improved methods of dealing with the oyster beds any repetition of these occasional failures could be avoided, and the productiveness of the fishery vastly increased. The truth of this was soon demonstrated. In 1903 the Ceylon Government drew from the fishery a net profit of Rs. 829,348; in 1904, Rs. 1,070,467; and in 1905, Rs. 2,510,727. It was after this huge net profit—approximately £150,000—had been secured by the Government in 1905 that Mr. Lyttelton, on the very eve of the resignation of Mr. Balfour's Ministry, granted a twenty years' lease of the fishery to Sir J. West Ridgeway's company at a rent of £20,666 per annum. Those are the undisputed facts—not the Saturday Review's amazing perversion of them—on which the granting of the lease has been condemned as a scandalous job.

The two following passages appeared on the same page of the Evening News of April 12. They afford a striking example of the inconsistencies and contradictions which bring the Protectionist propagandists to grief at every stage of their progress. The first extract is from a leading article entitled "Get Away from Free Trade!" The second is from an article descriptive of his boyhood by Mr. Thomas Holmes, the police-court missionary:—

If Free Trade is to be judged sanely and impartially, it must be judged by its results, and its results are these. . . . .

"The Good Old Days!"

I can now realise what those days were. Wages were very low, food was dear, very dear. The very necessities of life were scarcely eatable. The very flour of which our bread was made was typical, for when made into dough it would not "rise," so it had to be made into flat cakes, and when baked these could be stretched like india-rubber. . . . . Bread went up to a shilling per loaf. Tea was six shillings per pound. Sugar was sevenpence, and other things were in proportion. . . . . Father was as good a workman as ever took tool in hand, and though the leading man at the foundry, the wages he received in those days were not equal to a road sweeper's of to-day.

THE EARLY PEA AND THE LATE PEA.

Once in a Field, where Peas were grown,
Two Species side by side lay sown—
The One was of the Early Kind,
To bear a forward Crop designed;
The Other, late; not timed to sprout
Until uncertain April's out.
Now March, that Year—the Month reviled—
Belied its Fame with Weather mild,
So when the Early Pea broke through
And saw, above, the genial Blue,
Kissed by the Sun's soft Warmth and Light,
She cried: "What ho! This is all right!"
And, pitying, she deplored the Fate
Unkind of her more backward Mate,
Who buried still in Torpor lay
Beneath the Surface of the Clay.
"By Peasticks! How I pity you,
Thus hid from Sun and Welkin blue,
While I enjoy this Weather fair
And revel in the Upper Air."
The other Pea—the backward Sort—
Just answered with a drowsy Snort:
"Be careful how too soon you revel,
For April's oft the very Devil!"
Came April in. 'Twas warm at first,
And all the Trees began to burst.
But soon things took another Tack,
Belated Winter Frosts came back
And turned the forward Green-stuff black.
Thus Early Pea, erstwhile so gay,
Now parched and withered Litter lay;
While, safe from Frost's Destruction kept,
Her Friend in Earth's warm Bosom slept,
Murmuring: "Ah, me! what risks they run,
Who court too soon the fickle Sun.
Better to face a longer Gloom,
Secure in Earth's protecting Womb,
Nor germinate in early Days,
While faithless still the Weather's Ways,
Than, springing up too quick and bold,
Succumb untimely to the Cold!"

Moral.

Precocity in early Prime
Withers too oft before its Time;
In the long Run, they farthest go
Whose Minds develop sure, if slow.

SCRUTATOR.

PENSIONS AND TAXES.

IT is generally understood that the coming Budget will be marked by some attempt to start a State fund for providing old-age pensions. Whether the outcry in favour of old-age pensions is a genuine one, in the sense that the majority of the working classes are strongly bent on this provision for their old age, I regard as very doubtful. They are, of course, ready to accept a deferred gift for what it is worth, and they would in truth be foolish to refuse it, if it costs them nothing. But my own impression is that in the main they would prefer something more immediately tangible. When, however, orators and associations assert that every person in the United Kingdom has a right to a pension on reaching a certain age, it is time for Radicals to protest against any such notion. A community is bound by the laws of charity to take care that no one forming part of it dies of starvation, or from want of a habitation to protect him against the elements. Against this, he may be made to work, if work can be found for him, which will repay the State what it spends on him. If he is in advanced age and past work, then he should be exempted from it. But this is a moral obligation based on humanity, and not on political economy, or any abstract right possessed by the individual. Practically, this is the present state of the law. But it is now proposed to give a pension to all those who have attained a certain age, whether they have been useful citizens or the reverse, whether they have been in good wage and saved, or whether they have squandered their wage; whether they are in actual want or able to provide for themselves, or have children or not who can provide for them. Practically no distinction is to be made, according to the professors of the doctrine of right, between the recipients. To this doctrine I, for one, am not prepared to subscribe. I take the world as it is. I would encourage thrift, and I would reward it as the best method to encourage it, and I would leave those who do not practise it to the operation of the present law. It is said that the money employed ought to come from the rich, and that it is a ransom that they must pay for being allowed to be rich. This is nonsense. A State can only be maintained by levying contributions to its necessary expenditure in the form of taxes. It is desirable that those who can best afford it should be highly taxed in comparison with the imposts on those who are not so well off. But so long as taxes have to be levied, it is senseless to earmark them for a special purpose. If the tax is a legitimate one in its incidence of collection it goes into the general fund to meet State expenditure. If the result of a fair apportionment of burden enables some particular tax to be taken off, the community is collectively the gainer, and a wise Legislature taxes off that tax which presses the most heavily on those who are bearing the burden. For instance, sugar may be regarded as a necessity. By all means levy a tax on the rich, and take off the tax on sugar. But when a new tax is created, it cannot be said that any new item of expenditure that is introduced is paid out of this new tax any more than out of the other taxes.

Now, I take the liberty to assert that the vast majority of working men are able to make some provision for their old age, whether they have families or whether they have not, by the exercise of reasonable self-sacrifice. If those with large families assert that they have not, they should remember this before having large families. Take a man earning 25s. per week. Will any one say if he has a wife and a couple of children, he cannot put by a trifle every week that he is in work? If that be true, he obviously is not receiving a fair wage. Naturally he has in any case to exercise a good deal of self-denial. I should rejoice were political economy to allow him to demand double this wage. But the wage must depend on the amount for which the fruit of his work can be sold. It is the consumer that regulates this, rather than abstract justice. And in a manufacturing country like ours, we can only secure customers by producing articles at a price which will enable them to compete with those produced elsewhere. I know that it is said that the share of the capitalist is too great in proportion to that of the worker. When such is the case it is properly rectified by a strike. But, speaking generally, in the present days of competition, the capitalist has a hard struggle, and must be a person of very sound commercial ability to get such a return for his capital as will induce him to incur the risks of trade, instead of buying securities that give him a small but certain income. In the struggle some become very rich, whilst many go to the wall. A Socialist would reply that no individual should possess property. To the State all property should belong, and by State capital and individual labour there would be enough for all to live in comfort by devoting a few hours to work each day whilst they can work, and being maintained by the community so soon as they cannot; and it is because Socialism is based upon unpractical theories such as this that I am not a Socialist.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Building, Carteret-street, S.W.

I have a plan for old age pensions which I think would be workable—if it be admitted that they are to be granted. I would make them dependent upon the individual. Let the State declare that it is prepared to sell to everybody an annuity of double the amount which the purchase money would yield on a 3 per cent basis. A person might subscribe this amount when and how he pleases. If a working man were temporarily out of work, he would not subscribe, but only when he is in good work. The amount of his savings would be that which he has paid, with compound interest added to it. No one would be allowed to subscribe more, under the condition that the annuity to which he is entitled would be doubled by the State, than would enable him, by his own efforts, to purchase an annuity of 3s. per week. And this annuity would, by the aid of the State, become 6s. per week. To make it clear what I mean, and how the system would work, I will suppose a man generally in good work. He would, when in good work, pay in something per week to the fund, as he can do now to the Post Office Savings Bank. When out of work he might draw the whole or any portion of it out. One year he might pay in more than another. On his reaching the age fixed for a pension, this pension would depend upon the amount then standing to his name. A great many persons are thrifty. A great many working men are not. I would reward those who are. But I see no reason why the thrifty should pay for the unthrifty. An employer of labour might himself pay in for his working men. A son who has emigrated and is doing well might make a payment for his father. Old servants might thus be provided for. I have no doubt that there are persons who, from no absolute fault of their own, are always unfortunate, and who never would be able to make the payments. But these are the minority, and a very small minority. They, and those who preferred the little bird in the hand to the big one in the bush, should be maintained, as they are now, when past work. They would be our paupers to whom we extend charity. The great advantage of my scheme would be that it would encourage thrift, and be a premium on it. As it is, we are not — as statistics show— as thrifty as most other nations, and especially as the French and the Germans. This ought to be altered in the real interest of all working men.

I have said that it is idle to ear-mark taxes. But in the case of old-age pensions I would go so far as this: No one is obliged to drink beer or spirits. I am no fanatic in regard to prohibition, but I believe that a man is quite as healthy without alcohol as with it, and, in many cases, more healthy. Speaking collectively, the amount spent on liquor is monstrous. I would, therefore, impose a special tax on intoxicants (apart from all contemplated temperance legislation). This tax would be paid into the old-age pension fund. If this reduced the amount spent in liquor and the yield of the tax diminished in consequence, so much the better. Whatever it did produce would go to the pension fund, and the rest would be made up from general taxation. Thus every one would be able to think, when drinking beer and spirits, that even if he would be wise to eschew them, he was at least contributing to the benefit of others by indulging in them. Even the drunkard, when fined for being drunk and disorderly, would have this satisfaction. I venture to contend that my plan is a reasonable one. It makes each person's old age dependent largely on himself. If he prefers not to be thrifty, he would become an aged pauper. If he prefers to be thrifty he would—in addition to all else that he might save—have a nice little pension, one half of which he had himself earned, and one half of which would be granted to him by the community. I have always regarded the parable of the wise and foolish virgins as a remarkably sensible one. Whether in regard to virgins or in regard to working men, I am against the wise and thrifty sharing bread or oil with the foolish. The sooner we recognise that a person must lie on the bed that he has himself made, the better it will be for us. And the sooner we put it out of our heads that every one has a right to work at a good wage, whether there is work for him or not, and whether he can do a good day's work or not, the more likely are we to really legislate for the benefit of the workers in a spirit of common sense, instead of adopting quack nostrums aired by impractical enthusiasts.

DIVORCE AND ARMY REFORM.

The letter which appears below reached me a good many weeks back. That it has not been published before is to be attributed to my conscientiousness—over-conscientiousness, possibly—in the discharge of my editorial duties. The subject is new to me, and raises a difficult problem. I felt that it behoved me to express some opinion of my own upon it, but I did not feel equal to expressing one off-hand. I have now thought the subject out to the best of my ability, and the result may be found, for what it is worth, at the end of the letter:—

Seeger's Hair Dye.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—Hinde's Ltd., 1a, Finsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—Divorces in this country are far too common, especially among military people. In Oriental countries men lock their wives up, treat them kindly, as a rule, and do not have any reason to make themselves anxious about their conduct. They can thus devote all their whole minds and energies to their work, without domestic care to harass them.

Among ourselves in the present day too many wives think that their chief vocation in life is to "have a good time" at their husband's expense. This is especially true in Army life. If the husband objects, or if it seems likely that some other man could give them a better time, the wives argue that they have only to misconduct themselves in order to effect an exchange—still entirely at their husband's expense. I have heard of women actually demanding divorce as a right after conducting themselves in this way.

In the Army the wives who are bent on "having a good time" want to be always out at dances and other frivolities. If the husband's heart is in his work, he may not have the time or inclination to join in these dissipations. His wife then goes gadding about with his chums—or hers. Husbands grow suspicious and unhappy under these circumstances, and cannot properly devote their minds to their duties.

Of course, ladies in this country cannot be kept under lock and key. But if we only agreed with Roman Catholic divines, and many of the Church of England and other denominations, that divorce is contrary to Christian teaching, and that only judicial separation should be allowed, our women would not be so ready to play up for a divorce.—Yours faithfully, Onlooker.

The Army has filled so large a space in our thoughts for some time past that the passages in this letter dealing specially with the relations between the Service and the Divorce Court naturally arrest attention at once. There will be no dispute, I take it, about the assertion that divorce is especially common in military circles. I have made some attempts, but ineffectually, to obtain statistics bearing on this point; but there are unfortunately no records available to the public showing what number of decrees nisi have been pronounced and made absolute between officers and their wives. I found, however, that of the cases reported in my favourite newspaper during one month of last sittings the proportion in which either the petitioner or the co-respondent, or both, held his Majesty's commission was one in five. This is considerably above the proportion of Army officers to the rest of the adult male population, even when one has made allowance for the fact that a divorce case with a military element in it is more certain of getting into the papers than one in which the domestic affairs of mere civilians are involved. It is not my business to look for an explanation of the phenomenon, but I suspect that military tailoring has a good deal to do with it. Many years ago the deserted soldier in Hood's ballad complained to his faithless sweetheart that

> The love that loves a scarlet coat
> Should be more uniform!

But the poor fellow evidently missed the point, for if it is the scarlet coat that has won the lady's heart, the more uniform her disposition the more apt will she be to transfer her affection to another garment of identical pattern, regardless of who wears it. This trait in feminine nature may possibly explain the frequency with which, when an officer is seeking a divorce from his wife, a brother officer of the same regiment figures as co-respondent. It is altogether opposed to the traditions of the Army for two regiments to be concerned in one divorce case. If the petitioner is in the Blues—as he well may be—you do not find the co-respondent in the Life Guards. If the respondent married into the Rifle Brigade, you do not find her bolting with a Lothario in the Grenadiers. All this shows pretty conclusively that the fatal attraction of one uniform for one woman is the cause of all the trouble.

But let us get back to Army reform, for it is on this question that the above letter has its most important bearing. The Army reformer is not in the first instance concerned with the reform of Army morals. His business, as we all know, is with the preparedness of the Army for war; but my correspondent shows with irresistible force how closely the business of preparing for war may be connected with that of preparing for the Divorce Court. He shows us, on the one hand, the married officer who, in spite of all temptations, has achieved the one thing needful in his class—keenness in his profession; on the other hand, the butterfly wife who has joined the Army only as the most likely means of "having a good time." They are like Jack Spratt and his wife, she wanting all the fat, he caring only for the lean. Whenever he wants to prepare for war, his better half wants to get ready for a picnic or a ball. The poor wretch is torn between the conflicting claims of love and duty. If he goes with his wife, farewell to preparation for war. If "keenness" triumphs, and he hands the conjugal duty over to a "pal," there he sits in his lonely bungalow till she comes back in the small hours, vainly endeavouring to concentrate his attention on tactics and strategy, with the sound of a waltz in his ears, and his wife always dancing before the page with another man's arm round her waist. As my correspondent justly observes, "husbands grow suspicious under these circumstances, and cannot properly devote their minds to their duties." In other words, they might just as well be dancing with their wives themselves so far as preparation for war is concerned—indeed, very much better, for in that case the "pal" might be preparing for war, which neither warrior is doing as it is. It must be remembered that, from the point of view of military efficiency, the influence of the lady is doubly mischievous. A co-respondent may have in him the making of a first-rate officer as well as a petitioner. The giddy respondent distracts both their minds from the stern pursuit of duty, and gives us in place of two budding Wellingtons or Marlboroughs a pair of good-for-nothing candidates for the next sensational Army Divorce case. Only when we get proper statistics of the petitions filed by or against military men shall we know the real extent to which our national preparedness for war has been undermined by this cause.

When Mr. Haldane asks himself, as he will have to sooner or later, how this evil is to be arrested, he will do well to consider how far "Onlooker" is right in assuming that we cannot keep wives under lock and key. I do not suggest—knowing well what a mess I should get into if I did—that husbands, even Army husbands, should be entrusted with this power, although there is more to be said than you might think for the advantages of married life in Oriental countries, to which my correspondent refers in his opening remarks. But it is well worth considering whether officers' wives might not be brought to some extent under military discipline. No woman is compelled to marry a soldier. It might be as well for her, not to say the soldier, if she were discouraged from doing so; and if the King's Regulations plainly stated that in the event of her taking this step she might be brought up at orderly room or tried by court-martial if she caused trouble in the regiment, she would know what she had to expect when she went to the altar, and would have no right to complain afterwards. "Playing up for a divorce" in the manner described by "Onlooker" is obviously conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline. If it could be dealt with as such, the fun of the thing would very soon evaporate. I do not suppose that it would often be necessary to resort to cells or even C.B. When a husband found that his wife's flirtations interfered with his performance of his duty and his preparations for war, he would just make a complaint to the C.O., and a few judicious words from that officer would probably bring the lady to her senses. All that is necessary is to strengthen the C.O.'s hands by investing him with the necessary disciplinary powers if a paternal hint does not have the desired effect.

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi-Metal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

The only other means I can think of for keeping officers out of the Divorce Court is to prevent them marrying. There are other reasons besides this for restricting marriage in the Army, and that policy has been recommended before now in these columns. I would extend to the commissioned ranks the principle of requiring a man to obtain leave before he marries. If a man married without leave he might be forbidden to take divorce proceedings as long as he held his commission. The prospect thus opened up might cause a good many men to think twice before committing the rash act. But, of course, no restriction on marriage in the Army will prevent officers being brought into the Divorce Court at the suit of civilians. That is a weak point about it. It may even be that the fewer officers marry the more of them will figure in divorce cases. I have not space to pursue these speculations at the moment, but the whole question offers material for a useful debate in the Army Council, in whose hands I leave it.

KILLING NO MURDER.

The Thaw trial has provided the British Pharisee with a means of "improving the occasion" of which he has availed himself liberally. Americans who read English newspapers will have learnt during the last few days a great deal that they did not know before about the superiority of British morals, British legal procedure, and British public opinion to their own. In the matter of criminal procedure we possibly have the advantage over America, as over most other countries. We dispatch our prisoners, whether to the gaol or the scaffold, with most business-like speed. There is consequently little time in this country for public opinion to work itself up while the judgment of the court is still pending into such a state of feverish excitement and indecent partisanship as has prevailed in America during the Thaw trial. But another consequence is that as soon as the sentence is passed we are liable to fall into a state of doubt as to whether a mistake has not been made, which leads at once to a public agitation on the prisoner's behalf, and a retrial of the charge by the newspapers. In such cases, British public opinion has generally shown itself quite as irrational and hysterical as anything that America has produced. A pretty but frail woman like Mrs. Maybrick, or a morbid, egotistical wastrel like Rayner, is immediately converted into an object of perverted sympathy, and public sentiment once aroused, a dozen fantastic arguments about sanity and responsibility are at once forthcoming to give it the semblance of reason. Thaw and his wife have had their counterparts among us over and over again. As for public morals, there is not much in the story of the relations of Mrs. Thaw with her two millionaire admirers which cannot be paralleled either here or in any country where wealth is accumulated in the hands of men who have no use for it except to indulge their own tastes and propensities without restraint. The divorce courts and criminal courts of Europe are constantly exemplifying the results of this state of things upon the relations of men with women, our own courts not less conspicuously than any other.

The one point of public interest in the Thaw case is that, whether in Europe or America, there should be any serious difference of opinion about the moral and legal gravity of Thaw's offence. That he killed Stanford White deliberately is not in dispute. In all the evidence that has been given during the eleven weeks that the trial has lasted, what is there to differentiate his crime from dozens of others for which murderers are executed every year in America and in England? Thaw is a millionaire who, while travelling in Europe, got into many scrapes and rendered himself ridiculous in many ways. He suffered no doubt from "exaggerated ego" in the sense that he believed that pretty nearly everything was permissible to a millionaire, but in that he is not peculiar among his class, and it is certainly not to the interest of the rest of the community to encourage millionaires in the idea that the laws are not made for them. The victim, White, was another commonplace type of nouvel enrichi. He was free and easy in his relations with women, gave "artistic" suppers, and was a providence to ballet girls. Amongst others with whom he was on too friendly terms was a girl of the name of Evelyn Nisbet. Her mother lived on the money that she earned by posing as an artist's model, and dancing at a music hall. There seems to have been a feud between White and Thaw about this girl. Eventually she left New York with Thaw and her mother. On the arrival of the party in Europe, the accommodating mother disappeared, and the happy pair travelled about as man and wife. Eventually Miss Evelyn returned to New York, and consulted White as to her position with Thaw. White took her to a lawyer, and there she made an affidavit that during her travels with Thaw he often thrashed her with a cow hide, after taking off her clothes, because she would not bring false charges against White. After this, however, on Thaw's return to America, she married him. Not long afterwards Thaw came across White in a music hall and shot him at sight, killing him with the first shot, and afterwards putting two more bullets into him to make sure of his work.

The motive for this crime was supplied by the evidence of the wife at the trial. She explained that during her excursion to Europe with Thaw she had confided to him the whole story of her previous relations with White—beginning with the familiar story of the drugging with a glass of wine. This confession was made in consequence of Thaw having asked her to marry him, and she begged to be excused on the ground that she was not worthy of him. In what her unworthiness consisted I have never been able to understand, for there does not seem to have been much in the story which Thaw did not know or could not have guessed, and at the time of the confession she was cohabiting with Thaw, so that in point of ethics it would seem that they were pretty evenly matched. However, on this story of the lady the defence was built up that the disclosure of White's depravity so outraged Thaw's ideas of right that he had a brain storm, which lasted until his return to New York, and continued after his marriage down to the killing of White. From this "brain storm," however, he had now entirely recovered, and was perfectly sane according to the evidence of his own experts, and according to the finding of a Commission appointed by the Court. Brain storms, according to this evidence, are of frequent occurrence with young men. But the tendency to them wears off with increased years. In the end, however, Thaw's counsel practically threw over all the nonsense about brain storms, and called upon the jury to acquit his client on the ground that he had not violated the law, but only carried it out. The law would, he said, have punished White for his conduct. But proof was difficult. Thaw, therefore, stepped forward in the interests of public morals and slew him. In so acting he was only following the example of the knights of old, who were always ready to defend innocence, and to slay those who took advantage of it.

It is pretty clear that Mr. Jerome, the Public Prosecutor for the State of New York, inclined to the opinion that Thaw was a dangerous and incurable lunatic—or, at least, there was such a possibility of this that he was prepared to give him the benefit of the doubt, and not demand his condemnation as a murderer, if his insanity were admitted by the defence. This however, did not suit the defence, for it would have necessitated imprisonment for life. They therefore took refuge in the theory of a temporary aberration from which the prisoner had entirely recovered. That with the issue presented to them in this way the jury should have become fogged, with the result that they were unable to agree upon a verdict, is not altogether surprising, but at the same time it is only the reflection in the jury-box of the same flabbiness of mind in weighing acts like Thaw's which prevails so widely among the public. That Thaw is a sane man in the normal sense may be doubtful. His crime was apparently motiveless, and his wife's story does not supply any adequate motive. The story which she told in her affidavit about his practice of flogging her while in Europe would, if it stood, help to establish the view that he is constitutionally subject to uncontrollable fits of insane violence, and therefore a criminal lunatic. But she herself repudiated this affidavit, and it was seriously discredited by other circumstances. All that can confidently be said about Thaw is that he is a man of vicious habits and little mental balance, no doubt without strength to resist any evil suggestion or impulse. So are hundreds of human beings, and of such men the bulk of our criminals of all degrees is composed. All criminals are mad in the sense that they are unable to control their instincts, impulses, and passions; it is as true of those of the merely predatory class as of those who indulge in crimes of violence. Only in the case of murderers—and even then only in the case of those who possess great wealth or influential friends, or who are "interesting" to the sentimental portion of the public on other grounds—is it ever seriously contended that the criminal impulse is itself evidence of that degree of insanity which involves complete moral irresponsibility. The rule by which they should be judged is that if a man kills another with the full appreciation that he is violating the law, and that he will himself be killed in consequence, he is guilty of murder, and entitled to no mercy. If the murderer is actuated by hatred of his victim, and deliberately plans the murder, no extenuating circumstances can be pleaded for his crime. A murderer is hanged, not because society seeks to revenge itself on him, but in order to bring home to all that those who take life will have to pay the penalty for doing so. The knowledge of this penalty prevents many of those who are what are called "degenerates," those who are naturally vicious and wanting in moral sense, from committing murder. If the views in regard to murder which are now gaining currency represent the public conscience and judgment, any one who has an aunt given to liquor, or who believes that killing is no murder when some crack-brained motive can be pleaded for it, or who suffers from occasional brain storms, or delirium tremens, or who chooses to believe or assert that he is the instrument of an avenging Providence, will slay those with whom he quarrels in the sure and certain conviction that he is safe not to be killed himself.

THE THEATRES.

"Votes for Women," at the Court; Or, A Plea for the Harem System.

The East is smiling at the West. I hasten to add that the second title of the "dramatic tract" is mine, and not Miss Elizabeth Robins'. It occurred to me after listening for a long time to her discursive eloquence on female suffrage. Certainly Miss Robins cites many cases in which the law might be amended with advantage. Piccadilly, for instance, as she truly says by the mouth of Miss Wynne Matthison, her protagonist in the fight, is not fit for a decent woman to walk in alone late at night. On the Continent they manage these things differently, and the state of our great thoroughfares at night is certainly disgraceful, but all the same it is an outcome of the insistence of the liberty of the subject. Another saying which occurs in the last act touches the root of the matter as regards the low wages of women as compared with men: "It is a question of economics." But the male descendants of those men who abolished slavery at so great a cost may be trusted to do what can be done as regards the question of the economic condition of women, and the rhapsodies of a few exceptional women like Miss Robins and the hysterics of the majority of suffragettes will never be able to carry the day against the great mass of the opinion of both sexes. In the "tract" economic, social, and sexual issues are confused. I may quote, in conclusion, as regards this contentious dramatic tract, a few words from the late philosopher Weininger: "The history of the woman movement during the Renaissance and its complete disappearance contains a lesson for the advocates of women's rights. Real intellectual freedom cannot be attained by an agitated mass; it must be sought for by the individual. Who is the enemy? What are the retarding influences? The greatest, the one enemy of the emancipation of woman is woman herself." From the above it is apparent that this philosopher believed in periods of women's agitation to be put on an equality with men, owing to a larger number of women with masculine characteristics being born in certain periods than in others. He cites the tenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries. The abortiveness of these movements is also commented upon.

Touching the artistic side of the "tract," let me say at once that the most striking thing about it is the scene in Trafalgar-square of the second act. The movements of the crowd, the eloquence of the orators of both sexes (especially of Mr. Stephen Gwynne and Miss Matthison), were above praise. The story of the seduction of the suffragette leader when a helpless girl, by the leader of the Government, is commonplace where it is clear, but mostly it is rather obscure, and has but an artificial bearing upon the politics of the whole. There is a deal too much of it, also, in the last act, though Mr. Aubrey Smith's art did much to make one tolerate the politician. Miss Matthison was also excellent as the suffragette leader.

Many people will go to see this "dramatic tract," and most will come away of the same opinion still as regards the political side of the question debated, though as regards the merit of the rendering there can be no two opinions. It is excellent.

The East is smiling at the West.

* * * * *

The latest peach-blossom upon the bough at Daly's Theatre is Miss Denise Orme's singing to her own accompaniment on the harp. This golden interlude finds place in the second scene of the second act. The golden harp stands at the side of the stage. It seems to incline towards her golden head while she leans and listens to the thrilling and throbbing of the strings beneath her hands, to the "blue bird" singing of babyhood and green orchards, of youth and of spring. A charming combination, indeed, of all that appeals to the higher senses is this beautiful young actress and singer wooing the harp, so sadly neglected in our day.

The performance of "The Lady Dandies" goes brilliantly as heretofore. Mr. Fred Kaye has developed the stentorian qualities of his voice, and is humorous from his legs upwards. In combination with Mr. Huntley Wright, laughter is irresistible. Mr. Berry, Mr. Warde, and Miss Gabrielle Ray embroider the story delightfully with their dialogues and dancing, which latter is now much more than formerly in evidence. Miss Evie Greene is in full, tuneful operatic voice. Those who have not seen Mr. Huntley Wright in the part of St. Amour should do so, if occasion serve, for his place may conceivably be taken ere long by another comedian. He is quite unique in his own way.

* * * * *

Mr. Sothern's and Miss Julia Marlowe's manager forwards me a long prefatory screed anent the forthcoming production of "Jeanne d'Arc," at the Waldorf. If it be true that there has been any manifestation of "ill-timed vehemence" against these visitors to our shores, all I can say is that such vehemence is deplorable. But Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe may rest assured that if they have a really fine play and produce it adequately, they will have an absolutely fair hearing of it in London, the most cosmopolitan and the most hospitable of great cities.

* * * * *

I passed an interesting evening at the Court Theatre last Monday week, and can safely recommend those of my readers who do not mind realism pushed very far to witness Mr. Galsworthy's "Silver Box," which is now about half-way through its brief season of three weeks.

Only at the Court Theatre can one hope for such a harmonious cast as held the balance of justice between rich and poor in "The Silver Box." The play is very ingeniously constructed, and "makes one think furiously," as the French say. Certainly the law is different in its concrete application for rich young Mr. Barthwick, who steals for a joke the purse of the gay lady after supper, to what it is for poor Jones, who appropriates the silver cigarette-box out of spite and without the intention of getting money for it. For this he is condemned, not for stealing the purse, part of the contents of which he had made use of to pay his rent.

One rises from the contemplation of this play with the feeling that all private property is detestable, and Communism the sole solution, but the thought then forces itself upon one that Communism, wherever it has been tried, has proved a failure. Nature abhors equality as much as it does a vacuum. Can man create artificial equality? That is the question of the future.

* * * * *

Hengler's offers a dainty dream-play in "Beauty and the Enchanted Prince," but you must go there with the wings of your imagination spread, for the circular arena presents the action at all sorts of quaint angles, and the coming and going of the different personages is without the illusion of the regular stage. As I said last week, children, whose imagination has not yet had time to be much tarnished, are sure to like this, and there are plenty of realistic juggling and acrobatic performances to follow, concluding with the Filmograph animated pictures.

* * * * *

I can safely recommend those who, like myself, still enjoy the thrill of melodrama, to visit the Lyceum Theatre and to witness "Her Love Against the World." For melodrama of a very superior order it is, and the sophisticated title of "romantic play" suits the astonishing adventures of the Earl of Strathmere in foreign parts less well than the word melodrama. It is well played throughout, Mr. Norman Partridge as the Earl being wonderfully plausible, and conferring a sense of reality to the most surprising doings, though I must admit that the third scene of the third act, where, armed with a revolver, the Earl forces that admirable villain Prince Ulric (Mr. Mayne) to don the handcuffs and to bluff his own guards, stretches my credulity to the utmost. In the scene where Miss Valli Valli, the Earl's brother, tells of his boyish battle with two young Austrians, whom he forces to admit that the Union Jack is the greatest of all flags, while laughing with the lips at the absurdity of the circumstances, one had tears in one's eyes for the higher truth of patriotism thus naïvely revealed.

Miss Nora Kerin plays Princess Iris, whose "love against the world" had excellent sympathy, when I witnessed it, from a large audience of young and old.

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST:

The Medical Catechism.

Question: Who are you?

Answer: A fashionable physician.

Q.: What is a fashionable physician?

A.: A fashionable physician is a doctor who practises among the upper ten.

Q.: What qualifications are required of you as a fashionable physician?

A.: To live in a smart neighbourhood, to keep up a good establishment, and to charge high fees.

Q.: Are there any other requisite qualifications?

A.: Yes; one other. I am required to have some knowledge of the art of medicine.

Q.: From what complaints do your patients chiefly suffer?

A.: From idleness, self-indulgence, and appendicitis.

Q.: Then are all your patients idle?

A.: Nearly all.

Q.: Are they all self-indulgent?

A.: With few exceptions.

Q.: Do they all have appendicitis?

A.: All who can get it. It is more sought after than any other complaint.

Q.: How do you treat appendicitis?

A.: I do not treat appendicitis. I pass the patient on to a fashionable surgeon, who performs an operation.

Q.: And does the operation always reveal the existence of appendicitis?

A.: It does not always reveal the existence of appendicitis.

Q.: What does the fashionable surgeon do in this event?

A.: He sews the patient up and says nothing about it.

Q.: What is disgraceful professional conduct?

A.: Advertising.

Q.: What is advertising?

A.: A crime almost entirely confined to men in the lowest ranks of the profession.

Q.: Quote me a typical example of this crime of advertising.

A.: A typical example is seen in the case of the obscure general practitioner who allows his name to be mentioned on the prospectus of a poor man's Benefit Club.

Q.: How is he punished for so odious a crime?

A.: By being struck off the Medical Register.

Q.: Do fashionable physicians advertise?

A.: Fashionable physicians never advertise.

Q.: Are their names ever mentioned in the papers, when they happen to be attending some distinguished patient?

A.: Yes, always.

Q.: Is this advertising?

A.: No.

Q.: Who determines what is, or is not, advertising?

A.: The General Medical Council.

Q.: Of whom does the General Medical Council consist?

A.: Of Fashionable Physicians.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

A CANDIDATE FOR THE GOLDEN ROSE.

THE proposal by the ex-Papal Agent, in one of his letters to Cardinal Merry del Val, of Baroness de Brigode for the Golden Rose, has turned attention to that lady. She is interlinked in all kinds of ways with the Mérodes, Montalemberts, Arenbergs, Ursels le Hons, and is a Belgian and a Vilain XIV. by birth. What the Vilain XIV.s did for their country or the world I have no idea, but I know that they hold their heads as the uppermost nobility at Brussels. The Parisian career of the Baronne dates from the Congress of Paris, which followed the Crimean War. She is Catholic and reactionist in a Belgian manner, not at all theatrical, is said to have faro beer instead of quick blood in her veins, and has been called a gilded slow coach in a time of motor-cars. Montagnini extolled her generosity, prudence, and devotion to the Holy See. Her present that he mentions shows a Belgian care for the Pope's creature comforts. This ex-candidate for the Golden Rose is in politico-religious affairs a great ally of M. Piou. Unfortunately she is aristocratic without that amiable levity and inconsistency which renders the pride of birth or of visiting-card distinction tolerable in the French. The ladies (so many of whom have no birth to speak of) of the Dames Françaises League hate the Baronne de Brigode. It was owing to this hostility, and most of all to that of the Lyons branch, that Pius X. withdrew a promise to send her the Golden Rose. He, however, put her off by writing with his own hand a long and paternal letter, stuffed with words of benediction and encouragement. Mme. de Brigode is a woman of sense. She prefers the advice of MM. Piou and Cochin to that of M. Grousseau, Deputy for Lille, one of the quixotic hot-heads of the Catholic Party, a champion of unsuccessful causes, and, though the bearer of a vulgar name, picturesque as a knight of old. Grousseau and the Dames Françaises are united in spirit and faith. His counsels are followed at the Vatican for reasons in no respect quixotic. The Nord is the richest Department in France. It is not infected with Voltairianism, and its semi-Flemish inhabitants must eat meat all the year round. Their industrial energy depends on this. They contribute the largest proportion of French monetary offerings to the See of St. Peter. The sums paid for meat indulgences in Advent and Lent by those hard workers of the Nord are incredibly great.

La Baronne de Brigode does not talk of her ancestors to the wives of Lyons men of business and of successful Paris tradesmen. Her bearing, slightly haughty and condescending, betrays consciousness of her superiority. The grande dame rather hides the saint. Portraits of the ancestors give the grand saloon where conferences of Catholic ladies are held the aspect of a family portrait gallery. These forefathers and foremothers go back as far as Charles the Bold, who had one foot at Ghent and another at Dijon. The Duc d'Aumale longed for some of them to come to the hammer at the time he busied himself forming his Chantilly museum. Porbus, pére et fils, Mytens, Vandyke, Rubens, and Philippe de Champagne fixed on canvas traits, features, and belongings that marked the opulence and high standing of these Hainault and Fleming nobles.

Mme. de Brigode is faithful to the Faubourg St. Germain, but now finds herself so dépaysée that she may migrate to some newer part of the town. The law courts have decided that the heirs of that Duchesse de Charost, who made a deed of donation of the Sacré Cœur to the community of nuns that had to leave it last year, cannot legally claim it. It will therefore be sold or turned into a school for industrial apprentices. In the latter Mme. de Brigode will have about her the gavroches and gutter sparrows of the Faubourg St. Antoine. The palace of her venerated friend, the Archbishop of Paris, in her street is now Le Palais du Travail, and is being fitted up for the atheistical Viviani and his staff. This dowager lives in a style at once snug and imposing. Belgian snugness is handsomer than English, and follows fashion much less, if at all when fashion favours what is trumpery. She came to Paris on the morrow of the Congress of Paris which followed the Crimean War, and before De Morny had broke off from the Comtesse Le Hon, wife of the Belgian Minister. The social link formed by the marriage of Louise d'Orléans and Leopold I. had not yet worn away. The Franco-Belge nobles had wealth and spent freely, while the French aristocrats of the Faubourg hoarded the milliard that Charles X. gave to them as an indemnity for the estates confiscated in the Revolution. You may easily guess on what side there was most influence. The Baronne de Brigode is one of the very few survivors of the Franco-Belge aristocrats who filled so great a place in the great world here in the reigns of Louis Philippe and the Emperor who came after him.

This old lady is ill-disposed towards those street demonstrations against the Combes Government which the Baroness de Reille and the Comtesse de Mun headed. She nipped in the bud another one last year. Some Dames Françaises had at Moselle recruited a female mob which they intended to head in the Place de la Concorde, and then march against the Chamber of Deputies. The recruits were tripières, street sweepers, Belgians, Hessians and Prussians from the valley of the Moselle mostly, able-bodied, and not afraid of being laughed at, hooted, or knocked about. The leading ladies had asked the Baronne to lend the authority of her prestige and the protection of her grey hair to the demonstration. She at first thought of doing so, but thought better of it on reflection, and even decided to oppose a step which could not but cast ridicule on a sacred cause. If the poor women who had been recruited were maimed or killed, who was to indemnify them and look after their children? This should be thought of in time. Madame de Brigode, as Présidente of a Paris branch of the French Ladies' Association, countermanded the demonstration in a placard which she signed. She soon found herself deserted. The support of the Papal Agent, of M. Piou, and of M. Denys Cochin were of no avail. The troops now lead the leader. The Baronne will, it is to be feared, have to wait a long time for the Golden Rose.

The first act of the Montagnini affair was the expulsion of the Papal Agent and the seizure of his papers. The second, the sorting; the third, the communications of many of them to the newspapers; and the fourth, the debate on the Jaurès motion ending in the nomination of the Select Committee.

The second act embraced the trial of the Abbé Jouin, who was supposed to be deep in some treason, of which evidence lay in the seized papers, but which did not contain a word about him or capable of being construed as bearing on his case. The third act is yet to be played, and it will give the judgment and the handing over of the papers to the President of the Select Committee. The journals which spoke of the court being crowded with society notables trusted to their imaginations. There were possibly eight or nine ladies, mostly elderly and the patronesses of parochial undertakings of the Abbé Jouin, the traverser. With them were the ex-vestrymen and some of the leading parishioners of St. Augustin's, some eminent advocates on the Catholic side of the Bar, also a few on the Republican side, the usual number of young barristers, and of journalists when there is something on likely to furnish interesting copy, and about half-a-dozen members of the Committee of Inquiry. Nothing, it appears, remains for them to inquire into. Danet, bâtonnier of the Paris Bar, defended the traverser—that is to say, he directed in a long speech a raking fire on the Government. If the affair had not been politico-Papal, his intervention would have been quite needless, the Abbé Jouin being so well able to defend himself. I think I must have spoken of him as an up-to-date priest, who did not come into the views of the Archbishop of Paris, a cautiously moderate prelate, who abominates in matters ecclesiastical every sort of up-to-date staginess. He is for the Gregorian chant in churches, hostile to those charity fairs in which actresses who are professionally pretty sell, sing, and beflower the buttonholes of gentlemen's coats, in company with the highest ladies. He likes liturgical gravity. He decidedly objected to the curé of an important parish being more of the operatic manager than M. Gailhard. The Abbé Jouin is a dramatic author, and brought out emotional pieces combining the play and the opera at the theatre which is now the Théâtre Réjane. They had, of course, a religious bent. One of them exemplified the comforting doctrine, "Que tout chemin mène au ciel." This is true theologically, but there is the manière.

There have been always curés at Saint Augustin's remarkable for their profane scholarship and accomplishments. One of the first Hellenists of his time filled that post through the seventies and the eighties. He had a vicar who might have written as finely critical a book as the Abbé Loisy, were it not for his humility and obedience to Archiepiscopal wishes. Both, however, draw crowds of young men to lectures on classical subjects more or less connected with early Christianity. The Abbé Jouin thought to stimulate piety in another direction. He is short, broad-shouldered, thick-set, and singularly vivacious, with a thick head of curly grey hair, and evidently an accomplished actor. It would be impossible to throw him off his guard, or to confuse him, or to trip him up. No matter how unexpected the question, a plausible, and often a "cool," answer comes pat to his lips. He is said to be an excellent card at a dinner-party. I should not at all class him in the genus "Bounder," though his spirits are exuberant and his manners must have been neglected in youth. He and two other curés were charged with having preached seditious sermons touching the inventories, and with having published in the Bulletin of St. Augustin's parish a call to revolt. The two cases against the two others never went further than the juge d'instructions. That against the Abbé Jouin led to the seizure of the Montagnini papers. The appeal in the Bulletin is open to a double meaning, but if taken as a call to revolt, hot and strong. Its author contended that it was merely metaphorical. So was the "Marseillaise," which set France aflame, and led to the massacres of September. However, the song of Rouget de l'Isle fell on fertile ground, and the rhetorical prose of the Abbé on a stony soil. He insisted that he had been prosecuted to afford the Government the opportunity to lay its hand on the papers of the Papal Agent and translate and read them at leisure. The Abbé had a right to full copies of these documents, and he exercised it. The De Cassagnac family are his parishioners and friends. As a consequence, L'Autorité could cull from his dossier the most crisp of the letters and telegrams that passed between the ex-nunciature and the Vatican. This created a demand among the other journals. As money was to be made by communicating them, the publicity became so great that one might now fill a thick volume from those which have appeared.

If the object of the Government was to prove to a certainty that the Vatican manipulated the elections, it has fully succeeded. The Public Prosecutor seemed inclined towards leniency, and the judges to treat the affair as a clever joke. It half accepted the metaphorical sense given by the accused party to his war cry. The Abbé spoke of his people as needing a sharp goading. They are sluggish and supine. What the Socialist Deputy said of them is too true: "The Catholics only whimper and lament, and are good for nothing but to make the fortunes of the casinos which they haunt."

A PEER AMONG THE REFORMERS

I HAD meant to write something this week about the Colonial Premiers, and about Botha and Jameson being over for it together, because it would be nice and easy and obvious, but it struck me that all sorts of other fools would be writing about it too, and saying the same things, and that as likely as not you would have something about it in another part of the paper. So, as I happened to read about their sacking a lot of workmen from Woolwich Arsenal, I've made up my mind to write about that instead, because, for one thing, it's a proof of something I've felt for a long time—and it shows so clearly about the biggest danger this country has got to face in the next few years. I mean the danger of being reformed out of existence. It's quite a real danger, only you can't get most people to see it, because they are all too busy reforming something or other already. But if you think about it a little, you'll see I'm right. Jessie does already, and I'm rather proud of it, because she's generally much quicker in seeing things than I am; and I thought of this all off my own bat. Now, for instance, they are all talking about peace and doing away with war by Act of Parliament. And the very first moment they begin to order less guns and things they ruin a whole town—and send half the people of Woolwich into the workhouse. That's even before they've got any nearer to Universal Peace than talking about it. Suppose they really did do something at this Hague Conference—every one seems quite certain they won't, thank goodness—and really did away with war; they'd ruin half Europe. First of all you'd have millions of soldiers cast off and looking round for a job, when every one knows there isn't enough to go round already. Then all the gun-makers and powder-makers and army-contractors and military tailors and all the thousands of men they employ and all the wives and families depending on them—and all the War Office clerks and messengers and charwomen—and all the sailors and warship-builders and Admiralty clerks—why, there would be no end of them, all thrown out of work at the same time, and wandering over the world looking out for some way of keeping themselves alive.

And now just suppose—and it is quite as likely the one thing as the other—that at the same time that you did away with war, the Reformers got the whip hand of Parliament and carried all the other big reforms at the same time. There'd be drink, of course. That would throw all the brewers and distillers, most of the big chemical works, and coopers and bottle makers, and maltsters, and hop growers and importers—all the publicans and barmaids and potboys and manufacturers of beer-pulls and things and fitters-up of public-houses, not to speak of secretaries of Temperance societies and paid Temperance speakers and writers—they and every one that depended on them would all have to go and join the unemployed, too. Then, of course, there'd be gambling. That would be done away with, and all the jockeys, and trainers, and saddlers, and bookies, and racecourse attendants, and sporting journalists, and ha'penny evening newspaper proprietors, and the printers who print them—they'd all go, too. Not to speak of the Stock Exchange and everybody that has anything to do with it, down to the pedlars that sell oranges and chocolate to the office boys in Throgmorton-street. Then, when you'd done away with war and drink and gambling—as any Reformer will tell you—you would have done away with three-quarters of the crime in the country. We will say half, to be on the safe side; so you would have to shut up half the police stations and prisons, and take away the livings of half the lawyers and police-court reporters, and policemen, and judges, and magistrates, and gaolers, and Black Maria builders, and any amount of others, and all their wives and families. That's not nearly all, because half the disease in the country comes from drink, we are told. So you must put half the doctors, and chemical manufacturers, and chemists and chemists' assistants, and patent pill proprietors, and the people who write unsolicited testimonials for them, and medical newspaper proprietors and writers and printers, and pill-box manufacturers, and so on, with all their wives and families, out of the running as well.

Meanwhile, with all the rest of the Reformers doing so well, you can be quite sure that Father Bernard Vaughan will have polished off Smart Society. So all the swagger dressmakers, and milliners, and tailors, and beauty-doctors, and jewellers, and toy-dog dealers, and moneylenders, and blackmailers, and society journalists, and so on—they would all lose their jobs as well. I suppose, too, that the vegetarians would come in with the rest of the other Reformers, and do all the butchers and potted meat and beef-tea makers out of existence. And the House of Lords would be done away with, and all the coronet makers and coronation robe tailors and State coach builders along with it. What's more, as each particular reform was put in operation, that particular set of Reformers would have no more work to do either, and they'd have to go and join the unemployed into the bargain.

I have only mentioned a few of the most prominent reforms that are in the air; while, as you know as well as I do, there are hundreds and hundreds of them going, from the Reform of Parliamentary Procedure to Rational Dress, and not one of them but means ruin to somebody if it is ever put into force. I am not much good at figures myself, so I got a very clever accountant chap to work it out for me. He's a friend of a brother of Jessie's who's a clerk in the City somewhere. He is no end smart at figures—the accountant chap, I mean—but he has been out of a job for two years now, and isn't likely to get one again by his own account, because his hair has turned grey through worry at seeing his wife and kiddy starving. He used to be bookkeeper to some man who kept a lot of confectioners' shops in one of the big provincial towns—Manchester, I think. Anyway, wherever it was, the Town Council went in for the reform of Sunday trading, and made some sort of a law that shops must not be opened on Sundays. It knocked the confectioner's business clean out, because nearly all his trade was done on Sundays, so Jessie's brother's friend lost his situation and, as trade was bad, because of a sugar tax or something, he couldn't get another. Well, I gave him the job of working out the figures, and he tells me that if only one in every ten of the current reforms was to be put in practice, more than half the men in this country would lose their chance of making a living. I shouldn't be surprised if he exaggerates it a bit, because, of course, he feels rather bitter on the subject; but even if you divide it by half, it would mean the ruin of the country. I don't know how it strikes you, but it seems to me a really awful look-out, and I think it's time something was done to stop it. How would it be if you were to start a Society for the Reform of Reformers, or something like that, just to show all these Peace people and Temperance people and the rest of them what they are likely to let us in for if they don't reform in time? I expect you would get lots of support, if you ran it in Truth, and I wouldn't a bit mind acting as secretary—for a very small salary—if you thought my name would be any help.

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford St., and Orchard-St., London, W.

I don't pretend to be much in the way of a philosopher myself, but it does seem to me that the more you think about it the clearer it grows that the greater and more civilised a nation is, the more reforms it wants, or perhaps I ought to say, doesn't want. The only creatures that haven't got anything that wants reforming are the dumb animals. Next to them come the savages, who've only got a few things that ought to be reformed, and so on. And it seems to me that the more reforms we get put into actual practice the nearer we shall come to turning savages again.

I am sure that those poor devils who are going to lose their jobs at Woolwich, if we go in for reducing armaments any more, will feel pretty savage. (Rather good, that. What?) That's what I feel about Reformers. And so does Jessie.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE French, dear Lady Betty, are more immodest than immoral; the English, more immoral than immodest. The writer has published the epigram before; it is repeated to make clear the hypocrisy that prevails in this country.

Perfection on an island is the condition which we are convinced has been conferred upon us. Our fellow-creatures on the Continent are collectively "Dirty foreigners." Each nation is accorded an adjective that indicates in which direction it particularly differs from ourselves; there are the "Vicious French," the "Vulgar Americans," the "Coarse Germans," the "Superstitious Spaniards," the "Treacherous Italians," the "Barbarous Russians," and the "Cowardly Belgians"!

There are, moreover, portions of our own community that are unsatisfactory; they are the "Beggarly Scotch," the "Mad Irish," the "Thieving Welsh," the "Idolatrous Catholics," the "Canting Methodists," and the "Psalm-Singing Dissenters" generally.

Another step has to be taken to reach the inner John Bull. The populace is the "common herd," the "swinish multitude," that should not be educated, should not participate in the government of the Empire, and should be induced to emigrate; and the "loathsome middle-class," that must be kept at a distance.

We have now reached the core of creation: the English—not British—territorial magnates who, by inference, are virtuous, refined, enlightened, honourable, civilised, brave, generous, sane, honest, orthodox, and of a superior creation to the rest of the multitude that composes the British Empire.

It may be opportune to mention that this element is the heart of "society" the group that is so continually denounced by preachers, philosophers, and writers.

* * * * *

The arrival of General Louis Botha has disquieted the other Colonial Premiers who are at present in England. Their condition resembles that described in a poem in "Sylvie and Bruno":—

"He thought he saw a banker's clerk
Descending from a 'bus;
He looked again, and found it was
A hippopotamus.
'If this should stay to dine,' he said,
'There won't be much for us!'"

* * * * *

Love is a disposition woman experiences for the man she—cannot marry.

* * * * *

Ambition for the million is a development of the times in this country which is causing disturbances in many directions. The middle-class woman in England now generally affects to be superior to the social position she occupies; she endeavours to dress, live, and act up to the higher standard she has adopted as her own. This attitude, and its attendant circumstances, eventually induce the ordinary middle-class husband to regard her as socially superior to himself. In time, from this cause, he becomes little better than a footman to his own wife; it is almost irritating to see him on every occasion attending to her with an anxious look on his face, as if dreading to be dismissed at a moment's notice. Presently he becomes possessed of this "footman's spirit," and is obsequiously polite to every pretentiously dressed woman—and these women, on their part, get to be convinced that their husbands are socially inferior to them! These middle-class wives then attach themselves to West End men—as being more suitable to the condition the former affect—and homes are destroyed.

* * * * *

Is the conscience of woman as sensitive as is that of man? It is a curious circumstance in this direction that the case of a woman giving herself up for a murder scarcely ever occurs. The contention is that woman has an admirable company conscience—a companion to "company manners"—but that it has not more depth.
—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

IT is said that there has been a considerable increase in the attendance of the public at the race meetings of the last month, and that the cheap rings have been very much more crowded than they were at the same period of last season. This change is attributed to the operation of the Street Betting Act.

I hear that the pari-mutuels (which some misguided noodles desire to see introduced into this country) bid fair in time to ruin racing in France. Owners now find it utterly impossible to back a horse for even a moderate sum at anything like a reasonable price. The animal is at once made a false favourite. The mutuels have produced a gambling mania in France, and many working people, who would formerly no more have dreamt of betting than of throwing themselves in the Seine, now invest every sou of their wages which can possibly be spared. Betting among stable employees was practically unknown in France until recently, but now every franc they can scrape together goes to the mutuels. It seems probable, as time goes on, that a very much larger number of French horses will be sent to run in England, so our Turf will be benefited by the fuddling fatuities which are so reasonably exasperating the principal owners in France.

Scrubb & Co., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of their Cloudy Fluid Ammonia that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of Scrubb & Co. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

A meeting of the Doncaster Town Council has been held, at which a recommendation from the Race Committee, that the Corporation should again apply to the Jockey Club for an additional meeting, was carried by eight votes to seven. I hope that the Stewards of the Jockey Club will refuse this most unjustifiable request. The cupidity of a section of the Race Committee appears to be insatiable. Certainly it is true that l'appétit vient en mangeant in this case. There are now six days' racing at Doncaster—two in the spring and four in the autumn—under Newmarket Rules, which is surely an ample allowance. York has only five days, and is content therewith. The Corporation are to beg, not only for an additional meeting of two days, but also for the addition of a third day to the Spring Meeting. All things considered, the demand is a most audacious one, and it is certainly unseasonable, considering the difficulty there has been of late years in adjusting the annual List of Fixtures. The arrangements of the Stewards invariably produce strong protests from managers of meetings which are thought to have been harshly treated, and no annual List of Fixtures has yet been published without being greeted in many quarters with execrative cackling. The fact is that the task of the Stewards is analogous to that of a man who endeavours to get a quart into a pint bottle.

The betting quotations published daily in the papers are wholly unworthy of notice, and should be carefully ignored. There is practically no speculation on the City and Suburban, which for many years past has been in reality a purely post-betting race. I cautioned my readers against the blunder of attaching any importance to the early betting on the Lincolnshire Handicap, over which such an elaborate fuss was got up in certain quarters, and the present dealings over the City and Suburban and the Derby are of no significance whatever. The transactions, which are utterly paltry and contemptible in amount, merely represent the harum-scarum fancies of eager, greedy backers. I am quite sure that not one farthing has been invested in the way of a genuine commission. The fact is that all business on the account of an owner or of the stable is now deferred until the latest possible moment for several good reasons, one of them being that there is really no adequate market until the day of running arrives.

The reported betting on the Derby is only worthy of a lunatic asylum, so far as the backers are concerned. All Black is alleged to be supported at 10 to 1. This colt started three times last summer without winning. He was said to have been highly tried, but his best form was running Traquair to a head at Sandown Park, when he had 9 lb. the best of the weights. How can anyone suffered to go at large accept 10 to 1 about a colt with such exceedingly moderate antecedents? All Black is regarded at Newmarket by many good judges as a non-stayer, and only a mooncalf would back such a colt at any price whatever until his stamina has been conclusively tested. The horse will presumably start for the Two Thousand, and he has two other engagements before the Derby, the Payne Stakes at the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, and the Red Rose Stakes of £1,000 at Manchester.

Quite as preposterous is the position of Wool Winder in the betting, for Colonel Baird's colt certainly has no pretensions to figure at 11 to 1. There was no Derby form about his performance at Warwick, and on his two-year-old running he was fully a stone behind Slieve Gallion and Galvani. Wool Winder appears to be a very nervous colt. He runs at Chester for the Dee Stakes, a race which he will win in a canter if he has any real pretensions to high-class form. He was mentioned by me many weeks ago as being a promising outsider, but his proper price would be not less than 33 to 1.

Another extravagant absurdity is the crazy rushing of Orby to 20 to 1 for the Derby. It seems inconceivable that any sane and sober person could accept double the quoted odds about this colt. Any three-year-old which now wins any trumpery little race at once becomes ipso facto a leading favourite for the Derby, according to some of the papers.

I have been struck by the persistent writing up of Ouadi Halfa for the Derby, and this colt is reported to have been backed at 11 to 1. Nobody with a grain of common sense would now back any animal belonging to M. E. Blanc for the Derby without stipulating for a start. It is simply mendacious nonsense for writers to announce that Ouadi Halfa "is to be M. Blanc's candidate at Epsom," the fact being that it is considerable odds against his crossing the Channel. It should be added that nothing is known as to this colt's present form.

I am told that Lord Derby will keep Gourd for the Chester Cup, and that Keystone II. is a certain starter for the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap.

Polymelus had a sharp stripped gallop over seven furlongs the other day, in presence of his owner, and he went as well as could be desired, but he is exceedingly backward. I hear that Polymelus will be reserved for the Coronation Cup at Epsom. It would surprise me vastly if Mr. Joel's horse proved capable of giving 12 lb. to Keystone II. in the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap.

Sagamore has grown into a grand colt, and he is a splendid galloper. Mr. Raphael made a remarkably good bargain when he gave 1,650 gs. for Sagamore last April at the sale of Sir James Miller's racing stud. If Sagamore starts at Kempton Park for the Jubilee Handicap, I shall expect him to beat Polar Star, who has to give him 6 lb., and Mr. Raphael's colt is quite likely to prove the most dangerous opponent to Keystone II., whom he will meet with an advantage of 4 lb. on the weight-for-age scale, allowing 3 lb. for sex. The Burwell Plate at the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting will be one of the most interesting races of next month if Sagamore and Polar Star both start, and supposing them not to have met at Kempton Park. They would meet at even weights, unless one of them had won the Jubilee Handicap, the penalty for which would be 8 lb. It is very strange that Sagamore should have been left out of the Coronation Cup at Epsom, and his Ascot engagements have been oddly arranged. Owners certainly move in mysterious ways sometimes. Last October Sagamore was entered for the New Biennial on the Cup day, while on January 1 he was engaged in the Gold Cup. This is decidedly remarkable, for not only are both these races run on the same afternoon, but the distance in the one is five furlongs, while in the other it is two miles and a half. During the week after Ascot Sagamore has an engagement at Sandown Park in the Sandringham Stakes, the entry for which race includes Polar Star, Baltinglass, Fra Diavolo, Meadow Rue, and Bellatrix. It is curious that Mr. Raphael's colt should not have been entered for the Goodwood Cup, and his omission from that race is really unaccountable under the circumstances.

The King's filly by Persimmon out of Loch Doon was galloped at Newmarket on Thursday over half a mile, and she won her trial very easily. The Loch Doon filly was entered as a yearling for no fewer than forty-three races. She has two engagements this week at Newmarket, and one at Derby, while at the Epsom Spring Meeting she is entered for both the Westminster Plate and the Hyde Park Plate.

Mr. George Faber's filly, Height of Bliss, by Cyllene out of Stolen Love, split her off fore pastern while galloping at Newmarket last Wednesday. This filly cost 2,000 gs. as a yearling. A non-sporting paper deplores Mr. Faber's bad luck in losing "so valuable and promising a two-year-old." As a matter of fact, Height of Bliss is three years old, and there was no reason for expecting that she would distinguish herself on the Turf in any special way. She may be saved for the stud. Last season this filly started only once, which was at Kempton Park in August, when she was unplaced in the race when Galvani so easily defeated Jubilee.

A morning paper has printed a rhapsody on the subject of the Russian horse Hammurabi, who is engaged in the Ascot Cup, and he is described as "no ordinary horse, but a racer of extraordinary action and staying capacity." Hammurabi, who is now in training at Beckhampton, may have proved himself to be Gulliver in Lilliput when running in Russia, but I expect it will prove to be a case of Gulliver in Brobdingnag when he comes to meet some of the best English and French horses at Ascot. If Hammurabi has any real pretensions to be a flyer of high class he ought to find no difficulty in winning the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap with 8 st. 5 lb. The statements as to the "interest" of the Emperor Nicholas in bloodstock are altogether erroneous, for he cares nothing about the matter. The Grand Duke Michel (younger brother of the Emperor), and his cousin, the Grand Duke Dimitri, are the members of the Imperial family who interest themselves actively and personally in breeding and racing affairs, particularly the latter.

Sir E. Vincent has tried a nice two-year-old at Newmarket in the colt by Stoccado out of Principality, who won the gallop in fine style, and he is likely to turn out very smart indeed. Unluckily the Principality colt has only eight engagements this season, the first being the Newmarket Two-Year-Old Plate at the First Spring Meeting, and then he is in the Hurst Park Foal Plate of £1,500, which is run on the Friday before Ascot. Pom, winner of the Molyneux Stakes at Liverpool, is entered for this race, his 4 lb. penalty being more than extinguished by a breeding allowance of 10 lb. Sir E. Vincent's colt has a similar allowance, so he certainly ought to win this race, as a victory at Newmarket would not involve any penalty. He is entered at Ascot only for the Windsor Castle Stakes on the Friday, and he was unluckily withdrawn from the Seaton Delaval Plate of £1,200 at Newcastle when the minor forfeit was declared. A note should be made of this colt, as he will be worth following.

The King's "dark" colt Perambulator, who has been mentioned by some addleheads as likely to carry his Majesty's colours prominently in the Two Thousand and Derby, is not in the least likely to distinguish himself in either of these races. Perambulator wants time, and when he is really fit to run it is most probable that he will turn out to be exceedingly moderate. He has no fewer than twenty-five engagements, and he will no doubt be reserved for some race in which he will have the benefit of a maiden allowance, while the best of his opponents will be carrying extra weight. The King's colt is in five races at Ascot, but he might be started for some race at Newmarket, as he would doubtless be benefited by a sharp gallop in public.

The sport at Warwick was not of much interest, apart from Wool Winder's race. Colonel Baird's fine colt is a nervous animal, and the Epsom crowd would scare him to death. It will not surprise me if Wool Winder proves to be deficient in stamina. His superior class would carry him through successfully in last week's race. The Brocklesby form came out badly in the Kineton Stakes, when Pastry (on whom slight odds were betted) failed to finish in the first three, the winner being Captain Forester's Bracelet, by Collar, who was not at all fancied. There was no excuse for Pastry's ignominious defeat, as she got very well away. Selaginella, winner of the Lincoln Cup, compensated Mr. L. de Rothschild for the failure of Pastry by easily winning the Grove Park Plate. It is obvious that the home trial before Lincoln must have been all wrong, according to which Pastry is much superior to Selaginella, or else the latter has greatly improved, while the former has gone off.

At Leicester The Cherub, who had finished second in Wool Winder's race at Warwick, was a hot favourite for the Durham Plate, but was beaten by Billidere, who was also well backed. The winner, who was formerly owned by Lord Carnarvon, was sold at Newmarket last December for 1,050 gs. to Mr. G. D. Smith.

There was a very large attendance at Newbury on Friday, although the weather was utterly detestable, and there was an excellent day's racing. A useful practical lesson may be drawn from the defeat of Bellatrix in the Greenham Stakes, which is that nothing can be more asinine than to back a three-year-old merely on the strength of its excellent two-year-old running. Unless the animal has been properly galloped in a businesslike manner, it pays in nine cases out of ten to leave it alone. Of course, on public form Bellatrix was a good thing, but, as I remarked last week, she had appeared lately to look "very light indeed." Considering that Baron de Forest's mare is bred a non-stayer, it was sheer folly to plunge on her in a field of sixteen when running over a mile on very heavy ground. There was a most exciting finish for this race, Donna Caterina winning for Lord Rosebery by a head from Stick Up, both being extreme outsiders. The winner, however, was a strong Newmarket tip, as she had been going uncommonly well in her gallops, but she was scarcely backed at all. Bellatrix collapsed grievously, being dead-beat at the distance.

The Newbury Cup was a great success, there being a large field, with plenty of betting. Larino was favourite, but Champ d'Or was also very heavily backed, as there was a report that she represented Ob at a ridiculous weight. This was doubtless all a flimflam. A considerable sum of money went on the Australian horse Dalkeith, who won cleverly. There has been a rumour for some time past that this animal would be sure to bring off a handicap during the spring.

Maintenon has evidently trained on in a very satisfactory manner, for he found no difficulty in winning two races last week, one at Longchamps and the other at Maisons Laffitte, and in the latter (the rich Prix Eugene Adam) he "lost" Pernod, who had been regarded as the best of the French three-year-olds, but on this occasion M. Aumont's colt refused to gallop. The ground was very heavy indeed. I am informed that Maintenon is a certain starter for the Ascot Cup if well, and if he is then in his best form he will win that race. It is quite clear that his running in the Grand Prix de Paris was all wrong, judging from his performances since that race, and if Spearmint is got to the post in the Gold Cup I shall expect the French horse to beat last year's Derby winner.

Next week will be devoted to Epsom and Sandown Park, and there are sure to be large fields for most of the events at both of these meetings.

If Gourd starts for the Metropolitan I shall expect her to win if the ground is really soft. In the absence of Lord Derby's mare Mintagon might be successful.

As to the City and Suburban nobody can yet tell how certain dangerous stables will be represented. Slavetrader would probably have won this handicap if all had gone well with him, but he has been stopped in his work, and was said to be lame in the early part of last week. However, he has since been backed again. I shall predict the success of Slavetrader if he comes to the post fit and well, but if he is absent Succour may win. This horse did not give his best running when he was beaten for the Liverpool Spring Cup. Dinneford should run well, but this handicap ought not to be meddled with by backers until the day.

THE C.T.C. ON ITS TRIAL.

The bicycling writer in the Field opines that any great accession of bicyclists to the Cyclists Touring Club is hardly to be expected until the two parties in the club have composed their differences, though some may be attracted by the greater entrance facilities offered. Some years ago I showed the waste of time and money involved in the election of members. Now a candidate gets a provisional ticket, and I suppose afterwards a permanent one admitting him to the fold. This is double expense and waste of time and money. But it does not seem to be fair to the public that a paper of the reputation of the Field should not warn the public against joining the club at the present time. The club is spending money on advertising the glories and benefits of its existence like any other trading concern. As such I deal with it. If the club advertised that its governing body through Mr. Kendall Burnett, its chairman, and Mr. Shipton, its secretary-cum-editor, had recently made oath and said to a judge of the High Court that unless motorists were admitted the club could not afford to grant its members its present privileges, I do not think any rational person would join. Certainly no person who has the nerve and intelligence now requisite to ride a bicycle on the public highway. This feat, one would judge from Mr. Kendall Burnett's affidavits, is one of great peril. No doubt it is because of this danger that Mr. Shipton is a motorist. Nor would the public join if they knew that the secretary and council employ a clerk who assaults a member under such circumstances that the magistrate considers an apology necessary, and yet he does not apologise, and the vice-chairman of the club (Mr. Beatty) and the secretary are present in court and will not give an apology.

Nor would the public join if they knew that the secretary-cum-editor regarded those who do not use either motors, as he does, or motor-cycles, as doing donkey-work. It is of men who write in this way of cyclists that road hogs are made. I have no doubt that Mr. Shipton is a careful motorist, but he sets a very bad example to his wealthy brethren by writing in this impertinent and offensive manner about cyclists in his own Gazette. I am absolutely certain that no man or woman who knew that the council had resisted a committee of inquiry into the management of the editorial and secretarial departments of the club by every means that lay in their power would think of joining such a club. On these two departments the club spends some £8,000 a year. There is clearly gross waste and mismanagement somewhere. The councillors and officials cling to office and refuse inquiry in every way, shape, and form. They burke discussion in the columns of the Gazette. Why this fear of public inquiry by independent members who are not tyros at the work? And this brings to my mind another point. The vice-chairman, Mr. Beatty, at the recent general meeting issued a special appeal to members not to hand over the club to inexperienced persons. This was his method of getting votes against Mr. Coleridge's amendment in favour of reform. The fact is that every one of the persons nominated to act for the reformers has served on the council of the club. One has been solicitor to the club. They have been behind the scenes. They have seen what goes on. They know that there is a good deal that requires to be thoroughly overhauled. They have a grave suspicion that if the whole affairs of the club are gone into, much that is at present hidden will see the light. Whether or not their suspicions are justified I cannot say. What I do say is that by their own acts and admissions the present chief officials, salaried and honorary, are utterly incapable of running to advantage an organisation of the character of the C.T.C. They have shown themselves utterly incapable of doing anything but waste a great part of the huge income of some £10,000 a year that the club has. When they strenuously resist inquiry and seek support by misleading documents, as Mr. Beatty did, then naturally everybody asks, What is wrong? They must be hiding something that they wished to be hushed up. That is the only inference that one can draw from the facts of the case as presented by themselves. If they have nothing to hide, if everything is above board, why not court immediate inquiry? After their grotesque behaviour their bare word is not sufficient. They have sworn they cannot run the club on its present lines unless they admit motorists. They have pledged their oath to their own incapacity. If, in fact, there is nothing to conceal, then they have only put the coping-stone to their policy of bluff and bunkum by further wasting money on a postal vote and a special meeting at Birmingham. This is the apotheosis of wastrelism.

But it may be said: Why are certain papers so kind to the C.T.C.? I know nothing of the personalities of the contributors to either the C.T.C. Gazette or other journals on bicycling matters. I can, therefore, only suggest that there are wheels within wheels. The editor of the Gazette boasts of the high prices the Gazette pays for special articles to writers who presumably do not confine their work to the Gazette. Naturally, they do not wish to quarrel with their bread and butter. They only pray for peace and further orders for well-paid articles. I do not blame them. I sympathise with them. I might do the same thing if I were in their shoes. I admire the policy of Mr. Shipton in paying his contributors high prices. It tends to allay criticism outside the Gazette. He and his council know the ropes sufficiently to prevent criticism in the columns of the Gazette. The high-priced article is well worthy of the gentleman who has so skilfully made the C.T.C. a one-man show. He has forgotten one little natural history fact, and that is that even donkeys kick at times. I strongly advise the members of the C.T.C. to continue kicking until everything is overhauled. They will have an opportunity at the meeting at Birmingham, and also on the postal vote. The meeting is at the Grand Hotel, Birmingham, on April 27, at 3 p.m. Railway tickets at five shillings (return) each may be obtained from Mr. G. Symons, 3, Plowden Buildings, Temple, E.C.

I see that there is some talk of a New Zealand team coming over to play the Northern Union clubs who now play a bastardised form of Rugby football. The visitors will, of course, be professionals. Neither their own Union nor the Rugby Unions of the four counties at home will in any way recognise them. The tour will probably not be a financial success. The Association game has made great headway in what were the strongholds of Rugby football in pre-Northern Union days. Such a visit—or, rather, the talk about it—seems to be a final effort to give the professional game a little life and interest. It needs it badly. Rugby football is essentially not a game for paid players or broken timers. No better evidence is needed for this proposition than the fact that the Northern Union do not play Rugby football.

Whenever the light allowed, the representatives of Oxford and Cambridge and the public schools played racquets at Queen's Club last week. Goodness only knows why reasonable notice is not given of the University match. It seems to come off anyhow and anywhere. There is still a Foster playing for Oxford, who won very easily. The Cambridge pair were not playing nearly as well as they did a year ago. Wellington beat Malvern in the final of the public school games. There was a Foster playing for Malvern. He kept a very good length with his service. Rugby played some uphill games well, and Simpson has all the makings of a class player. Brougham's service was admirable for Wellington, and he was probably the best player of the lot.

In Association football, matters are settling themselves. Newcastle United are certain to be top of the First Division, and Chelsea and Notts Forest will go up from the Second Division. West Bromwich Albion have unfortunately to stay behind. With the increase in numbers in the League, three changes should be made.

Aitken, Dawson, and Lovejoy have been making anchor cannons. As the public like it, I suppose they are wise to go on with this game. But the press-reading public is losing all interest in their performances.

MAMMON.

The Stock Markets and Easier Money—Further Reduction in the Bank Rate Expected—The Bright Prospects for Gilt-Edged Securities.

ALTHOUGH the volume of commission house business doing in the Stock Exchange still gives rise to complaints from brokers and jobbers, there was much in the general developments of last week to foster a spirit of greater confidence in the market outlook. The fortnightly carry over disclosed a more healthy position than had existed for probably some years past. Owing to the pressure recently put upon American speculators who for months past had been running big lines of stock on this side, Yankee scrip appeared to have been shipped back to New York wholesale, while, as usual, in most other departments of the House the open account was almost a negligible quantity. In consequence everybody, for once in a way, appeared to be a "taker in" of stock, and contangoes were distinctly light. The better sentiment thus engendered was stimulated afresh on Thursday when, as expected, the Bank of England reduced its discount rate from 5 to 4½ per cent. It was a pleasant coincidence that the decision was made at the first weekly Court presided over by Mr .W. M. Campbell in his new rôle of Governor, and we may all hope that the reduction is but the forerunner of an early further decline to 4 per cent. The relief which a lower official monetary standard has brought to the City—and not alone to the City, but to the commercial community throughout the country—is very real. The 5 per cent. rate had been in force since January 17, and previous to that 6 per cent. had ruled since October 19, 1906. Now, to the trader accustomed to pay 1 per cent. over Bank rate for loans from his banker, a 5 per cent. official minimum—let alone a 6 per cent.—presses almost as grievously as a shilling income tax in time of peace.

What the high Bank rate has meant to the Stock Exchange there is no need to dwell upon—the story of liquidation and declining prices is too fresh in everybody's memory. Suffice it that the recent period of strain and stress appears to have passed away, and that there is now a reasonable prospect of some months of comparatively easy money, which will permit of a restoration of security prices to something nearer the normal. That money is immediately going to become dirt cheap it would be too much to expect, in view of the continued activity of trade the world over. However, there is every reason to anticipate a 4 per cent. Bank rate within the next two or three weeks, and that will, in a relative sense, come as a boon and a blessing. Owing to the relief measures taken by the Washington Treasury, money rates in New York, and, in turn, the New York Exchange on London, have undergone a distinct improvement, and it is this change which has made the reduction in our Bank rate possible. The position in Berlin is not all that might be desired, but it is improving, and although the Continental exchanges have recently moved against us they are still at a high level. Consequently the Bank of England bids fair to retain free command of the gold market for some weeks to come, and as the arrivals of the yellow metal from the Cape and elsewhere now average £600,000 a week, the Threadneedle-street establishment ought soon to build up a strong position.

The influence that a 4 per cent. Bank rate should have upon the market for gilt-edged securities is a very practical one. There are at the present time dozens of securities of the first rank paying 3½ per cent. and more. With the Bank rate 4 per cent., the rate allowed by the joint stock banks to their depositors would be reduced to 2½ per cent. Thus there would be a clear 1 per cent. margin between deposit rates and gilt-edged stock yields, and if this does not lead to a better demand for investment securities some of us will begin to ask what is the matter. The statement that one often reads in the money articles of the daily press about the change in the Bank rate proving to have been discounted because prices do not immediately respond to the news expresses less than half a truth. When a reduction is expected in the Bank rate, there are always a certain number of speculators who buy with the object of getting a turn on the news being publicly notified, but the momentary effect produced by profit snatching on the part of these punters is a matter of small importance compared with the gradual readjustment of values that sets in with an alteration in the official monetary standard. Another factor that should have a stimulating effect upon the stock markets is the Budget, to be made public this week. I do not pretend to know in advance the proposals of Mr. Asquith, but that he will have a substantial surplus to apply to the reduction of the National Debt is good news enough for the Stock Exchange to go on with.

Easier money in London and on the Bourses led to an all-round improvement in International stocks last week. Japanese bonds continue to be steadily absorbed by investors, and Russian issues, particularly the Fives (the high yield upon which I alluded to a week ago) have enjoyed a fair measure of support. Argentine issues have been most favoured in the South American group, and it is worth noting that the new Five per Cent. loan, offered a few weeks ago at 97½—which was sold down to three discount—has returned to within a fraction of "par." The market has been, and up to the time of writing, is still eagerly awaiting the terms of the settlement understood to have been arrived at between the Peruvian Corporation and the Government. If all the stories that are going around be true the arrangement should be a much more satisfactory one than at first seemed likely. According to the rumour-mongers there is to be not only the handing over of the railways to the Corporation in perpetuity, but also the promise of a subsidy, conditional upon the Corporation undertaking new obligations connected with railway construction. Further, a reorganisation of the company's finances, involving the redemption of the debentures, is said to be part of the programme. As, however, the signatures of the respective parties are understood to be all that has to be obtained to complete the agreement, the market should not much longer have to content itself with guessing the terms.

Home Rails and their High Yields—Trunks and the Meeting—The Mexican Railway Dividend—Argentine Rails and the Outlook.

The Home Railway market during the past week has been somewhat irregular, attempts to put prices better having been frustrated to some extent by paucity of public business. There is, however, little doubt that the market is working into shape for a recovery, along with the gilt-edged brigade. Some disappointment was expressed at the traffics for Easter week; the figures as a whole, however, were not really bad, while so far as the aggregate results for the half-year are concerned the companies, with one or two exceptions, have done splendidly. The strong point for the Home Railway market is that stocks on the basis of last year's dividends will give yields of 4½ to 5 per cent., without making any allowance for the increases foreshadowed in some cases by the continued growth in gross revenue. American Rails during the last few days have relapsed into a dull and uninteresting condition; dealers on this side have been doing very little, while the volume of trading in Wall Street has shown a considerable falling off. The market has, in fact, fallen into that state of exhaustion that good judges said would succeed the recent whirl of excitement. The heavy liquidation has been accomplished, but the process has, for the time being, crippled some of the leaders, who are therefore compelled to take a rest. The public, too, appears to be holding resolutely aloof from the market; it would not buy when prices were from $20 to $50 higher, and it shows no inclination to purchase now that values have come down from sky level—the distrust awakened by the recent Harriman investigation, the uncertainty over the dividend outlook caused by the hostile attitude towards the railroads assumed by the State Legislatures, and the tremendous rises in operating costs brought about by dearer labour and materials still combining to keep buyers away. The weakness of copper was another "bear" influence last week, as it tended to increase talk about a coming industrial reaction.

"Bulls" of Grand Trunks obtained some useful ammunition from the half-yearly meeting, where Sir Rivers Wilson considerately refrained from repeating the practice adopted at the previous two or three meetings of springing unpleasant surprises upon the stockholders. The decision of the Canadian Railway Commissioners to reduce the passenger fares in Ontario to 3 cents per mile does not, it turns out, affect the Grand Trunk at all, as its present charges are below that level. Another pleasant piece of news imparted by the chairman was that the elevators are choked with grain, and that even if the coming harvest was less bountiful than its predecessor, there would be 20 per cent. more grain land under cultivation, which would make up any deficiency. In the foreign railway group, Mexican Rails have been very lively, in connection with the dividend announced on Thursday last. Writing a week ago, I expressed the opinion that, in view of the large "bull" account that had been built up in Mexican railways, there was room for a sharp set-back in prices should dividend estimates prove to have overshot the mark. As events turned out, the prophets were too sanguine, and the posting of the dividend was followed by a break of 5 to 6 points in the quotations for Mexican ordinary and seconds. Yet, looked at dispassionately, I cannot see how the dividend can be regarded as other than extremely handsome. The board, by paying at the rate of 3⅞ per cent. on the second preference, as against nothing a year ago, when only 6⅛ per cent. was paid on firsts, is distributing £45,000 more than in the corresponding half-year. Yet the increase in gross traffics as published was only about the same amount. With railway operating costs everywhere else showing substantial increases, it is really remarkable to find the Mexican reducing its ratio sufficiently to retain the whole of its gross increase as extra net profit. Evidently we have begun to see the outcome of the agitation started by the Stock Exchange some time ago against what was considered to be the undue conservatism of the management. In view of this change of policy, it is not unlikely that Mexican rails will continue in favour with speculators during the next few months, particularly as gross earnings are still mounting at a rapid rate, and there is talk of substantial savings being effected by the use of oil in place of coal as fuel. At the same time, the market, by its vigorous "bull" campaign of the last few months, has already made a fairly good allowance for prospects.

How to Operate in Stocks Successfully.—See Halford's Adviser (post free).—Palmerston House, London, E.C. Established 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

The Argentine railway market has continued out of favour, dealers waiting to see how traffics shape when the maize comes forward. Probably earnings will not be greatly affected until a month or so later, for the effect of the maize shortage will be hidden to some extent by the carriage of other grain—the bumper wheat harvest having left a fair quantity of that cereal still to be carried. I have received the following letter from a correspondent signing himself "Critic," that has a useful bearing upon the subject under discussion:—

Sir,—Referring to your remarks last week re Argentine railways and the poor maize crop, the only line carrying any very big quantity of maize is the Buenos Ayres and Rosario, and this is the only line whose dividend can by any possibility be affected by it. I have not the report just issued before me, but for 1905 the maize carried was 1,456,236 tons.

The following are the 1905-6 figures for the other leading railways:—

Buenos Ayres Western, 418,261 tons.
Buenos Ayres Great Southern, 362,717 tons.
Buenos Ayres and Pacific, 179,787 tons.

Thus the Rosario carries far more maize than the aggregate carried by the other three lines. In fact, I may say so far as the three 7 per cent. lines are concerned, and more particularly as regards the Great Southern and the Pacific, that if they did not carry a single ton of maize their present dividends could be easily maintained.

Since my correspondent wrote, the Rosario report has come to hand, and it shows that the maize tonnage handled by the company last year was no less than 1,771,600, an increase of 315,400 over 1905. The matter assumes greater importance when we notice how enormously working costs on the Rosario system have increased. Of an increase in gross receipts amounting to £536,000, no less than £493,000 was absorbed by the extra cost of operating. Coal cost £94,000 more, and wages and materials were all substantially dearer. The Rosario's traffics will probably be affected later on, not only by lighter grain receipts, but by the damage done to the grazing industry through the recent visitation of drought and locusts. Fortunately, owing to the good wheat and linseed harvests, the company already, since January 1, shows an increase in gross receipts of £93,000, or 7½ per cent., which should be further augmented before the leaner times set in. Besides this its receipts from general traffic are steadily growing, and the expense ratio last year leaves a fair margin for savings. Sooner or later, too, the amalgamation with the Central Argentine ought to be ratified by the Government—a matter that in itself will permit of some useful economies. And it must not be forgotten that "Rosies" have already fallen to a level which, allowing for the dividend now carried in the price, makes the yield on the 1906 dividend basis practically 6 per cent.

While discussing railway finance, I should like to draw my readers' attention to a very handy little statistical work published at 1s. 1d. post free by Messrs. F. C. Mathieson and Sons, 16, Copthall-avenue, E.C. This manual, which can be caried in one's pocket, gives a mass of figures relating to all the well-known railways at home and abroad, the information covering the past twenty years. It shows the capital of the companies, their earnings, dividends, highest and lowest prices, and a lot of other information of vital interest to the stockholder.

Railway Fixed Interest Stocks—Some Sound English, American, Colonial, and Foreign Securities that Yield from 4 to 4¾ per Cent.

If there is one thing more than another that has struck the financial writer, whose work has brought him into close touch with the investing public during the last few years, it has been the wholesale craving after securities "reasonably safe that yield between 4 and 5 per cent." My correspondence column for months past has bulged with replies to such queries. There are probably a number of reasons responsible for this general hunt after stocks outside the pale of strict trustee investments. To some extent, perhaps, the capitalist classes, owing to greater luxury in their mode of living, have been compelled to exchange from absolutely gilt-edged securities and to seek higher yielding stocks. But in the main, the explanation lies, firstly, in the fact that owing to dearness of money, borrowers with really high-class credit to pledge have had of late to pay extraordinary high rates on new issues; and secondly, in the remarkable forward movement that has been going on in the New World, which has raised the standard of many securities that a decade ago were mere speculative counters to the dignity of high-grade investments, although the returns available upon such securities still look generous when compared with those offered by the strict Trustee group. That there will always be a distinct margin between Trustee stocks and those not admitted within the charmed circle is inevitable. Further, as I showed in an article a few weeks ago, it is the stocks of the first water that have suffered most from the monetary stringency of the last few years, and, therefore, if, as seems likely, we are at last entering upon softer times in the Money Market, the gilt-edged group ought to soon begin showing signs of recuperation. However, my present object is to endeavour to cater for the many investors who want, first of all, an average of not less than say 4 to 4½ per cent.; second, as big a margin of safety as is compatible with such a yield; and third, securities that offer promise of going up. By attempting to fulfil this task I hope, not only to answer many present inquirers, but to save replying to a larger number of prospective querists. First, I would draw attention to fixed interest securities amongst British Rails that can be bought to yield about 4 to 4½ per cent., and have selected a dozen which are listed below:—

I.—HOME RAILWAY STOCKS.

Stock.	Interest per Cent.	Yield per Cent.
Barry Preferred	4	£4 1 9
Caledonian Preferred	3	4 8 6
Central London Preferred	4	4 6 6
City and South London 1903 Preference	5	4 10 6
Furness 1899 Preference	4	4 2 3
Glasgow and South-Western Preferred	2½	4 0 9
Great Central Preference 1879	5	4 4 0
Great Northern Preferred	4	4 1 9
London and South-Western Preferred	4	3 19 6
London, Brighton, and South Coast Preferred	6	4 7 6
Midland Preferred	2½	3 18 6
North British Preferred	3	4 8 6

To the investor who likes to have his investment, as it were, under his own eye, these stocks should make a strong appeal. The interest in all cases appears to be amply secured, while as regards "prospects" it is worth noting that only a year ago—which was hardly a period of inflation—not one of the group could be bought to yield 4 per cent. Cheaper money, therefore, ought to mean a fair levelling up of prices before we are much

The Danger to Health of obesity is not sufficiently emphasised. Stout people should know that "fatty degeneration" of the heart and liver is a constant menace to them. The Sketch, in writing about Antipon, says:—"This pleasant, rational, and most efficacious remedy may be warmly recommended to stout persons, as much for health's sake as for the attainment of perfect elegance of figure." Price 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. per bottle, of all chemists, or of The Antipon Company, 13, Olmar-street, London, S.E.

older. The stocks of the two leading Scottish lines look specially cheap. They have been brought down lately in sympathy with the deferred issues, which were depressed by unfavourable earnings, but nobody would suggest that there is a likelihood of the preferred interest going short, and before long the efforts being made to economise by more harmonious working between the two companies should have a beneficial effect upon the joint finances of the two concerns. Brighton preferred, too, now that it yields 4⅜ per cent. looks tempting, for although the dividend on Berthas may have to be pruned this year the matter is not one that seriously concerns holders of the preferred. The stocks of the two tube lines included in my table have also suffered to an unreasonable extent from the depression caused by the recent fight for metropolitan traffic.

I next come to the American Railroad area. My readers are fully aware of my objection to the common stocks of Yankee railroads as investments, but there is no reason why the bonds of the better class railroads should not be bought; those who confine their attention to this group need not be afraid that their action will provoke insomnia. The following table lists a baker's dozen of the bonds of railroads familiar to investors on this side:—

II.—AMERICAN RAILROAD BONDS.

Bond.	Interest per Cent.	Redeemable.	Yield per Cent. £ s. d.
Atchison Adjustment	4	1995	3 19 3
Baltimore and Ohio (Pittsburg Lake Erie)	4	1941	4 2 6
Chesapeake General Mortgage	4½	1992	4 5 3
Denver and Rio Grande 1st Mortgage	4	1936	4 1 9
Erie General Lien	4	1996	4 14 3
Louisville 1st Mortgage Collateral	5	1931	4 5 9
Missouri Kansas 2nd Mortgage	4	1990	4 15 3
National of Mexico 1st Cons. Mortgage	4	1951	4 13 6
New York Central (Mich. Cent. Col.)	3½	1998	4 0 0
Norfolk and Western 1st Consol.	4	1996	4 0 9
Northern Pacific General Lien	3	2047	4 1 0
Reading General Mortgage	4	1997	4 1 0
Southern Pacific (Central Pacific)	4	1949	4 9 6

In making my selection I have chosen only those bonds that have long "lives." Several of the issues run for nearly another century, while in the case of Northern Pacific General Liens the date of maturity has been relegated to 2047. The yields in seven instances do not exceed 4⅛ per cent., but, having regard to the enormous margin of income at present received in excess of fixed charges, the rate offered to the investor is distinctly generous. Erie Four per Cent. General Lien ought to be worth locking away now that they give a return of almost 4¾ per cent., while another bond that pays a similar rate to a present purchaser is Missouri Kansas Four per Cent. Second Mortgage. The margin behind this bond is small compared with that upon, say, New York Central bonds, but the road has lately given very gratifying evidence of progress, and in time, as the credit of the company improves, its bonds should stand at a higher level. Another attractive bond in the list is National of Mexico Four per Cent. First Mortgage. I have classed it with United States issues, as the company has its offices in New York, and its securities are dealt in along with Yankees. During the last few years the earnings of this road, along with those of other Mexican lines, have expanded at a remarkable rate, and the margin behind the bonded debt is now ample for all ordinary contingencies. The fact, too, that the Mexican Government itself has a controlling interest in the road is a point that adds a lot to the desirability of the company's securities from the investor's point of view.

(To be continued next week.)

KAFFIRS STILL QUIET, BUT A LITTLE "INVESTMENT" DEMAND NOTICEABLE—THE TRANSVAAL GOLD OUTPUT FOR MARCH CAUSES SOME DISAPPOINTMENT—DIAMOND SHARES LESS ACTIVE.

The hoped-for influx of buying orders for Kaffirs from the investing public has not yet materialised, and the fact seems to have caused some disappointment among dealers in those descriptions. The Kaffir Market, however, is not the only department of the Stock Exchange in which business has been on a small scale during the past week, and when the public does decide to become more active in connection with Stock Exchange dealings, South African securities should receive a fair share of the attention. There is certainly more justification for picking up Kaffirs now than at any time during the last few years. The outlook for the mining industry is brighter, and, at the same time, share quotations are at a more attractive level, having depreciated considerably during the long period of uncertainty as regards the political outlook. As I mentioned in last week's notes, the Kaffir Market commenced the current account in good style. The demand, however, has not been maintained, and so prices have reacted to some extent. Market men had been anticipating a bumper Transvaal gold return for March, and the announcement of the figures caused some disappointment. Though satisfactory, the statistics were not as good as had been looked for, and the effect upon the tone of the market was adverse, professionals hastening to secure the profits available upon the commitments they had opened. While, however, the leading speculative counters have failed to maintain the best prices recently touched, the deep level group and the generality of the outcrop descriptions have been pretty firm, and here and there prices have improved as a result of "investment" demand. Most of the shares I specially mentioned a few weeks ago have been in request recently, and I still consider them worth attention. Below I give my comprehensive table of prices, showing the movement on the month:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	March 9, 1907.	April 13, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Angelo	5 7/16	2½	3½	3 5/16	+ 3/16
Anglo-French	2¾	1 7/16	1 7/16	1 13/16	- 1/16
Apex	6¾	2⅝	3½	3 7/16	- 1/16
Boksburg	1 7/16	11/16	⅝	⅝	- 1/16
Cinderella Deep	2⅝	1⅜	2 1/16	2⅛	- 1/16
City and Suburban (£4)	5½	3½	3⅜	3⅜	—
Consolidated Goldfields	6⅜	3	4½	4 13/16	+ 5/16
Consolidated Main Reef	1 1/16	⅝	1 3/16	1 3/16	—
Crown Deep	13½	10¼	12½	12	- ½
Crown Reef	13	7½	8½	8½	+ ½
De Beers Pref. (£2 10s.)	18¼	16⅜	18¼	17¼	- 1
,, ,, Def. (£2 10s.)	24 11/16	16⅜	21½	20⅜	-2⅛
Driefontein	3 1/16	1½	2 1/16	1 15/16	- ⅛
Durban Roodepoort	4	2⅜	2⅜	2½ xd	-3/-
East Rand Proprietary	7 3/16	3⅜	4 13/16	4 11/16	+ ⅛
Ferreira	20¼	17½	19	18⅜	- ½
Ferreira Deep	5⅝	4½	5⅜	5½	- ⅛
Geduld	5 1/16	1⅜	2⅛	2	- ⅛
Geldenhuis Estate	4⅜	3 3/16	2 15/16	2 15/16	+ 1/16
General Mining and Finance	2 1/16	1⅜	1 7/16	1 7/16	—
Goerz A. & Co.	3⅜	1 3/16	1 3/16	1½	- 1/16
Henderson's Transvaal	16/3	7/-	9/9	9/9	—
Jagersfontein Def.	10⅜	7 7/16	10 1/16	9¼	- ⅜
Johannesburg Con. Inv't	1⅜	1	1 1/16	1½	+ 1/16
Jubilee	3½	1½	1½	1½	- ⅛
Jupiter	2 3/16	15/16	1⅜	1⅜	+ 1/16
Knight's	4½	2 5/16	3 1/16	3⅜	+ 1/16
Langlaagte Estate	3	2 1/16	2⅜	2⅜	—
May Consolidated	3 1/16	2 1/16	2 1/16	2 1/16	- 1/16
Meyer and Charlton	4⅛	3⅜	4⅛	4⅜	- ⅛
New African	1 1/16	⅜	1	1	—
New Comet	3	1⅜	1 1/16	1½	- 1/16
New Goch	2½	⅞	1 1/16	1½	- 1/16
New Heriot	4½	2⅜	3⅜	3⅜	—
New Kleinfontein	1⅝	1⅜	2	2 1/16	+ 1/16
New Modderfontein (£1)	8 1/16	4 1/16	6 1/16	6⅜	+ 1/16
New Primrose	3½	2⅜	3 1/16	2⅜	- 1/16
Nigel	3¼	2⅜	2⅜	2⅜	+ ⅛
Oceana Consolidated	1⅜	⅝	19/3	19/6	+ -/3
Premier Dia'md Def. (2s 6d.)	19⅞	8	12½	13¼	+1
Randfontein Estate	2 1/16	1 1/16	1 3/16	1 3/16x	+ 2/10½
,, North	1 1/16	1 1/16	1 1/16	1 1/16	+ ⅛
,, Porges	1 1/16	1⅜	1 1/16	1⅜	+ 1/16
,, Robinson	1½	⅝	1 1/16	1½	- 1/16
,, South	1⅜	1	1 1/16	1½	- 1/16
Rand Mines (5s. sh.)	7 1/16	5⅜	6 3/16	6 3/16	—
Robinson (£5)	8⅛	6⅞	9½	8⅜	- ⅜
Robinson Central Deep	6 1/16	4⅜	5 1/16	5⅜	- 1/16
Robinson Deep	5 1/16	4 1/16	5⅜	5⅛	- ⅛
Roodepoort United	2⅜	1½	1⅜	1½	- ⅛
South African Gold Mines	6	1⅜	1⅜	2	+ ⅛
South African Gold Trust	4⅜	1 3/16	2½	2½	—
Simmer and Jack	1 11/16	1½	1 1/16	1 3/16	- 1/16
Transvaal Consd. Land	2 1/16	1 1/16	2 1/16	2 1/16	- ⅛
Transvaal Est. and Dev'mt.	21/3	9/6	13/9	13/9	—
Transvaal Goldfields	1⅞	15/16	1⅛	1	- 1/16
Treasury	2⅜	15/16	1 1/16	⅞	- 1/16
Van Ryn	3⅜	2⅛	2 1/16	3⅛	+ 1/16
Village Deep	3¼	1⅜	2⅜	2¼	- ⅛
Village Main Reef	4⅞	3¼	3 1/16	3⅛	- 1/16
Violet	2⅜	⅞	1 1/16	1	- 1/16
Welgedacht	6	2⅜	3¼	3 1/16	- 1/16
Witwatersrand Deep	3 1/16	2 1/16	3⅛	3⅛	+ ⅛
Wolhuter	3⅜	2⅜	2 1/16	2 1/16	—

ROMANO'S RESTAURANT, STRAND.—Truth says:—"On the way down the Strand I dropped in to dine at Romano's—I was glad to see how well the place maintains its old reputation. A better-cooked and better-served dinner no one need desire."

"FINANCE."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the CENTRAL STOCK EXCHANGE, LTD. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper.

On the whole, business in the leading Diamond shares has been rather less active during the past week than hitherto, and the quotations of the leading shares have experienced a decline. This would appear to have been mainly due to rumours of difficulties in the diamond trade on the Continent, but nothing definite has transpired in that connection. New Vaal Rivers have come in for more attention and the quotation of the shares has fluctuated widely, having been nearly two points below the last making-up price at one time. No special reason for the severe relapse was forthcoming; on the other hand, the cables published in regard to the operations on the company's area read satisfactorily. Water is now available, and, according to a message dated Friday last, "greatest activity prevails amongst diggers on new area." A scarcity of labour, however, is reported.

As was to be expected, the Transvaal gold output for last month was largely in excess of the February return, the latter month being three days shorter, while in addition the Chinese holidays interrupted operations. The March figures are slightly better than those for January, but at first sight the latest return will not appear to constitute a record, as the October and December statistics are higher. It must be borne in mind, however, that the totals for those two months include large amounts representing gold reserves declared and extinguished. Under this head, 19,115 oz. figured in the December return, and if this amount is deducted, it will be seen that the March output is a record. The following table gives the monthly yields in fine ounces:—

Month.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.	Fine. oz.
January	199,279	288,824	369,258	428,638	537,633
February	196,513	289,502	363,811	407,668	493,542
March	217,405	308,242	399,823	443,723	538,497
April	227,871	305,946	399 166	439,243	—
May	234,125	314,480	416,395	461,202	—
June	238,320	308,219	412,317	475,975	—
July	251,643	307,940	419,505	491,793	—
August	271,918	312,277	428,581	503,115	—
September	276,197	312,286	416,487	505,111	—
October	284,541	325,625	415,527	540.609	—
November	279,813	336,167	424,757	533,373	—
December	286,061	362,264	431,594	550,167	—
Total	2,963,749	3,776,621*	4,897,221	5,786,617	1,569,677

* Includes 7,949 oz. or £33,786 not declared in year.

The monthly gold production is given in sterling in the subjoined table:—

Month.	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	£	£	£	£	£
January	846,489	1,226,846	1,588,508	1,820,739	2,283,741
February	834,739	1,229,726	1.545,371	1,731,664	2 096 434
March	923,739	1,309,329	1,698,340	1,884,815	2,287,391
April	967,936	1,299,576	1,695,550	1,865,785	—
May	994.505	1,335,826	1,768 734	1,959,062	—
June	1,012,322	1,300,231	1,751,412	2,021,813	—
July	1,068,917	1,307,621	1,781,944	2,089,004	—
August	1,155,039	1,326,468	1,820,496	2,162,583	—
September	1,173,211	1,326,506	1,769,124	2,145,575	—
October	1,208,669	1,383,167	1,765,047	2,296,371	—
November	1,188,571	1,427 947	1,804.253	2 265,625	—
December	1,215,110	1,533,800	1,833,295	2,356,961	—
Totals	12,589,247	16,054,909	20,802,074	24,579,987	6,667,566

Individual results are set out below, and the satisfactory features will be noticed that substantially increased profits were earned last month by the East Rand subsidiaries, while for the first time the Robinson Deep ranks second highest in the list of the Rand's principal profit-earners, having (as I recently foreshadowed) passed the Simmer and Jack. On the other hand, the Robinson, which is at the top of the list, reports a somewhat smaller profit for March than for February:—

COMPANY.	January.		February.		March.
	Ozs.	Profit. £	Ozs.	Profit. £	Ozs.	Profit. £
Angelo	13,372	24,912	10,311	16,987	14,125	28,417
Bonanza	2,155	3,049	2,037	2,528	2,053	2,476
Cason	18,110	35,848	16,009	28,969	18,160	36,155
City and Suburban	10,159	16,570	9,262	14,342	10,091	16,658
Comet, New	7,842	7,838	6,790	4,991	7,842	6,363
Consolidated Langlaagte	6,859	7,722	6,700	7,585	7,238	8,479
Consolidated Main Reef	6,727	7,915	6,016	7,448	6,277	7,420
Crown Deep	13,808	24 250	12,956	24,100	14,356	26,600
Crown Reef	10,771	22,545	10,316	22,608	10,814	22,597
Driefontein	7,592	5,727	7,063	4,170	7,698	6,310
Durban-Roodepoort	4,498	5,900	4,203	5,950	4,598	—
Do. Deep	4,209	2,150	3,633	1,750	4,093	2,200
Ferreira	13,146	30,503	12,603	30,507	12,900	30,184
Ferreira Deep	13,664	34,350	12,813	32,150	13,442	34,550
French Rand	6,521	5,020	5,223	3,526	6,483	5,009
Geldenhuis Estate	6,641	3,921	6,191	12,745	6,581	13,957
Geldenhuis Deep	10,392	13,650	9,732	13,300	10,630	13,700
Ginsberg	2,445	1,538	2,531	2,490	2,679	2 443
Glencairn	5,152	6,174	4,844	6,116	5,027	6,069
Glen Deep	7,824	10.750	6,409	8,409	7,360	9,800
Glynn's Lydenburg	1,544	4,011	1,458	3,322	1,619	3,673
Goch, New	7,852	8,681	6,505	4,878	6,658	5,019
Heriot, New	3,900	4,703	3,904	5,006	3,897	4,727
Jubilee	1,698	—	1,718	3,322	1,855	—
Jumpers	5,796	7,490	5,330	6,090	5,831	7,086
Jumpers Deep	6,921	3,750	6,102	3,700	6,683	4,000
Kleinfontein, New	13,461	21.345	11,910	17,491	13,069	20.002
Knight's (Witwatersrand)	10,703	15,304	10,085	16,678	10,635	16,796
Knight's Deep	11,448	16,646	10,490	14,939	11,725	18.317
Lancaster	4,964	5,918	4,229	4,574	4,208	3,189
Lancaster West	2,232	1,811	2,143	1,753	2,340	2,082
Langlaagte Deep	11,038	11,000	10,314	10,200	10,960	10 550
Langlaagte Estate	10,194	15,500	9,250	13,800	10,031	16,000
Luipaard's Vlei	5,201	7,088	4,619	6,485	5,268	7,318
May Consolidated	5,874	11,991	5,666	11,656	5,818	11,771
Meyer & Charlton	5,874	11,339	5,434	10,470	5,902	11,818
Modderfontein, New	6,904	8,009	6,370	7,834	8,163	9,959
New Unified	2,658	1,132	2,535	1.148	2,646	1,333
Nigel	4,004	6,500	3,702	5,935	4,126	6,611
Nigel Deep	1,910	1,052	1,833	1,043	1,933	1,363
North Randfontein	6,146	6,600	5,370	5,500	6,317	7,200
Nourse Mines	13,059	17,000	11,745	16.450	12,741	17.800
Porges Randfontein	6,409	8,200	5,876	8,000	6,003	7.500
Primrose, New	7,985	16,286	6,997	13,714	7,295	13,956
Princess	3,929	5,178	3,463	3,471	3,844	4,721
Rietfontein, New	9,679	17,056	9,005	15,328	9,678	17.533
Robinson	22,090	60,468	21,514	60,461	22,250	60,424
Robinson Central Deep	11,232	31,752	10,577	30,208	11,287	31,103
Robinson Deep	20,047	40,939	18,513	36,014	42,919	44 032
Robinson Randfontein	5,353	3,500	5.595	5,800	6,008	6,800
Roodepoort Central Deep	2,922	2,004	2,787	2,240	3,243	3,693
Roodepoort United	5,659	7,202	4,872	5,331	5,888	7,322
Rose Deep	10 020	11,900	9,291	11,000	10,359	13,000
Salisbury	1,770	1,755	1,720	1.870	1,840	1,850
Sheba	2,100	—	2,332	1,720	2,345	—
Simmer East	11,081	9,000	10,053	7,040	10,633	5,316
Simmer & Jack	24,419	47,078	21,100	39 542	23,143	43,852
South Randfontein	5,648	4,500	5,248	5,100	5,723	6,600
Transvaal G. M. Estates	4,266	6,010	4,048	5,541	4 642	—
Treasury	2,823	1,051	2,592	480	2 931	1,003
Van Ryn	10,304	19,772	8,616	16,343	9,975	19,131
Village Deep	9,050	8,750	7,367	4,765	8,464	5,250
Village Main Reef	15,400	24,155	14,552	24,008	15,578	25,007
Vogelstruis Estates	2,504	2,671	—	—	2,457	—
West Rand Central	963	450	905	430	909	475
Windsor	1,383	207*	1 330	*106	1,424	2
Witwatersrand Deep	11,682	19,302	11,393	19,877	12,358	21,029
Worcester	1,393	—	1,019	—	1,063	—
Wolhuter	5,750	4,208	5,498	3,399	5,576	4,020

* Loss.

Now that the returns are to hand for the first quarter of 1907, it is interesting to see how some of the mines are doing in relation to their capitalisation. Some weeks ago I gave a short list of what I considered promising selections among Kaffirs, and included in this list were the shares of five producing mines, namely, Glencairn, Knights, New Kleinfontein, Robinson Deep, and Witwatersrand Deep. Having suggested these shares to my readers, I have collated their returns for the last three months, and in the table below show the rate per annum being earned in each case on the issued capital:—

Mine.	Issued Capital.	Profits Earned First Quarter, 1907.	Rate per Annum on Issued Capital.
	£	£	Per Cent.
Glencairn	550,000*	18,359	13
Knights	425,000	48,778	45
New Kleinfontein	900,000	58,838	26
Robinson Deep	980,000	120,935	49
Witwatersrand Deep	500,000*	60,208	48

* Also debentures.

Of course, the above percentages are to be considered as no more than an approximate guide as to to dividend

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

CURIO CLUB.—The London Opinion Curio Club will be open after April 15th. For terms of membership apply, Curio Editor, London Opinion, 36, Southampton-street, Strand.

prospects, the calculation being on gross earnings, from which the profits tax will have to be deducted, and, in the case of three of the companies, debenture interest also. Still, the figures should be of interest as indicating that dividends should be forthcoming which would represent a satisfactory yield on the current market values of the shares. In this connection it is interesting to note that at the annual meeting of the New Kleinfontein Company, a report of which is just to hand by mail from Johannesburg, the chairman referred to the increased dividend paid for the past year, and said he had every reason to anticipate that the distribution for the current year would show a still further improvement. It appears that the directors of this company have in view the erection of twenty additional stamps with a corresponding increase in both cyanide and slimes plants, it being estimated that the profit will thereby be increased by over £2,000 a month. The management, however, is awaiting a definite statement in regard to the retention of the Chinese before proceeding in the matter. If the scheme is to be carried out the necessary funds will be raised by means of a loan to be repayable over a period of time out of the additional profits earned by the additional plant; this will obviate interference in any way with the profits at present earned. The annual report of the African and European Investment Company is just issued, and it shows that active prospecting operations have been continued on the company's farms in the Pietersburg district. Numerous reefs have been located, and development work carried out on the most promising. Prospecting for diamond deposits has also been undertaken, and some discoveries have been reported from the Zoutpansberg district. Among the company's interests is a holding in the Roberts Victor Diamonds, a promising proposition in the Orange River Colony, which has just declared its first dividend.

Interest in Rhodesians Centred upon the Banket Group in view of the Eldorado Developments—Globe and Phœnix Position.

In the Rhodesian market the amount of business transacted during the past week was small, but the shares of the Banket group again came in for some attention in view of the news to hand from the Eldorado mine. This is undoubtedly the best mining proposition whose shares are quoted in this section of the mining markets, and in view of the information to hand as to the way the property is opening up, it is not surprising that the shares of the companies interested attract notice. The cable announcing that assay value of the reef at the fourth level is high has been followed by a message that at the same level the parallel reef has been intersected. The assay value of this body is low, but as development proceeds it may be found to improve, as has been the case at the level above. The mail report for February now to hand shows that at the second level the ore shoot had there been proved for a distance of 697 ft., the average value being 22.7 dwts. over a width of 62 in., while at the third level at the date of the report the ore body was 465 ft. in length, and of an average value of 25 dwts. over a width of 58 inches. It should not be long now before the Eldorado joins the list of gold producers, and in view of the ore values mentioned satisfactory profits should be earned. The annual report of the Globe and Phœnix Company is now issued, and while it shows a maintenance of dividends at 4s. per share, it is not, on the whole, a very pleasing document compared with that for 1905. More ore was treated in the last twelve months, and working costs were lower by 3s. per ton, but the net profit amounted to £39,540, as against £50,264 for the previous year. The ore reserves are larger in quantity than a year ago, but less in value; and as regards the development of the mine, the outlook is very uncertain. Were the position more assured, the shares would appear a promising purchase at the present price, but as things stand they must be considered decidedly speculative. I append a table of prices showing the movements on the week:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Apl. 6, 1907.	Apl. 13, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Bechuanaland Exploration	1	7/8	8/8	8/8	—
British S. Africa (Chartered)	2½	1 7/8	1 13/16	1½	+ 3/16
Chicago Gaika	13/9	3/-	4/6	4/6	—
Globe & Phœnix	1 1/8	1/8	3/8	3/8	—
Lomagunda Development	2½	3/4	27/32	27/32	+ 1/16
Mashonaland Agency	1/2	3/8	7/-	7/-	—
Northern Copper	2 1/16	1/8	1 25/32	1 13/16	+ 3/16
Rhodesia Exploration & Development	3½	1 7/8	1 15/16	1 15/16	+ 1/16
Rhodesian Banket	3 1/8	1½	1 13/16	1 15/16	+ ⅛
Rice Hamilton	1½	7/16	29/32	½	+ 3/32
Selukwe	8/-	1/6	3/6	3/6	—
Tanganyika Concessions	8 1/4	3⅛	4 3/4	4 13/16	+ 1/16
Willoughby Consolidated	16/-	7/-	7/-	6/9	- 3/8
Zambesia Exploring	2⅜	¾	1½	1 5/8	+ 1/8

Fair Interest in Westralians Maintained—Spurt in Great Fingalls—The Golden Horseshoe, Boulder Perseverance and Ivanhoe Annual Reports.

The slight improvement in business conditions recently apparent in the Westralian market has been maintained during the past week. It will be seen from the table of prices below that the chief movement has occurred in Great Fingalls:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Apl. 6, 1907.	Apl. 13, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Associated	5	1 1/8	1 5/8	1 5/32	- 3/32
Assoc. Northern Blocks	1⅜	7/8	25/32	¾	+ 3/32
Cosmopolitan	8/3	3/6	4/9	4/6	- 3d.
Golden Horseshoe (£5)	6⅜	4¾	7 3/16	6⅜	- 3/16
Great Boulder (2/-)	28/-	20/3	23/3	23/9	+ 6d.
Do. Perseverance	13/-	7/3	6/3	6/-	- 3d.
Great Fingall (10/-)	6 9/16	2½	1 1/2	2⅛	+ ⅛
Hainault	1 1/2	1¼	1⅛	1⅛	—
Ivanhoe (£5)	7¾	6 1/16	7½	7 1/2	+ 3/16
Kalgurli	12½	8⅜	11⅜	11½xd.	+ ¼
Lake View Consols	1 7/16	¾	1 1/16	1 3/32	+ 1/32
L. & W. A. Exploration	21 10½	8/6	14/6	13/-	-1/6
Oroya Brownhill	3¼	2	1 31/32	1 31/32	—
Sons of Gwalia	2 1/16	1 1/16	1⅛	1⅛	—
South Kalgurli	1 1/2	1/4	5/8	21/32	+ 1/32
Australian Commonwealth Trust	3 5/8	1½	1 3/4	1 7/8	- ⅛
Consolidated Deep Leads (4/-)	½	⅜	4/6	4/-	- 6d.
Loddon Valley Goldfields	2 1/16	1/16	1 1/16	⅜	- 1/16

The spurt in Great Fingalls has not been accounted for by the receipt of any specially favourable news from the mine, though there was talk on the market at the time of Colonial buying of the shares. It will certainly require a very good mining development to justify the rise in the market value of the shares. While Fingalls have been on the up grade, Horseshoes have moved in the opposite direction, the directors' report not confirming the highly favourable rumours recently circulated as to the company's position. As a matter of fact the report makes a less satisfactory showing than that for 1905. More ore was treated during the last twelve months, but the revenue balance amounted to £248,816, as against £305,604 for the preceding twelve months, and the dividends paid in respect of the past year totalled 16s. per share, as against 18s. per share for the previous year. Working costs have been reduced by nearly 2s. 6d. per ton, and the manager anticipates that he will be able to effect a similar reduction in the current year. It is worthy of note that the management of this mine has at last discontinued sending ore to the smelters for treatment, the whole of the output now being obtained from ore treated on the mine. If this policy had been adopted earlier the company's profits would have been still larger, and, so far as I am aware, there is no valid reason why this company should not have dealt with all its ore on the spot, as the Ivanhoe and Great Boulder, whose mines adjoin the Horseshoe, have done. The consequence has been that the Horseshoe's working expenses have been in excess of those of the Ivanhoe and of the Great Boulder, and now that the practice has been abandoned, there should not be any difficulty in effecting the further reduction the manager foreshadows. As regards the value of Horseshoes, the yield on the basis of the past year's dividends works out at 11.6 per cent. per annum on the market price of the shares. The first interim dividend on account of the current year, however, is 6s. per share, against 5s. per share a year ago, and in the event of the larger rate being maintained the shares will yield 13 per cent. But even with this prospect, Horseshoes are not so attractive as Ivanhoes, the yield on the latter being larger, while as regards ore reserves the mine is in quite as good a position as the Horseshoe, the tonnage opened up in each case representing fully four years' supply. The report of the Ivanhoe for the past year shows that a smaller profit was earned than in 1905, but the rate of dividend is maintained at 24 per cent., and the company is adding £10,000 to reserve. Working costs were reduced during 1906, and in the first quarter of the current year the amount has been lowered still further. With improvement also in the percentage of extraction, it is expected to steadily maintain profits, and on the basis of the distributions in respect of the past year, the yield on the shares at the current price works out at 15.6 per cent. per annum. The Great Boulder Perseverance reports a profit of £105,789 for the past year, as against £142,152 for 1905, and the dividends paid on account of the last twelve months have amounted to 1s. per share, compared with double that sum in respect of the previous year. Perhaps the most satisfactory feature disclosed by the annual report is the economy that has been effected in connection with the treatment of the ore. Not only have working costs been reduced by over 3s. per ton, but the percentage of extraction has been improved. Moreover, the manager is confident that working costs will be still further reduced, and an even better rate of extraction obtained. The ore reserves position of this mine I commented upon some weeks ago, and expressed the opinion that the shares were over rather than under valued at the price then ruling. Since then the quotation has declined, but even at the present level there does not seem much attraction in a purchase of the shares, as the profit in sight represented by the ore reserves is only equivalent to about 50 per cent. of the current market price.

Great Northern Central Hospital, Holloway, N.—£7,000 owing to Bankers. £10,000 needed annually from voluntary sources.—Lewis H. Glenton-Kerr, Secretary.

Copper Shares Generally Quieter, but Great Cobars an Active Feature—"Props." in Favour Among Broken Hills on Dividend Anticipations—West Africans Revive—Champion Reef's Reduced Distribution.

Speculative interest has not been fully maintained at the recent rate in the Copper group during the past week. The leading shares, however, have experienced some large movements in their quotations. They have fluctuated mainly in sympathy with the quotation for the metal, which, after showing a tendency to improve, broke away sharply. As regards the shares, a feature has been the activity in Great Cobars, which were bid up about a point one day, only to lose the bulk of the advance in the following session. The spurt was attributed to Colonial and Continental buying, and in the market on this side the talk as to the prospects of an early dividend was revived, but the optimism was quickly damped, a cable coming to hand from the property announcing a labour strike, as a result of which, it was stated, production had been suspended, and only pumping was being carried on at the mines. This trouble, however, has been overcome, according to the latest message from the property. Other Australian copper shares have been affected by liquidation in connection with the Settlement, but Mount Morgans have been a cheerful exception, having been in persistent demand.

Apart from the weakness of Zinc Corporations, which is mainly attributed to liquidation from the North, the Broken Hill has continued cheerful in tone. Chief speculative attention recently has been paid to Props, which have been bought in expectation of the next dividend being at an increased rate. Such anticipations have been indulged in on previous occasions, and have not been fulfilled, but this time there is good reason to think that the hopes are well founded. At the last meeting of the Broken Hill Proprietary, it may be remembered, the Chairman said the financial position was stronger than it had ever been, and the board was of opinion that, with the accumulation of £250,000, sufficient strength had been reached to provide a reserve for every reasonable contingency. He added, "in future profits will be available for dividends." In view of this official declaration, it is thought the directors cannot very well keep the next dividend down to half-a-crown per share. Market men are consequently looking for at least 3s. per share. In the event of the rate being increased to and maintained at this amount, the yield on the shares at the current price will be about 13 per cent.

West Africans have come in for more attention than for some weeks past, and prices have not been slow to reflect the better feeling in the market. The March returns of some of the mines have given satisfaction, and recent developments in one or two properties have been of a character calculated to encourage speculators, but whether the public will feel disposed to take an active part in this section of the mining market remains to be seen. Already prices have had a fair advance, as the following table shows:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Apl. 6, 1907.	Apl. 13, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Abosso	1⅛	1 7/16	1⅛	1 3/16	+ 1/16
Ashanti Goldfields (4/-)	17/9	7/9	16/6	16/6	—
Gold Coast Amalgamated	3 3/16	1½	1 15/16	1⅞	+ 1/16
Taquah and Abosso	2 3/16	1 1/16	2 1/16	2⅛	+ 1/16
Wassau	1⅜	½	⅝	11/16	+ 1/16
Egyptian Mines and Exploration	10/6	1/3	1/6	1/6	—
Nile Valley	13/-	3/-	2/-	2/-	—
Camp Bird	33/6	22/-	24/9	24/6	-3d.
Esperanza	5 5/16	2⅛	2 1/16	2 1/16	—
Le Roi (£5)	2	1	1⅜	1 1/16	+ 1/16
British Broken Hill	58/-	30/7½	38/1½	40/-	+1/10½
Broken Hill Proprietary (8/-)	5⅞	3 7/16	4 1/16	4 1/8	+ 3/16
Zinc Corporation	2⅛	1 1/16	26,3	18/6	- 7/9
Anaconda Copper ($25)	15⅝	11⅛	13¼	13	- ¼
Arizona (Pref. Ord. 5/-)	3 1/16	3	68/-	66/6	- 1/6
Great Cobar (£5)	9 1/16	4⅜	9 7/16	10½	+ 1/16
Mount Lyell	52/6	33/-	47/-	47/-	—
Mount Morgan	4¾	3⅛	4	4 1/16xd	+4/9
Rio Tinto (£5)	91¼	63⅜	89½	86½	- 2½
Dolcoath Tin	29/6	10/-	23/-	22/6	- 6d.
Pusing Lama Tin	3 9/16	¾	2¼	2 1/16	- ⅛
Balaghat	36/-	22/6	17/6	16/-xd	- 3d.
Champion Reef (2/6)	30/-	9/6	12/3	10/3	- 2/-
Mysore (10/-)	7⅛	5½	6 1/16	5 5/16	- ⅛
Siberian Mines	2⅛	1 1/16	1½	1⅛	—
Siberian Proprietary	16⅞	8⅛	3¾	4¼	+ ½
Waihi	9 1/16	6 7/16	8⅛	9 1/16	+ 1/16

Among other mining descriptions, a sharp relapse in Champion Reefs was one of the features of the past week. This was due to disappointment at the much-reduced dividend declared by the directors, the first in respect of the current financial year. The amount is 4d. per share, as against 9d. per share this time last year. My readers, however, have been prepared for the reduction, which is due to the comparatively poor results that attended development work at this mine for some time past. One or two of the other Indian shares are also easier, though there has been some demand for Balaghats, whose report I commented upon last week.

Insurance Notes—Cheap Life Assurance—Policies for Short Terms—Convertible Policies—Without Profit Assurance—Discounted Bonus System.

The great need of many people is to obtain the largest possible amount of life assurance at a given annual cost. Perhaps, therefore, I cannot do better than explain, as simply as may be, various methods of providing, say, £1,000 at death in return for a very small annual premium. Since matters of this kind are much more clearly understood by the help of concrete illustrations than they are by mere general descriptions, and since the cost of life assurance depends upon the age of the person insured at the time of taking the policy, I will show precisely what can be done by a man who is aged thirty-five at the time he takes the policy.

The very cheapest policy of all is what is called Term insurance. A man can pay a premium annually, or if he prefers half-yearly or quarterly, throughout a short term of years, and if he dies within the term £1,000 is paid to his estate; if he survives the term the transaction is at an end; nothing is paid to his estate and no part of the premiums which he has paid are returned to him. Under a policy of this kind my typical man can pay £9 5s., and if he dies within one year his heirs will receive £1,000. If he wants the policy to run for five years instead of for only one year, he can pay £11 5s. a year, and if he dies within the five years his family receives £1,000. If at the end of the five years he is still living, he has paid £56 5s. altogether, no part of which is returned to him.

Term policies of this kind are seldom of much use except perhaps in connection with loans and other special circumstances; but they serve to illustrate in quite effective fashion a very important feature in life assurance, which most people generally overlook. I mean the protection against the financial loss which might be involved by premature death. If 1,000 people insure their lives for £1,000, which is to be paid if they die within one year, some out of the 1,000 are sure to die, and the payments made by those who survive will provide the funds for paying the claims on the policies of those who die. Put in this simple fashion, most people can realise not merely that such insurance protection necessarily involves cost to an insurance company, but that the chance of their family receiving £1,000 has both a mathematical and a commercial value, in exactly the same way as the protection afforded by a fire insurance policy is worth what it costs, even if we do not have a fire, and as a ticket in a fair lottery is worth the price paid for it, even if we do not win a prize.

Except in very special circumstances Term insurance of the kind which I have just described is not at all a good kind of policy for people to take. By the time the term agreed upon has expired the policy-holder may be in bad health, or may be no better off than he was before, and further insurance may be impossible. There is no known method of providing life assurance for nothing, and the absolutely impecunious man must perforce do without it; but if a man has a small income to-day and reasonable expectations of a larger income a few years hence, he can make very good use of Term insurance in a slightly modified form. He can, for instance, at age thirty-five, pay £14 10s. a year, and if he dies at any time within fifteen years—provided he has kept up the payment of the premiums—his family will receive £1,000. This "Convertible Term" policy, as it is called, gives him, however, a very valuable option. At any time within the fifteen years, and without any further medical examination, he can change this Convertible Term policy for some more satisfactory, if more expensive, kind of assurance. He can, for instance, take a policy, subject to the payment of annual premiums so long as he lives, for any amount not exceeding £1,000 (or whatever the amount of his Term policy may be), upon which he has to pay annual premiums at an increased rate so long as he lives. If he prefers to take a policy for £1,000, under which the sum assured is paid when he reaches the age of, say, sixty-five, or at death if it occurs before, he has the right to do this, but it involves the payment of a still higher premium. Whenever he changes his Term policy for one of a more permanent and valuable kind he has to pay the premium on the new policy appropriate to the age at which he makes the change. The Convertible Term policy simply guarantees the amount of the sum insured in the event of his death within the specified term, and confers upon him the right to change to some other kind of insurance without any further medical examination. This latter point is one which may prove to be of inestimable value. These Convertible Term policies are very suitabe to a man who has others dependent upon him and whose income is very limited for the present, although there are reasonable prospects of his being able to afford to pay more a little later on; they give the option of changing to other forms of insurance at any time within the agreed term of years. The sooner the man can make the change, the better it is for him.

If the future holds but little prospect of an increased income, the best plan is to take a policy, subject to the payment of premiums at an uniform rate throughout the whole of life. In these circumstances two different kinds of policies claim consideration. In the first place there is an ordinary Whole Life policy, that does not share in the profits of the insurance company; at age thirty-five a man would have to pay £22 a year so long as he lived in order to make sure that his family would receive £1,000 whenever he died. This contract is certain and unalterable; neither the premium nor the sum assured will vary in the least. The insurance companies have been very materially modifying their charges for policies of this sort, and several of the best companies now issue these policies at very low rates of premium, and when taken from a good company at a low annual premium there is much about them that is very attractive.

There is, however, another plan, by means of which policies which share in the profits of the company can be obtained at an even lower annual cost. Instead of paying £22 a year to assure £1,000, a man can pay £21 a year with the possibility that if he lives for some years the sum assured under the policy may be slightly more than £1,000. This result is arrived at by a process of "discounting bonuses." The system is this: The actuary of a life office says that he expects the bonuses in the future to be at a certain rate, and instead of letting the policy-holder pay a higher premium than is necessary, and giving part of it back when the actual profits of the office have been ascertained, the actuary anticipates these future bonuses, and allows them from the outset in the form of a reduction of the premium which the policy-holder has to pay. The life office discounts the anticipated future bonuses in the same way that a banker discounts a bill. If the actual bonuses declared by the company are larger than the actuary has calculated for, then the difference is paid to the policy-holder; if, on the other hand, the declared bonuses are smaller than the bonuses discounted, the difference has to be paid by the policy-holder; it is because of this latter provision that the annual premium on these discounted bonus policies can be at a slightly lower rate than the premiums for policies which do not participate in the profits.

In choosing a life assurance company from which to take a discounted bonus policy, it is important to select an office which shows good prospects of maintaining in the future the rate of bonus which has been calculated upon: it is disappointing to a policy-holder who thinks he is assured for £1,000 to find after a few years that the amount for which he is assured is perhaps only £950 or £900. He is not really any worse off than any other policy-holder who buys a policy which shares in the profits of the company, and who finds that the bonuses are less than he expected they would be, but in the ignorant, irrational way in which most people think about life assurance, it proves exceptionally exasperating when a policy which is nominally for £1,000 really assures only a smaller sum. The reduction is in accordance with the contract, and the assured has no real cause of complaint, but in this case, as in all others connected with assurance matters, the choice of an appropriate policy in a good company betters expectation rather than disappoints anticipation.

There are sundry other methods of assuring at low premiums for, as an example, the first five years with a definite increase in the premium after that time; but on the whole these and other kindred plans are somewhat less satisfactory for policy-holders in search of cheap life assurance than the various other policies which I have described.

The London Scottish Bucket-Shop.

Here is a concrete case in substantiation of what I have repeatedly said concerning the "stock unions" (a euphemism for "blind pools") of the London Scottish Stock and Share Exchange, 20, Bucklersbury, E.C. Deluded by the usual mendacious prospectus, a lady—the sex provides these bucket-shop keepers with their easiest prey—put £20 into one of the so-called "unions." In due course she was informed that the operation (in Eries) had been closed at a total loss; but unfortunately though once bit she was not twice shy, a speciously-worded explanation inducing her to try her luck again to the extent of £10. It is almost superfluous to say that the result was the same. According to the "letter of advice" and "closing note" from A. Murray, manager of the London Scottish Exchange, the £10 vanished in a deal in Southern Pacifics on a one per cent. margin, the transaction being—so it was alleged—opened on March 28 and closed the same day "owing to the margin having became exhausted." Murray exhorted the lady to join yet another "stock union," about to be formed "with a view of reimbursing our subscribers," but her faith, like the margin, had become exhausted. The story scarcely needs any comment. Obviously, Murray is either a fool or a rogue—a fool if he actually opened these operations in American Rails, at that time in a very jumpy condition, on a one per cent. margin; a rogue if he simply pocketed his dupes' money and then informed them that it had been lost. I leave it to my readers to solve this conundrum.

Since writing the above, I have heard from another lady who has been victimised by the same bucket-shop. Her letter is interesting as an example of the innocence of the people on whom such sharks as Murray prey. "I received," she writes, "a prospectus inviting me to buy shares in a stock union. There was nothing to suggest that the shares could not be sold—in fact, that the money would not be returned. A 10 per cent. commission on profits only was to be their 'only remuneration.'" Gulled by the prospectus into believing that she was making a sound investment, the lady forwarded £10 for one share, and next day she received a wire to the effect that the market was very favourable, and that she could have more shares, whereupon she forwarded another £10. Her £20 was, of course, lost. After this story, it is absurd to beat about the bush in speaking of A. Murray.

To Readers East of Suez.

I am afraid that my readers at home must be rather weary of warnings against the touting dealers in foreign premium or lottery bonds. I can assure them that I am myself quite tired of writing such warnings. Nevertheless, I feel bound to pen another for the special benefit of many correspondents in India and elsewhere in the East. India, which has long been a happy hunting ground of the notorious Paris firm of Cunliffe, Russell and Co., is now being raided by the rival crew of kindred tricksters who call themselves the International Securities Syndicate, 23, Westminster Palace-gardens, S.W. The latter are now following up their extensive advertising campaign in the newspapers here by a similar outburst in the Anglo-Indian press, and every mail from the East brings me a budget of letters of inquiry concerning this "form of investment." It may therefore be useful to state once more that the advertisements in question—which, by the way, appear in some of the papers in the guise of editorial matter—are a delusion and a snare. The bonds offered are not, properly speaking, an investment at all but a gamble, and a poor one at that. Of course, fortune may smile on any purchaser of a bond—or it may not. The other day I heard from a man who was gulled into paying between £90 and £100 for a "combination" of bonds actually worth about £56. He was dazzled by the prospect that he might draw a big prize. He wishes now that he had ascertained what the odds were against his doing so. It is nearly eight years since he bought his bonds, but though one was drawn for repayment at its par value (less than he paid for it) he has never gained any premium—a fact which he desired me to commend to the notice of people who count upon getting, as the advertisements promise, "all the excitement of speculation without any of the attendant risks." What they are much more likely to experience is the hope deferred that maketh the heart sick. But apart from any question as to the speculative merits of the bonds, dealings with touting firms like the International Securities Syndicate ought to be avoided for the simple reason that they charge prices enormously in excess of the current market value of the bonds. The syndicate has a high-sounding title, but who are the parties behind it? What is their record? I should be much surprised if an answer to these questions did not afford an additional reason for giving this concern a wide berth.

Notes on New Issues.

Only two of the prospectuses of the week call for notice. Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, and Co. have invited applications for an issue of £327,642 sterling four per cent. debentures of the City of Winnipeg, at par. According to a statement by the comptroller, the city has outstanding debentures, including this issue, totalling $9,699,525, but of this $5,906,998 is represented by remunerative undertakings, leaving a net debt of $3,792,527. The debentures are redeemable by sinking funds. Winnipeg is a progressive Canadian city, and this seems to be a fair municipal investment. The Vogelsfontein Diamond Mine, Limited, has been formed with a capital of £300,000 to acquire a mining area in the immediate neighbourhood of the well-known Jagersfontein mine in the Orange River Colony. The present issue consists of 80,000 shares of £1 each. Certain mining operations have already been carried out on the property, and a favourable report is made by Mr. W. G. Churchward.

"Vigilant's" Letter Box.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

Government Securities.

Lady Godiva.—It is possible that the stock is not dealt in sufficiently often to warrant an official quotation. I do not see, however, what bearing this matter has upon the quality of the investment. Elmbank, Glasgow.—You could get fully another ¼ per cent. on what is virtually the same security by exchanging from Consols to Irish Land stock. The price of the latter constitutes an anomaly that cannot last indefinitely. With regard to your last question I must refer you to my rule, No. 8.

Railways.

R. L. B.—Yes; see last week's comments. Welshman.—Pending the issue of the first report I am unable to form a proper idea of the company's position. The fall in the price of the debentures has been due, I understand, to rate-cutting between the company and a rival concern. Colwyn Bay.—Of those you name Atchison Preferred, Reading Preferred, and Norfolk Preferred would be fair selections, but I do not care for the others. Beacon.—Nos. 2 and 3 would be fair, but I do not see much attraction in the others. See this week's article on Railway fixed interest stocks. Simon.—1. See answers under "Insurance." 2. The stock should go better in sympathy with the market as a whole, and I would therefore not be in any hurry to get out.

Mines.

Whitevale.—1. The Westralians named should have some recovery later on, but you might do better by transferring the money to something more active at present. 2. Hold. Tugela.—I should be inclined to realise and put the proceeds into shares with an active market. Glenthorne.—I have no record of the company you mention having been absorbed by any other undertaking. J. J. C.—A fair speculation for a moderate profit in view of the expected early commencement of production. S. C.—There is no reason at present to anticipate a substantial advance in the price of the shares, but you may as well keep them for the dividends. There is, of course, a chance of a favourable development occurring in the mine, in which event the price would be likely to improve. Burlington.—The first two are very speculative, and for a holding I should much prefer the others. H. C.—I would hold in hope of some recovery when business becomes more active.

Reader, Amsterdam.—1. The shares should have some recovery in time, but I would not put too much money into one concern. 2. They are 10s. shares. 3 and 4. If you mean to buy them you may as well do so at once.

Mixed.

Ubique.—All the railway issues are sound investments, and I would not part with any of them. No. 2 should also be held. Patsey.—1. I see very little attraction in these. 2. A hopeful speculative holding. 3. Yes, for the reasons mentioned at length in recent articles. Cestria.—You have been well advised, and I doubt if I could improve on your list. If the sum be large spread it over the six. Brigade Major.—1. In the absence of an official report I do not care to express an opinion upon these bonds. Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are sound enough to keep. 5. I have a poor opinion of these. Barroom.—1. The stock is officially quoted at 2—3, but it is, of course, quite a nominal market. I see no prospect of a recovery from this rubbish price. 2 and 3. Yes. Vaga.—1. I have anticipated the requirements of yourself and others by an article on railway fixed interest securities, which appears in this issue. You ought to have no difficulty in making suitable selections from the lists given. 2. I do not anticipate any substantial improvement. E. B., Leeds.—The cost price would be £1,315 1s. 3d. Rachim.—1. Of their class they are fairly attractive. 2. If the country continues to prosper they might be worth holding. Lodor.—They could, I think, be improved upon. Bankerd.—Ask your broker to find a market. If he cannot, then you may consider the stock hopeless. S.—It is understood that the concern continues prosperous. If you are doubtful you had better cut the loss at once. W. G. B.—The fall is due to the unsatisfactory financial position of the undertaking. Sell the shares on any temporary recovery. Banto.—Port of Para bonds were called 3 to 1 discount on that date. As to the others they are not quoted officially, and you had better inquire of your broker. Illustrious.—1. Fair of its class. 2. Are talked still higher. 3 and 4. Are fairly attractive investments. Triumph.—The Bank shares ought to be held for an improvement in South African conditions. 2. They make a fair speculative purchase. 3. Vickers and Armstrongs are the best of the three. Cognitio.—In the case of Bank shares the possibilities of an advance in values are remote. The liability in respect of uncalled capital is very small. The shares named are not unattractive as pure investments. As to money lending, you had better consult a solicitor.

Insurance.

J. W. O.—The Equity and Law is an excellent society, in which you can have the utmost confidence. It is not so good as it was, but still it is very good. Simon.—1. The company you inquire about is a respectable Colonial office, but I should prefer an English company. E. C. B., H. W.—There is no particular objection to the arbitration clause in policies issued by good companies, which offer better security than individual underwriters. Bugle Major.—1. This question was answered last week under "Mining." 2. Insurance against every form of sickness is very expensive. Try the Profits and Income Insurance Company, 9, Fleet Street. Felix.—1. The transaction is unlikely, but you might apply to the Eagle Insurance Company, Pall Mall. Fides.—1. I should not apply for these shares. 2. The head office of the Essex and Suffolk is at Colchester; the London office is at 58, New Broad Street. Satara.—The best course for you largely depends upon your age and that of your wife; also upon whether you are likely to remain long in India. The best terms can be obtained from a company which does not do business in India. If you will reply to me on these points I will let you know the exact terms.

Miscellaneous.

E. G., C. D. R., Bombay Duck, Sergeant-Major, Cautious, Bonds, and others.—The only advice I give with regard to these premium or lottery bonds is that you should leave them alone. Read my remarks in another column on such touting firms as Cunliffe, Russell, and Co., and the International Securities Syndicate. X. O. O. X.—1. They are members of the London Stock Exchange; but see Rule 8. 2. "The Stock Exchange," published in Methuen's "Books on Business" series, price 2s. 6d., would be useful. 3 and 4. I cannot recommend any newspaper for financial advice—except Truth. A. M.—It is not worth joining. G. R., Newcastle.—The Laurie and Vincent bucket-shop has already been noticed in Truth. Margin, Northants.—Not a "safe investment" at all, but a system of speculation by which you would be almost certain to lose. Put your savings in the Post Office Savings' Bank. B. C. F.—I know of nothing against the concern, but see Rule 8. It is, however, better to deal through a member of the Stock Exchange. G. M.—So far as I know, it is trustworthy for the purpose mentioned, though the business must be more risky than that of an ordinary bank. Calamus.—Do not join any such "blind pools." Clifton.—No. Mervino.—Probably the firm might be relied upon for the purpose; the complaints against them are based on other grounds. Still, it would perhaps be more prudent to collect through some other channel. Kismet.—I have had no occasion to criticise the concern mentioned; but you would be unwise to deal on that system, especially as you are so far away. Sir J. S.—Thanks for the documents; you will see my remarks on the case. Duns.—It would be easy to ascertain—no doubt your bank would tell you—whether you were overcharged. I have had no occasion to criticise the firm. Ignoramus.—1. Eastwood and Co. are bucket-shop keepers, with whom you should have no dealings; see the article headed "Heads we Win, Tails you Lose," in Truth, March 6. 2. I have not had occasion to criticise this concern; but I cannot make any recommendation. J. W. G.—Thanks for your letter. Gael.—It is impossible to express a definite opinion without seeing the exact form of the contract notes, etc. Judging from what you say, however, I am afraid the Gaming Act could be successfully pleaded, and in any case I doubt whether it would be worth while to sue such a firm. If you will send me the papers I will repeat the warning I have previously published against this swindling bucket-shop. E. D., and other correspondents.—Wm. Tyler and Co. have frequently been pilloried in Truth. G. C. A.—Nearly all the shares are worthless, unsaleable rubbish. If you will forward the booklet in question I will put the public on their guard against this scheme. Puck.—A rise is very probable. L. C. B.—Read my remarks in another column. Week-Ender, A. T., and others.—Your inquiries shall be answered next week. Felix.—1. See answers under "Insurance." 2. Try a stock broker. 3. As an investment they could be improved upon. 4. Yes, provided the question and also merits are thoroughly studied. Fides.—1. and 2. See answers under "Insurance." 3. Fair speculations for ultimate improvement. 4. I do not see much attraction in joining the reconstruction.

Industrials Still Improving—Textiles in Demand—Iron and Steel Shares—Drapery Companies—Motor Shares Going Higher—Exaggerated Fears Regarding Breweries.

For Industrials generally all the auguries continue to be favourable. The Board of Trade returns for March again show a large growth in the foreign trade of the country, and, as before, the outstanding features are the increases on the one hand in the exports of manufactured articles, and on the other, in the imports of raw industrial materials. There is no sign whatever of any abatement of the extraordinary prosperity of the principal industries, and with the setting in of a period of comparatively cheap money, securities in this department are attracting more attention than they have done for a long time past. Already a welcome amount of investment buying has been noted, and an improvement from week to week is now confidently anticipated. Considerable activity has been exhibited in cotton and textile shares, and advances have been recorded in Coats' preferred and ordinary, and in English Sewing Cottons, Fine Cotton Spinners, Calico Printers, and Bradford Dyers. The cotton trade, in particular, is flourishing exceedingly, and, in the opinion of the best authorities, is likely to do so for a long time to come. The shares of the great iron, steel, and armament companies have also been in request, and in view of the very satisfactory reports that several of them have lately issued it will be surprising if the movement upward does not speedily become more pronounced. Armstrong Whitworths and Vickers, Son and Maxims seem to be tempting at present prices, and so likewise are South Durhams and Cargo Fleets. Contrary to the conclusion that had been drawn from the discouraging reports of other companies engaged in the Argentine meat trade, the directors of James Nelson and Sons announced a dividend on the ordinary shares of 10 per cent., 1906 being the third year for which a distribution at this rate has been made. Though the 10 per cent. dividend has been maintained, however, the report shows that the net profit fell from £85,300 to £45,200. In catering descriptions no changes have occurred beyond a fractional advance in Lyons' and Aerated Breads. Having regard to the satisfactory position and prospects of the company, the former, at the current price of 5 15-16, offer a promising commercial investment. The recent tragic death of the founder of the business imparted exceptional interest to the report of the directors of William Whiteley, Limited. The late Mr. Whiteley has been succeeded in the chairmanship of the company by his elder son, Mr. W. Whiteley, who has been actively engaged in the business for the past twenty years. Though the company's trade was maintained, the profit for the twelve months to February 28 showed a diminution owing to the expense of additional advantages that have been given to customers, including reduced terms of free carriage. The dividend on the ordinary shares is 7 per cent., as compared with 9 per cent. for the previous year. At the meeting of John Barker and Co. the chairman was able to congratulate the shareholders upon an increase in the net profits for the year of £12,000, and also upon the fact that the reserve fund has now reached an amount sufficient, with the sum of £11,000 carried forward to next account, to liquidate the whole of the goodwill.

On the ordinary shares of this company the dividend is again 12½ per cent.

With few exceptions motor and cycle shares are manifesting a tendency to higher prices, and the leading companies are known to be doing so well that the movement is likely to continue. Argylls, Darracqs, Daimlers, and Humbers have all scored slight advances, and even now the shares of all these prosperous companies are well worth attention. Among tramways and omnibus companies the most conspicuous feature has been the further recovery of London General Omnibus ordinary stock, which has gained 7 or 8 points since the end of March. British Electric Traction issues have also had a slight recovery, after being in the dumps for some time past. Brewery securities have not so far benefited from the general recognition of the fact—to which I drew attention some weeks ago—that it is now practically certain that no Licensing Bill will be passed during the present Session of Parliament. On this subject the Economist has administered a strong rebuke to the committee of brewery debenture-holders whose circular was published a fortnight ago. The suggestion in the circular that the fall in the price of these debentures is due solely to the fear of new legislation is proved to be entirely wrong. By means of a table comparing the prices now and ten years ago of good brewery debenture stock and good railway debenture stock respectively my contemporary shows that the brewery debentures have not fallen at all disproportionately to the railway debentures. Indeed, when one bears in mind how unsatisfactory the finance of brewery companies has often been, and how wildly they have speculated in the purchase of "tied houses," these securities have suffered, if anything, less than might have been expected in the general downward movement. The opposition of debenture-holders and other investors in breweries to legislation which will adversely affect their interests is perfectly reasonable and legitimate; but such exaggerated statements as to the existing situation, and such extravagant predictions of impending ruin as those that have been put forward, can only have a bad effect. One thing that the circular has already helped to do is to send down the prices of a number of debentures. "Stinking fish" is not a good cry. VIGILANT.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

A SMUGGLING OPERATION.

THE reader is asked to transport himself backwards more than forty years, to a period shortly preceding the unification of the German Empire under the iron hand of Bismarck. At that time, James Jellicoe, representative of an eminent firm of Irish whisky distillers, was engaged in trying to open up new markets for his employers' produce among the petty kingdoms and grand duchies of Central Europe.

James Jellicoe was an old and experienced traveller, both in the commercial and the ordinary sense of the term. He could speak five languages. He was familiar with the markets of at least ten capitals, and there was hardly a mile of railway in Western and Central Europe over which he had not, at one time or another, passed. With the officials on all these systems he was persona grata by reason of his open-handedness. For James Jellicoe liked his comforts in travelling, and was prepared to pay for them. Moreover, he was well aware what a timely bribe of a few marks or francs would often do in the way of inducing the railway officials to turn a blind eye on certain little irregularities by which his business undertakings largely profited. The firm, knowing their man, allowed him practically whatever expenses he asked for, confident that he would lay the money out in such a manner as to pay them over and over again. Nor was their confidence misplaced. James Jellicoe, free as he was with his tips, seldom disbursed a franc out of which his employers did not ultimately profit to the tune of some hundreds per cent.

Yet to look at Jellicoe, you would have thought him the last man in the world to be guided by perpetual considerations of the main chance. The expression of his chubby, pink little face was open to the verge of simplicity. His smile was blandness itself. Altogether, you would have said, a good-natured, guileless little individual, overflowing with the milk of human kindness, and gifted, if anything, with rather less than the average amount of brains. Such was the opinion entertained of him by all who had not tried to get the better of him in business. And such was the opinion entertained of him by Herr Hermann Slickwitz.

Herr Slickwitz, I must tell you, was the presiding genius of the Custom-house at X, an important frontier station of the Grand Duchy of Y, which is here separated from the Kingdom of Z by what in larger countries would be called a brook, but is there dignified by the name of a river.

The Grand Duchy, however, though small in area, was very big indeed in self-importance. Every one, from the Grand Duke downwards, had an excellent opinion of himself, and no one more so than Herr Hermann Slickwitz, of the Grand Ducal Customs. He was a great, swaggering, slashing, knock-you-down fellow, with a pair of enormous black moustaches that added not a little to the truculence of his demeanour. But his manner, though at all times ferocious, was never quite so terrific as when he detected some would-be smuggler of contraband in flagrante delicto. Women caught by him in the possession of undeclared lace or eau-de-cologne were said not infrequently to have fainted away beneath the ferocity of his scowl. Even the hardiest men had quailed before him. How many—if any—dishonest persons had ever succeeded in getting contraband past him I cannot say. But, taking his own version, the number of such people amounted to precisely zero. Indeed, it was his constant boast that there was nowhere in the world such an efficient Customs service as the Customs service of the Grand Duchy, and in that Customs service there was no such lynx-eyed official as himself. And if the man was born who could elude his vigilance—well, Herr Slickwitz would like to see him; that was all.

James Jellicoe, who often crossed the frontier into the Grand Duchy by that route, and sometimes passed a night or two in X, was well acquainted with this boastful personage in his official capacity, and had also met him in private life. He had no particular reason to love Herr Slickwitz, whose contempt for foreigners in general and for Englishmen in particular led him to treat this mild-mannered little Anglo-Saxon with even more than his wonted insolence. But Jellicoe, whether from discretion, good temper, or pure indifference, never took any notice of the other's rudeness, or betrayed the smallest sign of resentment. Indeed, whatever the truculent officer of Customs might do or say, our little friend smiled on him always with the same bland, affable expression that was seldom absent from his cherub-like features.

One evening, when Jellicoe was spending a few days in X, Herr Slickwitz, with two or three cronies, came swaggering into the café where the former was discussing his petit souper, and seated himself at the same table. He nodded, patronisingly, to Jellicoe, and called, in thunderous tones, for lager beer, which an obsequious waiter made haste to bring.

Herr Slickwitz swilled himself liberally with the amber fluid, then he lighted a big cigar, and, glaring contemptuously at Jellicoe, proceeded to exercise his facetious wit at the little man's expense.

"So, my pigmy," he began, "and how's bog-water?"

"Pretty fair, thank you," piped Jellicoe, in his squeaky, high-pitched voice, smiling seraphically at Slickwitz, as if quite unconscious of the intentional rudeness of the question.

"Sorry to hear it," rejoined Slickwitz. "Such rot-gut stuff ought to be banned in every civilised country; though it may be a fitting drink enough for the savages of Ireland."

"There are savages elsewhere than in Ireland," squeaked little Jellicoe, still beaming with placid and seraphic affability on the insolent German.

Herr Hermann Slickwitz breathed hard and glared searchingly at Jellicoe, as though scenting a personal allusion. But the other's face was so serenely placid and innocent that it simply disarmed suspicion of anything more than a vague and harmless general statement, and, as such, Herr Slickwitz let it pass, without annihilating him.

"If I had my way," he announced, "I would put a prohibitive tariff on the muck, to keep it out of the Grand Duchy."

"In that case, we should have to find some means to circumvent you," piped little Jellicoe, with the same innocently cherubic smile.

"Circumvent me! Ha!" (And Herr Slickwitz laughed the laugh of ferocious and unutterable scorn.) "I would like to see the Mephistophelised foreigner who could circumvent me. Yes, I would give a great deal to see that Mephistophelised foreigner."

"Nevertheless, I think it could be done," smiled little Jellicoe.

"So! You think that, do you?" scoffed Herr Slickwitz, divided between rage and amusement at the ridiculous audacity of the Briton's opinion.

Little Jellicoe, still beaming with affability, nodded a placid affirmative.

"Gott in Himmel! Perhaps you think you could do it yourself, you grinning little sucking-pig?" thundered Slickwitz.

"I think I might, if I tried," piped little Jellicoe, serenely affable as ever.

"Well, you had better try, that is all," retorted Slickwitz, with his most portentous scowl.

"I do not propose to try while the tariffs are what they are," said little Jellicoe, blandly. "It is not worth while."

"Bah! That is you English all over," ejaculated the great Slickwitz, mockingly. "You talk—Donner und Blitzen—you talk the very Omnipotent. But when you are taken at your word, then you climb down and become little mice, at once."

"I have my duty to my employers to consider," replied the other, deprecatingly. "I cannot honestly run unnecessary risks at their expense."

"Oh, you English have always a plausible excuse ready when you are called upon to make good your boastfulness," answered Slickwitz, tauntingly.

"I had no intention of boasting," piped little Jellicoe, with humility. "I merely indicated what I thought I could do, at a pinch—if there were anything adequate to be gained by it."

"Ha! Did I not say so? You are as full of excuses as a common lodging-house is of fleas. But I will remove this excuse. I will offer you something to make it worth your while to try. How now? Let it be a wager. I will bet you—ach! I will bet you two thousand marks you do not succeed in smuggling one gallon—no, not one solitary gallon—of your filthy bog-water through my Custom-house."

Little Jellicoe made no haste whatever to jump at this sporting offer. Indeed, he looked rather taken aback and, as it were, sorry for the rashness of speech that had trapped him into such a corner.

"I—I—do not think the—the bet, as it stands, is quite fair," he stammered, hesitatingly.

"Not fair? How, not fair?" demanded the hectoring Slickwitz.

"Well, you see, mein Herr, as you would be especially on the look out for me, I should be a marked man, and so should be at a much greater disadvantage than the ordinary smuggler."

"Ha! You are afraid. Did I not say so? I say again it is you English all over," sneered the exultant and overbearing officer of Customs.

"No, mein Herr, I am not afraid," protested little Jellicoe, mildly; "and to prove that you are wrong in thinking so, I will agree to take your bet—on conditions."

"Oh! you English. You are the very eels to wriggle. What conditions?" demanded Slickwitz, scornfully.

"That you give me a week in which to make the attempt, and during that period allow me to cross the frontier three times," replied little Jellicoe.

"Ach! You may cross it six times in the week, if you will," retorted Slickwitz, with swaggering confidence.

"Three times will be enough, thank you," answered little Jellicoe, with a quiet meekness that was in strong contrast to the other's boastful cocksureness. "Of course, I do not say whether I shall make the attempt on the first, second, or third journey. That will be for you to find out, mein Herr."

"Yes! Yes! You may leave that to me. I will make it my business to see to that," answered Slickwitz, with the triumphant laugh of one who already saw his opponent's two thousand marks in his own breeches pocket. "But, stay," he added; "it is understood that you attempt the smuggling in your own person—that you do not depute any confederate to convey the contraband. That's clear, is it not?"

"Perfectly," piped little Jellicoe, in his squeaky treble. "I am myself to convey this gallon of whisky across your frontier. I agree to that. And perhaps these gentlemen" (turning to Slickwitz's two cronies, who had played the part of silent audience to the foregoing conversation) "will kindly act as umpires, in case any dispute as to the terms of the wager should arise."

"Ach! That I will," said crony number one.

"And I also," added crony number two.

"I, at any rate, shall make no attempt to wriggle out of my contract," remarked Herr Slickwitz, with a sneering and triumphant laugh.

He felt perfectly confident, now, of landing the bet. Little Jellicoe had undertaken, in the presence of witnesses, to convey the gallon of whisky past the Customs himself, and a gallon of whisky was not exactly the sort of thing he could hide in a secret pocket or in the lining of his hat. He could not even adopt the evasive expedient of carrying that quantity of the potent liquor in his stomach. For no stomach would hold so much or survive the effects of the undiluted spirit, if it could. Herr Slickwitz, therefore, saw himself in the satisfactory position of having his money on a dead certainty. His only anxiety was lest Jellicoe should elude him by not putting in an appearance at all. But in that case, also, he should have won his bet—even if he did not get paid—and would have demonstrated, in the most complete manner, his own unrivalled reputation for lynx-eyed vigilance, and the shabby dishonesty of the perfidious Briton. Come what might, in brief, he was bound to have the crow. Soothed by this comforting assurance, he called for another quart of lager beer, and swigged and smoked, in high elation, for the rest of the evening. Little Jellicoe, however, looked less happy. He smiled, indeed. He always did that. But his smile seemed transparently half-hearted and perfunctory, as though he realised that Slickwitz had got him in an inextricably tight corner.

Next morning he crossed the frontier of the Grand Duchy into the kingdom of Y. But his absence was of short duration. That evening's mail express carried him back as one of its occupants to the frontier town of X. It was a cold, cheerless winter's night; a cutting east wind blew shrewdly, and snow fell at frequent intervals; but the indefatigable Slickwitz and his myrmidons, though cursing and grumbling at the weather, were at their posts, and they boarded the express, as it pulled up, like an army of locusts.

The word had been given to keep a sharp look-out for little Jellicoe (who was well known by sight to all the Custom-house officials), and there, sure enough, he was found in a first-class compartment of the train, bundled up in rug and overcoat, with a small portmanteau on the seat at his side.

Slickwitz, who had given particular instructions on this point, was at once informed of his presence in the train, and he came swaggering along, tugging the while complacently at his huge moustache, to attend to little Jellicoe personally.

"Anything to declare, my friend?" he inquired, with a sardonic grin.

"You remember the terms of our wager, mein Herr, That is for you to discover," chirped little Jellicoe.

"Yes; and I will soon do that. Kindly hand me that portmanteau and the key of the same," answered Herr Hermann Slickwitz.

Little Jellicoe complied with this request, and the contents of the portmanteau were bundled out pell-mell on to the seat—all sorts of clothing and various articles of toilet. But no sign of any whisky—not so much as a half-pint flask.

"Now, if you please, divest yourself of your overcoat and rug," commanded Slickwitz.

Little Jellicoe did as he was bidden. Herr Slickwitz carefully felt in all the pockets of the big overcoat, fingered it, and slapped it all over. No bottles of whisky there. Then he shook the rug. Nothing concealed in that. Then he went on his knees and looked carefully under both seats. Nothing stowed away there.

"You have no luggage in the van?" he demanded.

"None," said little Jellicoe.

"Or in any other compartment of the train?"

"By no means, mein Herr. That would not be in accordance with the terms of our wager," piped the little man.

"Ach! Then I may take it you are not attempting to win your two thousand marks this journey?" remarked the swaggering Slickwitz.

"I have still two other opportunities open to me, by the terms of our bet," smiled little Jellicoe.

"And you will have to make the most of them," replied Slickwitz, as he left the compartment, banging the door behind him.

Little Jellicoe resumed his rug and overcoat, and sat smiling seraphically. Presently, when the Custom-house officials had completed their examination of the passengers' luggage, the train began to steam slowly out of the station.

It was then that little Jellicoe thrust his head through the carriage window and called up Herr Slickwitz, who was standing near at hand upon the platform.

"A word with you, mein Herr," he piped. "Jump in here, I beg, and give me the pleasure of your company to the next stop. No, no, you must not refuse, else I shall assuredly have to ask you to pay me two thousand marks."

The train was already moving quite fast. Herr Slickwitz had no time to hesitate or wait for more detailed explanation. So, burning with the suspicious and angry curiosity that the Englishman's words had suddenly aroused in him, he sprang into the compartment.

"What do you mean? Be good enough to explain yourself," he demanded.

Little Jellicoe beamed upon the scowling Slickwitz. His smile was even more than usually cherubic.

"By the terms of our wager," he chirped, "I have won your two thousand marks, mein Herr. But I am not going to demand payment. It has merely been my intention to prove to you that you are not quite so clever as you thought. I have the gallon of whisky here with me, and I will now show you where it is."

"Where?" ejaculated the crestfallen, though still truculent, Slickwitz.

Little Jellicoe drew aside his travelling rug and pointed a fat forefinger downwards towards the foot-warmer on which his small toes rested.

"It is in there, mein Herr," he said, with an angelic smile.

ART NOTES.

I HAVE read a good deal about Art in my time, but I do not remember to have read any comment upon the astounding carelessness which seems to have been the common heritage of all the Old Masters. I do not mean in their painting, but in the really remarkable way they went about losing their pictures as soon as they were painted. The ordinary man makes a fuss if he loses an umbrella or a briar-pipe, but the Old Masters were continually punctuating Europe with lost canvases, some of them of enormous size, without being in the least worried or annoyed about it. There is another even more striking fact about these lost pictures. Most of them have been lost for hundreds of years, yet of all the many thousands of them I doubt if fifty were found until a few years back, when their values began to rise, when the American picture-buying millionaire loomed up before an astonished world, that is to say. But now that Mr. Pierpont Morgan has made him a familiar figure, those lost pictures are beginning to come out of their hiding-places as though they were sunflowers and he the sun. I have never been privileged to look through Mr. Morgan's correspondence, but I very much doubt if any day goes by without his being offered at least two absolutely genuine lost Old Masters. It is the most striking instance of the power of personal magnetism on record.

There are some other strange things about these lost Old Masters. One is the curious hiding-places they have chosen for their long and lonely vigils until Mr. Morgan should be born. They have nearly always loved the humble dwellings of the poor; they have decorated the little back parlours behind shops, or the attic bed-rooms of Grimsby fishermen. I should not be surprised to hear of one, or half-a-dozen, being found at the bottom of a coal-mine. There they wait in patient darkness until the reporter of a local paper, or perhaps some unattached tourist, of æsthetic tastes, shall penetrate into the back-parlour or the attic-bedroom. When he does come, so astounding is their artistic merit, that he recognises them at once as being masterpieces of Rubens, or Vandyke, or Gainsborough, or Raphael—usually of Raphael, though. I do not know why Raphael should be so ubiquitous, unless it be that he was unusually careless, given to dropping in upon the humble and industrious poor about tea-time and forgetting a 38-ft. square canvas when he went away. But so it is. They are always masterpieces, and the reporter always recognises them as such and buys them from the honest fisherman for half-a-crown down and a pint of four-half, and carries them away to a local expert. It is another curious fact that there always is a local expert, even in the smallest and remotest village, and he always specialises in lost old Masters. As soon as his visitor comes in he at once recognises the value of the find, and prices its exact value, to the last penny, which, as an expert, he is easily able to do. No sooner are the brown paper and string cleared away than he says: "It is a lost Raphael. It is worth £38,397 14s. 7d. Wire full particulars to the Daily Mail." And thus the new Old Master comes into the busy world once more, and has paragraphs written round it, and is shown at a West-End gallery and offered to Mr. Pierpont Morgan. Then somebody sits down and writes an angry circular letter to the papers, pointing out the irreparable loss that such a masterpiece would be to England were it allowed to pass into the hands of the foreigner and proposing a national subscription to retain it for Trafalgar-square. Sometimes the £38,000 odd is raised—more often it is not—and if the owner is wise he accepts the £47 15s. actually realised instead. If he is not wise he has the Old Master put up to auction, and it fetches about £5, less the auctioneer's commission and expenses—and even then he realises a substantial profit on his original investment.

But these subsequent adventures of the recovered treasure-trove are, after all, commercially interesting, rather than artistically. To the artist the most surprising part of the affair is the astounding industry thus credited to Raphael, Rubens, and the rest. I have made a calculation—only very roughly, it is true—and I find that, including all the recently recovered Old Masterpieces, each of the seven most prominent painters of the past must have turned out, on an average, three great works per diem from the age of four until his death. Raphael did even more, but he died young—and no wonder. These figures, of course, only include the works which have been re-discovered up to date. Very likely there are still thousands and thousands more lurking in lonely farmhouses and public-houses, waiting until the reporter shall come along on his bicycle to restore them to the world. If we make an allowance for them we are forced to a very melancholy conclusion indeed—that the Old Masters did not produce real, hand-painted pictures at all, but that they had some sort of machine, all knowledge of which has since been lost—which turned out a continuous roll of Masterpieces, something on the lines of a Hoe printing press. I have sometimes had my suspicions of this when I looked at some of the newly recovered Old Masterpieces which have been held up for our admiration in recent years; I am at last beginning to feel sure of it. Indeed, the only possible alternative is—but far be it from me to harbour suspicions so unflattering to modern human nature as that.

Polished Floors.—"Ronuk," Ltd., are prepared to estimate for the polishing and maintenance of all kinds of floors in Mansions, Hospitals, and Institutions. Write for pamphlet.—Manufacturers of "Ronuk" Polish, "Ronuk," Ltd., Portslade, near Brighton.

The whole fascinating subject has been brought very near to my heart in the last few days, because the Evening News has discovered a Lost Raphael, which shows how widespread is the interest in Art matters taken in this country to-day. It is called the "Madonna del Divino Amore," and it is being shown at the Doré Galleries at the moment. I think it is, that is to say, but so many are the re-discovered Raphaels just now that it is quite likely I have got confused, and that the Doré Gallery Masterpiece is not the Evening News Masterpiece, but another equally beautiful, genuine, and valuable. There it is, anyway.

MUSIC.

THE NEW YORK OPERA SEASON.

WITH our own opera season just about to begin, it is interesting to scan the record of that just ended in New York, where it would seem that the cut-throat competition of rival houses has begotten the usual result of financial unsuccess. Neither at the Metropolitan nor the Manhattan, it is said, have expenses been cleared. Mr. Conried, it is stated, took over £200,000 in receipts at the former, but still finds himself with a balance to the bad, a result ascribed to the closing down of the "Salomé" performance and the cost of making good the scenery lost in the earthquake at San Francisco. Mr. Hammerstein's rival show at the Manhattan, of course, had nothing to do with the matter. As regard the works given, it is still somewhat of a shock to read the bald statement that "the season came to a close with a performance of 'Parsifal'"; and Frau Cosima, who is only human after all, will doubtless find a chastened joy in the fact that Mr. Conried's shameless appropriation of that sacred work, which an imperfect copyright law has availed not to protect from his sacrilegious hands, has been attended only with the discomfiture which is sometimes, even in an imperfect world, the fate of the unrighteous. "Parsifal" and "Salomé"! The contrast is piquant. But it would seem that neither served to avert a debit balance.

We are told, indeed, that German opera has for the present received a set-back in New York, and that after long years the Italians have once again carried all before them, with Puccini at their head. "La Bohème," "La Tosca," and "Madama Butterfly" were all given many times. The last-named, in particular, would appear to have found no less favour in New York than in London (despite the unflattering rôle assigned to its American hero, Lieutenant Blummy Pinkerton), for in addition to the crowded houses which attended its representations at the Metropolitan, the work has also been given in English by Mr. Henry Savage's company with an equal amount of success. On both sides of the Atlantic, therefore, Puccini's star is clearly in the ascendant at present. Verdi's "Aïda" was another drawing card, while Giordano's "Fédora," which we are to hear again during the coming weeks at Covent Garden, also appears to have found favour. When it comes to talking of "the discomfiture of German opera," however, this seems to be putting the case rather high, seeing that the "Ring," "Lohengrin," "Tannhäuser," and the rest secured, after all, twenty-four performances, which is not perhaps such a very discreditable showing.

More serious seems to have been the disfavour displayed towards the works begotten on the other side of the Rhine. That staunch musical chauvinist, M. Vincent d'Indy, will read with regret that if German opera has temporarily declined in popularity, that of his compatriots has fared even worse. Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust," whose shortcomings have just been exercising the pens of Berlin critics, did not commend itself any more, it appears, to its American audiences, though presented with all the adventitious aid of a gorgeous mise-en-scène. Délibes' "Lakmé" (which we may be shortly hearing at the hands of the Berlin Comic Opera Company at the Adelphi) proved a world too small for the heroic spaces of the Covent Garden of New York; while Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine" "fell hopelessly flat." Mr. Conried should have followed the course once adopted by a manager in Russia. The opera season was going badly, so he mounted "L'Africaine," and chartered a troop of Dahomeyans, who happened to be visiting the town, to take part in the attack on the ship and join the ballet. Result—a crowded house, great enthusiasm, and splendid receipts. How long is it since Meyerbeer's work has been heard in London?

With respect to the singers, Caruso's triumph at the Metropolitan seems to have been equalled, if not surpassed, by that of Melba at the Manhattan. As regards the latter, indeed, it is necessary to go back to the spacious days of Patti, if one may credit all one reads, to parallel the scenes attendant on her farewell. "The audience," we are told, "cheered for twenty minutes. The great singer appeared before the curtain and said, 'If you will remain a few minutes longer I will sing a few little songs for you.' This she did, accompanying herself in some of Tosti's songs on an old stage pianoforte which was rolled on the stage. Many of the audience, and the singer herself, were moved to tears." The pathos of it! Mr. Hammerstein, more matter of fact, has announced that his receipts for the fourteen performances at which Melba sang amounted to £26,000. No wonder he gave the diva a complimentary dinner. At Covent Garden we take matters more phlegmatically. Yet there we hear both Melba and Caruso—and in one and the same performance, too. What would the New Yorkers say to that?

Among a good many interesting concerts given lately that conducted by Nikisch at the Queen's Hall on Saturday was as enjoyable, perhaps, as any. Brahms' fourth symphony had not previously been heard under Nikisch in London, and it was interesting to note what he made of it. Perhaps on the whole he was hardly so successful as in other works more congenial, it may be suspected, to his temperament. There was too much of a disposition to make unnecessary points. As an interpreter of Brahms he is certainly not so impressive as Steinbach. Earlier in the week Nikisch figured as accompanist at the recital of Miss Elena Gerhardt, the wonderfully gifted singer who was first heard in London last autumn. Few vocalists before the public to-day produce a more powerful impression. She is essentially an interpreter of the words as well as of the music of her songs; her voice itself, though strong and pure, is somewhat lacking in individual charm. A vocal concert of a different kind was that given on Friday by M. Maurel, with the aid of some of his pupils, and others. Truth to tell, there was too much of the pupil element and too little of M. Maurel for the taste of a good many. Some selections from Verdi's "Otello," in which M. Maurel resumed his old rôle of Iago, were the least tiresome portion of the entertainment. Among several notable fixtures this week Nikisch was down to conduct the London Symphony Orchestra again at the concert in honour of the Colonial Premiers on Tuesday, and this (Wednesday) evening Mme. Clara Butt sings at the Philharmonic concert.

Apropos of Nikisch's conducting of the Choral Symphony for the first time in London, it is interesting to recall that this famous conductor was, in his younger days, one of those who played among the first violins in the wonderful orchestra which came together on Wagner's birthday to play the same great work under the master's own direction at the laying of the foundation-stone of the Bayreuth Theatre. In this orchestra, the quality of which has probably never been surpassed, there were no fewer than ten of the foremost violinists of the day, Wilhelmj, then in the plenitude of his powers, being the leader. Nikisch had previously come in closer contact still with Wagner as spokesman of a deputation of students who waited on the composer to present him with a silver goblet entwined with laurel. The fellow students who accompanied Nikisch, it is interesting to recall, were named Felix Mottl and Emil Paur. "We found Wagner in the best of spirits," Herr Nikisch has recalled, "and in a most jolly frame of mind. Although I was very nervous, I managed to get through my task without any serious difficulty, and I was greatly pleased when Wagner told me how much he had enjoyed my speech and the whole function. That moment, when I came face to face with the mighty master, will never leave my memory."

Claridge's Hotel, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square.—Over 300 rooms; nearly 100 bathrooms. Royal suite, private entrance. Situation ensures perfect quiet.

In connection with the Poor Students Fund which it is proposed to found in memory of the late August Manns the question has been raised as to the manner in which it is contemplated administering this; and the inquiry is not unreasonable. It is a good deal more easy to propose a scheme of this kind than to work it out in detail in a satisfactory manner, but obviously in the case of a project in which support is invited from musicians at large there must be nothing of narrowness or exclusiveness or the favouring of individual institutions.

Not a little good-humoured surprise has been expressed at the abandonment of the proposed revival of the "Mikado," and the cause assigned for it. There is nothing, however, like trying to enter into the feelings of others in cases of this sort, and to this end it is not difficult to imagine how certain of our ultra "patriotic" journals and their readers would take it if a comic opera were produced in a foreign country in which the King of England were, in however good-humoured a spirit, made the subject of ridicule. It might be that seeing that the opera in question has now been played so long as almost to have attained the dignity of a classic, to say nothing of the fact that it has been performed quite recently in the suburbs, the recent objection raised suggests a rather belated sense of injury on the part of those concerned; but this, after all, does not alter the fact that we should probably, rightly or wrongly, adopt precisely the same attitude if the situation were reversed.

The Kaiser has been attracting attention once again in his familiar rôle of musical critic, and his adoring hearers are lost in wonderment once more at the wisdom of his utterances. Among other things, it appears, he expressed the profound opinion that in Berlioz was to be found the beginning of all the modern tricks of instrumentation. Further, he said he was quite able to understand that Berlioz's contemporaries found his harsh and rugged music somewhat strange. "But," added the Kaiser, "that he should have suffered from actual poverty and want, that, I consider an especial injustice of fate." Prodigious! Here be epoch-making thoughts indeed. Can one wonder that his Majesty's hearer (M. Günsbourg, of the Monte Carlo Company) was smitten with amazement? Harken to the awestruck words in which he confided his feelings to a prostrated interviewer:—

"The conversation seemed to me to be of only one minute's duration, but it lasted at least twenty. And you want to know what impressed me most? It was the erudition of this man. It is a mystery to me that I cannot understand how a man whose field of work is so wide as that of the Emperor can yet find time to busy himself with literature and music with the technique of instrumentation and interpretation of rôles. And he must have busied himself with all this, or"—here M. Günsbourg threw up his hands with a gesture of unutterable amazement.

Then the interviewer indiscreetly asked: "What did the Emperor say?" with the sequel above noted. A pity! For if the Kaiser's remarks had only been left to the imagination we should all have been impressed.

Continuing his breezy "Musical Impressions" in the Musical Standard, Mr. Joseph Holbrooke waxes rhapsodic in his latest instalment over the claims of Fritz Delius, the Yorkshire composer with a foreign name, who has been referred to for years past now as one from whom great things may be expected. According to Mr. Holbrooke he has, indeed, long since accomplished them. He speaks with special enthusiasm of some of his songs. "Full of the most lovely and original atmosphere; I know of no English music like it. Emotional to a degree, with all the poet's rapture; such harmonic mastery is not exceeded by Richard Strauss, and they contain all his loveliness!" Many will remember a concert of his own compositions given by Mr. Delius at St. James's Hall a good many years ago, when the originality and interest of his music were generally recognised. Since then, however, surprisingly little has been heard of him. For years he buried himself in a tiny little village on the skirts of the forest of Fontainebleau and seemingly made no effort to obtain a hearing for his works. More recently, however, one of his operas, "A Village Romeo and Juliet," was brought out with some success at the Komische Opera in Berlin. Another of his works, a setting for solo, chorus, and orchestra of Walt Whitman's "Sea Drift," has been included in the programme of the Sheffield festival of 1908. But many would be glad to have an opportunity of hearing more of his music before then.

There is an interesting article on "The Best Way to Study the Piano" in the April Strand by Paderewski, whose advice is much more practical than might have been expected. Among other things he insists on the supreme necessity of methodical study:—

The fault most general, not only with girl students, but with professionals, is that of sitting at the piano as a pastime instead of working seriously. There is no instrument that offers such inducement to idle away time as a piano. Instead of taking the study of it as a very earnest one, many fall into the way of looking upon it as amusement, idling away hours in passing agreeably from one thing to another. These mis-spent hours end in a smattering of knowledge and a certain amount of faulty fluency of no solid use when it comes to practical application.

Sound advice is offered also on another point:—

Only too many think that they display a vast deal of feeling if they make frequent ritardandi and long pauses on single notes. I would call this over-sentimentalism simply the abuse of rhythm. The only way to avoid this is to keep as strictly as possible to the rhythm and the tempo. Nothing is to be gained by such affectations but distortion of the composer's ideas. Under this same head comes the exaggeration of the rubato, so deplorably frequent in the plays of Chopin. This springs from the same mistaken notion that it adds feeling and character. The only remedy of the fault is to stick closely to both rhythm and tempo.

Students—and others—please note.

A new opera recently produced at Magdeburg has, I notice, been described by its composer as a "Bühnensymphonie"—or symphony for the stage—because each of its four acts corresponds in a sense with the movements of a symphony. This recalls the fact that a similar analogy has sometimes been suggested in the case of the several sections of the "Ring," though the resemblance is not perhaps very obvious in this case. "Das Rheingold" certainly does not correspond in either scope or importance with the first movement of a symphony, there is nothing particularly suggestive of a slow movement in "Die Walküre," "Siegfried" only by a vigorous effort of imagination can be regarded as a scherzo, while "Götterdämmerung" resembles a symphonic finale only in the sense that it comes at the end of the work. The Magdeburg "Bühnensymphonie" may, perhaps, show a better justification for the new title, but such essays in nomenclature are perhaps more fanciful than helpful. A still more formidable term of the same order was that invented by Wagner when he described "Parsifal" as a "Bühnenweihfestspiel"—or "Sacred Stage Festival Play."

While we are told on all hands of the wonderful undiscovered geniuses suffering neglect at the hands of an undiscerning public, it is rather disconcerting that in connection with the prize offered by Mr. Mark Hambourg for the best pianoforte solo written by a British-

The Ritz Hotel, Piccadilly, W. — 8090 Gerrard. The Restaurant and Hotel overlook the Green Park. Magnificent suite of Ball and Banqueting Rooms. Under the same Direction as the Carlton Hotel.

Cannes.—Hotel des Anglais. First-class. Numerous Self-contained Suites, with Private Bath-Rooms, etc. Central Heating. Renowned Cuisine and Cellars. Large Park.

born subject, the judges, after carefully perusing the many works sent in, have "reluctantly come to the conclusion that there was no work of sufficient importance to warrant their awarding the first prize of £20." It was therefore decided to bestow second and third prizes only. Now the fact that this was the result in the case of a single competition need not be made too much of. It may be that only our less talented composers elected to compete for this particular prize, or even that the greatness of some of the works sent in, which future generations will hail with delight, was not perceived by the arbitrators; and of the two alternatives, the latter will, I fancy, most commend itself to those who competed. But whatever the explanation, the facts as they stand certainly furnish food for thought.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Mr. Everard Cotes' "Signs and Portents in the Far East" (1) gives the opportune impressions of an Indian journalist of China, Manchuria, Korea, and Japan, considered especially in their possible relations to the future of India. The two questions which will probably interest you most are, first, is China likely to become westernised, like Japan, to the peril of the West? and, secondly, are China and Japan likely, to the peril of the West, to form a lasting anti-European alliance? If China is becoming westernised, the process seems as slow as that by which the Kiang-Nan gun factory turns out Mauser rifles of the 1888 pattern—about three hundred a month. I fancy that if it were not for the infection of Japanese example and for the intense and intelligible anti-foreign feeling in China, the Celestial Empire would not rouse herself even to this effort. Nor is this effort as formidable, even, as it seems, since these Chinese guns are ammunitionless!

My polite curiosity about the ammunition could not be gratified upon the guard-boats any more than in the city, where several of the sentries consented to my examining their rifles, but could not show me a single cartridge. Ammunition is not considered necessary in central China for keeping up respect for the military arm.

And, if the military equipment of the Chinese is far from Japanese in its extent and efficiency, still farther from that model is the military material.

The Chinese is a man of peace. As a trader and manufacturer he is certain to become an increasingly serious competitor of the European. As a soldier he possesses many merits, including that of passive fatalism, which makes him a difficult adversary to dislodge from a position; but he lacks altogether the élan which makes his fellow-Mongolians, the Gurkha and the Japanese, formidable on the offensive.

In a word, and it is the word not only of Mr. Cotes, but of such an expert as Colonel Wingate—General Gaselee's intelligence officer at the relief of Peking in 1900—the present Chinese army is useless for the protection of the country from outside aggression, and is formidable only as an ever-present menace to the hated foreigner resident in China. In order to render this menace ineffective, Mr. Cotes suggests that China should be coerced into the prohibition of the importation of arms and ammunition. Do you wonder that anti-foreign feeling in China should be so universal and intense, when such an agreement was forced on the Peking Government by the treaty of 1901? As to the second question—whether China and Japan are likely to form a firm anti-European offensive and defensive alliance—Mr. Cotes's description of the mutual relations of these Yellow Powers reminds me of a proverb which, though I heard it in Ireland, is of eastern origin: "My neighbour's neighbour is my friend." There never was much love lost between China and Japan, while the failure of the Japanese to hand back Korea to China has intensified the Celestial's anti-Japanese fervour. As for the Koreans, their hatred of Japan is intense. The few Koreans Mr. Cotes talked to were violent, and even venomous, in their expressions of antipathy to their Japanese masters; while another Englishman found himself at dinner on the most charming terms with his highly educated Korean neighbour, until he happened incidentally to mention that he had lived long in Japan. The Korean, saying that it was inconceivable to him how any civilised human being could live long amongst such a people, turned his back upon his English friend and put him in Coventry for the rest of the evening. It must be admitted that both the Korean hatred of the high-handed Japanese, and the Chinese hatred of the high-handed foreigner, are amply justified. That there is no inter-racial hatred between the Chinese and the foreigner the frontispiece of Mr. Cotes's book, subscribed "The Black-hatted Statue in the Heart of Canton," suggests.

"Canton" (writes Mr. Cotes, in the closing sentence of his admirable book), "has the worst reputation of any city in the Far East for antipathy to the occidental, yet in the temple of the five hundred Genii in the heart of Canton, within easy reach of mob violence, may be seen to-day the life-size statue of an elderly European in gilt clothes and black hat, which the Chinese have cared for and preserved from generation to generation, because the original, Marco Polo, was a friend to their kind."

There is one more impression deeply left on the reader of Mr. Cotes' volume—that the Japanese are at least as formidable as rivals in commerce as they were as enemies in war. Indeed, "all's fair in war," seems to be their unscrupulous motto in their conduct of the war of trade. By the way, talking of their conduct of war, I do not remember seeing in contemporary accounts of their reckless heroism on the slopes of 203 Metre Hill, Port Arthur, anything so grim and gruesome as this that Mr. Cotes tells you about the demolition of some Japanese parapets. They had to be demolished because they were constructed not only of earth and stones but also of the bodies of the dead and wounded built into them in the frenzy of men sheltering themselves anyhow from overwhelming shell-fire! Mr. Cotes' book is the most interesting and suggestive I have yet read upon the fascinating Far-Eastern problem. Are you to read "Indiscreet Letters from Peking" (2) by the light of its closing sentence, and interpret it as a feverish nightmare? "Here," runs this closing sentence, "the MS. becomes more and more incoherent, and after a few pages suddenly comes to an end." You cannot help hoping that the account given in these letters of the maddening mismanagement and muddle of the Legations and of the rival generals during the siege and sack of Peking in 1900 is a sick man's dream. Yet more sickening is the description of the wholesale rape and murder committed by the soldiery of all nationalities during the sack of the city, and of the wholesale suicide of girls in their horror of a worse fate. However, I think you may take these letters with as many grains of salt as you must take their writer's account of his having single-handed discomfited four armed and gigantic eunuchs who had surprised him in the Emperor's harem. Perhaps "Q." in "Poison Island" (3) does not abandon himself with the whole-hearted boyishness of Stevenson in "Treasure Island" to the quest of the ropes of pearls and emeralds and cascades of precious stones of all kinds which flowed down and flooded the floor of the grotto in the cliff in such abundance that the foot stumbled over them as amongst shining pebbles upon the shore. But if "Q." lingers longer by the way than a boy would like, he beguiles the length of the way as only he could. For my own part, I willingly lingered in the company of the ever-delightful Plinny. "With thee conversing I forget all time"—to be appropriately poetic in speaking of the author of "The Voyage: With an Englishwoman's Reflections on her Favourite Element." In fact, I would gladly exchange all the treasures of Poison Island for a few more verses of that enchanting epic. In a word, there is enough of thrilling adventure in "Poison Island" to satisfy the boy, and enough of "Q." to delight the man. In Mrs. Blundell's "Stepping Westward" (4) you have a collection of short stories made up of the simplest elements, but put together with the grace which

(1) "Signs and Portents in the Far East." By Everard Cotes. With Twenty-five Illustrations. (London: Methuen & Co.)

(2) "Indiscreet Letters from Peking." Edited by B. L Putnam Weale. (London: Hurst and Blackett. 7s. 6d. net.)

(3) "Poison Island." By "Q." (A. T. Quiller-Couch). (London: Smith Elder and Co. 6s.)

(4) "Stepping Westward." By M. E. Francis. (London: Methuen and Co. 6s.)

(5) "The Toll Bar." By J. E. Buckrose. (London: Hutchinson and Co. 6s.)

gives them the charm of wild flowers arranged in exquisite bouquets. I like the wild flowers best, for though such a story as "Lady Lucy," which has to do with actors masquerading in the parts they played upon the stage, is skilfully constructed, it has not the charm of such rustic love idylls as "Tranter Sally," "Ann-Car'line," or even the "April Fools," who turned the laugh against the mockers. In a word, "Stepping Westward" is worthy of the author of "Dorset Dear." Very different in style, subject, and treatment is Mr. J. E. Buckrose's "The Toll Bar" (5), whose hero is in love with a girl whom he supposes to be the daughter of his father's murderer. Perhaps the reason for this murderer's adoption of the son of his victim is inadequate, but for the rest the story is at once probable and exciting, while its characters are cleverly drawn.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours, very sincerely, DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

The new memoir of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu by "George Paston," will be issued by Messrs. Methuen this week. By permission of the Earl of Harrowby a number of hitherto unpublished letters are printed from the Wortley Montagu MSS. at Sandon Hall. The book has twenty-four portraits and other illustrations.

Miss C. W. Mackintosh's "Coillard of the Zambesi" (Fisher Unwin, 15s. net) is an account of the lives and work and travels of François Coillard and his wife, Christina Coillard, of the Paris Missionary Society. M. Coillard's labours in South and Central Africa from 1858 to 1904 covered the period of the most rapid development of those regions. The first twenty years were spent in Basutoland, the last twenty in Barotseland, north of the Victoria Falls—a vast territory, first explored by Livingstone, in which M. Coillard and his wife, a Scotch lady, were the first Europeans to settle. The intervening years were chiefly spent in travel and exploration among the Mashona and Matabele tribes. Although the book is largely a record of mission work, it is also interesting for the side lights which it casts upon the native question in South Africa and upon the way in which first Basutoland and afterwards Barotseland came under the British Protectorate.

Messrs. Chatto and Windus are bringing out a new edition of Mr. Richard Davey's book, "The Sultan and His Subjects." Mr. Davey has revised and partly rewritten it.

Mr. Zangwill's new volume of stories, "Ghetto Comedies," with four coloured illustrations, will be issued by Mr. Heinemann this week. Miss Emma Brooke, whose first story, "A Superfluous Woman," was such a distinguished success, is publishing through Mr. Heinemann a new novel, entitled "Sir Rlyot of the Woods," which will be ready about the end of the month.

Mr. Walter P. Wright's book on "Beautiful Gardens: How to Make and Maintain Them" (Cassell, price 6s.), may be commended to all who can enjoy what a famous writer described as the purest of human pleasures. The author, who is the horticultural superintendent under the Kent County Council, not only shows how gardens can be made beautiful, but how this result can be accomplished in the most economical manner. The value of the book is greatly enhanced by a series of plans, diagrams, and illustrations.

Major-General Baden Powell's "Sketches in Mafeking and East Africa" (Smith, Elder and Co., price 21s.) is a delightfully unconventional book of travel. He describes it as a record of "scraps and impressions gathered by the way in an ordinary unimportant little trip of three months round South Africa, Rhodesia, and East Africa." The text is lively and entertaining, and it is studded with illustrations from the author's drawings which reveal him as a clever artist whose rare gift of humour is particularly evident in his pictures of native life. Besides the numerous illustrations in the text there are nine coloured plates.

There is a bold attack on Trusts and their organisers in a novel entitled "The Giant's Strength," which Messrs. Harper and Brothers are about to publish. The book is by Mr. Basil King, author of "Let Not Man Put Asunder."

"Sweden's Rights" is the title of a book which will be published shortly by Mr. Fisher Unwin. The author, a Swede, discusses the historic relations of Norway and Sweden since 1814; gives statistics of the population and trade of the two countries; brings forward reasons for deploring the dissolution of the union; and predicts a possible reunion under certain conditions.

Messrs. Hutchinson are bringing out a translation from the German of Dr. Max Lenz's biography of Napoleon which, it is said, demolishes several accepted legends and throws much new light on what may be termed the Emperor's "First Phase." Yet another contribution to Napoleonic literature is being published by Mr. Lane—"The Fall of Napoleon," by Mr. Oscar Browning. Beginning with Napoleon's return to Paris after the Russian disaster, Mr. Browning gives a complete narrative of the campaigns of 1813, 1814, and 1815, and concludes with a minute account of Napoleon's surrender at Aix.

M. Escoffier, the famous chef of the Carlton Hotel, is the author of "A Guide to Modern Cooking," announced by Mr. Heinemann. The preparation of food is dealt with from a scientific standpoint, and M. Escoffier gives a large number of recipes, many of them new ones of his own.

A volume of short stories by Miss Marie Corelli is to be brought out by Messrs. Constable. "Delicia," the first of the stories in the collection, will give the title to the book.

Mr. Walter Long contributes an introduction to a book by Mr. E. B. Iwan-Müller entitled, "Ireland, To-day and To-morrow," which Messrs. Chapman and Hall are about to publish. The author is a leader writer on the Daily Telegraph, and, needless to say, he writes of Ireland from the Unionist point of view.

Messrs. Blackwood have just added "Romola" (price 3s. 6d.) to the new popular edition of George Eliot's works.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Do you remember the story of the boy who, being rebuked for talking about his corns at meals, came down to breakfast one morning limping very much, and remarked, as he sat down: "My K's is awful!" I have often thought of him during the past few weeks, for this, it appears, is a K. season. Even those whose feet have up till now behaved with perfect decorum, and given no cause of complaint to their proprietors, have had reason to remonstrate seriously this spring, and to take these troublesome ebullitions to the chiropodist. Wearers of tight boots have endured such miseries that bootmakers' shops are becoming quite accustomed to sudden rushing visits from clients of both sexes, who fling themselves on chairs, crying: "Take off my shoes most carefully and fit on a very easy pair." One wonders why the human foot should grow crops of corns with such displeasing unanimity this spring. Can you suggest any reason?

The sale of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Help Society at the Horticultural Hall on Friday was extremely well attended. Two sides of Vincent Square were lined with smart carriages and motors, so when we drove up in our hansom we knew just what to expect. Nor were we disappointed. Crowds of nice-looking, well-dressed women were busily buying and selling for our poor soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated from further service and unable to follow any other employment. The Help Society has its headquarters at 122, Brompton-road, where the workshops can be inspected at any time. Children would be enchanted with the toy soldiers and sailors made by these poor, disabled men of the two services. As you may imagine, the uniforms are correct to a button, and there are eighteen or nineteen different regiments represented, including the Camel Corps and the Egyptian Army. A naval landing party with a gun is interesting.

REDFERN.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—REDFERN, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

The men make an enormous variety of baskets, all of a useful kind, and in every size from a handy little key basket to those capable of holding luncheon for four with the necessary plates, dishes, etc. Here you may buy a travelling basket for a dog, a wicker cradle for a bottle of wine, baskets for work, for sending wedding cake, others padded and containing a tin hot-water can (a capital notion!), and wastepaper baskets of every kind. The men also make furniture, such as revolving book stands in oak or mahogany, sometimes tastefully inlaid, book shelves, carved mahogany candlesticks, with brass tops, some fitted for electric light, wired and all ready, chairs, dolls' house furniture (a deck chair for a travelling doll is a curiosity, price 8d.), hat-racks, folding card tables, and trays with basket edge, besides many other useful things.

The plan of the society is to give each new member eight week's tuition and to maintain him during that time, this costing £4, at the rate of 10s. a week. He afterwards receives his earnings weekly, the amount depending on his own industry. It is a good and kind idea, practically carried out. The King is patron and Princess Christian is president, much of the work being done at her Royal Highness's Homes at Brookwood, Surrey.

One of the features of the sale was a bower of flowers which occupied the middle of the room, with a young and handsome presiding goddess, who was assisted by a smart little midshipman. Some of the basket makers were at work in one corner of the Hall. There were, too, excellent concerts, arranged by Mr. Ernest W. Gilchrist, and the room was crowded each time with people who were delighted with the programme.

You have heard of the Atlantic Union? Yes, I remember telling you about a pleasant day we spent with members of it at Windsor as the guests of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones. The report of the Union for 1906 has just appeared, and proves that this Association for enabling Colonials and Americans visiting England to see us in our homes and become acquainted with us personally has caught on to a considerable degree. The various gatherings are all arranged with this idea, and, judging from the photographs in the report, they seem to have been very well attended. The subscription for membership is a guinea, with entrance fee of two guineas, but guests from America or the Colonies may be elected temporarily without fee on being introduced by a home or visiting member. They then become eligible for invitations to the gatherings. In the list of visitors during last year I notice many from Canada and a goodly number from Australia and New Zealand, in addition to the American guests. A few hail from South Africa. Several of these are corresponding members, some of whose letters are of the highest possible interest, and well calculated to improve the entente cordiale. As the Union becomes more widely known it will become an important factor in promoting friendly feeling between ourselves and many pleasant people from all over the world. It was founded by the late Sir Walter Besant. Lord Monkswell is Chairman, Mr. T. Driffield Hawkins Secretary, and the address is now 13A, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square.

I thought the best way to answer your question about the fashions was to go to Messrs. Humphreys and have a look at their gowns for myself, knowing that their great idea is to cater for gentlewomen, and to combine utter smartness with refinement and distinction, as well as very moderate prices. All these qualities are what you love in gowns—small blame to you. The presiding spirit is a man who is a true artist. To the masterpieces of painters he has gone for studies of colour, and to Nature herself for exquisite gradation of tint and those ineffable subtleties of softening greys and blues and dusky effects that only the true student notices. The result is that each gown, from the richest and most elaborate down to the dainty and inexpensive linen river frock, is a complete conception in itself, and absolutely novel as well as chic. There is no danger with this firm of seeing the counterpart of your gown on some one else, as sometimes happens when a Paris model is brought over here by the representatives of two different houses. The secret of this is that every dress is designed and made by the firm itself. The best wits, the most original yet delicate designs, and the highest skill in realising such conceptions, combine to produce enchanting results. I saw, among dozens of others, a dove-coloured crêpe de chine made in the apron-dress style and trimmed with Cluny lace and palest gold embroidery. The skirt, like all those shown me, was very full and softly falling, and had its share of the pretty trimming. A short Greek sleeve, like that of a chiton, fell over longer, full ones of snowy lisse embroidered with silver dots and made with bands of dove-tinted tinsel, held back by diamond buttons. You cannot imagine a more graceful gown.

Another lovely evening gown was a colour study after Boucher in tones of softly suffused yellow, some of it pale as the edge of a summer rain-cloud, some slightly more emphatic in tint. A wide band of painted muslin in flowers of softest pink and mauve contrasted yet harmonised with the soft yellow, and an artistic touch of the highest value was a band of green panne at the edge of the skirt, the tint that of the youngest newborn leaf in early spring.

Lovely, too, was a Princesse de Lamballe Empire gown in the softest white lisse, the lines crossing at the back just above the waist in a peculiarly graceful way. Delicate lace veiled some small blue satin bows that afforded a glimpse of colour.

Marquisette still holds a foremost place among materials, and a gown of it in cream colour was painted with dreamy blue and pale mauve flowers. The pale rose-pink lining gave admirable effect to these colours, and in your mind's eye add touches of Malines lace, pale gold embroidery, short sleeves, and drooping ornaments of pale green ribbon.

You will be glad to hear that there is a great demand for Macclesfield silks, not only in Paris, where British materials are appreciated more highly than they are at home, but also here in London as well. I saw a very sweet frock of this silk, striped blue and white, and pleated cleverly so that only the blue lines showed at the top of the skirt. The sleeves were Empire lace with the silk Greek sleeve falling over them. These are a modified and very graceful form of the kimono sleeve of which we have heard.

I wish I had more space to describe a gown of Amasis cloth relieved with pale blue silk, another in a tiny check in blue and white with a becoming plastron front and some wonderful embroidery on the shoulders; a smart brown Shantung with coat to match; a white and primula foulard check, and several smart costumes with three-quarter coats of the tailor-made genre but most decoratively treated.

A large house-agency firm announces that the demand for country cottages is so unprecedented that they have opened a special office and issued a register two months earlier than they have ever done before. This, I suppose, is partly owing to the furious burst of summer weather at Easter and for a week after; but there is no doubt that the country cottage idea grows more insistent every year, and especially in the early spring months, when we all long for a sight of trees and turf and growing things. We have been helping Lilla to choose paper and furniture for her sweet cottage by the river, a delicious five-gabled, two-storied thatched roof love of a thing, with large rooms and large windows. These latter are very difficult to find in old-fashioned houses, but then Lilla's is only pseudo-old-fashioned. She has built it herself from designs planned and elaborated by Fred and her during the winter. The architect treated these plans with considerable disrespect, but that is a way that architects have. Lilla has a useful stubborn side to her character, and she brought it into play in this instance with great success. To be sure, she has to pay a higher fire insurance premium because her roof is thatched, but she does not mind that very much, and as neither Fred nor anyone else is likely to sit on the roof to smoke, and as they are not even within sound of a railway engine, there does not seem to be any great reason for fearing fire.

Corset Krutoid.—The latest nouveauté Parisien in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Royal Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London.

Important to Ladies.—You can get the real genuine Horrockses' Longcloths and Flannelettes if you insist on seeing this stamp on the selvedge: 'Horrockses.' Obtainable from the principal Drapers. Over a century's reputation.

On the old part of her garden wall there is a japonica. It was in full bloom last week, but is now falling. From its soft and delicious tones of glowing pink Lilla evolved the idea of a japonica dining-room, and has carried it out. The walls are in the two shades of the flower, and the carpet is in a very slightly deeper tone. The Sheraton sideboard, bought at Oetzmann's, is a wonder at the price; but then, they have a sale on which is leading all lovers of real bargains to Hampstead-road. The reason of the unusual and most attractive cheapness of this sale is that the business has been converted into a joint stock company, and one of the arrangements is the selling off of £150,000 worth of new and attractive furniture at reductions varying from 10 per cent. to 50 per cent. Who that loves nice furniture could resist this? Certainly not Lilla—and most certainly not your cousin Madge. So behold us, in the immense premises in Hampstead-road, plunging heavily in our own quiet way. The artistic character of this furniture is one of its most prepossessing characteristics, either next after its low prices, or just before them, according to the idiosyncrasy of the customer.

With their fascinating little illustrated price list, "Bungalows and Cottage Homes," in her hand, Lilla went from furniture to carpets, then to china, plate, and glass departments, and after an hour's enjoyment of one of the most agreeable of occupations, behold her country cottage practically furnished. She had taken the measurements of rooms, recesses, windows, and fireplaces beforehand, being a most practical person, and it was amusing to see her applying a tape measure to the various wardrobes, washstands, and chests of drawers. Tell any one you know who is furnishing to send for an illustrated catalogue.

Jack is one of the most generous of men. He has just had notice of a big bonus on his life assurance in the Sun, and he has promised us presents all round. He prefers to realise, he says, receiving a smaller amount in ready money which he can enjoy, instead of the larger sum—£150, I think—which would not be paid until too late for him to deal with it, being "payable at the same time as the sum assured," as the insurance office politely and guardedly puts it. Jack's notion of enjoying himself is GIVING. There never was such a Greatheart, and we are fortunate to have such a cousin. He remembers little things that we have admired or expressed a wish for, and on birthdays or at Christmas there they are, after we have forgotten all about them. You may imagine that we have learned to be cautious in admiring anything in his hearing, lest he should immediately go and buy it for us.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—We would have given a great deal could we only have had Easter weather for Punchestown. But it was not to be; we were a week too late. The sun elected to take a rest after his strenuous holiday shining, and we had to get on as best we could without his beneficent presence. The occasion being a national one, we rose to it bravely and with a bold front defied the gloomy weather conditions, determined on wearing a festive spirit, whether or not it proved a case of scorning delights and living laborious days, at the race meeting on the open plains of Kildare. The situation had one mitigation too, and a really considerable one. We were relieved from all doubts from the beginning; no harassing vacillation about dress perturbed our minds. There was no shilly-shallying on the part of the weather, no question even of winter lingering in the lap of spring; the latter had just simply been put out of court, thrust ruthlessly aside by winter's hard iron hand. Also our chastened spirits, grateful for small mercies, found comfort in the fact that we had neither storm nor rain. "It might have been worse," we cheerfully said to each other from an envelopment of furs and warm wraps, "What else could be expected from early April?" And so we enjoyed ourselves making the best of what we had got. The grand stand and enclosure were crowded each day, especially on the first. On Tuesday Lord Aberdeen brought a large Viceregal party and suite, which, as usual, drove up the course to the stand attended by an escort of the members of the Kildare Hunt. Lady Aberdeen was, of course, unable to be present. Lady Clementine Waring, whose husband is one of the Viceregal household, had a party of her own at the Private Secretary's Lodge, in the Phœnix Park. Lord and Lady Mayo brought a large party from Palmerstown, near Naas; and Colonel C. Crichton brought a party from Mullaboden. Lord and Lady Grenfell and Lady MacDonnell also had parties. Lord and Lady Massereene brought a party from Dublin, where they had taken a house in Fitzwilliam Street, for the week. An excellent idea for Punchestown entertainers, as our capital is within easy reach—specially easy, or is it uneasy? motor reach—of the race course.

The stand and enclosure were well filled each day, but most crowded on Tuesday. The dressing was chiefly of the tailor-made style, and frequently in its most glorified variety, as one saw, when our sex in the shelter of the stand and luncheon tents had the opportunity of emerging from their wraps. Many velvet and soft silk dresses were worn. The bride, Lady Portarlington, wore blue cloth, with a picturesque hat and lovely chinchilla furs; Lady Constance Butler was in dark blue velvet; Lady Donoughmore's furs were conspicuous and seasonable looking; Lady Massereene, under the comfort of a long black coat, had a soft grey dress of summer suggestion. Her hat had vivid red feathers. Hats were universally the most striking part of the feminine toilets, and gave the brightest notes of colour to the scene. They were to be seen in an infinite variety of shapes, both small and large. Lady Inverclyde wore black chiffon cloth with a black hat and many feathers. Lady Arnott had beautiful sables with a black and white velvet costume; Lady Walker was also in black and white with a mole's skin coat; Lady Wicklow's peach tweed was made with a short coat and directoire collar, her hat was black; Lady Grenfell wore grey with chinchilla, and Lady

SERIES: Per 100 Per 10

No. 555 (Standard Grade) *4/9 6D.

ASTORIAS (Billiard Room Size) *6/6 9D.

MY DARLING 5/- 6D.

* Also packed in our patent vacuum air-tight tins of 50 for tropical climates.

Obtainable of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World.

Manufactured in LONDON by THE ARDATH TOBACCO CO., State Express Works, E.C.

STATE EXPRESS CIGARETTES

are the only Virginian Cigarettes which have ever appealed to all discriminating Smokers, and have the strong support and approval of the medical profession.

Annesley pale fawn colour, also with chinchilla; Lady Margaret Orr-Ewing was in dark blue with gardenias in her hat.

Hospitality was as usual very freely dispensed, and luncheons and teas were very popular and cheering under the chilly weather conditions. Although there were few who did not nobly "wear a face of joy" on Tuesday and Wednesday, one fancies, though it may hardly be whispered even, that the most joyful incident of the occasion was the return home on the last day. What is sweeter than the consciousness of having done a duty, which has not to be done again for another year?

On Thursday evening the ball of the Lord Chancellor and Lady Walker was a brilliant success in their spacious residence, Pembroke House, Mount Street. The Lord-Lieutenant, with a large Viceregal party, was present, and Lord and Lady Grenfell with their party. The elect of society assembled in Dublin for Punchestown week mustered in great strength. Many beautiful costumes were worn. Lady Walker wore a lovely dress, pale blue, trimmed with beautiful lace and blush roses, and many diamonds. Lady Massereene looked very handsome in a silvery dress, her crown of diamonds adding height to her tall slight figure. Lady Annesley's Empire-trained white satin dress, her malmaison carnations and jewels were magnificent. Other wearers of lovely dresses were Ladies Grenfell, Wicklow, Blanche Seymour, Arnott, Powerscourt, and MacDonnell. The Lord-Lieutenant opened the ball with Lady Walker and the Lord Chancellor with Lady Annesley. Lord Grenfell's partner in the quadrille was Lady Massereene, and Lady Grenfell's the Lord Chief Justice.

Space does not allow me to tell of the sorrowful joys of Leopardstown.—Yours ever, CLARE.

And now for recipes. You will find this a very nice dish. Fillets of sole à la Vatel:—

Make 6 oz. of raw whiting into quenelle by pounding it with a tablespoonful of cold bread sauce, 2 oz. of butter, and salt and pepper to taste, work in an egg, and rub it through a wire sieve, mix in a tablespoonful of purée of mushroom, and spread the inner side of the fillets of a pair of soles, roll them, and pack them in a buttered sautépan, so placed that the ends will not uncur'. Moisten them with fish stock, cover them with buttered paper, and cook them about twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Make a nice sauce with the fish stock, adding two spoonfuls of cream, the yolk of an egg, and a squeeze of lemon juice. Dish the fillets in a circle, garnish the centre with the remainder of the force-meat, made into tiny quenelles, pour the sauce over them, and put a ring of truffles on each fillet.

Try these pork kidneys with Madeira:—

Mince small six pork kidneys, put them into a stewpan with a lump of butter, pepper and salt to taste, and a little ground nutmeg, some parsley, and six shalots, all minced fine, stirring them the whole time over a clear fire. When nearly done add a little flour, then see it is of a smooth consistence; add a glass of Madeira, let it simmer two minutes, then dish it, serving with it sippets of bread and half lemons.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

The Children's Treat

A Pure Sweet gives not only pleasure but nourishment to growing children. All the ingredients used in making are pure and wholesome. It is as nourishing as it is delicious.

CALLARD & BOWSER'S BUTTER-SCOTCH

"Really wholesome Confectionery"

Every Packet bears their Trade Mark.

MANUFACTORY: LONDON W.C.

MAZAWATTEE

The very Acme of refinement, Purity, and Delicious Flavour.

THE TEA OF TEAS.

Sold only in Air-Tight Lead Packets and Sealed Tins.

The Ancient Writing Paper of the Priests.

Court Envelopes, 1s. per 100. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. 6d. per 100.

Thin, for Foreign Correspondence, 5 Quires, 1s. Mourning Note, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d.

HIERATICA NOTE PAPER 5 Quires, 1s. (Regd.).

Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to our new address, Hieratica Works. Hill-street, Finsbury, London, E.C. Sample free. Parcels carriage paid in U.K.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Announces the issue of NEW FORMS OF CONTRACT providing for ANNUAL CASH DIVIDENDS with several options each year.

Liberal Loan and Surrender Values and Various Modes of Settlement.

FUNDS OVER £100,000,000 SECURELY INVESTED.

Apply for particulars Head Office for the United Kingdom—

16, 17, 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.

J. H. HARRISON HOGGE, General Manager

TYPEWRITERS

Typewriters bought, sold, exchanged, repaired, or lent on hire at half makers' prices. Sent on approval. MS. copied.

TAYLOR'S, Ltd., 74, Chancery Lane, LONDON.

Channel Crossing, Sea-Sickness.

An Editor's experience: "Practical experience causes the Editor to recommend 'YANATAS' (of any chemist) to those troubled by sea-sickness."—Murray's Imperial Guide to India, 1904. "YANATAS," the only sure cure for sea-sickness. Of chemists, 2s. 9d.; or 3s. (post paid) from STARKIE, Chemist, Trafalgar Square, London, S.W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars, Schools also recommended. Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street, Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard.

LIFE ASSURANCE.—A vacancy exists at the London Office of a leading (British) Life Assurance Society for an experienced Gentleman to work the West End District. A substantial salary will be paid to one who can point to good record in securing business. Applications, which will be treated as confidential, should state full particulars of age, experience, and salary expected.—Address INSPECTOR, c/o R. C. Evans, 118-119, Newgate street, E.C.

BAILEY'S HOTEL LONDON

The most comfortable Hotel in London. GLOUCESTER ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON. Self-contained Suites.

Telephone No. 557 Kensington. Telegrams—"Bailey's Hotel, London."

GLOBE METAL POLISH

Metal work of all kinds responds instantly to the wonderful polishing powers of Globe Polish—and the polish obtained is lasting. You know how common polishes fail to give a really lasting polish.

GLOBE METAL POLISH

has given satisfaction to millions of particular people. For years its popularity has been steadily growing, until to-day it is universally recognised as the one perfect metal polish.

PASTE IN TINS. LIQUID IN CANS.

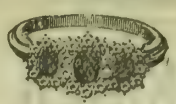
Raimes & Co., Ltd., Tredegar Rd., Bow, London, E., and Stockton-on-Tees.

GLOBE METAL POLISH

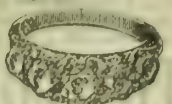
BENSON'S

SELECTED GEM RINGS.

Brilliants, £12.



Brilliants and Rubies, or Sapphires, £17.



Amethyst, Diamond Points, £6 6s.

Brilliants, £18.

"The Times"

MONTHLY PAYMENT SYSTEM IS AVAILABLE.

Brilliant, with Ruby Eyes, £6 6s.

Illustrated Books: No. 1 of Rings, Watches, Chains; No. 2 of Clocks, Plate, Bags, and Silver Goods, post free. Mention TRUTH.

62 & 64, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
and 25, OLD BOND STREET, W.

THE CYCLE WITH A NAME

and reputation, guaranteeing its future behaviour and its owner's comfort and ease, is after all

THE BEST INVESTMENT.

For upwards of 30 years

OUR FAMOUS

Singer CYCLES

have been giving unlimited satisfaction in every corner of the globe, yet the price is no more than much of the comparative rubbish.

The "Singer" perfect oil bath case makes cycling a luxury.

— LISTS FREE. —

Dept. T, SINGER & CO., Ltd., COVENTRY.

APPEAL.

ROYAL MATERNITY CHARITY OF LONDON.

Founded 1757.

Patron—H.M. THE QUEEN.

President—H.R.H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The Charity provides Midwives and Medical Attendance (Gratis) for poor Married Women in their Own Homes. Donors of £10 10s., three "Letters" annually for life; Annual Subscribers, four "Letters" per guinea.

The Committee earnestly pleads for gifts of money to extinguish the Charity's burdening Debt.

A Training School for Pupil-Midwives is attached to the Charity.

Major G. LIONEL B. KILLICK, Secretary.

Offices: 31, Finsbury-square, E.C.

ENGINEERING.

A limited number of PREMIUM PUPILS are received at the LOUGHBOROUGH WORKS of the BRUSH ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING COMPANY, LIMITED, as an introduction to professional employment with associated companies at home and abroad. Pamphlets describing two courses—

(a) ELECTRICAL AND MECHANICAL ENGINEERING;

(b) TRACTION ENGINEERING (STEAM, PETROL, and ELECTRIC)—

will be sent on application to Colonel HILTON, Superintendent of Pupils, Falcon Works, Loughborough.

DIRECTORS.

Lord Vaux of Harrowden, G. A. Cornwallis West, C.S.B. Hilton, W. L Madgen.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1, Arcade, Bournemouth.

COWES.—MESSRS. MARVINS, Princes Buildings. Agency for Sale, Purchase, or Charter of Yachts. Also House and Estate Agency for Isle of Wight. Established 1858 and patronised by Royalty.

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station Telephone 8. Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

TO NOURISH THE BLOOD IN THE SPRING-TIME use

COLEMAN'S "WINCARNIS"

THE WORLD'S GREATEST TONIC.

IT RESTORES & STRENGTHENS after* INFLUENZA.

8,000 MEDICAL MEN RECOMMEND IT.

FREE TRIAL.

COLEMAN & CO., Ltd., "Wincarnis" Works, Norwich, will forward sample on receipt of this coupon, with full name and address and 3 penny stamps to cover cost of carriage.

No charge whatever is made for the bottle of Restorative Wine. SIGN THIS COUPON.

Name .....

Address .....

TRUTH, APRIL 17.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS

MR. ISRAEL ZANGWILL'S NEW BOOK.

MR. HEINEMANN has pleasure in announcing that he will publish on Friday, the 19th, a new book by Mr. ISRAEL ZANGWILL,

GHETTO COMEDIES

By ISRAEL ZANGWILL,

With 4 illustrations in colour, crown 8vo, 6/-

Also, by the same author,

GHETTO TRAGEDIES, a re-issue of "They that Walk in Darkness," with 4 illustrations in colour, crown 8vo, 6/-

A third large Impression is now ready of

MR. GALSWORTHY'S NEW NOVEL,

THE COUNTRY HOUSE

By JOHN GALSWORTHY,

Author of "The Man of Property." 6s.

"If there are any competitions going on for 'the finest novel of the year,' the 'best drawn character in modern fiction,' the 'biggest dear in fiction,' or 'the coming novelist,' my votes unhesitatingly go to 'The Country House,' Mr. Barter, Mrs. Pendyce, and Mr. John Galsworthy."—Punch.

THE EXPENSIVE MISS DU CANE

By S. MACNAUGHTAN,

Author of "A Lame Dog's Diary." 6s. [Third Impression.

"To resist the charm of Hetty du Cane one must be singularly hard to please."—Spectator.

THE LOST WORD

By EVELYN UNDERHILL, Author of "The Grey World." 6s.

[Second Impression.

"She writes vigorously and well, with a clear sense of the beauty of language, and a notable power of description."—Times.

MEMOIRS OF A PERSON OF QUALITY

By ASHTON HILLIERS. 6s. [Third Impression.

"The author's study of the Georgian period must have been profound, and he has absorbed the spirit of the times with remarkable ability. We have no doubt whatever that Mr. Hilliers has a fine literary future before him."—Athenæum.

"KIT-CAT NOVELS." Vol. I. 4s.

OUR LADY OF THE BEECHES

By BARONESS VON HUTTEN, Author of "Pam," &c.

With Coloured Frontispiece by WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

"A story to linger over and to remember."—Daily Telegraph.

Everbody interested in the ups and downs of the Stock Exchange should read

FRIDAY, THE 13TH.

By T. W. LAWSON, Author of "Frenzied Finance." 4s.

"A thrilling, slashing, banging, whirling, sensation novel."—Standard.

POCKET EDITION OF THE

NOVELS OF IVAN TURGENEV.

15 vols. Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net each, uniform with the pocket edition of the works of R. L. STEVENSON.

Mr. HEINEMANN has just published Volume IX., price 4s., of the New Edition of the WORKS OF HENRIK IBSEN.

Revised and Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.

ROSMERSHOLM: THE LADY FROM THE SEA.

FOR LOVERS OF NATURE.

A COUNTRYSIDE CHRONICLE

By S. L. BENSUSAN.

Illustrated by CARTON MOORE PARK.

1 vol., 7s. 6d. net.

"A really beautiful book, full of true humour, full of air and colour and life."—Daily Telegraph.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

JOHN LONG'S NEW BOOKS

A Reply to the "New Theology." By the Author of "When it was Light."

THE FOOL HATH SAID—

("The fool hath said in his heart, 'There is no God.'") By the Author of "When it was Light." Crown 8vo, 1s. net; or in cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

This work, which is a reply to the "New Theology" started by the Rev. R. J. Campbell, is written by the author of "When it was Light," and is a powerful indictment of what the writer calls "the second-hand heterodoxies of Holborn Viaduct." The strong and uncompromising attitude of the story will interest all, Evangelical and High Churchmen alike, and will probably do much to confirm the faith of those who are wavering. A vivid love interest completes a remarkable and unusual book, for which there can be little doubt there will be an enormous demand, considering it is written by the author of "When it was Light," one of the most popular books of recent times.

MR. JOHN LONG will publish this week these Two Important NOVELS, 6s. each.

1. THE MILLIONAIRE AND THE LADY
By GERTRUDE WARDEN.
2. A YANKEE NAPOLEON
By JOHN F. MACPHERSON.

HAVE YOU READ THESE NOVELS?

They are published by Mr. JOHN LONG, whose imprint on a book, according to that literary authority the GLASGOW OBSERVER, "has long been recognised as a guarantee of its quality."

SIX SHILLINGS EACH

THE BOOK THAT ALL THE TALK'S ABOUT

Third Edition Ready. Fourth Edition at Press.

THE YOKE. By HUBERT WALES, Author of "Mr. and Mrs. Villiers."

TATLER: "What I said about 'Mr. and Mrs. Villiers' some months ago I repeat about 'The Yoke.' But the latter is more than a 'Notable Book,' it is one of striking skill both in plot and characterisation, and assures Mr. Hubert Wales that front rank place among contemporary novelists for which he has made so bold a bid. There is no inane idealism about 'The Yoke,' its intense human interest will be the key to its success."

AMAZEMENT. By JAMES BLYTH, Author of "Juicy Joe."

Sir FRANCIS BURNAND, late Editor of PUNCH, writes: "I strongly recommend to everyone in search of a genuinely good novel 'Amazement,' by James Blyth."

THE SWEETS OF OFFICE. By VIOLET TWEEDALE, Author of "The Portals of Love."

The BYSTANDER: "'The Sweets of Office' is by far the best political novel of recent years, and one which is as likely as not to provide material for conversation in other than mere literary circles."

THE ROMANCE OF A MAID OF HONOUR. By RICHARD MARSH, Author of "The Garden of Mystery."

The TIMES: "So cleverly devised and so ingeniously and lucidly detailed is Mr. Richard Marsh's story that the adventures in London of the King, the maid of honour, and the journalist will prove completely absorbing."

THE MAN WITH THE AMBER EYES. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "No. 3, The Square."

MORNING LEADER: "This novel is genuinely thrilling." BLACK AND WHITE: "Will thrill and entertain." WORLD: "A skilful, sensational romance."

A BUTTERFLY. By the Baroness VON GOLDACKER.

DUNDEE ADVERTISER: "Displays graphic power and originality."

HER FATHER'S SOUL. By LUCAS CLEEVE.

NEWCASTLE JOURNAL: "The best story of its kind that has been published for many a year." MANCHESTER COURIER: "Out of the ordinary run of novels."

THE DICTIONARY OF FOOLS. By G. G. CHATTERTON, Author of many popular novels.

FREEMAN'S JOURNAL: "A very charming story, most entertainingly told."

THE HOUSE OF HOWE. By MAY CROMMELIN.

BRISTOL TIMES: "A very charming love story, with quite an original heroine."

THE END OF A PASSION. By ALICE M. DIEHL, Author of "Love with Variations."

DUNDEE ADVERTISER: "A society novel with a strongly involved plot, so deftly concealed that the reader's interest is maintained to the end."

VALDORA. By THOMAS PINKERTON, Author of "The Ivory Bride."

Belongs to the order of romance which is a perpetual joy to the novel reader. There is the clash of arms and the delight of love, and Mr. Thomas Pinkerton has given us a romance written in his most original vein.

ALL THAT A MAN HATH. By CORALIE STANTON and HEATH HOSKEN.

Although only published a week, the first edition of 2,000 copies is nearly exhausted.

DEYNCOURT OF DEYNCOURT. By D. HUGH PRYCE, Author of "Valda Hanem."

The first Edition of 1,500 copies is now ready.

ANNA LOMBARD. By VICTORIA CROSS.

The most popular book of modern times. Forty-fourth edition now printing.

THE NEW HUMORIST—HAVE YOU READ HIM?

A LIGHT-HEARTED REBELLION. By JOHN LANGFIELD.

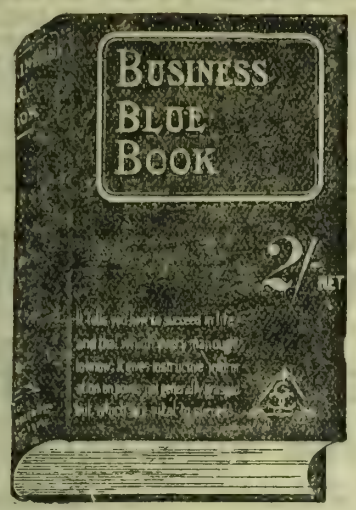
OUTLOOK: "A thoroughly agreeable story, and the author unfolds it with an evident relish, which is as infectious as it is exuberant. Altogether it is a book to dispel the megrims." PALL MALL GAZETTE: "Very agreeable and amusing reading." DUNDEE ADVERTISER: "Will be read with delight. Highly amusing." NEWCASTLE CHRONICLE: "That rare product of the pen—a tale which should prove equally interesting and entertaining to the boy or girl of 16 and the man or woman of 60." QUEEN: "Most amusing." ABERDEEN JOURNAL: "Wit sparkles throughout the story." NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN: "A rollicking bit of fun, well sustained." NEWCASTLE JOURNAL: "One of the brightest stories of the season." SCOTSMAN: "The characters, like the author, seem nearly all gifted with a quick sense of humour and lively powers of expression."

London: JOHN LONG, 12, 13, & 14, Norris-street, Haymarket.

The Waking Up of England

What a future; wide as the world, if we have the heart and heroism for it, which by heaven's blessing we shall.—Carlyle.

PRESS & PUBLIC ADMIT IT TO BE



A REMARKABLE PRODUCTION

Business Blue Book

Example of spontaneous unsolicited expressions:

"I cannot understand how you can publish such a mine of valuable information at the price. I am telling all my business friends about it."—SLIGO. "Should be in the hands of every business man."—KING'S LYNN. "It is a most remarkable work."—EDINBORO'. "Great value to any business man."—WIGAN. "Increases business man's knowledge 100 per cent."—BELFAST. "Practical, well-informed and cleverly written."—The Scotsman. "One of the breeziest commercial publications of the present day."—Tatler. "An invaluable book to everyone who bears any part in the many-sided commercial activities of the Kingdom."—Morning Leader.

The chief firms in the U.K. have purchased the book, and it is being sold by

TENS OF THOUSANDS.

SOME OF THE CONTENTS:

How to Start in Business.
How to Purchase a Business.
How to Dispose of a Business.
How to Increase Business.
How to be Successful in Business.
Method in Business.
On Specialising in Business.
Why Foreigners Succeed in Business
How to Advertise for Business.
Affinity of Mind in Advertising.
How to Illustrate Business Literature.
Business Systems.
How to Keep Proper Accounts
How to Train Boys for Business.
How to Obtain Extra Capital.
How to Negotiate a Partnership.
Active Partnership.
How to Obtain a Partner with Capital.
Points on Partnership Law: What is a Partner? Capacity of Partners; the Partnership Deed; the Partner as Agent.
Partnership Insurance.
Partnership Responsibilities.
The Value of Experience.
How to Find the Way Through.
How British Merchants can Increase their Trade with Abroad.
How to Patent an Invention.
Compulsory Patent Licences.
How to Sell an Invention.
How to Register a Trade Mark.
How to Invest Spare Capital.
Sleeping Partnership.
Points Investors are unable to Grasp.
How to Read a Prospectus.
The Cover System Exposed.
Debentures as an Investment.
Something about "A1" at Lloyds.
How to Insure (Fire and Life).
Dealing in Life Policies.
Surrender Values.
How to Act when in Financial Difficulties.
How to Collect Doubtful Debts.
Joint Stock Enterprise.
How to Prepare a Prospectus.
How to have a Prospectus "Set."
How to Issue a Prospectus.
How to Advertise a Prospectus.
How to Talk Business.
Cost of Advertising a Prospectus.
Underwriting an Issue.
How to Arrange an Allotment.
Conversion of Businesses in Private or Public Companies.
Advantages of Trading as a Compy.
Your Position if you Limit your Liability.
One Man and Partnership Companies.
How can I Form my Business into a Company?
All that a Company has to do.
Books which must be Kept.
Documents to be Filed.
How to Record Minutes.
What Companies may or may not Register.

And considerable other information.
320 pages, Demy 8vo, bound in superior cloth.

SECURE A COPY NOW.

BUSINESS BLUE BOOK

CURTIS GARDNER & Co., Ltd.,
39, King's House, King Street, E.C

Please send me, securely packed, a Copy of the BUSINESS BLUE BOOK, for which I enclose P. O. or stamps for 2/- and postage ...d.

Name .....

Address .....

TRUTH. .....

All Those Whose Lives Are Being Shattered

by alcoholic excesses or drug-taking can be cured.

We guarantee that anyone who has a desire to free himself of these awful curses can do so by taking the Keeley Treatment, and will leave the Institute without the slightest crave or desire for either Alcohol or Drugs.

If you are interested in a cure for yourself or a friend, write, telephone, or call on us; we shall be pleased to convince you that we do what we profess to do, cure the patient.

How often must people be told that drink, after it has reached a certain stage, is a disease, which the poor victim again and again endeavours to throw off, while his friends say: "Use your will power and knock it off!" As well say the same of other disease; in any case, the disease must be eradicated by scientific treatment.

The Keeley Treatment is always administered by regularly qualified physicians, who have made a special study of Inebriety. After carefully inquiring into the history of each patient, and making a thorough physical examination, they treat each case according to the condition of the patient. No matter how long-standing the addiction, or how much has been taken, the result is invariably the same, a cure.

No constitution is too delicate for the Keeley Treatment, as the remedies are perfectly harmless.

Patients are given the utmost freedom; there is absolutely no confinement, and, until the remedies render it unnecessary, they are allowed their usual amount of alcohol or drugs.

What Admiral Woodward says:—

"Having served forty-five years in his Majesty's service, I can, I feel, speak of the true value of the Keeley Treatment. A great friend of mine is a living advertisement of its value; he through drink lost his position in the Navy; his experiences and misfortunes could not be related in a ream of foolscap. More than ten years ago, through the aid of this treatment, he has conquered the disease, and is now holding a responsible business position; all the old sorrows are buried, and he has become a sincere good chap.

"I have found that it is always the good fellows who take to drink; you will find them honest, most generous, and high-spirited, made low by the disease of drink. Did you ever know a miserable, bad-tempered, stop-the-world-go-round, stingy chap drink? I never have. You will always find your generous, good-natured chap who takes to it. I have seen plenty of it in my day, so am able to speak with authority. I have seen the best men (I am not a patch on their boots) drink and brought down to the lowest. Thank God for a Keeley Institute where they can be cured.

"R. WOODWARD,
"Admiral, C.B."

Think! either for yourself or others: will you allow them or yourself to be utterly destroyed when an absolute cure is at hand?

We can show you hundreds of letters of gratitude from patients who have taken the treatment, and who are willing that their names should be given, or they will correspond direct with prospective patients.

Write us to-day and we will prove to you that this cure is an incontrovertible fact, approved by some of our most eminent men, among them the following: Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D.; the Right Hon. Lord Montagu of Beaulieu; H. W. Forster, Esq., M.P.; Vice-Admiral Woodward, C.B.; Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A.; W. Hind-Smith, Esq.; and Eardley-Wilmot, Esq., R.N., Secretary of the Church of England Temperance Society.

More than half a million have taken the treatment, among them 17,000 physicians. Does not this fact alone speak volumes? And twenty per cent. of our patients come through the recommendation of their family physician.

About one-third of the patients are ladies, all of whom have apartments outside the Institute, of their own selection.

The treatment takes four weeks for alcohol (for drugs five to six weeks), and is carried out in the United Kingdom only at the Keeley Institute, 9, West Bolton Gardens, London, S.W.

Messrs. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S List.

On Tuesday next

An Important work on the Anglo-Japanese Alliance

The Allies

BY

MAJOR-GEN. SIR HENRY COLVILE, K.C.M.G., C.B., &c.

Author of "The Work of the IX. Division," &c.

In 1 vol., cloth gilt and gilt top, 16s. net. With Frontispiece.

SIX GOOD NOVELS 6/- EACH.

The Toll Bar

By J. E. BUCKROSE

"A strikingly original and powerfully-written story, it is a fresh study of the eternal human problem of the conflict of good and evil. Mr. Buckrose displays unusual literary skill and powers of intellect and imagination; he can touch the deepest and most intimate instincts and feelings of the human heart, and the most mysterious workings of the soul and conscience. He has written a notable book."
—Scotsman.

Captain Kirke Webbe

By F. W. HAYES

"The author has won a place for himself in fiction as a master of spirited incident. But it may certainly be said that in 'Captain Kirke Webbe' he has surpassed his previous efforts in this direction. He has produced a remarkable hero, virile, attractive, and withall a scheming rogue, a delightful character."
—Manchester Courier.

The Return of Richard Carr

By WINIFRED BOGGS

"A new writer of great power. The story is marked by rare skill, alike as to character and incident. All the principal figures are admirably drawn. Assuredly the author has a great future."
—Manchester Courier.

4th EDITION.

The Strayings of Sandy

By DOROTHEA CONYERS

"It is the best novel of the author's that we have read. It is full of high spirits and humour. A story we can heartily recommend."
—Spectator.

The Cruise of the Make-Believes

By TOM GALLON

"One of the most entertaining of its author's books."
—Standard.

READY TO-DAY

Where Love Leads

By CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "Love Decides," &c.

London: HUTCHINSON & CO., Paternoster-row.

GREENING'S LATEST.

The name of GREENING on a Novel signifies that the book is of vital human interest.

A THRILLING NOVEL.

1 The Gold Worshippers

By J. B. HARRIS BURLAND,

Author of "The Financier," &c. 6s.

Daily Mail says: "Mr. Harris Burland has forced his way to the head of the writers of mystery. . . . As a real 'thriller' this tale will be hard to beat among books of its kind."

Daily Express says: "A well told 'thriller.'"

Newcastle Journal: "Mr. Harris Burland places himself in the front rank of modern novelists."

Notts Guardian: "It is an intensely sensational story, cleverly illustrating the world-old theme of the madness for gold."

"There is," says the Morning Leader, "the proper thrill in it, and one does not want it to end."

The Gold Worshippers

2 A DRAGOON'S WIFE

A Stirring Romance of the time of Louis XIV.
By E. PERRONET THOMPSON. 6s.

3 DINEVAH THE BEAUTIFUL

A Modern Romance. By ELLIOTT O'DONNELL. 6s.

4 FOR THIS CAUSE

By GEORGE IRVING, Author of "Love." 6s.

"'Tis best to be off with the old love before you are on with the new" is the note of this book.

5 THE OUTER DARKNESS

By R. H. WRIGHT. 6s.

"When you read in the first chapter the following words: 'I, Martin Sanford, departed this life on 21st Feb., 189-, and was buried——,' curiosity alone compels you to read more."

To quote the Dundee Courier, "the author is to be congratulated in writing, at all events, a fanciful and imaginative story on a somewhat novel subject."

6 PEN, PATRON, and PUBLIC 5s.

A remarkable book that is creating a considerable stir in literary and journalistic circles. The book deals with journalism and literary life behind the scenes, and records the unpublished history of several great newspapers, both London and Provincial. Although the book is published anonymously, it is an open secret that it is from the pen of one of the most brilliant writers and publicists of the period.

GREENING & CO., LTD., 51, CHARING CROSS MANSIONS, W.C.

Mr. Edward Arnold's New Books

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND LIBRARIES.

A STAFF OFFICER'S SCRAP-BOOK. Lieutenant-General Sir IAN HAMILTON, K.C.B. With Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 18s. net each.

LETTERS FROM THE FAR EAST. By Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G., Author of "Turkey in Europe," "The East Africa Protectorate," etc. Demy 8vo, Illustrated, 8s. 6d. net.

Daily Chronicle: "Sir Charles Eliot has written a book on the Far East which differs from most other books on the same subject as a diamond differs from paste. Perusal of this book suggests the invaluable nature of an unofficial report of the inner side of world politics. Perspective is not the strong point of Britons, but perspective is what Sir Charles Eliot gives us in 'Letters from the Far East.'"

MEMORIES OF THE MONTHS. Series IV. By the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart. With Photogravure Illustrations, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. (Uniform with Series I., II., and III.)

CHURCH AND STATE IN FRANCE, 1300 to 1907. By ARTHUR GALTON, Vicar of Edenham. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

TIPPOO TIB. The Story of his Career in Central Africa. Narrated from his own accounts by Dr. HEINRICH BRODE. With Portrait and Map, 10s. 6d. net.

Glasgow Herald: "A work of very great interest in connection with the exploration of the Dark Continent."

SIX RADICAL THINKERS. (Bentham—J. S. Mill—Thomas Carlyle—Cobden—Mazzini—T. H. Green.) By JOHN MACCUNN, LL.D., Professor of Philosophy in the University of Liverpool. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

Liverpool Post: "In every respect it is a delightful work, full of knowledge, insight, and shrewd judgment, warmed by the truest sympathy, the sympathy which understands where it cannot approve, and brightened by a style of such clarity and dignity as puts to shame the airs and graces of the conscious 'stylist.'"

AT THE WORKS.

A STUDY OF A MANUFACTURING TOWN.

By LADY BELL, Author of "The Minor Moralist," &c.

With Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

Spectator: "Lady Bell's book is well worth reading from two widely different points of view. The student of social problems cannot possibly afford to miss it, while the romance of industry has never been more vividly painted than in her pages."

London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 41 & 43, Maddox Street, W.

HARPER & BROTHERS' LIST.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY AND THE HABSBURGS.

THE WHIRLPOOL OF EUROPE.

By A. R. COLQUHOUN and E. COLQUHOUN. Profusely Illustrated. Demy 8vo, Maps, &c., 15s. net (post free, 15s. 6d.).

"A clearly written and picturesque account—a graphic and searching investigation of the development and present condition of Austria-Hungary."—Daily Telegraph. "An authoritative work of reference."—Standard.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A FAMOUS WAR CORRESPONDENT.

PEACEFUL PERSONALITIES AND WARRIORS BOLD.

By FREDERIC VILLIERS. Profusely Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. (post free, 10s. 11d.).

"Difficult to recall a recent work possessing a tithe of the varied interest which attaches to this book."—World. "Most entertaining collection of reminiscences that has appeared for a long time."—Tribune. "Deserves our gratitude for giving these memoirs to the world."—Spectator.

THE HIGH AND PUISSANT PRINCESS MARGUERITE OF AUSTRIA.

By CHRISTOPHER HARE. Profusely Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The life story of Marguerite, daughter of Maximilian, embracing eventful years of Continental history. "A volume of great charm."—Scotsman.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

By MARK TWAIN. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The most damaging indictment of Christian Science yet penned. Trenchant as his criticism is, it is enlivened throughout by humour and satire."—Tribune.

MODERN SOCIALISM

As set forth by Socialists in their speeches, writings, and programmes.

Edited, with an Introduction, by R. C. K. ENSOR.

New Edition, revised and enlarged, 5s. net (post free, 5s. 4d.).

"Quite the most satisfactory volume, explaining what Socialism is and what Socialists are seeking."—The New Age.

NATURE'S CRAFTSMEN.

By H. C. McCOOK, Sc.D. Profusely Illustrated. 7s. 6d. net (post free, 7s. 11d.). Describes many interesting forms of insect life—the result of the author's first-hand observations and researches.

GOOD HUNTING.

By THEODORE ROOSEVELT. Illustrated by FREDERIC REMINGTON, &c. 3s. 6d.

"Most people will accord a ready welcome to this little volume—the President is a thorough open-air man."—Daily Telegraph.

UNDER THE ABSOLUTE AMIR.

By F. A. MARTIN. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net (post free, 10s. 11d.)

"By one who lived eight years in Afghanistan, and who for the most of that time was the only Englishman in Kabul . . . claims attention alike for its freshness and its importance."—Daily Chronicle.

Important New Fiction.

THE GIANT'S STRENGTH.

By BASIL KING. Crown 8vo, 6s.

As in "Let Not Man Put Asunder," the author attacks another social evil and strikes a telling blow at "Trusts" and their organisers.

TIBERIUS SMITH.

By HUGH PENDEXTER. Crown 8vo, Illustrated, 6s.

A book of irresistible humour by a new writer.

THE PRINCESS.

By M. H. POTTER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A novel of present-day Russia, in which many notable characters of the Court circle play prominent parts.

SAMPSON ROCK OF WALL ST.

By EDWIN LEFEVRE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Conveys the subtle force of the magic of the money market with unerring precision. Among the best creations of novelists in the present year."—Standard.

BY THE LIGHT OF THE SOUL.

By MARY E. WILKINS FREEMAN. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"An extremely graphic, quite merciless dissection of a capable and ambitious woman who is absolutely devoid of heart. . . . The technical excellence ensures the author's place in Anglo-Saxon literature. A triumphant example of Miss Wilkins's artistic gifts."—Daily Telegraph.

HARPER and BROTHERS, 45, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON, W.

A Selection of Cassell & Company's New Books

READY APRIL 19. PRICE 16s. NET.

LORD BEACONSFIELD & OTHER TORY MEMORIES. By T. E. Kebbel.

With Portrait Frontispiece.

The largest section of these "Memories" is made up of intimate talks with, and reminiscences of, Lord Beaconsfield, which throw new light upon his attitude towards Parliamentary Reform, as well as upon his personal tastes and literary predilections. The author has a good deal that is interesting to say of other Tory statesmen. Abounding as it does in piquant stories, the volume is as interesting to the general reader as it is valuable to the student of political affairs.

READY APRIL 19. PRICE 6s.

WORRY—THE DISEASE OF THE AGE. By Dr. C. W. Saleeby.

In this book Dr. Saleeby demonstrates the futility of worry and its relations to disease, work, and the religious life. He deals with the evil effects of drugs and drinks and the abuse of narcotics.

READY APRIL 19. PRICE 6s. NET.

A SEA DOG OF DEVON: A LIFE OF SIR JOHN HAWKINS. By R. A. J. Walling.

Containing Introduction by LORD BRASSEY. With Frontispiece.

This book is the first attempt at a biography of Sir John Hawkins. His career included many of the most thrilling exploits in the annals of sea warfare. The parts played by Hawkins in the Feria Plot, in the building up of England's naval greatness, and in the defeat of the Spanish Armada are all examined in detail.

READY APRIL 19. PRICE 1s. 6d. NET.

THE WELL-DRESSED WOMAN. By Lilian Joy.

The questions of practical dressmaking and millinery, of how best to expend various dress allowances, of dress for women in different professions, etc., are all discussed thoroughly, but with a sense of humour which saves the subject from dulness.

FICTION.

READY APRIL 19. PRICE 6s.

CHAMPION. The Story of a Motor Car. By JOHN COLIN DANE.

Mr. Colin Dane's new novel palpitates with the energy of the Motor Car. It is, in fact, the autobiography of an automobile—"Champion" the Car tells the romance of its maker's hopes and fears, his trials and triumphs. How the Car is stolen, how it becomes the toy of a charming American beauty, and many other vicissitudes of fortune, are all entrancingly told.

READY APRIL 19. PRICE 5s. NET.

THE LAND OF EVERYMAN. By ALBERT KINROSS.

Davenant, the hero of Mr. Kinross's story, dreams of America. He has never been there; crippled and poor, he has only been able to meet a few stray Americans, and to catch such confusing accounts of the United States as reach the dweller in England. From these slight encounters, he builds his dream of "a broad new land, unshackled and unconventionalised." Mr. Kinross has given us a vision of America, not as seen by the tourist or special investigator, but as that country might appear to an Englishman dreaming of its vast and splendid possibilities.

ON SALE AT ALL BOOKSELLERS'.

THE SOUL OF MILLY GREEN.	By Mrs. HAROLD GORST.	6/-
HER LADYSHIP'S SILENCE.	By MARIE CONNOR LEIGHTON.	6/-
THE QUEST OF EL DORADO.	By WILMOT WARING.	6/-
THE DIAMOND SHIP.	By MAX PEMBERTON.	6/-
PRINCESS MARITZA.	By PERCY BREBNER.	6/-
A STRONG MAN'S VOW.	By JOSEPH HOCKING.	3/6
THE RED LIGHT.	By C. E. C. WEIGALL.	3/6
THE KINGMAKERS.	By ARMIGER BARCLAY.	6/-
THE BACHELORS.	By CHARLES EDDY.	6/-
A LOST SUMMER.	By THEO DOUGLAS.	6/-
THE LATE TENANT.	By GORDON HOLMES.	6/-
THE FROZEN VENUS.	By HARRY LONGLEY LANDER.	6/-

CASSELL & COMPANY, Ltd., London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne.

Messrs. HURST and BLACKETT
PUBLISH TO-DAY
THE SECRETS OF THE VATICAN.

The only Complete Account of the Papal Palace in English, with an Account of the Papal System and the Organisation of the Vatican Hierarchy.
With 60 Illustrations, reproduced from Photographs and Old Prints.
By DOUGLAS SLADEN,
Author of "In Sicily," "Queer Things about Japan," &c. Royal 8vo, 21s. net.
Detailed Prospectus on application.

NEW NOVEL BY A NEW WRITER.
MALCOLM CANMORE'S PEARL.
By AGNES GRANT HAY.
Crown 8vo, Cloth, with a Frontispiece, price 6s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.
JUST PUBLISHED.
A NEW COMPLETE NOVEL
By MORLEY ROBERTS,
THE FLYING CLOUD.

"The picture is drawn with admirable fidelity and skill and painted in charming and realistic colours."—Scotsman.

A GALLANT OF GASCONY.
A Romance of Marguerite de Valois.
By PHILIP L. STEVENSON,
Author of "A Gendarme of the King," "The Black Cuirassier," &c.

"A graphic and stirring piece of work."—Times.

A ROCK IN THE BALTIC.
By ROBERT BARR,
Author of "The Prince of Good Fellows," &c.

Just Published. Invaluable to Amateur Horse-dealers.
THE HORSE:
Its Selection and Purchase.
Together with the Law of Warranty, Sale, &c.
By F. T. BARTON, M.R.C.V.S.,
Author of "Our Friend the Horse," &c., &c.
With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 182, High Holborn, W.C.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

POISON ISLAND.
By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH ("Q").
SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.
THE WORLD says: "Marked by daring imagination, extraordinary vitality, pictorial vividness, and humour of the kind which makes his people live."

THE ULTRAMARINES:
A Story of Colonial Life.
By COLONEL A.
THE STANDARD says: "A very clever and piquant story, a story which we admit we laughed over heartily, and thoroughly enjoyed."

THE PRINCE'S VALET.
By JOHN BARNETT.
THE DAILY GRAPHIC says: "Something of the weakness as well as of the Prince's personality is conveyed in these pages, which are full of adventure, both amatory and warlike."

WINDOVER TALES.
By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE,
Author of "Under the White Cockade," "Rycroft of Withens," "A Bachelor of Arcady," &c. [April 25.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

Price 7s. 6d. net.
THE CURE OF CANCER
and HOW SURGERY BLOCKS THE WAY.
By JOHN SHAW, M.D.Lond.,
Author of "Fibroid Tumour . . . a new treatment without operation"
(2s. 6d. net, post free 2s. 10d.).
The work demonstrates the curability of cancer without operation and the greatly increased mortality coincident with modern operative methods.
London: F. S. TURNEY, 22, Paternoster-row.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment
By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition ust published. Post free, 3s. 9d.
London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch-street.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS
and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

Diamonds.
THE
Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.,

Fine Diamond Pendant Necklace, on Platinum, £127 10s. Chain Back.

invite inspection of the choicest stock in the world of DIAMOND & GEM JEWELLERY
IN NEW AND EXCLUSIVE DESIGNS.
Moderate Prices.
NO IMPORTUNITY TO PURCHASE.
New Illustrated Catalogue of Jewellery Post Free.
Selections sent on Approval.

The
Goldsmiths & Silversmiths Company, Ltd.
By appointment to H.M. the King.
112, Regent Street, London, W.

A Healthy Complexion results from using the '4711'
Eau de Cologne
(Blue and Gold Label).
A few drops sprinkled into a basin of hot or cold water will cheer and refresh you, and act as a SKIN TONIC.

IMPORTANT.—Cheap impure Eau de Cologne used in this way will injure your skin. Insist on seeing the Hall Mark, No. 4711, on every bottle. It is an absolute guarantee of purity.
Sold everywhere from 1/- to 15/- per bottle.

CONCERTS.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA'S
QUEEN'S HALL.
SYMPHONY CONCERT.
THE QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.
Conductor, MR. HENRY J. WOOD.
THURSDAY NEXT, April 18, at 3.
Solo Violin, Herr FRITZ KREISLER.
Tickets 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., 1s., of usual Agents; Chappell & Co.'s Box-office, Queen's Hall; and the Queen's Hall Orchestra, Ltd., 320, Regent-street, W.
ROBERT NEWMAN, Manager.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
THURSDAY NEXT, at 3.15.
ELENA GERHARDT and ARTHUR NIKISCH.
SECOND AND LAST RECITAL THIS SEASON.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d., at Hall, and usual Agents'.
Concert-Direction DANIEL MAYER.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
TUESDAY NEXT, APRIL 23rd, at 3.15.
GLENN HALL (Tenor) and ARTHUR NIKISCH (At the Piano).
VOCAL RECITAL.
Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d., at the Hall and usual Agents'.
Concert-Direction DANIEL MAYER.

EXHIBITIONS.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

DORE'S GREAT MASTERPIECES. — Raphael's lost Masterpiece "The Holy Family"; Pastels, Oils, and Water-Colours by ANDRE SINET; Water-Colours of Devon and Cornwall, by J. SHAPLAND; Water-Colours by Mrs. F. A. HOPKINS; &c.
DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

OLD WELCOME CLUB, Earl's Court, S.W.
In connection with
BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION.
President:
Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS, V.C., K.G., K.P., O.M., &c.
Chairman:
PAUL CREMIEU-JAVAL, Esq., J.P.
Committee:
The Earl of Warwick and Brooke.
The Lord Burton, K.C.V.O.
The Lord Burnham, K.C.V.O.
The Right Hon. Sir Edward Carson, K.C., M.P.
The Right Hon. W. G. Ellison-Macartney.
Capt. the Hon. Alwyn H. Fulke-Greville, M.V.O.
Sir William Robinson, G.C.M.G.
Sir Thomas Sutherland, G.C.M.G.
Major-General Sir Owen Tudor Burne, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.
Sir Eyre Massey Shaw, K.C.B.
Sir Richard R. Awdry, K.C.B.
Sir Henry Bergne, K.C.B., K.C.M.G.
Admiral Sir Albert H. Markham, K.C.B.
Sir Charles Malcolm Kennedy, K.C.M.G., C.B.
Sir George C. M. Birdwood, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., M.D., LL.D.
Sir Manchergee M. Bhownaggree, K.C.I.E.
Sir Walter Roper Lawrence, Bart., K.C.I.E.
Colonel Sir Augustus FitzGeorge, K.C.V.O.
Admiral Sir Adolphus FitzGeorge, K.C.V.O.
Sir John Furley, C.B.
Sir Arthur J. R. Trendell, C.M.G.

The Exhibition, which is under the patronage of H.M. the King of Servia, H.R.H. the Prince of Bulgaria, and H.R.H. the Prince of Montenegro, will be opened on May 4.

The Committee are now prepared to receive applications for membership. Members of the principal London clubs are eligible for election without being proposed and seconded. All other candidates must be proposed and seconded by members of the Club.

Subscription for the season, including admission to exhibition and special badge, three guineas.

Members are permitted to introduce as visitors three ladies and two gentlemen to the Club on every day that the exhibition is open to season ticket-holders. Members can also have the season tickets of their wives, daughters, and sisters resident with them endorsed as available for the Club.

Particulars and forms of application can be obtained from the Secretary, the Old Welcome Club, Exhibition-buildings, Earl's Court, S.W.

AMUSEMENTS.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY,
at 2 and 8 p.m.
AN ENTERTAINMENT OF UNEXAMPLED BRILLIANCE.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES.—St. George's Hall, Langham-place, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. Mr. J. N. Maskelyne and £1,000 Ghost. Long and varied Holiday programme. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 4s., 5s., unreserved 1s. Children under 12 half-price. Babies not admitted. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

HENGLER'S CIRCUS.—TWICE DAILY, 2.30 and 8. Grand new Fairy Spectacle, "BEAUTY AND THE ENCHANTED PRINCE." Circus programme includes Martialo, the wonderful Continental Juggler, Celeston the high wire, Yelding in Blindfold Jockey Act, Hengler's Clowns, &c. Prices 1s. to 5s. Children half-price. Balcony, 6d.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Portrait Model of the Rev. R. J. Campbell. The Late Baroness Burdett-Coutts. Realistic Tableau, Scene from Robin Hood. Delightful Music. Afternoon Teas. Open 10 till 10.

AMUSEMENTS.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, MR. GEORGE EDWARDES. EVERY EVENING at 8 (doors open 7.40), THE NEW ALADDIN, a musical extravagance. Box-office open daily from 10 to 10.

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

SAVOY THEATRE. — TO-NIGHT (Wednesday) 8.25, THE GONDOLIERS. Also April 23, 25, May 1, 3, 7, 10, 14. Sat. Mats., April 20, May 18, 2.30. TO-MORROW, 8.25, PATIENCE. Also April 20, 22, 24, 26, 29, 30, May 2, 4, 9, 13, 15, 16, 18. Sat. Mats., April 27, May 11. FRIDAY, 8.25, THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD. Also April 27, May 8, 11, 17. Sat. Mat., May 4.

APOLLO THEATRE, Shaftesbury-avenue
HENRY LOWENFELD, Sole Proprietor.
TOM B. DAVIS, Sole Lessee and Manager.
TO-NIGHT (WEDNESDAY) at 8 p.m.
ROBERT COURTNEIDGE'S production of
TOM JONES,
a Comic Opera.
Founded on Henry Fielding's Novel
by
A. M. Thompson and Robert Courtneidge.
Lyrics by Chas. H. Taylor.
Music by EDWARD GERMAN.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr. George Edwardes. Every Evening at 8.15, Matinee Every Saturday at 2.30, a new Comedy Opera entitled
THE LADY DANDIES (The Merveilleuses).

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30 in "Mr. SHERIDAN."
A Comedy in four acts by Gladys Unger.
MATINEE Saturday next, at 2.30.

CRITERION THEATRE (next door to Piccadilly Circus Tube Station). Lessee, SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening at 8.30, CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company in
THE LIARS,
by Henry Arthur Jones. Tel. 3844 Gerrard.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.30.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. MATINEES WEDS. and SATS. at 3 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman).
CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. At 8.20 and 2.20, THE DRUMS OF OUDE.
All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a play in four acts by Tom Taylor, entitled
CLANCARTY.
FIRST MATINEE SATURDAY NEXT, April 20,
and every following Wednesday and Saturday at 2.30.

ALDWYCH THEATRE, Strand.—Sole Lessee and Manager, CHARLES FROHMAN. At 8, CHARLES FROHMAN presents
EDNA MAY in NELLY NEIL.
Last Matinee Saturday at 2. LAST WEEK. 100th performance Sat. next.

WALDORF THEATRE, Aldwych, W.C.
Sole Lessees—THE MESSRS. SHUBERT.
TO-NIGHT and Every Evening at 8.15, Mr. Benbrick Blanchard presents
MISS SYBIL ARUNDALE
In a new Musical Play by Claude Arundale, entitled
THE GIPSY GIRL.
Mr. Gordon Cleather, Mr. Aubrey Fitzgerald, Mr. Fred Eastman, Miss Grace Arundale, Mlle. Andree Corday, Miss Annie Esmond. Mat. every Sat. at 2.30. Box-office, 10 to 10. Tel., 3330 Ger.

WALDORF THEATRE, Aldwych, W.C.
For Six Weeks, beginning MONDAY, April 22.
Every Evening, at 8 promptly, Saturday Matinee, at 2 promptly.
E. H. SOTHERN and JULIA MARLOWE
and their Lyric Theatre, New York, Company.
Repertoire for the first week:—Monday and Tuesday, THE SUNKEN BELL. Wed. and Thurs. Ev. and Sat. Mat., JEANNE D'ARC. Friday and Saturday evenings, TWELFTH NIGHT.
Seats may now be booked. Telephone 3330 Ger.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Alexia, Danseuse de Genre; Millman Trio, Mlle. Bresina, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, "L'AMOUR," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45.
Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—ADA REEVE, Bransby Williams, Living Pictures, THE DEBUTANTE, New Grand Ballet, Mlle. Genee, Première Danseuse, Miss Ruby Helder, Hengler Sisters, the Biograph, &c. Every Evening at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—TORTAJADA, MARGARET COOPER, LES TROMBETTA, ALFRED LESTER, NIBLO, &c. GRAND NATIONAL, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE FULL PROGRAMME, SATURDAY at 2. Managing Director, Mr. ALFRED BUTT.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

ALASSIO.—GRAND HOTEL, Alassio. The leading first-class house in the finest position. Electric Elevator.—A. MARSON, Prop.

ALASSIO.—HOTEL MEDITERRANÉE. Large garden. Sea view. Sheltered position. Auto. Garage. Moderate charges.—E. BOGLEOLE, Prop.

ALASSIO.—THE SALISBURY. Proprietor, Mr. JOHN CONGREVE.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop. A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BORDIGHERA. — HOTEL ANGST. Leading hotel. Patronised by English Society. Luxuriously furnished. English sanitation.—Proprietor, ADOLFO ANGST.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL ROYAL. High-class hotel. Full South. The most fashionable house. Garden.—L. PALOMBI, Prop.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL BELVEDERE LOMBARDI. The favourite English hotel.—Prop., G. WUNSCHMAUN. Madame is English.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CANNES.—ROST'S CONTINENTAL HOTEL. One of the finest hotels on the Riviera. Unrivalled Sea view.—Prop., H. ROST.

CANNES.—GRAND HOTEL DE PROVENCE. First-class, quiet and select quarter. Large gardens. English house.

CHEMIST. — GINNER & CO., Court Chemists. The English Pharmacy, 40, Rue d'Antibes, Cannes. Tel. 527.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHATEAUX D'OEX. — GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,300 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ. — GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN. — HOTEL BELLEVUE. — World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL ROYAL GRANDE BRETAGNE. First-class. Full south. Open all the year.—CHIOSTRI, Props.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GENOA.—GRAND HOTEL ISOTTA. Best central situation. All modern improvements. Hot water heating.—E. MOSER, Dir.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

GRASSE. — GRAND HOTEL. Patronised by her late Majesty.—Proprietor, F. ROST. Open from Sept. 16 to July.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 villas. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. All comforts.

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD). — HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BEAU RIVAGE. First-class family house. Write for illustrated pamphlet.—C. GIGER, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church

MENTONE.—RIVIERA PALACE. Suites with private baths. 300 rooms.

MENTONE.—BEAU RIVAGE. First-class hotel at moderate prices. Full south, facing sea.—KASPAR TREPP, Proprietor.

MENTONE.—HOTEL DE TURIN. Central position, full south. Large garden. Modern comfort.—J. WARTH, Proprietor.

MENTONE.—ANGLO-AMERICAN ESTATE AGENCY. Complete list of Villas, Flats, Apartments for rent and for sale.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First-class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths.

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTE CARLO.—HOTEL DU HELDER. Modern comfort. Central heating. Situated close to Casino.—A. BREMOND, Prop.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES. — GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Recommended for its cuisine, position, and comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE — GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

NICE, Cimiez.—WINTER PALACE. One of the finest and most comfortable hotels in Europe.—J. AGID, Director.

NICE.—MEYER'S PARK HOTEL, Villa Arson. First-class. Situated in its own magnificent Park. Moderate terms.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Props., HILLBRAND & BROWN.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PISA.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL DE LONDRES. The only hotel with central heating in Pisa.

FOREIGN HOTELS, &c.—contd.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLA-VISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

RAPALLO.—VERDI'S HOTEL. Favourite English house. Charmingly situated. Electric light. Modern comfort.

ROME—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Situated on famous Via Nazionale, in finest part of Rome. Every modern comfort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date.
BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME.—WINDSOR HOTEL. Full south, via Veneto. Suites of apartments. Baths. Cent. heat., mod. comf.—CASTELLI & LANTENAY.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL.
The English House.

ROME.—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL BELLEVUE. The most fashionable, of renowned reputation.—JULES LIPPERT, Proprietor.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, Fr. 11 to 18.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate terms.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up-to-date.

SPRING TOURS.

ITALY, SPAIN, and the ITALIAN LAKES
COOK'S SELECT CONDUCTED TOURS.

RIVIERA and ITALY.

Leaving London on May 3, visiting CANNES, NICE, MONTE CARLO, PISA, ROME, NAPLES, VESUVIUS, POMPEII, SORRENTO, CAPRI, FLORENCE, VENICE, the ITALIAN LAKES, LUCERNE, &c.

SPAIN and TANGIER.

Leaving London on April 30, visiting BIARRITZ, BURGOS, EL ESCORIAL, MADRID, TOLEDO, SEVILLE, ALGECIRAS, GRANADA, THE ALHAMBRA, CORDOVA, BARCELONA, &c.

THE ITALIAN LAKES.

Leaving London on May 8 and 29, visiting TURIN, STRESSA, LAKE MAGGIORE, THE BORROMEAN ISLANDS, LOCARNO, LAVENO, VARESE, COMO, CERNOBBIO, BELLAGIO, MENAGGIO, LUGANO, LUCERNE, PARIS, &c.

Inclusive Fares, providing travel tickets, hotel accommodation, carriage drives and excursions, fees to hotel and railway servants, omnibus transfers, baggage, competent conductors, &c. Illustrated Programmes post free.

THOS. COOK & SON,
Ludgate Circus, London, and Branch Offices.

R.M.S.P.
THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,

LUXURIOUS TRAVEL.

Brazil, £50; Argentina, £62; West Indies, £38.

SHORT TRIPS TO
Spain, £9 15s.; Portugal, £12.

Apply to 18, Moorgate-street, E.C.; or 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

CANADIAN PACIFIC LINE.

FASTEST TO CANADA.

For Sailings and Pamphlet re WORK and WAGES, Apply to C. P. Rly., 62-65, Charing Cross, S.W. (Facing Trafalgar Sq.), 67, King William St., E.C., or local agents.

THROUGH TICKETS via CANADA to JAPAN, 22½ days; CHINA, 27½ days; AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. (Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of 'Burns,'" and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. BECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water Swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaveroch Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL (only 2½ hours from Paddington) facing due S., offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. Central for Croome and Ledbury Hounds, loose boxes, hunters. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resid. Prop., F. MOERSCHELL.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

ALEXANDRA HOTEL.

Best position on Sea Front.

ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA.

Faces due South.

An Ideal Autumn and Winter Resort.
Patronised by the leading Families in the Kingdom.
Moderate Tariff; inclusive if desired.

Telephone No. 64.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic
Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management. Just RE-OPENED.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
Entirely RE-BUILT and EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—The treatment of Rheumatism, Gout, Dyspepsia, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Obesity, &c., is greatly shortened by the LATEST ELECTRICAL METHODS. ALL THE NEWEST BATHS. The Cure Department is under the direction of E. NEU, M.D. (Bonn University).

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Spring Resort. Centre of beautiful and Historic Country. Enlarged, remodelled. Large Stable & Garage. Mod. Tel. 0350 & 100 Leamington.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500ft. alt. Bracing air, lovely scenery, 9-hole Golf course. Static Electricity. High-frequency Currents. Radiant Heat X Rays. Vibratory Massage.—J. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

The HEALTHIEST SPOT IN SCOTLAND.
At the foot of the Grampians. Grand scenery. Every Modern Comfort. Excellent Cuisine. Electric Light and Heating. Spacious Lounge. Billiards. IDEAL RESORT for GOLF; 18-Hole Course near. MOTORING. Motor Garage and Pit. TENNIS and BOWLING GREENS near hotel. Send for Illustrated tariff to C. A. THIEM, Proprietor

THE AFRICAN AND EUROPEAN INVESTMENT COMPANY, LTD.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS.—To be submitted to the Shareholders at the Third Ordinary General Meeting of the Company, to be held at the Company's Offices, Lewis & Marks Building, Johannesburg, on Tuesday, 7th day of May, 1907, at 12 noon.

JOHANNESBURG,
To the Shareholders. 18*th March*, 1907.

Your Directors beg to submit their Second Annual Report and the Audited Accounts of the Company for the twelve months ending 31st December, 1906.

CAPITAL.—Since the closing of the year under review arrangements have been made for the increase of the capital of the Company, to enable the agreement entered into with the Transvaal Proprietary Limited to be carried into effect. The resolution authorising an increase of 250,000 shares was passed at a Special General Meeting held in Johannesburg on the 29th January last, but as, for legal reasons, it was found impossible to obtain registration of this increase, a further Special General Meeting has been called for 7th May next, at which resolutions will be submitted for the rescission of the previous resolutions and to authorise the increase of the capital by 200,000 shares only, viz., to £1,700,000. Should this resolution be passed, the total issued capital of the Company, after completion of the purchase of the assets of the Transvaal Proprietary Limited, referred to hereunder, will be 1,538,592 shares, which will leave a balance of 161,408 shares in reserve.

PROPERTIES.—The land holdings of your Company at 31st December last were practically as set out in the last Annual Report, with the exception that certain farms in which your Company had a partial interest have been transferred to three subsidiary companies, the L. & B. Exploration Company Limited, the Zand-Rivier Exploration Company Limited, and the Snymans Drift Exploration Company Limited, which have been formed with the object of developing the properties acquired.

The area of freehold ground owned by your Company, including the properties being taken over from the Transvaal Proprietary Limited, comprises a total of 1,011,037 acres, the following being a summary:—

No. of Farms.	District.	Extent. Morgen.	Sq. Roods.	No. of Farms.	Districts.	Extent. Morgen.	Sq. Roods.
49	Marico	157,042	247	4	Lydenburg ...	15,069	10
2	Pretoria	2,906	139	5	Waterburg ...	19,694	515
1	Middelburg .	2,714	272	1	Ermelo ...	2,334	528
29	Rustenburg .	72,220	93	3	Zoutpansberg	7,468	388
10	Bloemhof ...	25,092	484	3	Boshof (O.R.C.)	13,589	485
4	Wolmaranstad	9,414	311	2	Vredefort (O.R.C.)	2,236	52
44	Lichtenburg .	134,834	346
3	Potchefstroom	11,674	283	160		477,692	553

In addition your Company will, when the necessary registrations and transfers are completed, hold 30,000 shares of the nominal value of £1 each, being the whole of the issued capital of the Bechuanaland Farms Limited, a company which has been formed to acquire the following freehold ground, viz:—

No. of Farms.	District.	Morgen.	Sq. Roods.
8 ...	Mafeking (British Bechuanaland) ...	12,634	95
34 ...	Vryburg " " ...	106,499	318
		119,133	413

equal to 252,146 English acres.

A map showing the position of the farms owned by the Company in the western districts of the Transvaal, where the greater portion of its property is situated, is enclosed with the report.

SHARE INTERESTS.—During the severe depression that existed in the South African market last year your Directors took advantage of the opportunity which occurred of making further investments, whereby the average cost of the shares previously held by the Company was considerably reduced. They have also during the year considerably increased the Company's share interest in Roberts Victor Diamonds Limited, the holding in that company now showing a very substantial appreciation in value.

The debenture and share investments held on 31st December last, stood in the books at a cost of £784,433 0s. 1d., of which £503,926 18s. 6d. was represented by shares which had a quotation on the Stock Exchange. The balance of £280,506 1s. 7d. is represented by shares for which there is at the present time no Stock Exchange quotation.

Your Directors have every hope that during the present year more settled conditions will prevail in the Transvaal under the new Responsible Government, and should these hopes be realised, your Company, in view of its large and important holdings in various South African land and mining companies, should benefit to a very great extent in the general prosperity which they confidently anticipate will result.

ROBERTS VICTOR DIAMONDS LIMITED.—The results obtained by this Company during the past year have in every way justified the expectations formed by your Directors as to the great promise of the mine. From the commencement of washing operations in June last up to 31st December, a total of 9,967 loads were washed which produced 20,406 carats of diamonds, an average turn of 68 carats per 100 loads, the diamonds being of high quality. The turn for the months of January, February and March, 1907, have yielded 29,511 carats of diamonds from 39,503 loads washed, equal to nearly 75 carats per 100 loads, so that the yield from the beginning of washing operations up to the end of February, 1907, has been 49,917 carats from 69,470 loads, equal to 70 carats per 100 loads washed.

An interim dividend of 5s. per share has just been declared by the Company.

TRANSVAAL PROPRIETARY LIMITED.—The Shareholders have been advised by the circular of 7th December last of the land interest, investments and cash assets which have been acquired from the Transvaal Proprietary Limited. The properties taken over are, in the opinion of your Board, of very considerable value, and will greatly strengthen the powerful position already held by your Company as the largest landowner in the Western Transvaal. Many of the farms acquired adjoin those previously held by your Company, and the consolidation of these land interests will considerably decrease the cost of supervision and facilitate any scheme which may be decided upon for the settlement of the land.

The Company also acquires by this purchase certain stocks and shares of high class character, the value of which was at 31st December last approximately £60,000. These stock and share assets do not appear in the balance sheet, as the purchase was not completed at the end of the year.

MINING DEVELOPMENTS.—Active prospecting operations have been continued during the year on the Company's farms in the Pietersburg District. Numerous reefs have been located on the properties, and development work carried out on the most promising of these. On the Farm Snymans Drift, one of the reefs, which has been followed at surface for about 400 feet along the strike, has been opened up for some distance by means of adit levels, the developments having proved a quantity of payable ore. Plans are now being drawn up for the development of this mine on a larger scale, and in the meantime prospecting operations are proceeding to prove the value of other reefs on this and the adjoining Farm Zand-Rivier.

Prospecting for diamonds has been undertaken on the Company's properties in the Boshof District of the Orange River Colony, particularly on the Farm Elandsfontein, which adjoins the Roberts Victor Mine, but no pipe has so far been located.

Some discoveries of diamondiferous alluvial have been reported from the Zoutpansberg District, and these discoveries are receiving the attention of the Board.

The Company has many farms in the Marico District, in the neighbourhood of the Malmani Goldfields; in the Bloemhof District, in the vicinity of the Abelskop and Botmansrust Mines; and in the Lichtenburg District near the Madibi Goldfields, from which very favourable developments have recently been reported. If the work now being carried out on these properties continues satisfactory, your Board will consider the question of starting prospecting operations on some of the Company's farms in the neighbourhood.

FARMING OPERATIONS.—Increased attention has been given to the agricultural possibilities of the many valuable farms owned by the Company, more especially in the western district of the Transvaal. The Marico District in particular is one of the most favoured parts for agricultural purposes, being well watered and rich in grass land, and the soil being prolific in the production of crops such as wheat, oats, barley, tobacco and fruit and vegetables of all kinds. The opening of the Krugersdorp Zeerust Railway, which may be expected very shortly, will greatly increase the value of land in this neighbourhood, by facilitating transport of market products to the various centres, and the Marico District will then bid fair to be one of the great market growing centres of the Transvaal. Your Company are the freehold owners of a very large extent of land in this district, namely, 380,000 acres, and as it possesses great mineral possibilities as well as good agricultural value your Directors consider this block of farms as one of their most valuable assets. Endeavours are being made to obtain white settlers, and assistance is being offered them in reinstating the homesteads and in putting down wells for water, while rewards will be offered for the discovery of any payable reefs on the properties leased to them.

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT.—It will be seen from the Profit and Loss Account that after writing off £19,357 3s. 1d. for Administration and Office Expenses in South Africa, London and Paris, £4,422 3s. 9d. for engineering and other expenses incurred during the year, and £1,185 11s. 9d. from Preliminary Expenses, the balance of receipts over expenditure for the year amounts to the sum of £7,103 13s. 6d. This, with the balance of £2,609 14s. 10d. brought forward from last year, making a total of £9,713 8s. 4d., it is proposed to carry forward

DIRECTORS.—Three of your Directors, namely, Messrs. J. N. de Jongh, Samuel Marks and Julius Weil, retire in accordance with Article 105 of the Articles of Association, but are eligible, and offer themselves for re-election.

AUDITORS.—The Auditors Messrs. Deloitte, Dever, Griffiths, Annan & Co., also retire, but are eligible, and offer themselves for re-election. The Shareholders are asked to appoint Auditors and to fix their remuneration for the ensuing year.

By order of the Board,
G. D. MASSEY, Secretary.

THE OCEAN
ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION, LTD.
FOUNDED 1871. FUNDS £1,452,925.
(31st December, 1905.)
Head Offices: 36-44, Moorgate Street, London, E.C.
Branches and Agencies throughout the World.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY
(LIMITED),
HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.
INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.
NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. Interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. Interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

PHOSFERINE

The Greatest of all Tonics.
RADIATES HEALTH.
Used in Court and Cottage. Supplied by
ROYAL COMMANDS
To The Royal Family, The Empress of Russia, The King of Greece, The Queen of Roumania, The Dowager Empress of Russia, The Crown Princess of Roumania, and the principal royalty and aristocracy throughout the world.

It is the most powerful Nerve and Recuperative Tonic known. It removes Mental Depression, Want of Tone and Nerve Power. It has remarkable Health-giving, Strength-giving, Energising & Rejuvenating properties

Proprietors:—ASHTON & PARSONS, LIMITED.
La Belle Sauvage, London, E.C.

FOR GOUT, GRAVEL, RHEUMATISM, etc., DRINK
VICHY CELESTINS (State Spring)
Caution: See that each bottle has a neck label with VICHY-ETAT & the name of the Sole Agents: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 26, Upper Thames Street, LONDON, E.C.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING
and H.M. The QUEEN.

179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.

Novelties for Gifts in all Departments.

No. M 793.—15-ct. Gold Expanding Bracelet with 15-ct. Gold Reliable Watch, set Pearls and Amethysts, Only £12 12s.

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6/9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets. Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds, Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, post free.

THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.

With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position.
Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick...£3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Made to fold flat, 15/- extra.

Catalogue Free.

GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., Queen's Walk, NOTTINGHAM

THE New Scotch Tartan Skirt.

COPLAND & LYE'S "HIGHLAND" SKIRT.

Smart Walking Skirt in All-Wool Tartan. May be had in the principal Clan Tartans.

Price 42/- Carriage paid in Britain.
Bodice Material 10/6 extra.

COPLAND & LYE

Caledonian House, GLASGOW.

The Leading Specialists in Scotch Textiles.

Illus. Catalogue Post Free.

"Clachan" Scotch Tweeds, 58in. wide, 4/11 per yd.
"Kelvindale" Cheviot Tweeds, 54in. wide, 3/11 per yd.
"Hebridean" Scotch Tweeds, 56in. wide, 3/6 per yd.
"Caledonian" Winceys from 11½d. to 2/2 per yd.

Patterns Post Free on Request.

COPLAND & LYE, 165, SAUCHIEHALL STREET, GLASGOW.

OF ALL LEADING TAILORS.

Quality MOTOFRIEZE

Colour FADED STUBBLE (and 23 others).

The only truly Hygienic cloth for Motor Garments.

Descriptive Booklet (with patterns) from the BALLYMENAGH WOOLLEN FACTORY, Ld.,

Great Pulteney Street, Regent Street, London, W.

A BISSELLED Carpet is cleaner than a brushed carpet. Its pile is softer, its colours brighter, and its durability enormously prolonged.

All Stores and Ironmongers sell the BISSELLS at 11/3, 14/- and 15/6.

"THE QUEEN OF Apollinaris TABLE WATERS."

NOBLE'S SERGES

The hardest-wearing Fabrics in the World.

Noble's Serges will stand an amazing amount of hard wear. Neither burning sun nor drenching rain injures them. They may be washed with common soap—even in boiling soda without changing colour, shrinking, or going to pieces. Send for patterns of John Noble's.

Royal Yacht Club & Imperial Serges

In Navy, Cream and Black. Every piece British made, absolutely fast-dye, will never shrink or spot. In all weights to suit all climates. In all prices to suit all pockets. 160 qualities. Say whether Navy, Cream or Black required, and whether for ladies' or men's wear.

Prices 1/4½ to 8/9 per yard.

John Noble's newest ranges of plain and fancy Dress Fabrics surpass anything previously shown. All Patterns Post FREE on approval.

56-page Fashion Guide free.

JOHN NOBLE Brook's Mills MANCHESTER

A Drink. A Tonic. A Medicine.

WOLFE'S

Aromatic Schiedam

SCHNAPPS

The purest spirit distilled for human consumption. Admirable as a pick-me-up, tonic, or digestive. As a beverage it combines happily with aerated waters. And in addition, WOLFE'S SCHNAPPS has well-known medicinal virtues, notably in the case of delicate women.

To be had of all Wine and Spirit Merchants, Licensed Grocers, &c.

Wholesale Agents for the United Kingdom:
The FINSBURY DISTILLERY Co., LONDON.

EXTRAFINE

"THE EXQUISITE EGYPTIAN."

"NESTOR"

Cigarettes

(Nestor Gianaclis, Cairo).

Guaranteed absolutely free of all drugs or chemical flavourings, the peculiar aroma being due solely to the exquisite quality of the Tobaccos used in the Blend.

Imported in two qualities—
Surfine and Extrafine.

Specialities—Gold Tipped "King" and "Queen" Cigarettes. Also special packets of ten for Golfers and Card Players, including scoring cards, rules, &c.

Of all Tobacconists and Stores throughout the World, and 10, New Bond Street, London, W.

BENGER'S

The particular and important feature of Benger's Food is that it can be prepared to suit any idegree of digestive power. It contains in itself the natural digestive principles which act during the cooling process just before it is finally heated for serving. As the weak stomach of babe or invalid begins to strengthen by the assimilation of the Food, a gradually increasing amount of digestive work can be left to it, thus giving the advantage of a regulated exercise of the digestive functions

"Retained when all other foods are rejected."

WATSON'S

THREE STARS

WHISKY

A Brightening, Bracing Blend,
A Drink of Life and Radiance.

LANCHESTER

CARS

AWARDED GOLD MEDAL

In the Vapour Emission Trials held in London on March 19th under the auspices of the Royal Automobile Club, the Lanchester obtained first place, and was awarded the Club's GOLD MEDAL.

On Easter Monday, in the Midland Automobile Club's Reliability Trials the "Lanchester" made a NON-STOP RUN and was awarded FULL MARKS.

It will pay you to know more about the "Lanchester."
Descriptive Catalogue Post Free.

THE LANCHESTER MOTOR Co., Ltd.,
BIRMINGHAM. MANCHESTER. LONDON.

APPLE TEA

(Thompson's) in Powder.

Nature's Wonderful Cure for Gout, Rheumatism, Indigestion, Nervousness, and excessive Uric Acid in the Blood. Made from Selected Apples only.

TRY IT AT ONCE.

A splendid Substitute for Tea, as the latter creates Uric Acid, &c.

A delicate flavour, and similar to China Tea.—Vide Lancet.

EASILY AND QUICKLY MADE.

Why take Physics, when Nature's Product will assist in restoring your health?

3/- per pound, post free.

To be obtained at the Army and Navy Stores, Chemists, and at

THE PURE FOOD SPECIALTY CO.,
8, HART STREET, LONDON, W.C.

OUR PUZZLES.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Building, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on postcards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand, whilst in the case of new Competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 2, SPECIAL FOREIGN.

Original Parodies of Tennyson's "Break, Break, Break." A selection of these will be printed next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 3, SPECIAL FOREIGN.

The great national—I may even say the great imperial—game of cricket undoubtedly forms a common subject of interest and bond of sympathy between Englishmen in all parts of the world, and in this interest, from the spectator's point of view at any rate, the majority of English women also share. So I am proposing, this quarter, to exploit the subject for the benefit of my foreign readers, in connection with the forthcoming tour of the South Africans in this country.

To that end I offer the usual Prize of Two Guineas to that competitor who shall select

THE BEST ALL ENGLAND XI. THAT CAN BE CHOSEN TO UPHOLD THE GLORY OF THE OLD COUNTRY UPON THE CRICKET FIELD AGAINST UNITED SOUTH AFRICA.

The name of any living cricketer, qualified to play for England, is eligible for inclusion in such Eleven, whether, in point of fact, he is able to turn out this season or not.

The Prize will be awarded on a plébiscite basis: i.e., it will be given to that competitor whose Eleven tallies most nearly with the "Ideal Eleven" arrived at by collating all the Elevens sent in, or, in the event of ties, the prize money will be equally divided.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i.) This Competition is only open to readers residing outside Europe.
(ii.) No Competitor must send in more than one All-England Eleven.
(iii.) All "Elevens" must reach TRUTH Office, Carteret-street, London, S.W., on or before July 31, 1907.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,465.

COMBINATION OF NOT MORE THAN FOUR ENGLISH WORDS CALCULATED TO TAX A SPEAKER'S POWERS OF ENUNCIATION.

This has been an exceedingly difficult competition to adjudicate upon. After mature consideration, I have decided to divide the Prize between QUERY, ISSOR and THE RASCAL, each of whom, therefore, will receive 14s.

QUERY'S "Combination" was: "Soldiers Shrugging Shoulders."
ISSOR'S " " "Six Thick Thistle Sticks."
THE RASCAL'S " " "She chews Sue's shoes."

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,466.

I much regret that I am imperatively obliged to defer this award for one more week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,467.

ALLITERATIVE AND EPIGRAMMATIC DESCRIPTIONS OF A TYPICAL ENGLISH BANK HOLIDAY.

The Prize in this competition is divided equally between CHERRYPICKER and BRAD, whose epigrams were printed in TRUTH of March 27th last.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,473.

Lord Curzon of Kedleston has been recently calling attention to the fact that there is no public memorial, either in London or Calcutta, to perpetuate the name of Clive, the great founder of our Indian Empire. His lordship considers the omission a national disgrace, and suggests that it should be remedied as soon as possible, pointing out that the present year, in which falls the 150th anniversary of the battle of Plassy, affords an admirable occasion for putting the matter in hand.

Now assuming that Lord Curzon's suggestion is translated into practice and that a public memorial is erected to the famous soldier and statesman, some suitable inscription would, of course, have to be devised. And it seems to me that a really interesting competition might result from inviting readers of TRUTH to see what they can turn out in this direction.

Of all such inscriptions now in existence, I think no nobler or more effective can be found than Tennyson's famous four-lined verse inscribed upon Sir John Franklin's cenotaph:

"Not here; the White North has thy bones; and thou,
Heroic sailor soul,
Art passing on thy happier voyage now
Towards no earthly Pole."

I quote this, not as a model to be parodied or imitated, but only as an example of how much can be said, and said well, in so short a compass.

Of course, I have no expectation of finding a Tennyson among my competitors; but I do know that quite a number of them have the gift of neat and appropriate verse, and, in confident hope that some of them at least will rise to the occasion, I now offer the usual Prize of Two Guineas for:

THE BEST INSCRIPTION, IN FOUR LINES OF RHYMED VERSE, SUITABLE FOR ENGRAVING UPON THE PROPOSED MEMORIAL IN HONOUR OF ROBERT, LORD CLIVE, THE HERO OF PLASSY AND FOUNDER OF OUR INDIAN EMPIRE.

Competitors are not restricted to any particular metre, save that each line of the four must rhyme with at least one other line, and that no line must exceed twelve syllables.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i.) No Competitor must send in more than one Rhymed Inscription.
(ii.) All Inscriptions must reach TRUTH Office by the first post on Monday, April 29, at latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of SINCERITÉ, winner of TRUTH Prize No. 1,458, is Miss Saralata Chaterjé, Champs, Yonne, France.

 The real name, with the address, of DERULA, winner of TRUTH Prize No. 1,463, is A. Bilderbeck Esq., 3, Queen's Terrace, Stockmore Street, Oxford.

 The real name, with the address, of ALLEGRO, winner of TRUTH Prize No. 1,464, is Miss Winifred German, 30, Nelson Road, Southsea, Hants.

WHIG.—I duly note your corrections. Very sorry for the misprints, for which perhaps the pressure consequent upon the Easter holidays was, to some extent, responsible.

KORAH.—Your correction duly noted.

MART.—Also yours. For explanation see answer to WHIG above.

A COMPETITOR.—The points which you raise have not escaped my eye and are under careful consideration.

FREDA.—Your nom de plume duly registered.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,470.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

HUMOROUS POEMS SUPPOSED TO BE WRITTEN BY A "LITTLE BEAST" OF A PET DOG IN ANSWER TO FATHER VAUGHAN'S DIATRIBES.

A TOT TERRIER'S PROTEST.

Good Father, when you call us names our temper's hot you rouse.
Why use such beastly language to society's bow-wows?
But that your cloth's against it, one might really think, perhaps,
You envied our siestas in such pretty women's laps!
Now should the transmigration of what mortals dub their souls
Change yours from priest's to puppy's—how the thought my mind consoles—
I may see you run the gauntlet yet of those you now assail,
With a transmigrated kettle tied to your post-mortem tail!
Kismet.

You call me "little beast," O Father Vaughan!
'Tis not my fault that I am "little" born;
But have you never read, or heard men say,
That "Parvis in est sua gratia"?
I bark on four legs, and you growl on two;
I wag my tail—a thing you cannot do.
I love my mistress, and she loves me well.
Her virtues praise, her failings do not tell!
Allos.

My name was "Fido" formerly,
But now, alas! a change
Has come upon me unawares
And I no more have mange
The food so much I used to eat
Has, to my sorrow, gone—
And learning I'm a "little beast"
She's called me "Father Vaughan"
Libra.

O, worthy Father, cease to storm,
You're really too audacious,
If I had oratorial form
I would not be pugnacious.
My mistress loves "that manly priest"
(She here alludes to you, sir),
'Tis 'cause I'm such a "little" beast
That there is room for two, sir.
Petronius.

Of ladies' pets, staid Father Vaughan,
You've late become a hater,
Your allegations false we scorn,
And spurn the allegator.
Still, little dogs shall have their days—
Unchecked their owners' passion—
While you, a mere ephemeral craze,
Will soon be out of fashion.
Amolycus.

When Father Vaughan expends his hate
Upon the softer sex,
As cleric and as celibate,
His satire no one checks:
But weaker things why thus attack?
'Tis mean, to say the least',
To hit those who can't hit him back
And dub me "little beast"
Herm. me.

O, ghostly Father! why this wrath?
It ill beseems thy sacred cloth
Thy fellow creatures to revile—
The lesser "beasts" less prone to guile:
Because the fair ones us caress,
And to their bosoms sometimes press,
Is it envy? oh, at thy age,
Would thy reverence were more sage!
Sincérité.

Sir Preacher, when in search of quarry new
Our present quarrel was begun by you,
You recked not I, source of unhallowed joy,
Was capable of dire revenge, my boy:
But, as your fellow-craftsman, Bishop Hatto,
Supplied a toothsome meal to many a rat: O!
So will my teeth find in the calves of Vaughan
Most tasty mince meat or well spiced brawn
Oscam.

I am only a poor "little beast," Father Vaughan,
But 'tis hard in this time of social reform,
When feelings of sentiment so rule the land
That 'tis very great trouble to get a man hanged,
That you from the pulpit should against me inveigh,
And talk against me in this scandalous way.
However, the only effect that I see
Is that Mistress is fonder than ever of me.
Dora

I'm only a little pet dog, dear Father,
But yet I have a warm, true heart of my own.
Which beats with a love so untold, that rather Methinks 'tis the love that for much shall atone.
Despise not the "little beast" then, but remember
That He, who data note all the sparrows that fall,
Looks down with compassion on devotion so tender
To one of His creatures, no matter how small.
Vesta.

I am dubbed "little beast" by an eloquent priest
Who denounces my cushions of silk,
And who thanks that, at least, he'er a dog for his feast
Should I require silver saucers for milk!

With a true canine scorn, I thee now, Father, woo
Not to utter a libel so mean,
Lest you find, one fine morn, that your cassock is torn,
And that your "little beasts'" teeth are keen.
Pyrrhus.

"Ce qu'il y a de meilleur dans l'homme, c'est le chien."
If I have snapped, sir, at your rev'rend shins,
If I have yelped, sir, at your rev'rend toes,
Remember oft you've said my lady sins,
And that those who attack her are my foes.
Not able to retort by speech or pen,
You should, most worthy Father, grant at least,
That in comparison with certain men,
I am in very truth but "little" beast.
Riparian.

Dear Father, with feelings of sorrow
And pity I've heard of your case,
Unmingled with fear for the morrow,
Despite your attacks on my race.
"Little beasts" are quite legal, and surely,
Whate'er your intentions to vex,
One axiom defeats you demurely—
"De minimis non curat lex!"
Isobar.

Dear Father, in your bold attack
On doggies, who can't bite you back,
The rude expression, "little beast,"
Is one not suited in the least
To mouth of grave and reverend cleric,
Whose utterances should be Homeric.
I do not care a jot or tittle,
But it makes you look "beastly little."
John.

Oh! cruel man, to say such things,
A "little beast," indeed!
Why should my mistress not love me,
And pet and fuss and feed?
I would not interfere with you,
But be silent as a log,
If I were but a Cardinal
And you a little dog!
Dagmar.

Though you slang me, Father Vaughan,
From fall of eve till morning dawn,
I shall not mind it in the least,
Though you call me "little beast"!
My lady goes to hear you preach,
She's much amused by what you screech!
Your diatribes I've ne'er regretted,
For after each I'm still more petted!
Alpha Beta.

"Love me, love my dog"—so ran
The proverb of our youth,
And from the cleric's gibes we can
Inversely prove its truth.
Our ladies can themselves defend
From dogmatising priest;
But why attack a harmless friend,
The faithful "little beast"?
Miranda.

Bow-wow! bow-wow! you'll pardon me,
But though I am a "little darling,"
Kind reverend sir, I do not see
Why that should set you at me snarling.
The mighty Shakespeare did no more,
With all his brains, than physic throw me,
And why should you see fit to pour
Such venom on and hatred show me?
Walfred.

Bow-wow! bow-wow! I'll bark at least,
Tho' I am but a "little beast."
Perchance 'twill startle Father Vaughan
To learn that he and I are drawn
From the same pattern, and do still
The same design in life fulfil.
We bark, and snarl, and bark again,
But find the noise is wholly vain.
Snap.

I feel pugnacious—in a pet—through all your pulpit twaddle!
Some say I am a lady's duck—is it because I waddle?
I grant you are a talker (tall cur), sir—a poor short cur am I,
And, when you in your pulpit stand, of course you do not lie.
Reverse me and I am a god! what says the human preacher?
"That dogs delight to bark and bite"—but what of human teacher?
You preach and prate: Your needs to-day the ladies all are puzzlin'—
Pets, silks, and satins you dislike, p'r'aps what you want is muzzlin' (muslin).
Felixicus.

A poor "little beast" from the wicked West End,
Even I can't escape a good whipping.
On her lap I lie passive, my mistress's friend,
So how can I then be caught tripping?
Oh! Father, pray why are your wishes so ill,
That you'd fain have my mistress reject me?
Leave her missus's duties at least to fulfil,
For 'twere far greater sin to neglect me.
Asthore.

Oh, Father Vaughan, a little beast!
Although this may be true,
Of one thing I am sure at least,
That I've offended you,
So as above there'll be no bones,
I don't intend to go,
Instead, I'll try and make atones
By joining you below.
Petite.

Your scathing comments, Father Vaughan,
On ladies' little pets,
Are surely somewhat overdrawn;
Your Reverence forgets
We faithful to our mistress stay,
We cherish, love her, and obey:
More than your Reverence thinks, at least,
Of many a human "little beast."
Padre.

My mistress loves me, Father Vaughan,
No sermon will affect my fate,
But love, the target of your scorn,
Inspires a faithful heart to hate.
So "cave canem" in Mayfair,
And "cave canem," in the Park,
Your cloth shall not protect you there,
My bite is deeper than my bark!
Mirabel.

Upon my head my mistress pours
Her fond and true affection,
The Father at my mistress roars
To swell his church collection.
That wealth of love which I enjoy,
He never may have tasted;
Transferred to him without alloy
'Twould certainly be wasted.
Mart.

Oh! Father Vaughan, you little know
The good your cruel words bestow.
More pity now, more love at least,
Is poured on me poor "little beast."
With eyes so soft, and hair so sleek,
How could you so against me speak;
But you may say whate'er you dare,
It only increases love and care.
Portia.

"A little beast"—yet love of such may prove a saving power;
And love from e'en "a little beast" soothe many a darkened hour.
And even "little beasts" may teach some lessons worth the learning,
Of trust, affection, constancy, of sympathy discerning.
A little light, tho' poor it be, is better far than blindness,
And kindness shown to "little beasts" may grow to broader kindness;
For still the poet's words hold true, O! worthy, caustic priest:
"He prayeth best who loveth best both man and bird and beast."
Tom Nissed.

Dear Father V.—It seems to me
It's hardly (canine) cricket
To ask a "Skye" to have a try
At great St. Bernard's wicket.
But still I'll say—and if the cap
Your head should fit, pray don it—
Far better dog on daughter's lap
Than bee in Father's bonnet!
Cashier.

Poems have also been received from:—Caledon, Fido, Dick Maisch, Presto, Envoy, Dried Grass, Nemo, Dullard, Diana, Mary, Sphinx, Crank, Korah, Vox, Aster, Dabster, Difisel, Tea Eye, Rimabel, Kathleen, Bel Demonio, Tony, C. E. B., Sartar, Jean Qui Rit, Spartan, Echo, Porthos, J. C. H. M., J. McGrigor Allan, Bairnie, C. Marsh, Norman J. Gourlay, Derula, Carrots, Thersites, Prak, Sid, Grannie, Fredda, Clerici, Sponge, Northlander, Mandarin, Excise, Stoke, Quilp, Simplex, Sceptic.

HACKNEY
Furnishing Company, Ltd
No connection with any other firm.
A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

EASY INSTALMENT SYSTEM.
CHEAPEST, BEST, MOST ECONOMICAL. NO DEPOSIT REQUIRED.

£10 worth	£0 7 0	per month	£50 worth	£1 9 0	per month
£20 "	£0 13 6	"	£100 "	£2 5 0	"
£30 "	£0 18 0	"	£200 "	£4 10 0	"
£49 "	£1 6 0	"	£500 "	£11 5 0	"

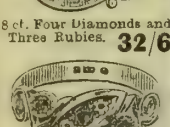
10 per cent. discount for cash. No large first payments. A full three years' credit. All goods delivered free in private vans. Carriage paid up to 300 miles. CATALOGUE POST FREE.
Compare our prices. No middle profits to pay.

TOWN HALL BLDGS., MARE ST., HACKNEY, LONDON, N.E.
N.B.—HOURS OF BUSINESS, 9 till 9. On THURSDAYS we close at 4 o'clock. Telegrams—"Furniments, London." Telephone No. 84, Dalston. On leaving Hackney Station ask for the New Town Hall. Our extensive premises adjoin.

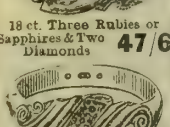
Caution.—We supply all our goods at the prices advertised, and strictly adhere to our TERMS.

Nine Large Shops next to each other.

18 ct. Four Diamonds and Three Rubies. 32/6



18 ct. Three Rubies or Sapphires & Two Diamonds 47/6



18 ct. Three Diamonds 30/-

18 ct. Clam Setting—Eight Diamonds and Three Rubies or Sapphires 25/-

These beautiful Gem Rings
are shown as examples of the extraordinary value sensations contained in . .
H. SAMUEL'S
Illustrated Catalogue.
From this book—sent free and post free—you may select Gold and Silver Watches, Clocks, Choicely Set Gems, Electro-plate, Cutlery, &c., and save yourself nearly one half.

H. SAMUEL has a Branch—one of fifty—at
178, STRAND,
and invites you to pay a visit if but to make an inspection and a comparison.

If you cannot call, send for Catalogue—200 pages—3000 bargains.
H. SAMUEL, Central Depot: Market St., Manchester.

THE TENSFELDT PROCESS
Electrolysis
HOME TREATMENT.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Everything that grows in nature depends upon a root for its growth, and until that root is destroyed the growth will continue.

When ladies realise this thoroughly, they will know how useless all liquids, pastes, &c., are for removing hair for ever.

The "Tensfeldt Apparatus" is Electrolysis simplified, and with it you can in the privacy of your own home kill the roots without leaving the slightest mark or disfigurement.

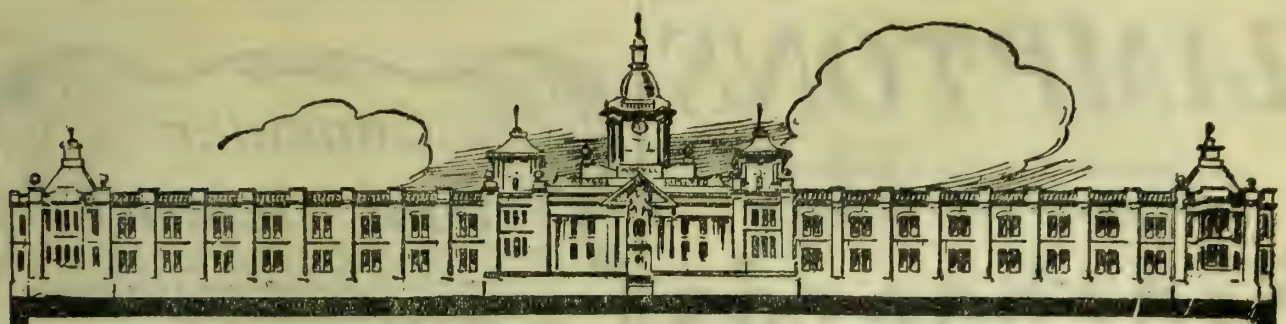
On receipt of 1d. stamp for postage, I will forward a copy of my book "The Face Perfect"—giving full particulars of this treatment—to all sufferers from this dread scourge of superfluous Hair.

Permanent Cure Guaranteed

All Letters Strictly Confidential.

MADAME TENSFELDT, 28, Shandwick Pl., EDINBURGH.

For an evening's amusement try
JOHN HEATH'S PENS.
Send 7 stamps for box of 24 samples.
JOHN HEATH & CO., Birmingham.



The Whole Secret of the Argyll Reputation.

THESE GREAT WORKS, a monument of commercial enterprise, are wholly and continuously engaged in the manufacture of ARGYLL CARS.

The key-notes of this model establishment, the most complete motor-car factory in the world, are standardisation and method. Every man is a specialist in the part he makes. Everything is utilised that can assist skilled workers to turn out their best work, and a perfect system of inspection ensures that only perfect parts are finally assembled.

The ARGYLL CAR is more than a mere association of standardised parts. It is a living entity, responding to the will of its owner, and possessed by the keen modern spirit of intelligence which informs every stage of its construction.

Argyll on your car means that it is British made throughout at the Argyll Works, Alexandria by Glasgow.

The Argyll Catalogue, free to enquirers, tells the story of the great Argyll Works, of interest and importance to all motorists. Full specifications are given of the following and other notable Argyll builds.

12-14 h.p., Side Entrance Body, £340. 16-20 h.p., Side Entrance Body, £475.

London Agents—ARGYLLS, LONDON, LTD., 17, Newman Street, Oxford Street, W.

Argyll Motors, Ltd., Alexandria by Glasgow.

PLAYER'S NAVY MIXTURE appeals to the discriminating smoker and the connoisseur of tobacco.

Sold in TWO STRENGTHS:

Mild, 5d. per oz. Medium, 4½d. per oz.

John Player & Sons, Nottingham, will forward testing samples post free to applicants mentioning this paper.

0298

EASY CHAIRS

ELEGANT and ECONOMICAL

ELEGANCE in an Easy Chair is essential; appearance and comfort must go together. Essential also that it should be obtained at a FAIR PRICE, and that the WORKMANSHIP and MATERIALS are absolutely trustworthy

Maple Easy Chairs will be found to be luxurious-looking, thoroughly well made, and durable in wear; and are sold at prices quite different to those that can be possibly quoted elsewhere

MAPLE & CO

LARGEST STOCK OF EASY CHAIRS IN LONDON

LONDON PARIS

HAMPTONS

are now exhibiting a number of exceptionally interesting

Sideboards

modelled on the best examples of the famous English & French Cabinet-makers of the

XVIIth & XVIIIth Centuries

All these are ready for immediate delivery.

For many examples of their Latest Productions in Dining Room Furniture, see Hamptons' Book C. No. 229, now ready, Post Free.

Hamptons pay Carriage to any Railway Station in the United Kingdom, and deliver free within thirty miles of Charing Cross.

ONLY SHOWROOMS:

PALL MALL EAST, S.W.

Consider Your Health!

When you consider how much depends upon it, what can be more important to you than the state of your health! If you are troubled with bad or indifferent health your capacities for work or pleasure are affected—even your life is threatened. Thousands know by old experience that are a blessing in the household and in every country of the world. No other medicine exercises so marked a control over

BEECHAM'S PILLS

Biliousness, Sick-Headache, Nervous Prostration, Indigestion, Constipation and other painful forms of stomachic troubles.

BEECHAM'S PILLS are good alike for man, woman and child, if taken according to directions. They are pre-eminently a family medicine—a remedy to have by one in readiness for every occasion when need arises.

There is yet another point in this connection that you should mark on the tablet of your memory. BEECHAM'S PILLS, in addition to their acknowledged value in Kidney, Liver, and Stomach disorders, have a specially beneficial effect in such ailments as are peculiar to women, many of whom endure needless pain and ill-health through ignorance of this important fact.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ (56 pills) & 2/9 (168 pills)

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S INVARIABLE ADVICE WAS

"Let the Patient have Schweitzer's Cocoatina, if you please."

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

THE COCOA for INVALIDS.

GUARANTEED ABSOLUTELY PURE SOLUBLE COCOA ONLY.

"This is Genuine Cocoa."—THE LANCET.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., LTD, 143, York-road, London, N.

DENT'S

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO THE KING.

WATCHES & CLOCKS.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock "Big Ben," and Sole Custodians Since its Erection.

DENT

TRADE MARK

Send for NEW ILLUSTRATED C & W CATALOGUE FREE.

CAUTION.

No instrument, from No. 38,000 upwards, is genuine without the above Trade Mark.

E. DENT & CO., Ltd.,

Find it necessary to inform the public that their ONLY ADDRESSES are—

61, STRAND, and 4, ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.

CHAS. KNOWLES & Co., LTD.

The Wykeham. From 3/3 per piece.

Manufacturers of

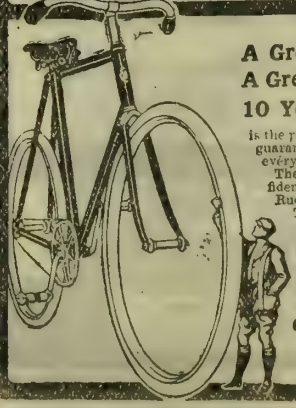
Art Wall & Ceiling Papers

Patterns on Application.

164, King's-road, Chelsea, LONDON, S.W.

The Largest Show-Rooms in London.

Rudge-Whitworth Britain's Best Bicycle



A Great Bicycle with A Great Guarantee.

10 Years

is the period for which all 1907 Rudge-Whitworths are guaranteed and a certificate of it is attached by Seal to every machine.

The record guarantee is given with complete confidence because of the great improvements found in Rudge-Whitworths only.

They are the result of new processes and discoveries in the Rudge-Whitworth Laboratories, the only ones devoted exclusively to the perfection of the bicycle.

Full details of the 81 models from £5; free packing and carriage; Easy Payments without extra charge, and a host of other exclusive advantages in the 64 page Art Catalogue post free from RUDGE-WHITWORTH, Ltd., Dept. 265 Coventry.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & MALCOMSON, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. LABOUCHERE at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1582. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, April 24, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE King is to arrive in London on Friday from the Continent, and Buckingham Palace will be the headquarters of the Court until Saturday, May 18, when their Majesties are to leave town for the Whitsuntide holidays.

It is understood at Lincoln that the King, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Connaught and Prince Arthur, and Prince Christian will all visit that city during the last week in June, when the show of the Royal Agricultural Society is to be held there. The show ground, which extends over 103 acres, being two miles in circumference, is on the West Common, which adjoins the Carholme where the racecourse is situated. The Royal Pavilion, which is a most imposing structure, has been erected on the south side of the ground facing Alderman's Walk. It is not known yet what arrangement will be made for the visits of the King and of the various Princes, but it is expected that his Majesty will stay at Belton Hall, near Grantham, as the guest of Lord and Lady Brownlow; and it is known that house parties will be entertained during the week by Lord and Lady Yarborough at Brocklesby Park, by the Duke and Duchess of Portland at Welbeck Abbey, by Lord and Lady Londesborough at Blankney Hall, and by Lord and Lady Heneage at Hainton Hall.

The Duke and Duchess of Cumberland and Princess Olga of Hanover have been staying at Naples during the last fortnight, and they met the King and Queen when the Royal yacht arrived on Thursday. It is expected that the Duke and Duchess and Princess Olga and Prince George will come to England this year on a visit to their Majesties, but they will not come until November, when they will be the guests of the King and Queen at Sandringham and at Windsor Castle. The Duke of Cumberland has not visited England since he attended his father's funeral at Windsor Castle in June, 1878, and the Duchess has not been in this country since her marriage.

The health of the young Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha has been causing some anxiety of late. The Duke was always delicate, and he has been suffering severely from gout and rheumatism, and derived very little benefit from a "cure" at Wiesbaden. He has now gone to Italy for a trial of the baths at a Tuscan spa. If this experiment proves a failure the Duke will probably spend a month at Bath before long, in order that he may go through a course of the waters, which have frequently proved most efficacious in similar cases.

The Duchess of Albany, who has returned to Claremont Park after spending a week at The Hague with her sister, the Queen Dowager of the Netherlands, has been joined by the Princess of Bentheim-Steinfurt, who has arrived in England from Germany on a visit to her sister. The late King of the Netherlands proposed for the Princess of Bentheim after he had been rejected by Princess Thyra of Denmark (now Duchess of Cumberland), but she decisively refused his addresses, as she was privately engaged to the Prince of Bentheim, whom she married soon afterwards. King William then proposed to her sister, Princess Emma of Waldeck-Pyrmont, who at once accepted him, and the marriage turned out most happily.

It was announced last week by a morning paper that the "ceremonial programme" for the visit of Prince Fushimi of Japan "is nearly complete," and that it includes a lunch at Buckingham Palace; which is quite wrong. The programme was complete before the King left England, but there may be alterations, so it will not be issued by the Lord Chamberlain until after his Majesty has returned to London. There is no such item as "lunch at Buckingham Palace." A State banquet will be given at the Palace for Prince Fushimi, who will also be present at the first State Ball, and while in London he is to pay visits to Windsor Castle, Aldershot, Portsmouth, and Osborne. It is very improbable that the King will command "a special theatrical programme" (sic) for the Prince, whose official visit to the Court will not be of long duration. Such visits are often limited to three days, and they never exceed a week. Prince Fushimi, however, will stay in England for some time after the termination of his official visit to the Court.

Queen Carola of Saxony (widow of King Albert) will arrive in London from Paris early next month, and she will probably stay in England until Whitsuntide. Her Majesty will very likely spend a week at Torquay. Queen Carola's visit to this country is to be private, but she will be entertained to dinner at Buckingham Palace by the King and Queen, and at Marlborough House by the Prince and Princess of Wales, and she will probably be present at the first State Ball if that event takes place while she is in London.

Lord de Ros is to be the Gold Stick in Waiting on the King during May, replacing Lord Wolseley. There will be plenty of duty for the members of the King's military household next month, as there are to be several Court ceremonials, at which their attendance will be required. During the last two months the duty of the Gold and Silver Sticks and their subordinates has been on paper only.

Lord Knollys comes this week to his apartments in St. James's Palace from Windsor Castle, and on Friday he will resume his duties as private secretary to the King. Sir Arthur Davidson acted as his Majesty's private secretary during March, and Major Ponsonby has been on duty since April 1. Lord Knollys has an excellent residence in St. James's Palace, which was granted to him by Queen Victoria on the death of Mrs. William Ashley. That lady's husband had been a member of Queen Adelaide's household, and she occupied these apartments for about half a century.

Lord Aberdeen has been busily fulfilling the duties which are always at hand for Viceroys, and unassisted by Lady Aberdeen, who is not yet equal to social exertions. During the week, in addition to other engagements, he dined with the Colonel and officers of the 11th Hussars, and attended the military entertainment and tattoo got up by them for the benefit of military charities. The sports took place at the Marlborough Barracks, to the north of the Phœnix Park. It was there that the late Duke of Clarence spent some time when with his regiment in Ireland. This week Lord Aberdeen is in London for his son's marriage. Since Lord Aberdeen's holding of office in Ireland, two of his sons have married. In neither case has the bride been Irish, notwithstanding the tradition of beauty and charm which attaches to the daughters of Erin.

The King has approved of the appointment of Lord Overtoun to be Lord-Lieutenant of Dumbartonshire, in the place of the late Sir James Colquhoun, of Luss. Lord Overtoun, who is a son of the late Mr. James White, was raised to the Peerage by Mr. Gladstone in 1893. The family wealth has been principally derived from the Rutherglen chemical works. Lord Overtoun, who has always been known as a staunch Liberal, is a prominent member of the United Free Church, and a warm supporter of many Evangelical societies. He owns considerable property in Dumbartonshire, which was purchased by his father.

Lord Midleton, who died last week at the age of seventy-seven, had been for some time in failing health. He was a Conservative of the old school, and a most staunch Churchman, and for a great number of years he was an active member of the Evangelical party. Lord Midleton was an hereditary Low Churchman, his father having been a prominent and influential leader of the Evangelicals, and for many years he was Rector of Bath, and afterwards Dean of Exeter. Lord Midleton was very popular in Surrey, as he entered most heartily into both the public and the social life of the county, and his hospitalities were as profuse as they were pleasant, for he was an excellent host. His estates in England and the South of Ireland are extensive, and he was well known as a considerate and liberal landlord, and was held in the highest esteem by his tenantry. He was Lord-Lieutenant of Surrey for nine years, and filled that office with dignity and efficiency, and since his retirement had been presented with his portrait by the magistrates and the members of the County Council. Lord Midleton was an elder brother of the late Warden of Merton.

The late peer resided principally at Peper Harow, his place near Godalming, which is situated in a most picturesque district. The house, which is both handsome and comfortable, was built early in the reign of George III. from designs by Sir William Chambers, and was afterwards enlarged by Cockerell. The old-fashioned gardens are very charming, and they contain some magnificent cedars of Lebanon, and fine conservatories. The deer park, which is large and well-wooded, is intersected by the Wey. The church at Peper Harow, which is near the house, was restored about sixty years ago from designs by Pugin, and con-

For Appeals, see page 1040.
For the Truth Hotel List, see page 1045.
For Special for Ladies, see pages 1050, 1051.
For Selected Foreign Hotels, see pages 1044, 1045.
For Amusements, see page 1047.
For Our Puzzles, see pages 1053, 1054.

tains the Midleton chantry. There are several interesting monuments, and some very good stained glass.

Lord Haliburton, who died at Bournemouth on Saturday, was associated during the whole of his official life with War Office administration, and he was a staunch adherent of the Wolseley-Cardwell régime. Only a few months before his death he publicly attributed the recent "disastrous administrative failures and serious losses" to the destruction, through party feeling, of Lord Cardwell's "great reform." Lord Haliburton was an able and zealous official of the old school. His connection with the War Office extended over forty-four years, and he was raised to the peerage by Lord Salisbury (on the recommendation of Lord Lansdowne) when he retired in 1898.

THE DEFEAT OF GENERAL BOTHA.

Long fought he for his nation's rights
On many a stricken field,
Nor ever in those hard-fought fights
Was Botha forced to yield.

But now in London's banquet-halls
He owns us British winners.
Unconquered by our swords, he falls
A victim to our dinners.

A man named Wilmot, of 73, Holland-road, W., has lately been writing letters stating that a Bordeaux firm called Regère, Heribel, and Co. had endeavoured to establish an agency in London, but, not having been successful, were prepared to dispose of their stock of clarets at an alarming sacrifice. Anybody desirous of utilising this great opportunity must do so instantly, as the wine was very soon to be sold by public auction, "probably to-morrow." Having heard of this great opportunity, I sent one of my staff to see Mr. Wilmot. He found the address to be a very modest house, with no appearance of business about it, and he was received by a female, who told him that Mr. Wilmot was not yet up, although it was close on mid-day. He explained that he wanted to see Mr. Wilmot about the purchase of some wine, to which the woman replied that Wilmot had given up the business, as it did not pay.

There is nothing very novel about all this, and probably most of my readers have before now had communications from gentlemen bearing a family resemblance to Mr. Wilmot. I happened to hear, however, that a certain club in Pall Mall received one of the above-mentioned communications, and, anxious to embrace the great opportunity offered, the committee gave an order for forty dozen of St. Estèphe 1904, at 10s. per dozen. They subsequently agreed to pay an extra 6d. per dozen for bottling and delivery on account of the smallness of the order, and sent a cheque for £21. The wine was duly delivered, and, according to my information, it was collected by the carman from an obscure establishment in the neighbourhood of Brixton. As this had occurred prior to my representative's visit to 73, Holland-road, I conclude that the club really relieved Regère, Heribel and Co. of the whole of their stock. My information being confidential, I am not at liberty to mention the name of the club; but if the members of any Pall Mall club should happen to be struck by the St. Estèphe 1904 which has just been added to the wine list, the foregoing facts may help them to appreciate the peculiar merits of the vintage.

There is at least one thing that they seem on the point of managing better in France—even if they do not do so already. The Chambre Syndicale des Patrons Coiffeurs de Paris, which is to say the Paris Hairdressers' Association, have decided, in future, to increase the salaries of their assistants and to suppress the pourboire habit by all means in their power. I have often wondered why some enterprising London barber, or Association of Barbers, has not started anti-tip hairdressing saloons. Of all forms of licensed petty blackmail the barber's tip is the most annoying. The barber does not do nearly so much for us as, say, the waiter—yet he expects a tip of just three times the size, relatively speaking. The waiter is satisfied, that is to say, with, roughly speaking, 10 per cent. on the amount of your bill; for a threepenny shave the barber expects a penny. What is more, if you revolt, you have just to find another barber, so ferocious becomes the attitude of the razor-armed extortioner.

I knew a man who was a conscientious objector to tipping barbers, and could not shave himself. He told me once that, according to careful calculation, he had been forced to travel considerably more than 100 miles during one year in order to find new barber-shops where his unbending attitude on the tip question was unknown, and to spend rather more than £5 in bus and cab fares in doing so. Finally, having exhausted the whole of inner London and most of the suburbs, he had to give up the struggle and grow a beard.

Referring once more to the "Where to Stay Bureau, Limited," of Baker-street, which has come under notice lately in Truth, I have learned that within the last month Mr. Powell, the virtual proprietor of the company, has been again endeavouring to obtain an investment of £100 in shares as a condition of the appointment of a lady secretary. Whether he has been successful I cannot say, but I hope it is not too late to repeat the warning already given against any such investment. To one lady who responded to his advertisement a few weeks back Powell stated that in the event of her resigning her postion in the office, her shares would be transferred, if she desired it, to her successor. This, however, was not the experience of the lady whose case has already been described; on the contrary, she has been unable to obtain a return of her money to this day. The applicant for the appointment also received from Powell a balance-sheet of the company, showing a profit for the year equivalent to a 5 per cent. dividend and a balance over. I understand that the "auditor" who signs this balance-sheet is an employee of the company, and that Powell keeps his own books, which somewhat detracts from the value of the document. It is quite possible, in view of what is already known, that the Bureau is making profits; but how long they will continue is very problematical.

A "CUP" PROBLEM.

Oh! "Everton" those call themselves;
Themselves these "Sheffield" call;
Though why so dubbed such hybrid elves
I cannot see at all.

From Scotland, England, Ireland, Wales
Recruited are their ranks;
But quite a small percentage hails
From Yorks or yet from Lancs.

There are few books that I find more interesting than those dealing with the history of London, especially when illustrated with pictures of the place as it looked in the days of our forefathers. Mr. Austin Brereton has made an admirable addition to this class of literature in his "Literary History of the Adelphi," just published by Messrs. Treherne. I can cordially recommend it to all Cockneys who care for the history of their native place. The history of the Adelphi itself and of its literary associations is, of course, only an affair of the last hundred and fifty years. But Mr. Brereton has gone back far beyond that, and given an interesting account of old Durham House—originally the London residence of the Bishops of Durham—on a part of the site of which the Brothers Adam erected the Adelphi, pretty much as it stands to-day. Durham House was one of the most ancient of the line of riverside palaces that extended of old from the Savoy to Westminster. The "literary history" of the site begins with Sir Walter Raleigh, who lived and worked—and smoked—at Durham House, in a room overlooking the river. It was a somewhat different prospect that he looked out upon from what we see to-day from Adelphi Terrace or the Hotel Cecil. If he could see it now, would he think it had changed for the better?

The highest price realised during the two days' sale of Sir Henry Mildmay's library from Dogmersfield Park was £1,300, which was paid by Mr. Quaritch for a superb fifteenth century Book of Hours, containing between fifty and sixty miniatures. The most interesting lot, however, which came up on Saturday, was a copy of the very rare first edition of Shakespeare's Sonnets (1609), consisting of thirty-eight leaves. This was sold to Mr. Quaritch for £800, and he paid £680 for the First Folio Shakespeare, which is an imperfect copy, several of the most valued leaves being missing, including the one opposite the title with the verses.

Certain questions asked last week by Mr. Middlemore should serve to recall attention to the Chantrey Fund scandal, which attracted a great deal of notice in 1903 and 1904, only to be shelved and forgotten through the medium of a House of Lords Committee. Among other things, Mr. Middlemore wanted to know whether the Government would introduce a Bill to reform the Chantrey Trust if they had adequate assurance from the other side of the House that it would be treated as non-contentious. Mr. Runciman, to whom the question was put, was of opinion that no such Bill would go through the House unopposed, but invited the questioner to communicate to him details of his proposals. If Mr. Middlemore is keen on this question, I recommend him to put his proposals into a Bill and introduce it at once.

It is rather a pity that this step was not taken a little earlier. The annual Royal Academy job at the expense of the Chantrey Fund is by this time in process of incubation, and will be hatched out in the course of a few days. Hitherto the trustees have been simply contumacious. Whether they have thought that the storm had blown over, or that by departing from the long established practice they would be giving themselves away, they have treated with contempt the public protests against the perversion of the trust and the report of the House of Lords Committee, and the Chantrey Fund has continued, as before, to serve as an annual prize at the Burlington House Show. It must be supposed, therefore, that the trustees will only be dislodged from their present position by legal procedure, or the summary remedy of a "short Act." Before the short Act is passed, however, its appearance on the table of the House might possibly have a wholesome effect on the minds of these Academical jobbers, and for that reason the sooner it is introduced the better.

I am asked to mention that the annual festival ball in aid of the Italian Hospital, Queen-square, W.C., will be held at the Galleries of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, Piccadilly, on Monday, May 6. Tickets may be obtained from the secretary at the hospital.

A cherished popular delusion is very roughly handled in an article in the Monthly Review by Mr. H. W. Horwill, who contends that the Americans are a race not of hustlers but of dawdlers. In proof of it he refers to what he has seen of the leisurely habits of their business men, the amount of time devoted to holidays and sports, the "painful trial of patience" involved in all shopping transactions, the slowness of traffic in the streets, the defects of the railway and postal services, the intolerable slowness of legal procedure, and so on. He even finds that the American newspapers are not as well up-to-date as our own! The American has gained his reputation as a time-saver, according to Mr. Horwill, simply because he makes more noise than anybody else over his work, and if he can only make a noise he is convinced that he is busy. After reading this article, I was very much struck to find in my Morning Leader a few days ago an interview with Mr. A. W. Gamage, who, after a visit to the United States, recorded precisely the same impression in almost the same words:—

THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION.—F.C.——, L.R.C.P., L.R.C.S.I., writes: "One lady in particular, whom I sent to London some five years ago to undergo Dr. Alabone's method of cure, is now in perfect health and is loud in his praise. Before she went under his care she had been pronounced an "utterly hopeless case" by two highly qualified medical men, both possessing an excellent reputation for accurate diagnosis."—"The Cure of Consumption, Chronic Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh," price 2s. 6d., by E. W Alabone, Lynton House, Highbury-quadrant, N.

> It is a superstition that the Americans hustle. In reality they only make more noise over less work. They will rush for one hour to make up for having wasted three.

The concurrence of testimony is striking and not a little comforting to us old-world people, who are always afraid that we are being left behind.

Lord Curzon of Kedleston is to be formally admitted to the office of Chancellor of the University of Oxford at a Convocation which will be held in the Sheldonian Theatre on Saturday, May 11. The last occasion on which a Chancellor was admitted at Oxford was in September, 1715, when Charles, Earl of Arran, succeeded his brother, the Duke of Ormonde, in that office. The installation of a new Chancellor, which is a most elaborate ceremony, always takes place at his first Encænia, when he confers the honorary degrees. This year's Encænia is fixed for Wednesday, June 26.

Canon Holland is to be the Canon-in-Residence and Sunday afternoon preacher at St. Paul's Cathedral during May, replacing Chancellor Newbolt. Dean Gregory, who has been very unwell, is better again. The Dean of St. Paul's is in his eighty-eighth year. He was appointed to a canonry in the Cathedral by Mr. Disraeli in November, 1868, and in December, 1890, Lord Salisbury promoted him to the deanery, after the death of Dean Church.

The annual festival service of the Sons of the Clergy is to take place at St. Paul's Cathedral on the afternoon of Monday next. There will be the usual elaborate musical service, with a largely augmented choir, and a band and chorus. The anthems are to be Beethoven's "Hallelujah Chorus," and a new work, composed for the occasion by Dr. Lloyd, of Eton College. The sermon will be preached by Canon Carnegie, rector of Birmingham Cathedral, who has earned a great reputation as a pulpit orator.

What was suggested in Truth last week as to the strained relations between the Dean of Canterbury and the Chapter is confirmed from several quarters. "The suppression of the Three Hours service on Good Friday," writes one correspondent, "is only one among many causes of dissatisfaction. The Dean's narrow and out-of-date Evangelicalism is a cause of offence to many, but is less widely resented than his lack of all effective interest in the religious life of the city." Another writes: "That a Deanery which only a few years ago, under Dean Farrar, was a centre of social and religious activity, should now produce nothing better than an attempt to force Evangelicalism of the Black Gown type upon the local clergy is a deplorable result of a most unfortunate appointment. . . . Some of the preachers summoned to the Cathedral pulpit from country villages have, I assure you, been worthy of a museum for extinct birds." Another correspondent "desires to add his testimony to what has been stated about Dean Wace's absenteeism"; and so on. These criticisms seem of weight because they cannot be attributed to the odium theologicum, for Dean Farrar was anything but a High Churchman.

Bishop Bromby, who died last week at Clifton at the age of ninety-three, was the oldest of Anglican prelates, having been consecrated for the See of Tasmania by Archbishop Longley in 1864. He remained in Australia for eighteen years, and then returned to England, in 1884, when he became Assistant Bishop in the diocese of Lichfield under the present Archbishop of York. In 1892 he removed to the diocese of Bath and Wells, where he assisted for nine years, and he did not retire from active work until he had passed his eighty-seventh birthday. Bishop Bromby was Vicar of St. Paul's, Cheltenham, from 1843 until 1864, and Principal of the Training College, and was the last Colonial Bishop appointed by the Crown. He was an able man, and he did his work thoroughly everywhere, while he was always much liked and warmly esteemed. He was a strong High Churchman, but, having both tact and wide sympathies, he worked with zeal and harmony with men of all parties both in the Colonies and at home. In politics he was a decided Liberal. The Bishop originated the well-known "Papers for the Schoolmaster," and he published both educational and theological works. His eldest son is the well-known Vicar of All Saints', Clifton, where Mr. Bromby succeeded the late Dean Randall.

The Rev. G. F. Hodson, who died the other day, in his eighty-sixth year, at North Petherton, Somersetshire, was the son of the well-known Principal of Brasenose, and a godson of Lord Grenville, and of Mr. Richard Heber, M.P. for Oxford University, the famous book collector. Mr. Hodson, who was Rector of Michelchurch for over forty years, was at one time a prominent and very popular figure in Somersetshire society. He was a keen sportsman, and in the early days of dog shows his services were in great request as judge in all parts of the country. He was one of the original members of the Kennel Club, and his decisions usually met with general approval. For many years he was the owner of a very fine mixed kennel of mastiffs, deerhounds, and bloodhounds.

The Lincolnshire papers of last week report a very forcible sermon delivered by Mr. Rhodes, the Vicar of Whaplode, with reference to the grievance of his parish and himself against the Governors of Uppingham School. The matter is one of very much more than local interest. In addition to the complaint about the diversion of the great tithe from the parish, the Vicar of Whaplode has a personal grievance against the Governors in the fact that a few years ago they distrained upon him for tithe. On the face of it, the exaction of tithe from a vicar is a proceeding which only express legal authority would warrant, and in this particular case it appears that a document clearly exempting the Vicar from liability for tithe was in the possession of the solicitor to the tithe owners. This incident was presumably due to some mistake or oversight, but it helps to show the attitude of the Uppingham Trustees towards the parish from which so much of their income is derived. The whole story is a conspicuous example of the abuses which have resulted in many country parishes from the appropriation of tithe to extra-parochial purposes.

A firm at Worcester forwarded to the Secretary at the General Post Office a packet of lottery tickets, addressed to "The Foreman" at their works, which had been received through the post from the Rev. Joseph Geoghegan, of St. Peter's Church, Phibsboro', Dublin. As I mentioned last week, books of tickets similarly addressed have been distributed broadcast throughout the country. The protest of the Worcester firm has elicited the following communication from the Secretary at the G.P.O.:—

> In reply to your letter of the 11th instant, concerning the delivery to you of an open packet containing circulars and tickets relating to a prize drawing, I am directed by the Postmaster-General to inform you that it is not the practice of this office to interfere with the transmission of such packets, when the circulars relate to drawings promoted for religious or charitable objects.

This is a new and, it seems to me, a very serious declaration of the policy of the Post Office in regard to the use of the post for the transmission of lottery tickets. The Postmaster-General, we now learn for the first time, takes upon himself to exempt from interference tickets relating to lotteries for religious or charitable objects. By what right does he do this? The object with which a lottery is promoted does not in any way affect its illegality, and in England, at any rate, it is a new departure for a Government Department to hold itself entitled to overlook a breach of the law if it considers that the law is being broken in the cause of religion or charity. In this instance it is an Irish Roman Catholic lottery. But would the Postmaster-General permit the same privilege in the case of a lottery promoted by a church or a charity in England? If he did he would be deliberately aiding and abetting the commission of an offence for which the principals could be prosecuted by the police. The idea that the law against lotteries should be set aside when there is —or is alleged to be—a religious or charitable object in view is quite indefensible, and I hope that some member of the House of Commons will call attention to the matter.

I have to acknowledge £5 from Rhino, and $5 from G. W. towards the Toy Fund.

The Irish Militia is to remain unaffected by Mr. Haldane's reforms. It might be as well, therefore, if attention were given to the way the system of billeting is worked in the 3rd Royal Irish Rifles. According to evidence that I have received from Newtownards, as many as six or eight recruits are packed into houses that have only accommodation for two or three at the outside. The state of things described is, in fact, such that if it arose in England one would expect the sanitary authorities to interfere. This is said to be the normal state of things, repeated year after year, and, apart from other objections to it, one would think that it can hardly help to stimulate recruiting. Why not put up a few huts for the men? An incidental objection to the billeting system is that the recruits' rations have to be shared in some instances with the families on whom they are quartered.

In reference to the question asked in Truth the other day as to whether a soldier serving in India forfeits his right (such as it is) to transfer to the home establishment by taking a furlough in England, I am told by several correspondents who have been good enough to write on the subject that according to the general practice in India the answer to the question is in the affirmative. It does not seem altogether fair—at any rate, the rule ought to be made clear, and the attention of men ought to be called to it before they apply for furlough. It is quite certain that at present a great many men have come home on furlough without the slightest idea that they were thereby condemning themselves to detention in India for at least six years after their return to the country.

An officer writing on this subject says:—

> The six years period is really a bit of a fraud. It used to be eight. The regulations still require a man to re-engage before he can register for transfer to the home establishment, while the Army Act does not allow a private to re-engage until he has eleven years' service. The names are sent in about June. Most men enlist in the winter months, when employment is scarce and times are hard. Thus, a man who joined in December, 1900, and went to India between October and February, 1902, could not apply till June, 1912, and might come home during the following trooping season, when he would have had between ten and eleven years abroad. I write "might come home," because, in point of fact, only about 1 per cent. of the establishment are allowed to come. A second man, who enlisted at the same date, might get a billet at home, and not go out to India till February, 1906. He also could submit his name for transfer in June, 1912, and might come home again at the same time as the first man.

I have had a lengthy statement calling attention to the unsatisfactory position of "acting" sergeant-majors on the permanent staff of the Volunteers, who hold the Army rank of colour-sergeant, with pay and allowances of that rank, but for pension and clothing rank as quartermaster-sergeants, while in many cases they combine with the ordinary duties of sergeant-major those of orderly-room-sergeant, armourer-sergeant, and quartermaster-sergeant, not to say quartermaster. This is an old-established grievance, and there have been suggestions for giving these men honorary warrant rank, and so forth. But I take it that if Mr. Haldane's Bill is carried, everything connected with the staffing of the Auxiliary Forces will have to be radically reformed, and that it is waste of time to discuss grievances of the Volunteer permanent staff just at present.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

The sergeant-major of an Irish infantry depot recently failed to pass after going through the musketry course at Hythe. Without any desire to reflect on the warrant officer personally, the incident seems a most instructive one, and deserving of careful notice. According to my information the man has been about fifteen years at the depot. He joined it as a corporal. For about five years he was employed as a clerk in the recruiting office. For another five years he was orderly-room clerk. He was then promoted to depot quartermaster-sergeant, and in September last he became sergeant-major, on the occurrence of a vacancy.

That a man with all this service should be going through the Hythe course at all seems rather an absurdity. But that he should be placed in a position where an important part of his duty is to train recruits and instruct them in drill and musketry, and that he should then be found incapable of passing the musketry course is a downright scandal. The foregoing case shows in the most convincing way how incompatible it is with true military efficiency that men should be allowed to spend the best part of their time in snug depot appointments, and then be jobbed into important positions, which ought to be filled by smart, practical soldiers. The infantry depots will never be anything but homes of sloth and incompetence until the principle is enforced that appointment to them, from the highest rank to the lowest, is only to be earned by meritorious regimental service, and only to be retained by the maintenance of efficiency. As the depot of the future is to be, under Mr. Haldane's scheme, the nursery and training ground of the "special contingent," which will be practically a militia force, it is more important than ever that this should be recognised, and the present system of staffing be reformed root and branch.

Some observations were made in these columns a few weeks ago on the distribution of certain obnoxious Protestant literature in connection with services at the European Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Gibraltar. A naval chaplain writes to point out that the institution in question is quite unconnected with the Church of England, and is managed by Presbyterian ladies. There are several Soldiers' and Sailors' Institutes in Gibraltar, but none are specially connected with the Church of England.

Apparently the resolution moved last Wednesday by Mr. Bellairs, seconded by Mr. F. E. Smith, and squelched ignominiously, represents the Parliamentary demonstration, so long and loudly threatened, which was to rescue the Navy from the mischievous policy of Sir John Fisher and his colleagues. If that view is correct, nascitur ridiculus mus. In support of the formidable indictment expressed in his motion, Mr. Bellairs had nothing to offer but vague and unsubstantiated insinuations; petty criticisms of recent changes, like the nucleus crew system; a complaint against the First Lord being in the Upper House, which has much reason in it, but no novelty; and the sort of observations on the shipbuilding programme which outside "experts" can always supply in quantities exceeding the demand.

Mr. Smith was even more disappointing. He seemed to have really got hold of something promising when he pointed to the increase of expenditure on "naval literature," and for a moment the House thought that something over £40,000 per annum had been spent in recent years on Sir John Fisher's Machiavellian measures for advertising his policy and humbugging the press. But when Mr. Robertson explained that the one publication which Mr. Smith was most concerned about had cost the Admiralty £35, and that others under suspicion represented an expenditure of a few hundred pounds, the scandal assumed the character of a mare's nest. The official Opposition very naturally washed their hands of Messrs. Bellairs and Smith, and the House took no interest in the discussion. The debate was of some use in showing how little substance there is in the campaign against Sir John Fisher, when the attacking party comes into the open. At the same time, the Admiralty needs criticism, and plenty of it, and it is a pity that the principal critics now in the field should have discredited all criticism by the absurd way in which they have overstated their case.

With reference to a statement in last week's Truth as to a naval officer having been invited by the Mead Cycle Company of Liverpool to sell bicycles for them on commission, I am informed by that firm that they never sent such a communication, and that the officer who supposed himself to have received it had really got hold of a letter intended for another gentleman of the same name, but different initials, who had been on the books of the company for some years. From correspondence submitted in proof of this, I gather that it was really the case.

In connection with the dispute which occurred some time ago between the Walmer lifeboat crew and the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, some hostile criticism was directed against the Rev. T. S. Treanor, the honorary secretary and treasurer of the Goodwin Sands and Downs Branch of the Institution. This, as I explained at the time, was due to a misconception of the part Mr. Treanor had taken in the matter. For a quarter of a century this gentleman has rendered very valuable services to the Institution, and the announcement last week of his resignation of the honorary secretaryship has been received with much regret in Deal and Walmer.

Know HUMPHREYS, and be well dressed. HUMPHREYS, opposite South Kensington Station, one of the biggest and best Dressmakers. Unusual originality combines with sensible, not fancy prices.

Many readers in India have sent on to me a postcard advertisement of "an extraordinary locket" which is being widely circulated by R. T. Meheta, of Bombay. This miraculous charm, says the veracious vendor, "presents before our Sight the Past, the Present, and the Future, gives us information of Heaven, the Court of India, Kylas and other mysterious places, the results of cases pending in the courts, profit or loss in trade, future rates of speculations," and many other things; also "the present on goings of friends at home and outstations can be clearly seen." Evidently the very article for a suspicious-minded husband or wife! But the locket does not seem to have enabled R. T. Meheta to perceive that he was throwing away a lot of money in printing and postage when he embarked on this advertising campaign.

Lord Curzon, following a well-established tradition, spoke of Lord Clive recently as "the Founder of our Indian Empire," and I should have thought that the justice of the phrase was hardly likely to be questioned in these days. But an old Indian officer of my acquaintance has another candidate for the honour:—

> The true founder of that Empire was General Stringer Lawrence, the first Commander-in-Chief in India, and "the father of the Indian Army." Clive belonged to the Madras European regiment, now the 1st Royal Dublin Fusiliers, which he joined in 1749. Stringer Lawrence, who formed that regiment from the independent companies of Englishmen then in the Company's service, and was their first colonel, was in command of the regiment when Clive joined, and it was under Lawrence that Clive learned his duties as a soldier.
>
> Lawrence fought the French with his regiment in Southern India from 1751 to 1754, and defended Trichinopoly with it during that time. He also fought many a hard action in the neighbourhood, especially the battle of Bahoor, where his regiment crossed bayonets with a French regiment, and at the Golden Rock, when he defeated a greatly superior French force. After the Marquis Dupleix's recall in 1754, hostilities were again renewed, and Lawrence defended Fort St. George against a great French army under the celebrated Lally in 1758-9, when the enemy raised the siege on the approach of reinforcements by sea.
>
> Had Trichinopoly or Fort St. George fallen, or had not the battles above alluded to been fought and won, France and not England would now be supreme in India.

With all respect to my correspondent, he seems to exaggerate his hero's achievements in comparing them with Clive's, and I certainly do not think there is much in the observation that Lawrence taught Clive his military duties. If ever a born soldier lived on this earth, I should say it was Clive. He won his spurs by the defence of Arcot, and broke down Dupleix's schemes when Lawrence—then Major Lawrence—was absent in England, and it is a commonplace of history that when he performed those extraordinary feats of arms he was practically a civilian, without military training. But when we speak of him as the Founder of the Indian Empire what we chiefly think of is the virtual conquest of Bengal at Plassy, and of all the work he performed in that region in subsequent times, down to the end of his last administration. The battle of Plassy really marked an epoch in the history of Asia and the world, and few men have written their names bigger in history than Lord Clive, with all his faults. By all means let him have his monument, and let it be worthy of him.

Although they are placed in competition in the above letter, Clive and Lawrence seem to have been the best of friends, and it is to the credit of Lawrence that he was one of the first to recognise Clive's genius. Later on, when he was enriched by his triumphs in Bengal, Clive showed an equally worthy appreciation by settling £500 a year on his old commanding officer. Lawrence was a gallant soldier and an able officer, and in a sense he may be correctly described as "the Father of the Indian Army." But is it at all correct to speak of him as "the first Commander-in-Chief in India"? The title he certainly never bore, and as for the fact, did he ever exercise any command except in what afterwards became the Madras Presidency?

In some of the comments that have been published on the Nairobi affair an attempt has been made to minimise the severity of the floggings. It has been insinuated that, after all, the natives only received a little gentle chastisement at the hands of Captain Grogan and his fellow floggers. This is certainly not borne out by the description of the scene in the Star of East Africa, which relates with evident approval how "these niggers" were "triced up securely" and "soundly flogged"; how "Captain Grogan himself laid 'twenty-five of the best' on the first boy," and how Mr. Russell Bowker and Captain Thord Gray performed "a similar duty" on the other two. Not only were the floggings of a brutal character, but the whole business was carried out in front of the Nairobi courthouse, in deliberate defiance of the authorities, the protests of the magistrate being ignored, and a police officer being forcibly removed by the crowd. It seems to me that the sentences of imprisonment which have since been passed on these law-breakers were thoroughly well deserved.

I always thought that the Parliamentary borough which Dickens immortalised as "Eatanswill" had been pretty closely identified with Ipswich. However, it seems that Sudbury lays claim to this distinction. Some of its inhabitants have formed themselves into an association called the Eatanswill Club, and are publishing a journal called the Eatanswill Gazette. The Editor has kindly sent me a copy. He seems to be carrying on the Potts tradition very ably. I hope no Winkle will appear on the scene to disturb his domestic bliss. No doubt somebody else will carry on the joke, such as it is, by producing an Independent. For this reason Stammering cured only by personal tuition; interview on written application.—Mr. A. C. Schnelle, 119, Bedford Court-mansions, London, W.C. Pupils taken in residence.

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and à la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger. Open on Sundays.

I ask to be excused for saying more in praise of the Gazette. I would rather not find myself, like Mr. Pickwick, between the fire of the rival editors.

The special Act of Parliament which the Sandgate District Council obtained a couple of years ago for the regulation of the notorious Jones Homes does not seem to have been of much use, judging from the evidence in a case heard last week by the Elham Bench. Mr. P. H. Jones, the son and successor of John James Jones, the founder of the business, was summoned under the Public Health Act for permitting overcrowding at Ontario House and Cambridge House, two of the so-called convalescent homes where patients from poor-law infirmaries in London and elsewhere are received. It was shown that at both houses the inmates took their meals in rooms where they were overcrowded in a manner that was injurious to health, and some of the evidence suggested that in other respects the management is far from satisfactory. In each instance the Bench, holding that a nuisance had existed, and was likely to recur, made an order prohibiting its recurrence. The making of such an order is all very well, but these establishments are quite unfitted for the purpose to which they are put, and under any really efficient law for the protection of the public health they would long since have been closed.

The Enniscorthy Asylum Board had to appoint a head attendant last week. Four members of the staff applied for the berth, two of them being first-class attendants with twenty and seventeen years' service respectively, while the third was a second-class attendant of seven years' service. The other candidate was an attendant of the third class, a young fellow of twenty-five, with only four and a half years' service in the asylum. In spite of the medical superintendent's reminder that the head attendant ought to be an experienced first-class man, the youthful third-class candidate was elected. The latter happens to have an uncle among the members of the Board.

ON THE APPROACHING CLOSING OF LUDGATE HILL STATION.

(By a Much-married Season Ticket Holder.)

Familiar Ludgate Hill, good-bye!
How often there have waited I,
With weary frame;
Yes, waited long and waited vain,
Still waited patient for the train
That never came.

And yet at times thou stood'st my friend
When I post-prandial home did wend,
And wife she chid:
"The train, my dear—'tis truth I state—
Left Ludgate Hill just two hours late."
(Most like, it did!)

Farewell, then, scene of lingerings drear—
Some true, some pious fictions mere—
Thou had'st thy use.
Henceforth, when late from clubland back,
My addled brain I'll have to rack
For fresh excuse.

The Attorney-General claims that the new Bill to establish a Court of Criminal Appeal is an improvement upon the Lord Chancellor's Bill of last Session; and, from the account he gave of the Bill in introducing it, there seems good ground for supposing that this is the case. One of the great objections to the last Bill was the unlimited right of appeal which it created. The new Bill proceeds on the principle of allowing an appeal on points of law as a matter of right, transferring to the new Court the jurisdiction of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved; and making an appeal on questions of fact subject to the leave of the Appeal Court itself. This course combines the interests of justice and public convenience. Another important feature of the Bill is that there are to be no new trials, but the Appeal Court can hear fresh evidence, so that it can really hold a supplementary trial whenever necessary, which, with the power of reviewing the original finding of fact, is all that justice requires.

So much depends upon the precise terms of the material clauses, that it is premature to express any definite opinion on the new Bill until one has seen the text of it. But, speaking generally, it would seem that the Attorney-General has successfully met the principal criticisms which last year's Bill provoked, and it may be hoped, therefore, that it will be possible to get the new Bill passed this Session. Personally, I should say that there is no measure before Parliament at the moment for which "urgency" may be more fairly claimed, and this ought to be recognised by members of all parties. It may be supposed that no one will recognise it more keenly than the Home Secretary, who, with the possible exception of the prisoners under his jurisdiction, has more cause than any one living to long for the end of the present state of things. But I do not see how this or any Bill for the same purpose, which is to do what is expected of it, can be worked without a substantial addition to the strength of the Bench. Seven Judges are assigned to the new Court of Appeal by the Government Bill. It may be reasonably expected that there will soon be enough work to keep all of them at work for a good many weeks per annum, and no one familiar with the Law Courts will assert that they can be withdrawn to that extent from their present work without a breakdown in the business of the Courts.

The creditors in bankruptcy of a Mr. Lazarus Aarons have just received the trustee's statement, showing that the estate had realised £965, of which £560 had gone in costs of one kind and another, while £352 odd was available for payment of a first and final dividend of 1s. in the pound. In addition to the usual toll levied on the estate in the shape of Official Receiver's, Board of Trade and Court fees (over £60 in this instance), trustee's remuneration (£125), and minor pickings, the costs are swollen by an item of £261 11s. 4d. for solicitors' taxed costs. This item is apparently explained by the following note of the trustee:—

---

Lady Henry Somerset writes on Nervousness, and How to Overcome it, on page 1052.

> Creditors in this matter will recollect that at the onset of the proceedings instructions were given to the solicitors and me to fully investigate the facts appertaining to this particular matter and to report same to the committee of inspection with a view to further proceedings. I and my firm's clerks were engaged for a very considerable time investigating the whole matter, and long reports were laid before the committee of inspection from time to time, which had their most careful and minute consideration. Such reports were subsequently laid before eminent counsel, who advised that, although the case was one of grave suspicion, he did not feel justified in advising the trustee and committee of inspection to take further proceedings.

Except for this note there is no explanation of the huge bill for law costs. As a matter of fact, a motion seems to have been made against one creditor with the result that £75 was recovered from him, but the taxed costs of this motion, £30 2s., are entered separately in the trustee's statement.

I call attention to this case in the hope that it may meet the eye of Mr. Lloyd-George, who may see in it a glaring instance of the monstrous way in which costs in bankruptcy are piled up, under the existing system. The whole of the assets in this case consisted of stock-in-trade to the value of £877 odd and the above mentioned item of £75 recovered by motion. It therefore comes to this, that to dispose of stock to the value of £877 and to distribute it among the creditors costs £560. It is utter nonsense and humbug to suggest that no machinery can be devised which will work more cheaply than this; and the worst part of the scandal is that after the creditors have been charged with upwards of £60 for Board of Trade and Court fees, they should have to pay for every single item of expenditure connected with the administration of the estate, including the remuneration of a trustee at £125. With his legal and official experience Mr. Lloyd-George ought to be able to effect a complete reform of this scandal. And his reform ought to include some means whereby, when there are suspicious circumstances requiring investigation, and possibly further proceedings, the cost of such investigation and proceedings shall be borne by the Court, or the Board of Trade, and not by the creditors.

In the newspaper reports of a moneylending case tried by Mr. Justice Grantham, on Saturday, the plaintiffs are described as "Messrs. W. Stanley and Co.," of Leeds. This, however, is merely an alias masking the identity of Sydney Jack Samuel and Stuart Samuel, two members of the tribe of bloodsuckers hailing from Cardiff, whose doings in the character of "Fieldings, Limited" (now simply "Fieldings") were investigated by the Select Committee on Moneylending. One of the worst defects of the Moneylenders Act is that it not only permits a moneylender to register a "trade name" (otherwise an alias), but, owing to clumsy draftsmanship, affords him an easy method of getting round the prohibition against the use of more than one such alias.

The Act was intended to put an end to the trick of the same usurer preying upon the public in a number of different names—a trick of which the late Isaac Gordon was a conspicuous exponent. But unfortunately the Act, though it provides that one person shall trade as a moneylender only in one name, does not prevent the same person from trading in partnership with other persons under as many aliases as they choose to assume. All that it is necessary to do is to register in each case a differently constituted partnership, which may, moreover, be a mere bogus arrangement of names for this purpose. For example, in combination with various relatives and other persons, the above-mentioned Sydney Jack Samuel is registered as "Fieldings," "W. Stanley and Co.," "F. North and Co.," and "Sydney Mostyn," while other members of the family are registered singly or in partnership as "Charles Stevens and Co.," "George Simpson," etc

---

The defendant in the action on Saturday was a Yorkshire lady who had received two advances amounting to a total of £339 10s. from "W. Stanley and Co." Including a so-called "bonus" of £25, she had paid back £365, and "Stanley and Co." sued her for a further sum of £160, the balance due on a promissory note. The interest worked out at the rate of 125 per cent. per annum. In view of all the circumstances, Mr. Justice Grantham held that the transaction was harsh and unconscionable, and he accordingly cut down the interest, giving the plaintiffs judgment for only £55 without costs, or £105 less than they claimed. This part of the Act at least is capable of being enforced to good purpose, and it is especially gratifying to see it employed so effectually in paring the claws of such rapacious harpies as the Samuels.

By way of warning to others, a borrower narrates his experiences with those rapacious usurers, "Seymour and Whiteman" and "Cox and Co." "Notwithstanding the value of the security offered," he writes, "every advantage is taken of a borrower's temporary difficulty to extort interest at exorbitant rates, especially if he happens to be, as I am, in a responsible permanent situation." This is an old story, especially in connection with the firms named, whose methods of intimidating debtors have frequently been condemned in Truth as morally indistinguishable from a system of blackmailing. My correspondent's letter is, however, interesting on account of the fact that whilst he was still in the toils of "Seymour and Whiteman," he fell into the clutches of "Cox and Co." The latter, when granting him a loan of £10, insisted that out of this sum he should pay off a balance of £3 which the owed the former—a condition with which he had to comply. He says that "Cox and Co." were so anxious that "Seymour and Whiteman" should be paid off that he suspects there is some connection between them. There is. "Seymour and Whiteman" is the registered trade name of two brothers, William Herbert and Arthur George Whiteman; "Cox and Co." is the registered trade name of Arthur George Whiteman alone—another illustration of what I have said above regarding the failure of the Moneylenders Act to prevent the use of misleading aliases.

I am not surprised that a large number of correspondents have directed my attention to the case heard at the Cardiff Quarter Sessions which appears in my Legal Pillory below. No doubt the learned Recorder who is responsible for the draconic sentence would urge in his own defence that the old woman was a hardened offender to whom leniency would be misapplied, but it is impossible for any one who is not absolutely deaf and blind to the ordinary dictates of humanity to acquiesce in the propriety of the sentence inflicted. The picture presented by this old woman of eighty-two years of age tottering into the dock to plead guilty to a theft of a pair of boots, and supporting herself by clinging to the warder while sentence of twelve months' hard labour is passed upon her, is in striking contrast to the punishment given to the brutal ruffians in the cases of wife assault chronicled in the opposite column. A number of Scottish Bailies are again responsible for some of the most pronounced examples of this misplaced lenity, while English magistrates supply a similar incapacity in adequately punishing atrocious brutality to animals:—

Bo'ness Police-court. Before Bailie Rankin. James M'Menemy, charged with wife assault. He dragged her about by her hair, struck her in the face and kicked her. Fined £2.

Partick Police-court. Before Bailie Mundy. John Scrimgeour, charged with assaulting his wife. He pulled the woman out of bed, where she was lying ill and gave her a severe thrashing. Fined £2 2s.

Perth Sheriff Court. Before Acting-Sheriff Nicholson. John Florence, charged with assaulting his wife. He knocked her down in the street and kicked her on the head and face. Fined 10s.

Pontypool Police-court. T. Dibble, charged with assaulting J. Silmore by blackening both his eyes, cutting his face and biting his thumb. Fined 40s.

Ashby Police-court. Before Messrs. Moore, Hassall, Sutton, and Major Hatchett. E. Wright, charged with assaulting Elizabeth Woods. The man burst open the door of the woman's house and struck her a violent blow on the eye. Fined £1 1s.

Rotherham Police-court. Before Mr. C. B. Clark and other magistrates. J. Richardson, charged with cruelty to a horse. As the shaft-horse to a dray loaded with three tons of steel refused to pull he put a chain around its neck and attached two horses to it. He also struck the animal with a steel bar. Fined 40s.

Nottingham County Police-court. Before Messrs. Enfield, Tidmas, Smart, Godfrey, Whyatt and Jacklin. E. Lovegrove, charged with cruelty to a greyhound. He knocked it over with a brick, fastened it up with a leash and kicked it for twenty minutes. Fined 21s.

Cardiff Quarter Sessions. Before the Recorder. Jane Jones, 82 years of age, charged with stealing a pair of boots. She tottered into court and supported herself by clinging to the warder. Twelve months' hard labour.

Dunfermline Sheriff Court. Before Sheriff Shennan. Charles Combe, charged with two poaching offences on two occasions. Fined £2 and costs in each case, £7 10s. in all, or sixty days' imprisonment.

Worksop Police-court. Before Messrs. Towne and Ledger, Emma Bednall, an elderly woman, charged with stealing a plate value 2d. Ten days' hard labour. She had already been in custody four days.

Wonford Petty Sessions. Frank Barding, charged with stealing a quantity of bones from a field. Fourteen days' hard labour.

Barnsley Police-court. Samuel Edge and A. Evans, charged with night poaching. They had a gun and were after pheasants. Evans three months' imprisonment and a further three months' in default of finding securities. Edge one month.

Stratford Petty Sessions. Before Mr. G. Baker and other magistrates. George Ball, charged with stealing a tame rabbit. Three months' hard labour.

Bedford Petty Sessions. Before Dr. Robinson and other magistrates. S. E. Edge, charged with stealing a hair brush. Two months' hard labour.

Epsom Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Farmer, Henderson, Aston, Wootten, and Col. Lambert. Alfred Bear, charged with trespass in pursuit of rabbits. Fined 40s. or a month.

Daventry Divisional Petty Sessions. Before Mr. C. Rodhouse. W. Bessenden, charged with sleeping out. Seven days'.

Bakewell Police-court. Before Mr. Nixon and other magistrates. W. O'Neal, stud-groom, and F. H. Lindley, owner, charged with ill-treating a horse. It met with an accident at a steeplechase, and was walked seven miles to the railway station in the greatest agony. The animal had to be destroyed afterwards. Fined £1 and costs each.

Preston Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. W. H. Francis and W. Gregory. A. Haydock, charged with cruelty to a horse. The animal was struggling up a hill with a heavy load, and Haydock was lashing it violently with a short handled whip striking ten or twelve blows every time it stopped. Fined 10s. and costs.

Winchester City Police-court. Richard Maher, a lad, charged with sleeping on enclosed premises without visible means of subsistence, and with stealing a spirit level, value 1s. 6d. Seven days' imprisonment for the first offence and three months' for the second, to run consecutively.

Thrapston Divisional Petty Sessions. Before Col. Stopford Sackville, and Messrs. J. W. Jellis and George Smith. Horace Lord, charged with begging. Three months' hard labour.

J. Tiney and A. Howe, charged with game trespass. They shot a hare. Each fined £2 3s. or a month's imprisonment in default.

The solicitor who recently complained of the difficulty he experienced in obtaining information from hospital surgeons in anticipation of litigation in accident cases, writes again as follows:—

On p. 874 of your issue of the 10th inst., the secretary of one of the principal London hospitals writes, inter alia: "Only recently a solicitor resented the action of a doctor in declining to report on a case without a fee, stating that his client was a poor man." I should like to state that in the case to which I called your attention I settled the matter without obtaining a report from the doctor, who, however, furnished one to the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation, Limited, for which, I presume, they had to pay; and also that I am not the solicitor to whom the suggestion was made to forego his charges conditionally upon the doctor doing likewise. Personally, I should always entertain a suggestion that I should receive no fees myself until the doctor had been paid.

I may also mention that I quite agree with your comments on the secretary's letter. In the case to which I referred, which is only one amongst many, the total costs charged by me, including out-of-pocket expenses, came to £2 2s., and the probability is that if I had paid for a report of the doctor I should have had to defray the expenses of the report out of my own pocket.

The hon. secretaries of the Incorporated Association of Headmasters have written to me in reference to the betting circular which is being addressed to assistant masters by a person signing himself "Ludor Beecher," of 48, Sheen-park, Richmond. The circular in which this touting bookmaker represents that he is a University man, and that he has been an assistant master, has already been noticed in Truth, and I am afraid that it is hopeless to expect that comments of mine, however severe, will put a stop to its distribution. Beecher is, indeed, only one of a host of similar pests from whom many classes of people besides members of the teaching profession need protection. I do not look upon betting as a sin, or think that it ought to be or could be suppressed by Act of Parliament. But the facilities that are nowadays given for the backing of horses are undoubtedly productive of a great deal of mischief, and the Legislature would be perfectly justified in making it illegal for bookmakers and tipsters to issue circulars or newspaper advertisements inciting or inviting people to bet.

By the way, I have received several letters concerning a new tipster's sheet entitled The Man in the Moon, which is being advertised in many provincial papers.

Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Nearly 8,000 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private," absolutely confidential.—Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

It is manifestly yet another addition to the long list of mendacious publications with which the many-aliased E. W. Beston, of Birmingham, gammons credulous backers. Beston is such a Protean rascal that some people are now disposed to recognise his hand in nearly every tipster's circular that makes its appearance. The other day, for instance, a correspondent suggested that a certain A. Taylor, 13, King's-place, Baker-street, W., is probably Beston in a new disguise. Taylor's circular is certainly a choice specimen of brag and blarney, but I scarcely think that it really emanates from Beston. After all, the same arts are practised by a horde of kindred harpies.

Some weeks ago I referred to a circular in which Harry Hyams, bookmaker, intimated that in consequence of the Street Betting Act having driven him and his runners from the purlieus of Camden Town, he had opened an office at Flushing where commissions would be executed on the deposit system "for peer and peasant from one shilling to any amount." Apparently the shilling minimum has been found too high for peasants, or peers, or both—at any rate, Harry Hyams is now prepared to take the still more modest sum of one penny. In his latest prospectus, issued in the name of "the proprietors of Sporting Problems," and headed, "One Penny May Win You a Fortune," he explains that in order to give a chance to "small punters" he has started a series of guessing competitions on the results of races, the entrance fee being a penny for each guess. There is, of course, no limit to the number of guesses that may be sent in by those opulent punters who are prepared to put down more than one penny. It is a very good thing that bookmakers have been banished from the streets. In view, however, of the circularising activity of a number of these gentry who have betaken themselves to the Continent, I doubt whether in the long run the indulgence of the masses in gambling will be very much lessened.

Sundry inquiries have reached me during the last few days about a concern called the South-West London Tradesmen's Provident Society, Limited, of 328, Balham High-road. The concern is a company "limited by guarantee," and its principal object seems to be to run a sort of premium trading business among its members, eked out with "legal aid" and insurance under the usual heads. As the thing is only a few weeks old there is not much to be known about it at present, but the following paragraph in the articles of association tells me all that I should want to know if I were invited to become a member and subscriber:—

28. The Directors shall be elected annually by the Society in General Meeting, except the Managing Director, Mr. F. W. Rackham, the Originator and Founder of Tradesmen's Provident Societies (which have been copyrighted by him and entered at Stationers' Hall), who shall be the first Managing Director, and hold the office for a period of ten years, at a minimum salary of £200 per annum and 25 per cent. of all subscription fees, such remuneration shall be deemed to accrue de die in diem, and any such further sums or commissions as the Members in General Meeting may determine.

This Mr. Rackham has repeatedly come under notice in Truth in connection with queer undertakings under the Companies Acts, and anybody wishing to know more of him may refer specially to what was said about him in October last, when he was associated with a mysterious venture called the Registered Societies Sickness and Accident Association. In view of his record, the prospect of any concern engineered by him developing into a sound business enterprise is somewhat nebulous. Moreover, the fact of his having, as above-mentioned, not only originated and founded "Tradesmen's Provident Societies," but copyrighted them and entered them at Stationers' Hall, plainly implies that he regards them primarily as a business to be worked for his own profit. The following bit of humbug, written upon the printed prospectus inviting tradesmen to join, is characteristic and instructive:—

The Directors have carefully considered the applications from Tradesmen in this district for a concession, and in consequence thereof have decided to elect New Members upon payment of One Guinea, instead of Three Guineas, the usual initiation fee.

THE CULT OF THE PRIMROSE.

We all have heard of Peter Bell,
Of whom did poet Wordsworth tell
(I quote from Memory's store):
"A Primrose by the river's brim
A Yellow Primrose was to him,
And it was nothing more."

A sort of Peter Bell am I,
For when a Primrose I descry,
No other thought it wakes
Than that of Knights and Damsels pert,
Who whiles, in Primrose dalliance, flirt
O'er washy tea and cakes.

The report of the Parliamentary Committee on Local Records drew attention to the necessity of measures being taken for the preservation of old manor and other court records. It was pointed out that by an adequate examination of such documents much more light could be thrown upon local history and upon land customs and the economic side of land tenure; and the opinion was expressed that in this direction valuable help could be given by learned societies. As an outcome of that suggestion a number of archæologists and antiquaries interested in the study of mediæval manorial and agrarian history have established the Manorial Society. The preservation and study of manorial court rolls and other documents will be among the main objects of the society, which has a council composed of some sixty manorial lords, ladies, and stewards, and it is hoped that many local antiquaries

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Building, Carteret-street, S.W.

Jeffrey & Co.'s Artistic Wall Papers are on view at their New Showrooms, The Wallpaper Gallery, 31, Mortimer st, W. To be had of all decorators.—Factory, 64, Essex-rd., Islington, N.

will enrol themselves as associates or corresponding members. Information with regard to the Society can be obtained from the Registrar, Mr. Charles Greenwood, 1, Mitre-court-buildings, Temple, E.C.

In the Prime Minister's vigorous speech on land reform I was glad to read a scathing allusion to the growing excess of game preservation and the supposed rights of the landowner "over his pheasants and his hares"—an aspect of the land question to which I gave attention in some articles a year or so ago. Here is a story of the way in which one noble landowner exercises his "rights," which is peculiarly interesting in view of the position he holds as a member of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's Ministry. This nobleman's estate in Hampshire is noted for the abundance of hares. One of the tenants, who had held a large farm on the estate for over thirty years, had always exercised his right, under the Ground Game Act, to shoot hares. It was absolutely necessary that he should do so for the protection of his crops, but being a thorough sportsman himself he had always shown proper consideration for his landlord's sport, and left a good stock for breeding.

There was never any complaint—as there is on so many estates—of a scarcity of hares on the farm, and the landlord invariably made a good bag. His lordship, however, became dissatisfied with what he got, and his agent was instructed to inform the tenants that—notwithstanding the Ground Game Act—they would not be permitted to kill any more hares. The farmer to whom I am referring replied that the hares were so numerous on his farm that if not killed down before the breeding season his crops would suffer great damage. He asked if in that event compensation would be given him. The noble landowner himself then wrote a letter containing the following passages:—

. . . . . If you or any other tenant insist upon your power under the Ground Game Act of constantly disturbing the land in pursuit of ground game, I must at once and frankly say that I must adopt the only remedy which I possess of changing tenants or farming the land myself. . . . . The sum and substance of the whole matter is this, which no interview or talking over can affect, that if you cannot accept in good part the advice which Mr. ——— proffered, with, I can assure you, the most friendly intention, it would be fairer to both parties for you to arrange to leave, which I trust would be conducted on both sides with perfect courtesy and consideration.

Nothing more happened at that time, but a couple of years later the farmer, who had continued to shoot hares as before, received twelve months' notice to quit—an unusually short notice which caused him a serious loss when he left. The farmer himself, I may add, has not given me these facts. He is, indeed, averse to the ventilation of the matter in the press, but I agree with my informant that the above letter deserves publicity as an example of the manner in which the rights of tenants under the Ground Game Act are practically over-ridden by game-preserving landowners. The landowner who wrote the letter was the Earl of Portsmouth, the Under Secretary of State for War.

TO THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

Yes, Asquith, you're right to assist—that's quite clear—
Poor devils who earn their few hundreds a year.

I speak, sir, with feeling, for I am a mere
Hack-poet, who draws but a pittance each year.

But I think (though to me this applies not, I swear)
You'll find the Returns of the forthcoming year

Show thousands who all, by coincidence queer,
Make incomes of one-nine-nine-nine pounds a year.

During the past week I have been privileged to listen to speeches by all the Colonial Premiers who have been most in evidence. General Botha, who has become the lion of the party, is the least impressive as a speaker, not because he addresses his audience through an interpreter, but for the simple reason that he is obviously a man of few words. As is generally the case with men of action, his few words are invariably direct to the point, and no one who hears him will ever doubt that he means what he says. He has a most captivating manner, especially when he smiles, and you need not be long in his company to learn that he is the sort of man whom it is better to have for a friend than an enemy.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is the most attractive speaker among the visitors, as well as the most picturesque figure. His speech, manner, and appearance are suggestive of a French abbé who has been dumped in the States and acquired a slight American varnish. Sir Joseph Ward, on the other hand, might have been reared on the Stock Exchange. He is terse, businesslike, and seems immersed in affairs. Of the whole party the one who approaches most closely our idea of a democratic politician is Mr. Deakin. He has all the qualities that go to make a successful platform speaker in this country—not gaseous or flowery, but fluent and forcible, never at a loss for a word, always using the right one, very clear and definite in statement, a trifle dogmatic, with just the right amount of feeling or sentiment to command sympathy, and now and then a touch of real eloquence.

I should judge Mr. Deakin to be a nasty adversary to tackle in debate, and that he is not without some of the qualities which put Mr. Chamberlain in the forefront of politics. Of all our visitors, he is the one who seems most impressed with the importance of his mission, and most desirous of teaching the Mother Country how to run an Empire. But each of the English-speaking Premiers is, I should say, convinced that his own State occupies the first place in the family circle. This is natural, not to say becoming. I do not suggest that any of them overdo it, but Sir Wilfrid Laurier is the nicest about it.

Savoy Hotel & Restaurant, London.—The most beautiful garden and river view in Europe. The Restaurant of the world. Hotel rooms bright, fresh, and delightfully quiet.

The Luxury of a Bath is incomplete without the addition of Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, price one shilling per bottle.

At the Eighty Club dinner to the Premiers, Sir F. W. Borden caused amusement by asking defiantly, "What's the matter with the Empire?" He followed up the question by reciting the epitaph in which the deceased is made to say, "I was well; I wished to be better; I took physic; and I am here." As an old medical man, the Canadian Minister intimated that he had known such cases in his own experience, and he advised the Empire and its counsellors to lay this experience to heart. It was refreshing to hear this homely common sense from the Colonies amid so much nebulous rhetoric. The Empire is, no doubt, doing very nicely. The worst danger that threatens it at present lies with the medical gentlemen who are anxious to physic it. Mr. Chamberlain told us some time ago that we were likely to lose Canada shortly. He told us in the same way that iron had gone and that cotton was going. He had the patent remedy applicable to all such cases. Now that he has left the scene—I trust not for long—other members of the faculty are equally anxious to diagnose and prescribe. Give them a free hand and they will ruin the soundest Constitution. The only disease that I myself can see any sign of in the patient is a slight tendency to hypochondria.

The resolutions that the Conference has come to—not without considerable difference of opinion between the two most important Colonies—are a matter for satisfaction, because things might so easily have been worse. I think that if Mr. Deakin had had his way, a harmless, not to say necessary, Conference would speedily have been converted into a legislative, possibly executive, council, armed with powers of doing infinite mischief, and possibly very little else. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier has saved us from that, it is not the least of his services to the Empire.

The Conference is no doubt a body with certain possibilities of practical usefulness about it. The mere fact of its meeting from time to time, eating so many dinners, and making so many speeches about the Flag, is calculated to remind the man in the streets of London how much he has in common with the man in the streets of Toronto, Melbourne, Cape Town, and Auckland, or vice versâ, and thereby to keep alive the spirit of kinship and solidarity, which everybody wishes to preserve. There may be also a certain amount of business which can be better discussed at a personal conference of Ministers than by correspondence from the other side of the globe. By all means, then, let the meeting be called an Imperial Conference. By all means let it meet regularly. By all means let the Prime Minister take the chair. By all means let it have a permanent secretary and an office to itself. I would not even grudge it a dining-hall and a chef of its own, if desired. Let us make as much of it as we can in reason, but let us remember its inevitable limitations as between a number of self-governing States, and the fatal dangers of overstepping them.

Chills are frequently caught through leaving a warm sitting-room to undress in a cold bedroom. Avoid this danger by having a gas fire in every bedroom. Comfortable, Convenient, & Healthy

THE WRECKER TURNED PILOT.

On Cornwall's Coast, in Days long fled,
Dwelt an old Rogue, called "Wrecker Ned,"
Than whom no wilier Knave was found
At luring passing Ships aground.
Of this bad Art, for Years, he made
A thriving, if nefarious, Trade,
Till up the Shipping Interest woke
At length, and vowed his Wheel to spoke.
The Owners met, in Conclave sat,
And One said this, and One said that;
One "Shoot him!" said, and One said "Lag him!"
And One said "Flog!" and One said "Scrag him!"
But, last of all, an Owner rose
This odd Suggestion to propose:
"Nay, pay this Ned a handsome Fee
To take our Pilot's Job," said he.
They sat aghast. "Art cracked? Good Lord!
As Pilot take this Wretch aboard,
Whose Breast no other Project owns
Than sending Ships to Davy Jones!
'Tis Madness sheer."
"Not so," he cried.
"'Tis Wisdom. Try." And,—well, they tried.
They gave him Gold and Pilot made
Of the best Clipper in the Trade;
Whereon behaved the Wrecker Ned
Just as that Owner shrewd had said;
Planned not the Ship, with all her Store,
To run for Booty on the Shore,
But steered her safe the Coast-line round,
From Michael's Mount to Plymouth Sound.
The Owners meet him, as he lands,
And shake him warmly by the Hands:
"Well done, good Ned. And yet 'tis strange—
This sudden and surprising Change!
How was't that you, on Wrecking bent,
Who many a Ship to Doom have sent,
Did, when yourself the Wheel controlled,
And us might easily have sold,
Forbear your old destructive Sport,
And bring our Clipper safe to Port?"
Grinning, he scratched his grizzled head,
As answered thus the Pilot Ned:
"'Tis one thing Ships to lure aground,
When on the Land you're safe and sound;
But quite another, Sirs, to wreck
'Em, when you stand yourself on Deck,
And, by such Pranks, would risk your Neck!"

Moral.

The Ship of Government wouldst save
From some too restless, factious Knave?
No wiser Course you can pursue
Than give him Office and a Screw.

SCRUTATOR.

CONSERVATIVE LIBERAL FINANCE.

THE more enthusiastic eulogists of the Chancellor of the Exchequer describe his budget as "bold." In what its boldness consists I do not quite see. "Cautious" is the epithet I should be more inclined to apply to it. Mr. Asquith spoke on Thursday for about two hours and a half, with admirable lucidity and perfect command of his subject; but his speech, so far as it went beyond the mere exposition of accomplished financial facts, was a homily in praise of prudence and economy, and his proposals for the future, so far from having anything bold about them, practically leave existing fiscal arrangements untouched. Of all the innumerable claimants for a remission of taxes, the man who pays income-tax on an income under £2,000 a year which he earns himself is the only one who is not sent empty away. The poor, who are hungry for old-age pensions, are certainly not filled with good things, and Mr. Keir Hardie, as their self-appointed spokesman, has even been moved to describe the Budget as "brutal." The differentiation between earned and unearned incomes is a new departure, which may lead to extensive re-adjustments of the incidence of taxation, but it does not go very far at present. Mr. Asquith reckons that he is sacrificing a million and a quarter of the yield of the tax, and allows in the first year as much as two millions of his prospective surplus to meet the loss. He puts down nothing, however, on the other side of the account for the possible results of exacting from employers returns of the salaries of all their employees, nor for the effect of that tightening up of the machinery on Scotch principles, the threat of which has sent a shiver through the whole kingdom south of the Tweed. A good many people are saying that notwithstanding the 3d. remitted, the income-tax for the current year may yield as much as its predecessors; while at the same time Mr. Asquith has given us the pleasant assurance that the change he has made is designed entirely for the purpose of establishing the tax as a permanent feature in our national institutions. Probably Mr. Keir Hardie is not the only person who regards him as brutal. If the Budget has any boldness about it, it is in its disregard of all the expectations directed towards a Chancellor of the Exchequer who has a handsome surplus to dispose of.

Personally, I am no more averse than my neighbours to a little remission of my taxes; nor have I any doubt that the country is being taxed, at present, beyond its fair capacity, and that it is suffering to some extent in consequence. But I am perfectly certain that Mr. Asquith is right in keeping the screw on for the present, and this seems to be the general opinion of the country, except where attempts are made to play up to this or that section of aggrieved taxpayers for party purposes. The keynote of Mr. Asquith's financial policy was struck in his observations on the cry for a remission of the "war taxes," still amounting to about twenty millions per annum. "A war tax," he said, "is not a tax that is put on to last during a war and to come to an end the moment peace is concluded and your army is withdrawn from the field. It is a tax which is put on to meet the extra burden imposed on the country by waging war; and so long as that extra burden remains —and it remains, as I have shown to the Committee, to the tune of something like £130,000,000 of extra debt —the claim of a war tax to be removed is, in my opinion, an inadmissible claim." This is the only view compatible with sound finance, and sound national policy. From the purely financial point of view the reduction of debt is of more consequence to the nation than the remission of current taxes. Every million paid off a war loan is a million withdrawn from unproductive investment and set free to swell the industrial capital of the country, to earn its own interest instead of forming a dead charge on the taxpayers. Again, every repayment of debt tends to raise the value of the public securities, and in that way to improve the "national credit," the decline of which has lately inspired such absurd attacks upon the present Government. The higher the credit of the Government, the stronger the national position vis à vis a possible enemy, and though it is to be hoped that no more wars are likely to be coming upon us just yet, it is quite as important, from the point of view of national security, to strengthen the national credit in time of peace as it is to keep up the Army and Navy. The only valid excuse for reducing the repayment of debt would be that the industrial and commercial position of the country was such that it would be more profitable in the long run to temporarily ease the pressure of taxation upon trade. Of this there is not to-day a sign that any Chancellor of the Exchequer would be justified in regarding; on the contrary, there is every evidence that we are passing through a cycle of fat years, and the most elementary prudence suggests that we should use them to reduce our liabilities, and thereby provide against the lean years which, according to all experience, must inevitably follow. Lastly, there is the vital consideration which every statesman worthy of the name should keep before him, that the generation which makes war should pay for it. Nothing is more conducive to going to war with a light heart than the feeling that the bill can be paid in drafts on posterity, and in repudiating the notion that war taxes should be withdrawn as soon as peace is declared, Mr. Asquith establishes a precedent which ought to be held binding by all his successors in all time to come.

In the slang of the City the word "conservative" is now used as synonymous with "safe." In this sense Mr. Asquith's is a conservative Budget. He takes his chief pride for the past year in the fact that he has effected a net reduction of debt to the amount of £9,825,000. The first task which he sets before himself for the current year is to effect a further reduction of £13,400,000. When he says that for this purpose he "must have" all that he is getting at present, except for the two millions sacrificed to the income-tax payer, no reasonably prudent man will grudge it to him. The present Government took office with no more pressing duty before it than that of reorganising the national finances and repairing the consequences of ten years' spendthrift administration. That work is being done in the only way in which it is possible, namely, by looking to the future rather than to the moment. No passage in Mr. Asquith's speech is more worthy of commendation than that in which he disclaimed the idea that a Budget should be framed exclusively for the year to which it applies, and insisted that it is the duty of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to frame a policy for the future and adapt each year's finance to it. This was the principle of the great Liberal financiers of the last century, but abandoned with disastrous results of late years in favour of the policy of living from year to year and from hand to mouth. In the few practical reforms to which Mr. Asquith has committed himself, the differentiation of the income-tax, the transference of the local taxation account to the Consolidated Fund, and the progressive increase of the death duties on estates above £150,000, he is simply performing "spade work" in preparation for building operations to come. And this is not only the prudent course from the national point of view, but the expedient course from that of party interest, for the simple reason that it is the only way in which the foundations can be laid for anything worth looking at in the shape of an electioneering Budget. For a Government in a healthy condition and with a normal expectation of official life, the Budgets of 1910 and 1911 will be of more moment than that of 1907. What Mr. Asquith has in his mind for those years, if they still find him in office, he pretty plainly indicates. He hopes by judicious economy to find the means of social reform in the shape of old-age pensions, and at the same time by a great reduction of debt to be able to effect a corresponding reduction of taxation. That is how I read his combination of "budgeting for several years" in conjunction with his aspiration to prove that "social reform" is quite compatible with Free Trade. How far he will succeed the future alone will show. But at least the policy he has laid down will enable the Government to face the country as wise stewards of the national exchequer, which is more than any Government has been able to do for many years past.

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

THE SECOND-HAND NEWSPAPER SWINDLE.

I am fairly astonished at the quantity of information that I have received during the last week or two in reference to the swindling business in weekly newspapers that has been carried on by "Mrs. Davis," of Helebridge, Bude, and other addresses. By every post letters have arrived from different parts of the kingdom relating to similar experiences to those which were first described in Truth. It is clear from all this evidence that the game has been played on an extensive scale, and that the profits must have been considerable. It has been going on for the last twelve months, if not longer. During that time the changes have been rung on four names and addresses: Mrs. Forestier-Walker, of Westeria Lodge, Bidford-on-Avon, Warwickshire; Mrs. Davis or Mrs. Lewis, of West End Lodge, Bidford; Mrs. Staniland Davis and Mrs. Walker, Stratton Hall, South Petherton, Somerset; and Mrs. Davis, Helebridge House, Helebridge, Bude. The three houses mentioned have been rented furnished during this period by a lady giving the name of Davis, or her husband. The earliest date in my dossier is February 28, 1906, when the newspaper vendor was Mrs. Staniland Davis, of Stratton Hall. In March of that year another lady purchased papers of Mrs. Walker of the same address. In June or July, Mrs. "Forestier-Walker," of Bidford, appears on the scene. In December and January the scene shifts to Helebridge, Cornwall, where we find both Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Forestier-Walker. On February 11 the lady is back again at Westeria Lodge, Bidford, and immediately afterwards newspapers were also being sold by Mrs. Lewis, of West End Lodge, in the same village. The last variant of the name and address is significant. As the reader may easily test for himself, it is easy to write the name "Davis" so that it looks like "Lewis," and with a little slurring, "Westeria" may be made to look very much like "West-end." There is no such house as "West End Lodge" in Bidford. The house occupied by the lady in question—it is quite a small one—is styled "Westeria." It would seem that when the operators returned to Bidford in February, they found it desirable for some reason to drop the old name and address for business purposes, and adopted that of "Lewis, West End Lodge," in the full assurance that letters so addressed would be delivered at "Westeria," as in point of fact they were. In one case Mrs. Forestier-Walker stated that Mrs. Davis was her sister—this was in explanation of her offering a cheque signed "Davis" in payment of an account. Only one lady has been seen at any of the addresses mentioned, although it appears that "Mrs. Forestier-Walker" was at Helebridge nearly all the time that "Mrs. Davis" was there, and Mrs. Staniland Davis and Mrs. Forestier-Walker obviously write the same hand. I infer, therefore, that the same party has been carrying on the business throughout, but whether there was one woman or two is really immaterial. Mr. and Mrs. Davis appear to have been residing together at all the addresses. I may here mention that I have just received a long letter from Mr. Davis himself, protesting against the observations that have already been made in Truth about his wife's newspaper business. As he maintains that every customer has received all papers paid for, and that his wife is the person who has suffered loss in the business, it is impossible to accept his statements in the face of the immense quantity of evidence before me, and I cannot take any further notice of his letter. Mr. Davis has certainly interfered in the business, and, as already mentioned, has written abusive letters to customers when they made complaints.

The business has been carried on by means of advertisements offering to supply newspapers at reduced prices a day or two after publication. Almost every weekly paper has been offered, but the largest business seems to have been done in Truth, Hearth and Home, and the illustrated sixpenny weeklies. In some cases people have ordered several papers for business purposes—for example, one victim is the proprietor of tea-rooms in a country town—and subscriptions have been paid in advance for all periods up to twelve months. The payments have, therefore, ranged from a few shillings up to a couple of pounds or so. The experience of all customers seems to have been much the same. The papers were delivered for a time, more or less punctually, then they became irregular, and finally stopped. It was mentioned in last week's Truth that a West-End ladies' club supplied Mrs. Davis with second-hand papers for a time, and discontinued the supply when her payments fell into arrears. Probably papers have been obtained second-hand in the same way from other quarters. But the principal supply for some months came from Messrs. May and Williams, of 106, Piccadilly. This firm knew their customer as "Mrs. Forestier-Walker," of Westeria Lodge, Bidford, and from August last onwards they despatched on her instructions considerable quantities of papers to various persons whose names and addresses she supplied. They naturally wondered what her business was, or how she made it pay, and were only partially enlightened when she explained in one of her letters that she sent the papers in exchange—"mostly for cats." Of course, they understand the business better now. It is the correspondence with Messrs. May and Williams which shows that "Mrs. Forestier-Walker" was residing at Helebridge simultaneously with Mrs. Davis; and it was to them that she explained that Mrs. Davis was her sister, when paying them with Mrs. Davis's cheques. These payments seem always to have been in arrear, and at the end of December the lady owed about £20. She subsequently paid a part of this, but in March she owed about £27, including the price of an advertisement which had been published for her, and Messrs. May and Williams then stopped further delivery. It is interesting to note that immediately after this, Mrs. Davis, and likewise Mrs. Lewis, departed from Bidford, where she then was.

It is highly probable that other people have cause to regret their dealings with Mrs. Davis, or whatever her name may be, besides those who have bought newspapers of, or sold newspapers to her. People who dodge about from one furnished house to another, eking out their means by devices like the above, are generally undesirable customers in all forms of business. Both Mrs. Davis of Helebridge and Mrs. Forestier-Walker of Bidford use an imposing coat of arms, surmounted by a sort of imperial crown, with the motto "Nil Desperandum." When selling newspapers a year ago from Stratton Hall, Mrs. Staniland Davis writes a note to one of her customers on a handsome visiting-card, indicating that she is at home on "2nd Friday," and one document from this address bears a crest in the shape of an heraldic monster, with the motto "Turris fortissima Deus." When negotiating with another customer from Stratton Hall in the name of Walker, she stated that the house was "our own," and that her husband was a solicitor. In view of these little circumstances, it is not surprising to hear that Mr. and Mrs. Davis left debts behind them at Helebridge. A still more instructive incident comes to my knowledge while I am writing. When residing at Stratton Hall last spring, Mr. Davis ordered a few shillingsworth of goods from a firm in London, explaining that he did not remit payment, as he did not know whether the terms were for cash. A few weeks ago, the account never having been paid, the firm sent Mr. Davis an application for payment by registered letter. The letter was re-addressed by the Post Office, but refused on delivery at the second address, and in due course returned to the sender. The second address is the one from which Mr. Davis has just written to me. A man does not as a rule refuse to take in a registered letter when tendered to him; but in this case the envelope bore the name and address of the firm who despatched it, and the refusal of the addressee to receive it under these circumstances is a proceeding which speaks for itself. It is pretty evident that Mr. and Mrs. Davis are a couple who ought to be brought to book, and if any of their numerous creditors who have written to me are disposed to co-operate for that purpose, I shall be pleased to put them in communication with one another.

There seems to be a great demand for weekly papers at reduced terms, and it leads to a great deal of barefaced swindling. Concurrently with the above revelations, I have had a communication from a gentleman in the provinces who, as the result of an advertisement which he saw in the Exchange and Mart, paid 3s. a few weeks ago to one H. Norman, who gave an address in London. For this sum Norman was to supply Truth on the day after publication for three months. He never supplied it at all, and I find that the address he used was a small shop which is now shut up. On the face of it, an offer to supply Truth at less than half-price on the day after publication is open to some suspicion. I have no objection to people obtaining the paper at reduced prices, if they can, and the large business that is done in selling or exchanging weeklies second-hand is a perfectly legitimate one, and probably advantageous to the proprietors of the papers. But I would point out to all my readers that it is desirable in these cases to ascertain with whom you are dealing before remitting cash, and the more so when payment is requested for six months or a year in advance.

THE GRAVENEY CHURCH SCANDAL.

Numerous warnings have been given in Truth against the begging letters of Mrs. Hanham, wife of the Vicar of Graveney, Faversham. For upwards of twelve years past this lady has followed the profession of an habitual mendicant, and she is so active in the business and so successful in her operations that it is time some serious attempt was made to put a stop to the scandal which she is creating. A long correspondence which has just been handed to me affords a typical illustration of her modus operandi. In the early part of 1906 she appears to have addressed herself to a benevolently-disposed lady, telling—as usual with her, at portentous length—a moving story of domestic distress. In former times the narrative has generally included some definite statements as to her husband having got into difficulties through becoming surety for somebody else's debt, and being threatened in consequence with an execution and sale of his effects. In the present instance she refrains from going minutely into details, possibly under a consciousness that she is being watched, and that too great preciseness in misrepresentations of fact may get her into trouble. She merely states that "we are now in a sad state of distress, not through any misdoing, but as a result of untoward circumstances over which we have had no control, and unless we can find £20 and pay it within four days from now, our furniture will be seized, and sold to realise that amount." This is the basis of her appeal, supplemented by a long history of her husband's illness and other family troubles. She explains that she is expecting money shortly, and merely asks for a loan to enable her to tide over a temporary difficulty, thus:—

> Will you forgive me, dear Madam, for asking if you will help me with the loan of the sum we need in time to free us from these people? I would give you a properly signed and stamped agreement to repay the loan in two quarterly instalments, and with 5 per cent. interest upon it. I would also give you an undertaking that in the event of my not fulfilling my word as to repayment, you might claim my "Encyclopædia Britannica," which cost me £35 with the book-case.

Whether influenced by the tale of distress or the alleged value of the Encyclopædia Britannica and bookcase as security for the advance, the good lady thus appealed to lent the £20. She received a profuse acknowledgment, together with a promise to repay the money with interest by two quarterly instalments, written over a penny stamp, which Mrs. Hanham apparently regards as a "properly signed and stamped agreement"; but she does not appear to have received any lien upon the "Encyclopædia Britannica." On the very next day Mrs. Hanham is "asking for more." Like all of her class, the prompt success of the appeal encourages her to repeat the effort, and the victim is favoured with the following story:—

I have sent the amount on to these people, expecting that would end the matter, but I have just received a communication from them that unless they receive, on or before Monday next, the sum of £5 10s. for expenses, they will proceed as they had intended. I do not know what to do, for I have no means here of getting this money together. Will you, dear Madam, help me this once more? I truly will not trouble you again, except to return the money, etc., etc.

Again the good lady parted with her money. Again she received profuse thanks, accompanied by another "properly signed and stamped agreement" of the same character as before. This document was dated April 2. By April 6 Mrs. Hanham has made up her mind to try again, and the pretext for her next appeal deserves quoting in full:—

Dear Madam,—Last night, after post time, I was amazed to have this man come back again, bringing your cheque with him. It appears they had returned it from Lloyds', because you had written out the cheque as if my name was "Hamham," and I had not noticed it, and so endorsed it, as I always do sign my name, "E. G. Hanham." The bank people had printed on the cheque "Irregularly endorsed," and I had to endorse it afresh, as much like your writing as I could, "E. G. Hamham." However, the man has charged me £2 2s., as expenses for returning till to-morrow, and says that unless I pay him the £2 2s. to-morrow, he will have to stay over Sunday, and charge me 10s. per day while he stays.

I really have not the money, and if he does not go to-morrow it will be more and more expense heaped up. Will you once more help me with just this £2 2s. by telegraph money order to-morrow, Saturday? I would not ask it, but I do not know whatever I shall do if I have this worry all Sunday. I will return the £2 2s. in a fortnight from now, if you will only help me in this way in time. Please forgive me for asking this after your recent kindness, and please do help me in time.—I am, yours gratefully,

Eva G. Hanham.

Once more the good lady allowed herself to be imposed upon, and sent the money, having thus parted with over £27 in the course of a week. At the end of a fortnight (April 20), when the last advance was to have been paid, Mrs. Hanham writes promptly, but, needless to say, not with any remittance, on the contrary, with a fresh appeal. Without any apology or explanation for her failure to keep her previous promise she begins:—

Please forgive me for troubling you again, but I am in such distress. I have only just got together over £6 for these people, for the expenses which have accumulated since I last wrote to you, and this amount I realised by privately selling some things. There is still another £2 10s. to be met, for the things I sold did not realise so much as I thought they would, and now these people say that unless this £2 10s. is paid by 2 o'clock they will send a sheriff's officer into the house till it is paid. . . . . My husband is so unwell again with the recurrence of the gout in his feet that I am at my wits' end to know what to do with him.

Will you help me in this trouble, dear Madam, by wiring me £2 2s. before 2 o'clock? I promise faithfully to repay it in or within a fortnight, and I will faithfully keep my word, etc., etc.

Whether the victim parted with a further £2 10s. on this last appeal, I do not know, but I should judge that she did not, because after this she heard nothing more of Mrs. Hanham for three months, and there is no doubt that the woman would have kept on applying for fresh loans until she found that there was no more to be got. Before the end of the three months she ought to have paid not only the last two loans, which were to have been repaid within a fortnight, but the first instalment of the original advance, and the lender seems to have written to remind her of this. Here is a précis of Mrs. Hanham's subsequent letters:—

July 31, 1906.—So sorry not to have returned your kind loans earlier. Am only just getting better after an operation. Hope and believe I shall have the money within the next fortnight. Will forward it as soon as I receive it. Payment has been delayed, c. you would have had it before.

August 2, 1906.—Am sorry there is still a delay, but I cannot send to you till I receive some money.

October 22, 1906.—Am honestly regretting the delay, but I have truly not been in a position to send the money earlier. Nothing has ever been further from my thoughts than to defraud you. Please forgive me, I will send it some time this week truly, and without fail.

November 26, 1906.—Am sorry there has been so long a delay in returning your money, but if I had only had the money to send, you should not have been kept waiting a day longer than was specified. I never was "a fraud" yet, I and all belonging to me have always paid 20s. in the pound, I am thankful to say, and I hope we always shall. You shall have your full amount on or before Saturday next.

December 1, 1906.—Cannot get the cash for the amount which I have just received, and which is so long overdue, until Thursday next, as it arrived too late to-day to send it to the bank. On Thursday, as soon as I receive it, I will wire the money to you. Hope you will not blame me for extra delay. Have just a little over 10s. to provide all that is needed for the family till next Thursday.

December 11, 1906.—Am sending you the money on Friday, 14th inst. I truly could not manage it earlier.

December 28, 1906.—Hope to make you the promised payment within a week or two. Really have not it in my power at once. Have had such a sick house, and my husband is now in bed with a severe attack of bronchitis. Am just up after influenza.

March 14, 1907. [Evidently the lender had been expostulating during this interval.—Ed.]—Have delayed sending an answer, because I have been hoping to be able to send an enclosure too. Cannot do so now, however, for I have not yet the money in hand. Shall have some in a short time, however. Assure you you shall have every farthing of the amount. Am not an impostor or a cheat. Mr. Hanham has not left his bed for a month. All the five children only just recovered from influenza and measles.

March 16, 1907.—Am sending you part of your money on Thursday. Cannot get it any earlier.

March 21, 1907.—Owing to an error in the figures on my cheque, which was corrected, but the correction was not initialled, the payment has been delayed for a few days. The mistake was not discovered till the cheque reached the London branch, and it has had to be returned to the sender now to be initialled. I am told I shall have it on Saturday or Monday, and I will forward it to you directly it reaches my hands.

You see it really is not due to any fault of mine that this delay has been caused. . . . . .

It is unnecessary to comment on this correspondence, for the character of the woman is revealed at every stage of it; and it is entirely of a piece with all the previous letters from her pen that have been noticed in Truth. Mrs. Hanham is perpetually engaged in this trick, and even if in the above case she had kept any of her promises to pay the money, they would only have been kept by swindling some fresh victim in the same manner. The position of herself and her husband has been already explained in these columns. Mr. Hanham's living has been sequestrated, his licence has been withdrawn, and the parish has been placed in charge of a curate by the Archbishop of Canterbury, but the vicar remains in possession of the house. He and his wife have little means of subsistence beyond the proceeds of Mrs. Hanham's begging letters. It is solely the fact that she is able to write from Graveney Vicarage that gives the lady's appeals an air of plausibility, and enables her to impose upon benevolent people. That a country vicarage house should be systematically used for such a purpose is nothing less than a scandal to the Church—and the more so when it is remembered that her methods are such that she is well within the reach of the law if anybody would take the trouble to prosecute her. It seems to me that this is a matter in which the Archbishop of Canterbury ought to take very decisive action, both for the sake of the Church and for the protection of the public.

THE THEATRES.

"Tom Jones," at the Apollo.

Tom Jones was sitting, about mid-day some weeks ago, at a small table in the bar at Romano's. His looks were not very promising, for he bore an air of having been up all night. His dress clothes shone with unpleasant brilliancy in response to the sun's invitation. His hat was in every sense a crush hat. The fact was that Tom Jones had been at the Covent Garden Ball on the previous evening, where, to his mighty surprise, he had met Blifil. Blifil on his side expressed at once surprise and regret at seeing Tom Jones leading a life of unrestrained pleasure, as the latter began suddenly to dance a pas seul. This had been too much for Tom Jones, who had again raised his hand to Blifil, and on this occasion given him so sound a pummelling, though Tom had but one arm to do it with, that Blifil swore he would never visit such places again, even with a view to raising their moral tone. Blifil was last seen being sponged by that sympathetic soul, Mrs. Ormiston Chant. As for Tom Jones, the myrmidons of the law had ejected him from the ball-room, after a pretty tussle, and Tom, not knowing his way about modern London, had wandered up and down the Strand and to and fro over the Bridge until it was possible to obtain liquid refreshment. This he had done at several less notable establishments, and now sat turning over and over in his pocket his last crown at Romano's.

"I wish I were dead," said Tom to himself, feeling far from well, and dimly realising the unpleasantness of being penniless in town.

"It's not much good wishing that, because you know you're immortal," came from a bluff-looking gentleman at his elbow. "You'll feel better after you've had some lunch. Come and have some with me."

Tom Jones rose and followed his unknown friend into the restaurant, where they found another individual, a strapping young man, with a ruddy countenance.

"This is Tom Brown, who has finished his school days and now writes lyrics for the stage and does the boxing for the Sportsman's Life," said the unknown.

Tom bowed, and in return asked who their entertainer might be.

"That's a good joke to crack," laughed the bluff man. "Not know me, why I'm Tom Smith, see?"

Upon Tom Jones confessing that he did not clearly see, Tom Smith explained that besides making the best crackers he also composed music, which never failed to go with a bang.

"Now," said Tom Smith, "what I wish to suggest is that we should act you, Mr. Jones. We want you up-to-date. Tom Brown here has a pal, Dan Rolyat, who'll do Partridge ever so much better than Partridge can do himself in your dad Fielding's book. He'll also put in all the good new wheezes—he's got one about 'Lizzie the leech' that fairly fetches 'em; pit, gallery, stalls, and boxes. All you've got to do is to hide behind Mr. Hayden Coffin as much as you can. He'll be there to sing the part I've called after you, and a very fine voice he has, too, and looks quite the gentleman, so you needn't look haughty."

"I'm not haughty; but who's going to be Sophia?" said Jones, with determination. "I won't lend my name to anything of the kind until I see her with my own eyes."

"Well, you've not far to look; there she is, sitting at the next table with the fair gentleman," said Tom Smith.

Jones gave one glance in the direction of Miss Ruth Vincent, and, turning to Smith and Brown, clasped each warmly by the hand and swore he would do his utmost to make the entertainment a success. At this moment Mr. Tom Davis, lessee and manager of the Apollo Theatre, came in by appointment to meet Mr. Tom Smith, and all business arrangements were soon completed. Tom Jones, it was decided, should remain a great deal in the background and let Mr. Hayden Coffin do the singing. Tom, however, insisted upon having a go at the detested Blifil in the first act, but, as was remarked upon the occasion of the first performance, behaved in every other respect like a perfect tenor.

Sophia, when she heard Miss Vincent sing, readily resigned her personality and removed into the shadow; there to converse with Tom Jones, while her maid, Honour, frisked about the stage with Miss Carrie Moore.

Squire Western alone refused altogether to be Mr. Ambrose Manning, so, of course, Mr. Manning had to be Squire Western. And a very good gouty, swearing old squire he was. I am sure that if he had caught Mr. Dan Rolyat pretending to be Partridge and looking for "Lizzie the leech," under the table, he would have broken every bone in his body.

I took my Fielding to the first performance. Sophia vowed Miss Vincent sang as sweet as any dove (I added, "as any hundred doves"). Tom Jones was, as I have said, on his best behaviour after Act I. That plaguy villain, Blifil, said that Mr. Arthur Soames seemed too reckless and rollicking a young man for him (a gross injustice, as usual, you sneak, Blifil: Mr. Soames was duly mean and decorously perfidious). Squire Western was quite beside himself with rage, and in every other respect, and very nearly caught Mr. Dan Rolyat under the table. As for the latter, he was observed flying before the infuriated Partridge, who amusingly enough was enraged on his side at being made into a mere mountebank (another gross injustice: Mr. Rolyat is an amusing comedian).

P.S.—As I conclude this plain but well-varnished account of the performance at the Apollo Theatre, a friend looks over my shoulder who is possessed with a love of accuracy. He insists upon it that Mr. Tom Smith, of "cracker" fame, and Tom Brown, of "School Days," had nothing to do with the performance, that Mr. Taylor wrote the lyrics, Messrs. Thompson and Courtneidge the book, Mr. German the music. It may be so from his point of view. But points of view are numerous, and I prefer the cast and the creators as I saw them.

"Tales of Hoffmann," at the Adelphi Theatre.

"Make haste, make haste, to mount my piece; I am in a hurry, and have only one wish in the world—to see the first performance of my 'Stories of Hoffman.'" Thus spoke the aged Offenbach of his swan song, which the company from Berlin is at present performing at the Adelphi Theatre.

Let me say at once that I think the opera and the performance both, taken individually and as a whole, admirable. I would strongly recommend all who enjoy good music and good acting to hasten to the Adelphi, while the Germans are with us. Their visit will be brief, and we are not likely again to have such an opportunity for some time. The foreign language is hardly, if at all, a bar to the enjoyment of this beautiful work, for in the first place the synopsis, handed together with the programme and translation, sets one right at once as to the story, and in the second place, that story, or rather set of stories, is so very clear in the telling that even without such aid one could hardly go wrong.

* * * * *

Although there is some admirable comedy of the lightest sort in the first act, when Hoffmann, to whom Coppelius has given the spectacles that make inanimate things seem real, becomes enamoured of the dancing doll, the handiwork of Niklaus, yet here, alone in Offenbach's work, we see that he could be divinely serious if he tried. To my mind we see nothing less than that this much applauded yet little esteemed vaudevillist had more than a touch of genius. The words I quote at the beginning of this article are to my mind proof of this. He knew in his heart of hearts that here he had done something that would survive him, because in it his genius had for the first and last time found expression. It is sad to think that his wish was not gratified, for he died October 5, 1880, and the opera was not produced before February 10, 1881. It was played on that occasion for over one hundred nights at the Opéra Comique, Paris, was afterwards given in Germany, and it was as the first few bars of it had sounded through the Ring Theater, Vienna, that the terrible cry of fire echoed through the building, which was destroyed and many lives lost. I have not space to do more than mention the gay fantastic airs of the first act, the passion of the love-duet between Hoffmann and the Courtezan of the second act, and the wonderful singing and orchestration of those fantastic scenes of the third, where the father of the singer, the devil, Hoffmann, and the young singer herself rivet and entrance the attention from beginning to end. Do not fail to go and hear the Swan Song of Offenbach.

* * * * *

"The Judgment of Pharaoh" must, I am sorry to say, be unfavourable. At the Scala Theatre Mr. Alfred C. Calmour's play was produced with exquisite taste and a nice sense for colour values in the great scenes of "The Temple of Osiris" and "The Court of Concubines." Artists, however, are almost the sole class of the community who are likely to extract much pleasure from this very serious attempt to give us a picture of Judæa-Egyptian life.

Although nothing was spared in the shape of dance and music to heighten the general effect and impart to the performance that spirit of lightness and beauty so much to be desired, an undeniable feeling of weariness crept over the audience at an early period of the evening, and this only gained more ground as the performance proceeded. I could not contrive to get up an interest in the double love-affairs of the audacious young Jew who comes to beard Pharaoh in his hall. And even the beauty and passion of Miss Nora Lancaster's Miriam failed to rouse me. To say that Mr. Brandon Thomas played Pharaoh, is to say that it was played with all due majesty and propriety. Yet none of this and of much else in the way of artistic effect served to drag the cart of comedy out of the rut.

"Popular" prices are the order of the day at the Scala, but I fear these will not avail much, until some form of entertainment be discovered that shall get the better of the architectural qualities of the theatre. The Scala, especially with the beautiful new decorations of the ceiling and the brighter tone of the other parts of the house, remains a psychically chilly auditorium. The players never seem able to set up that magnetic current with the audience which makes for success. In fine, I can only hope that Dr. Distin Maddick may eventually hit upon some means of kindling the enthusiasm of audiences at the Scala, but I cannot honestly advise my readers, save enthusiasts for colour, to betake themselves thither until this be achieved.

* * * * *

Last week witnessed a considerable number of new performances, among which Mr. Lewis Waller's of Tom Taylor's old play, "Clancarty" at the Lyric Theatre was important. Mr. W. Mackintosh made a hit as William III., and Mr. Waller carried his special public with him as the adventurous Jacobite servant to James II. Miss Evelyn Millard afforded the feminine counterpoise which the virile genius of Mr. Waller asks. In Miss Adrienne Augarde as Lady Betty Noel we had a very dainty recruit from the Gaiety Theatre. I shall possibly have occasion to dwell at greater length upon this production when there is less pressure upon time and space.

* * * * *

Mr. Tree seems to have had a pleasant personal reception in Berlin, though the critiques of his Shakespearean productions have been justly severe. A harmless little tale of Miss Viola Tree's first interview with the Kaiser has, perhaps, not yet found its way into print. The Kaiser remarked that he had seen her while he was riding in the Thiergarten and had rejoiced at being on horseback, "for it is not right that Emperors should look up to little girls." I do not know that this has much to do with dramatic art; but I am not sure that our leading actors have much to do with it either. They are mostly too much occupied with social or political or financial intrigue to be able to afford to their art that whole-souled devotion which every art worthy of the name demands of its votaries. These remarks may sound pessimistic. I wish they were not also true.

* * * * *

Mr. Bourchier thinks (every week) that some doing of his will interest my readers. This week the news is that Mr. Bourchier and Miss Vanbrugh will be playing in "The Merchant of Venice" at Stratford-on-Avon, on April 29.

* * * * *

At the Hippodrome this week is to be witnessed an exhibition of tree-felling by two axe-men of Australia. The great rapidity of their work is apparently one of its most notable characteristics, and I hope to find time to see a tree of sixty-three inches in girth cut through in one minute eleven seconds. Certainly the tree must be a special tree or the axe-men special axe-men to make such a feat possible. I prefer to believe both tree and axe-men genuine. Amateurs of the late Mr. Gladstone's favourite pastime are invited to compete, but I fancy that Londoners will not shake the lists with much furious competition.

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST.

The Journalistic Catechism.

(For the use of the Halfpenny Press-man.)

Question: Who are you?

Answer: A halfpenny journalist.

Q.: What is a halfpenny journalist?

A.: A man who purveys news to the halfpenny public.

Q.: What is the halfpenny public?

A.: The largest and most gullible section of the community.

Q.: What is news?

A.: News is of two kinds; the prosaic, and the romantic.

Q.: Do you purvey much prosaic news?

A.: Very little.

Q.: Do you purvey much romantic news?

A.: A great deal.

Q.: Quote me an example of romantic news.

A.: The recent abdication of the Czar, and the engagement of Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein to the Grand Duke Michael of Russia.

Q.: Whence did you get this romantic news?

A.: Out of my own head.

Q.: Why did you do that?

A.: Because I calculated that it would sell my papers.

Q.: Did it sell your papers?

A.: Yes; like hot cakes.

Q.: What is correspondence?

A.: Letters written to my papers.

Q.: Who writes them?

A.: I write the bulk of them myself.

Q.: Do you write them over your own name?

A.: No; over various noms-de-plume.

Q.: Mention some of these noms-de-plume.

A.: "Fairplay," "Paterfamilias," "Anti-humbug," "Anxious Mother," "One Who Knows," and "Common Sense."

Q.: What is public opinion?

A.: The opinion which I express in my leaders.

Q.: What relation does it bear to the real sentiments of the public?

A.: None whatever.

Q.: What is an advertisement manager?

A.: The man who receives and examines all advertisements sent in to my papers, and rejects such as are unsuitable.

Q.: What advertisements does he reject as unsuitable?

A.: Those which are not accompanied by a remittance.

Q.: Are all advertisements accompanied by a remittance suitable?

A.: Certainly. The remittance is the one thing needful.

Q.: What is the education of the public?

A.: The instruction of my readers in my views.

Q.: What are your views?

A.: It depends in which of my papers I am airing them.

Q.: How so?

A.: I mean that my views on any given subject as aired in the Daily Looking-glass do not necessarily coincide with my views as aired in the Evening Intelligencer.

Q.: Illustrate by an example.

A.: I will. For instance, in the Daily Looking-glass I strongly advocated the reprieve of Rayner; but in the Evening Intelligencer I strenuously denounced the outcry in his favour as mawkish sentimentalism.

Q.: Which was your real view?

A.: Both.

Q.: But how is that possible?

A.: All things are possible to the halfpenny journalist.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

SECULARISING JOAN OF ARC.

THE prohibition of the Joan of Arc cortège in its usual form at Orleans has been the occasion of a mighty outflow of ink. That form was till the end of the first decade of Louis Philippe's reign purely civilian, although he had in that period Conservative Prime Ministers. The names of Casimir Perier, De Broglie, and Comte Molé figure in the list. The Comte's Ministry was known as the "gentleman's Cabinet." When Louis Philippe wanted to secure Neapolitan, Brazilian, and Spanish heiresses for his younger sons, and among them Isabella II., he and the Calvinist Guizot decided to give the Joan of Arc celebration a sacerdotal character. The Second Empire went further in this direction after a State visit of Napoleon III. and Eugénie to Orleans. They wanted to conciliate Bishop Dupanloup, whose arch hobby was Joan of Arc, and who was not indifferent to the "temporalities" side of her exaltation. The vestries of Orleans were the first to see that a fortune lay in the Maid.

The great changes from the last celebration will be the addition to the cortège of the masonic bodies of the Loiret, with their emblems, and of the artillery of a whole division, the withdrawal of the pas from the Church, the bearing of Joan's banner at the head of the troops, who will open the march, a regiment of cavalry in gala uniform leading. The artillery is to bring up the rear. The history of the siege of Orleans has been a good deal rectified in late years. We now know that the raising of it was mainly due to the artillery created by the Brothers Bureau with funds provided by Yolanda, Duchess of Anjou, born Princess of Aragon-Trinacria (the old name for Sicily) and aunt-in-law and mother-in-law of Charles VII. She sold the county of Nice to the Duke of Savoy to obtain them, and she caused the command to be entrusted to Baron de Rais, whom we know as Bluebeard, and the great friend of the Maid through her whole campaign. It is, therefore, as it should be for the artillery to have a prominent place in the cortège. As to the Freemasons, in the Middle Ages the Church was, and still is, indebted to them for those grand cathedrals of Orleans, Rheims, and Rouen which we associate with the career of Joan of Arc.

The official programme has not been drawn up in a Diocletian-like spirit. It is the result of a compromise between the Government and the civic authorities of Orleans. The former wanted to mark the change brought about by the Law of Separation. The latter feared that if the clergy were excluded as a body the town might lose a golden harvest. It is the same at Orleans as it was at Ephesus, when the Great Diana gave so much employment to the silversmiths. The two days of festivity bring about 500,000 fr. to the hotels and those townspeople licensed for the nonce to let lodgings. The market people and dealers in souvenirs profit greatly, and it is as if the sluggish, sleepy town were raised to liveliness by the kiss of a Prince Charming. M. Rabier, the advanced Deputy, whom the clergy, in obedience to Monsignor Montagnini's orders, so hotly opposed at the last elections, is for giving the Church every inducement to appear in the procession. He talked round the Prime Minister to rescind (as Minister of the Interior) his rule against pontifical and other vestments, the "exposure" of relics, which never are exposed, but carried in cases or chasses of precious workmanship and generally in precious metals and be-jewelled. The Bishop, should he honour the cortège with his presence, can fly his banner and hoist his pastoral crook. The cross will, however, be taboo, probably from a regard for Viviani, the Jews, and the bearers of the Masonic triangle and compass. I suppose they think the line must be drawn somewhere. We live, do we not, in a queer world?

Yielding to M. Rabier and the Mayor of Orleans, M. Clemenceau has also decided that the procession is to start from the Town Hall instead of from the Cathedral of La Sainte Croix, but it is to halt in front of the latter and to leave a space open for Bishop, Dean, Chapter, and other clergy, immediately behind the Prefect and local civil authorities. These comprise the judges, the rectors of the boys' and girls' lyceums, and the professors, some of whom are ladies. The board school teachers and their pupils are to have an honourable place in the procession. So should have Professor Thalamas, whom the Combes Ministry treated so harshly for reading to a class at the Lycée Condorcet some pages of the rectified history of the siege of Orleans. A young grandson of Berry, the reactionist coachbuilder and deputy, made a row about the professor's ears to protest against his "blasphemous lesson." The Minister of Public Instruction had the weakness to shift M. Thalamas, "as a punishment," to the Lycée in the Faubourg St. Antoine. I read the lesson, and thought it as temperate as true. Authorities were pointed out, and the pupils advised to search them up for themselves, so as to form a quite independent judgment. This might not be so spectacular as burning Pierre Cauchon, Bishop of Beauvais, in effigy, in his pontifical vestments; but it would be an act of higher justice.

The band of the Republican Guard is to charm the ears of spectators. Foresters employed by the Domain have been instructed to furnish the Mayor with what greenery and wood flowers he may want. We are not sure whether there will be the usual cavalcade of the young men of the leading families, le monde chic being clerical. The cavalcade I saw at a procession got up in Bishop Dupanloup's time boasted wealthy nobles from the châteaux along the Loire, on their hunting mounts, a Montpensier, a Catholic Saxe-Coburg, two Bavarian Princes, and a lot of heavy swell cavalry officers who had been educated near Orleans. They had had good riding masters, rode blood horses, and in their fifteenth-century costumes were a taking feature.

A movement is on foot to bring the Orleans celebration into accord "with historical truth." One of its promoters submitted it last week to the Minister of the Interior, and he may "bite" if the Bishop continues to take offence at the changes I have mentioned. L'Aurore approves. The idea is to materialise the tragical close of Joan's career. Thus, the burning in effigy of Pierre Cauchon is proposed. I cannot understand how "Joan of Arc's judges," all Churchmen, can now be brought, even ignominiously, into a procession in her honour. There were at her trial over two score, and they comprised the Grand Inquisitors' Deputy, and many bishops, deans, canons, Dominicans, serving as assessors to the Deputy Grand Inquisitor, and Doctors of Divinity of the Sorbonne. As they rode to Rouen on horses and mules, an Antoine could turn them to good account in a circus spectacle, but hardly in the streets. They had been convoked by the Deputy Grand Inquisitor. Bedford had no hand in the matter beyond giving safe conducts. Each Churchman of eminence had his men-at arms, secretaries, chaplain, pack-horses, and servants, probably dressed as the knaves on packs of playing cards. There were so many as to cause, along the road, provisions to run up to famine prices. The only English bishop present at the trial was that Cardinal Beaufort, of Winchester, who, in dying, "gave no sign." So far from backing up Pierre Cauchon and the Deputy Grand Inquisitor, he tried to save Joan, and wept and sobbed from sympathising pity during her examination. Duruy, in his history, bears witness to the weeping. He had come to France with a heavily laden money chest and 23,000 soldiers, on his way to Bohemia to fight the Hussites. His great desire at Rouen was to get Joan off and give her, with himself, the joint command of his host of warriors. It was one of those plans that God disposes of, not as man proposes, though there are erudite historians who believed that he must have so far succeeded as to save Joan.

I do not at all suppose that any judge was in bad faith or more cruel than the average man or woman of his time. The drowning, burning, or hanging of a witch was an ordinary event, or, rather, circumstance. The chroniclers of Joan's time record such burnings on the French side as precisely for having set up to rout the English by infernal arts. A semi-idiotic shepherd's boy suffered even as Joan did for this crime. To accuse anyone of dealing in the black art was to sentence him or her to a disgraceful death. The healing of ague by simples might be construed into working with the help of the Evil One. A sister-in-law of Bedford, the wife of the Regent of England, "Good Duke Humphry," had to walk in a white sheet and bare-footed through the streets of London and to go to prison for life, on the charge of raising evil spirits.

Are we never to get to the end of the Montagnini papers? There are upwards of 3,000 to be examined. A sub-committee had been named to lighten the labours of the committee named to report on them. As Rome threatens to publish any that may be held back out of regard for Republicans, it has been decided to print all, and give it in a volume annexed to the report. When this reading may take place it is hard to say, as the President of the Committee has gone to Nice, and hopes to remain there until the Chambers meet. The rule of secrecy is to be observed. This has not prevented some amusing revelations as to the private inquiry business of the Papal Agent. He kept records of the secret doings of les gens du monde, et du meilleur, of officers and their families, and of Republicans of mark, and he busied himself as a match-maker. He rendered a good service to an illustrious German house, whose daughter had a romantic disposition, and paid the penalty. The idea struck one of her relatives here that Monsignor Montagnini could, if interested in the young lady, help her to make an honourable match. To this end he got hold of a Catholic officer socially ambitious, and negotiated with Rome for the speedy purchase of a title for him—that of Comte. He so warmed to the business that he was almost in a fever of apprehension lest they might spoil things at the Vatican by not making haste. A wedding at the last moment was to be avoided for obvious reasons. This is not the only wedding in extremis which he arranged. The Committee have decided not, in such matters, to give full names or other indications beyond initials. The Deputy who charged his wife to recommend a candidate for a bishopric must feel rather foolish, as he is a member of the Committee. He declares that she never asked his leave. He had no idea of her interest in the curé she named, who happens to be rich and to cultivate drawing-room graces.

A few of Montagnini's worries were the theft in the transport of bottles of champagne, liqueurs, fine wines, and delicious bonbons. The number of the bottles never corresponded to the invoices the donors sent by post. The barrels of choice wines had evidently been tapped in transmission. What has been said of late in Truth on Italian railways might be studied with advantage at the Vatican. They seemed to think there that false invoices had been sent. Montagnini recoiled from notifying the "suction" of the barrel of wine of 226 litres and the withdrawal of ten Château Lafittes from three dozen. He could feel sure of the devotion of those who sent these and other vintages to the Holy Father, and of their truthfulness. He did notify to two what had happened, and it made them furious.

We hear from the Montagnini papers that M. Berteaux had but one recommendable quality. He hated Edgar Combes, and refused to meet him at a dinner party. The person the ex-War Minister declined to meet was M. Paul Loubet. Was it because of this enmity that Rouvier brought M. Berteaux into the War Office, in spite of all the efforts made to keep M. Etienne there? In the last year of his Presidency M. Loubet's path was bestrewn with thorns. The Papal Agent was instrumental in casting some of them in the way. He and le très bon Piou believed Doumer to be ripe for the presidency, and thought it good policy to make sure of Loubet's retirement, though re-election were offered.

We ought, when we have fairly good reason to be satisfied, to be well satisfied. The fairly well may last long; the very well never can. The efforts of the Papal Agent in this way hastened the fall of the Combes Cabinet. He and Piou obtained from Mme. Lebaudy money enough to buy those secret reports on officers in active services which had been collected in pigeon holes of the secretary of the Grand Orient. They afforded "le très bon Syveton" an excuse to blacken the eyes of General André. His friends losing their heads, the General had to resign. This led to the dislocation of the Combes Cabinet and its fall. Combes, a ci-devant priest, would have considered the canonical bearings of the Separation, and in disposing of them have given what satisfaction he could to the Holy See. The Clerical Party lost the moderating influence of Loubet. They missed the triumph they looked for when they and Doumer entered into an accord and they got Fallières as President and Clemenceau as Prime Minister. His bark is often worse than his bite, but the Papal Agent and his friends so managed that he must bite as well as bark. From the standpoint of the bloc the seizure of the Montagnini papers and the expulsion of Montagnini was a master stroke. Only Clemenceau would or could have taken both steps. Fallières has no other ambition than to lead an easy, kindly life as constitutional President, giving now and then, with a twinkle in the eye or a grave face, a word of advice at a ministerial council or in private talk with a Minister. He passes all the time he can now that Parliament is up at Rambouillet. The sylvan air is tonic and agrees with him. If some Imperial or Royal visitor is to be received at the Elysée he comes to town in his motor. The motor brought him here when he wanted to open the Champ de Mars Exhibition.

The charming position King Edward fills here as friend, Boulevardier, and the most sympathetic of crowned heads seems to have made the German Emperor emulous. William II. boasted to Massenet at the lunch he gave him of his French tastes and Coligny blood which to some degree makes him a Frenchman. He has announced his gracious intention of sending the rarest flowers in his gardens and greenhouses to the Horticultural Show to be held in the Cours de la Reine next May. He will have as rivals the Egyptian Prince Tussun, the Shah, whose rose gardens at Tabriz are incomparable, and the gardener of the Grand Duke of Luxembourg. The Emperor was all sunshine in receiving M. Cambon. This does not prevent things looking unpleasant in Morocco. The French complain that the Germans, in their engineering works at Tangier and El Arisch, go further than the ruling of the Algeciras Conference warrants, and they run on too fast not to be able to plead the accomplished fact shortly. The great honour done to the Prince of Monaco by William II. is in payment of an outstanding bill for secret diplomatic services. News communicated by the Prince two years ago caused the scare, the fall of Delcassé, and the frousse that cost France about 250,000,000 fr. for hastily made military preparations.

Mortlocks. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert, Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—Oxford-st., and Orchard-st., London, W.

A PEER AMONG THE PROLETARIAT.

I AM not really in a fit state to write an article for you this week. I am much too happy, too deliriously, overwhelmingly happy, to think about anything but how happy I am. I dare say it won't interest you as much as it does me, or your readers either—and I don't care whether it does or not—but Jessie and I are married! We were married on Thursday, at a registry office, and there's not a soul knows a word about it yet. Isn't it wonderful? Isn't it—it is not a bit of use my trying to tell you how deliriously happy I am. You couldn't understand—nobody ever could—because you don't know Jessie. If it wasn't that she says I must sit down and write something, I'd see you at—but, any way, I dare say it will interest you to know how we began our honeymoon—especially as you are more or less responsible for its having come off so soon. You see, your people sent me a cheque for some of my articles, and it was so much bigger than anything I had expected that I didn't see why we couldn't get married right away. I have been rather worried, too, because a low beast of a millionaire creature has been making himself objectionable to Jessie in the last week or two, and she has twice broken off our engagement within ten days. So I didn't say anything about it to her, but just made my own preparations, and on Thursday morning I asked her to come motoring, and drove her straight down to the registry office. I was in a blue funk the whole time lest we should skid or something, a thing I've never felt before, and it wasn't until we were at the door that I told her what I was taking her there for. And she was as sweet about it as——

[The next two columns, being more of private than of general interest, have been omitted.—Ed. Truth.]

Of course, I wanted to take my darling right off to the Riviera, or somewhere, but she wouldn't hear of it, said that she wouldn't break her contract for anything, and that in any case I must write my article for you first. Naturally, I didn't feel like writing articles—hadn't got an idea in my head. And so she suggested the whole thing. It seems she had been reading about the Football Cup Final, and felt that she would like to see it, for one thing. So we spent Friday getting ourselves ready for it. We got everything ready-made at one of the cheap tailors. I don't think our own mothers would have known us when we were in our full war-paint. My darling had frizzled all her lovely hair out into a great fringe, and got a cheap sailor hat stuck right down over her forehead, and a coat of black velvet with jet things all over it, and a great bunch of blue and white ribbons on it. She had found out that one of the teams had blue and white as their colours—I don't know which to this moment, and it doesn't matter much, anyway. And I had got a cloth cap, light brown with big checks on it, and a ready-made suit that positively screamed, it was a sort of electric blue, and a blue and white silk handkerchief round my neck instead of a collar, and light yellow boots about eleven sizes too big, and a great blue and white paper rosette stuck in my buttonhole. You never saw anything like it in your life, and it was all Jessie's idea. And we got a sixpenny mouth organ and an earthenware jar, that I was to carry, filled with beer. We spent Friday evening trying the things on and practising the North-Country dialect. Jessie hadn't had time to get it all up, but she had got a lot of technical words together, and we arranged that I was to keep my mouth shut as much as possible, and she was to do the talking. If any one asked me, I was to say I came "frae Sheffield," and to any other questions I was to say, "I dunnot knaw," I think it was. "Chezow" was another word. I think it means "whether you like it or not," but I'm not sure. And I was to call the cup "t' coop," and bring it in as often as possible. And to say, "Poor old Toffee," and "What price the Tykes" every now and then when I got the chance.

I may as well say at once that we never got to the Crystal Palace. I had some idea of pretending we had, and writing it up from the evening papers, as, I am told, lots of swagger journalists do, but Jessie says No; and, of course, that settles it. What with rehearsing our parts and getting our clothes to look natural, we weren't ready much before 11. Jessie insisted on our walking, though I would much rather have cabbed it to Victoria. We didn't attract nearly as much attention as I had feared, though I am sure we looked odd enough, and just by Piccadilly-circus we came on a band of about a dozen men—all dressed very much as I was, and all with blue and white paper rosettes in their button-holes. We followed along close behind them, so as to be taken for some of their party, and I was getting a bit sick of it, though I didn't say so, for my darling wife was enjoying it no end, when just at the bottom of the Haymarket a brake passed us, with four horses and about a dozen men with cloth caps and blue and white rosettes on it. There was a tout hanging on to the back steps, who shouted something to us, and before I knew what was happening, Jessie had stopped him, and we had clambered on to it. We neither of us knew where it was going, but that didn't matter much as long as the others were there, for we supposed they must be going to the Crystal Palace too. We got very good seats, just behind the driver, who was explaining things as we went along. He drove us all round the West End, and it was really no end amusing.

We very soon found out, however, that the driver didn't know half as much as he pretended, and Jessie enjoyed herself no end pulling his leg. She made him take us past my place—it is let to Guggenheimer, the South African gold man, now—and he told us that it was where the Duke of Westminster lived. It was through the amazing lies the fellow was telling that the most extraordinary part of the whole thing came out. He was driving us past one of the clubs in Pall Mall, and he told us it was where Mr. Carnegie lived when he was in town. Suddenly a man who was sitting half asleep in a line with us, on the other side of the gangway, seemed to wake up. This man was a red-faced-looking fellow, about forty—the sort of man who leans up against public-house walls all day, to look at—but he suddenly sat up, and snapped out: "Rubbish, man. That's the So-and-so Club." The curious thing was that he said it in English as good as yours or mine. My dear girl laughed outright, which annoyed the driver, who evidently thought he was making a great impression on her. He turned round to the other fellow and sneered out: "Garn, cocky. A lot you know about it. Wite till yer get the 'ayseed arter yer 'air, 'fore yer talks ter me," or something like that. "Why, you fool, I'm a member," the red-faced man answered, getting in a paddy himself. He saw his mistake, just a moment too late, and all the rest of us, except two, burst out into a roar of laughter.

Then it came out that out of the fourteen of us on the brake, besides the driver and the tout, there were only two genuine Cup excursionists. The rest had all made themselves up for it, just as Jessie and I had. The red-faced man was—well, he was a very well-known M.P. indeed. Then there were six journalists, all doing it for different papers. Another was Algy Bevenish, so well made up that I should never have spotted him. He swore he had known us all the time, though nobody believed him. The other two were a parson and a fashionable doctor, who once attended my poor old dad. When we found out there were so many journalists among them, Jessie suggested to me that it might be a good idea to ask them to lunch. I made the brake-driver run us round to the Savoy, and ordered lunch for fourteen there and then. We had some trouble at first, until I could make them understand who I was; but we had a splendid time afterwards, and the two real excursionists enjoyed themselves no end, and didn't a bit mind having missed the match.

I've been looking into the matter since then, and I don't believe that of the 100,000 or so excursionists that the papers tell us came up to London for the Cup Final more than 10,000 or so were genuine. The rest were all journalists or people like ourselves—made up for the part to see what the North Country tripper really was like.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

FOOLS build Empires, dear Lady Betty, and wise men live on them. It has always been an upper-class contention in England that the elder son lives on the estate; the younger sons on the State—principles which account for the Tory support of Protection and Imperialism.

. . . . .

"We are here to make a newspaper holiday," a Colonial visitor is reported to have said. "In England they make trifles of the things that are serious, and take seriously those that are trifles. . . . There is much that is different here from the conditions we are accustomed to. The English enlist patriotism in the cause of personal ambition; the Colonists enlist personal ambition in the cause of patriotism. The Conference is a circumstance of the London Season; more important than the Boat Race, less important than the Derby. . . . . The rival parties will endeavour to make capital of it; 'society,' consideration; the others, cash. The only Constitution that will be materially affected will be the constitution of the respective Premiers!"

. . . . .

It is a feature of the English in their relations with the Colonies that they have flashes of amiability. England is not a Fatherland; it is a Motherland. It is as capricious as a woman.

. . . . .

"England is an indulgent parent," a well-known Imperialist is said to have stated pompously.

"Or is it an indigent parent?" was the malicious suggestion.

* * * * *

"Too much woman" is a phrase which is being employed with increasing frequency in this country; majorities will out, and the permanent majority of over a million that woman possesses in England is asserting itself in every direction. It is a significant development of the time here that the shops which appear to thrive the most are those that provide commodities for women; the newspapers which address themselves exclusively to women have a growing sale; paragraphs that praise or blame woman are extensively quoted; political questions which seriously affect women cannot be postponed; and criminals who attract the sympathy of women have exceptional mercy extended to them.

. . . . .

The Forty-Seventh Annual Report recently issued by the Society for the Improvement of Women is peculiarly interesting in these circumstances. The committee is confident that the increase of education will eventually have satisfactory results in this direction. For the purposes of the Report, it divides minds into two classes, the warehousing and the manufacturing, and comes to the conclusion that woman possesses a greater ability to "warehouse" information than man does, but has far less facility in "manufacturing." She has a retentive memory, little imagination, and has great difficulty in applying the information attained. "When the examination is passed, the appointment obtained, or the purpose of the initial effort achieved, the elaborate education does not seem to lead to progressive improvement." These Societies have a habit of enveloping invidious observations in irreproachable phrases.

"The expected improvement in general conduct is not as yet noticeable," the Report continues. "The number of women accused of various offences has not diminished throughout the country during the past year, and the number of Decrees Nisi obtained by husbands is regretably on the increase. . . . We are decidedly of the opinion that the material condition of woman in this country has substantially improved, but this is not so much the result of education, as a consequence of the greater prosperity of man."

* * * * *

Ours is the Age of Reproductions. We reproduce Old Masters, artistic furniture, the work of the able engravers of the past, and the china which is treasured in cabinets, and seldom attain more than a superficial appearance of the objects imitated. Reproductions of "gentlemen" and "ladies" are equally common amongst us at the moment, and they, generally, have defects which correspond to those which the other imitations have. The ignorant in the latter case, as in the former, are deceived by general appearances, which do not impose upon the experienced. The London of to-day is flooded with these human reproductions—living in big houses, driving in expensive motor-cars, dressed extravagantly, uttering the sentiments affected by those who have inherited prejudices together with properties, and over-elaborating in every direction. This peculiarity of over-elaboration should be a sure sign to the ignorant in this matter, as it is in old-world work.

The reproductions in question are lowering the public taste, its sense of the correct, and, unfortunately, there is no museum for the display of the "gentlemanly" and "ladylike" as there is for the genuine in art. It is proposed to establish an institution for the purpose, a project which would not only be of service to the community at large, but would provide a new means of earning a livelihood for the increasingly numerous pauper peers, peeresses, and their connections, who would be paid by the State for exhibiting themselves at this museum. The suggestion has advantages.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

IT was announced last week by more than one of the papers that the Newmarket Craven Meeting "suffered" this year from the absence of the King. It so happens that his Majesty has never yet attended this particular meeting. The Craven was a most successful meeting, and the racing of last week was far and away the most interesting that has been seen this season, while there was a refreshing absence of the crowd and hurly-burly which are now an inevitable feature at nearly every meeting.

When writing a fortnight ago about the Craven programme I predicted that the Biennial would be won by the Kingsclere representative, St. Martin or Dusty Miller. Lord Falmouth's colt was withdrawn, but Dusty Miller won with extreme ease, and the Duke of Westminster, who has seldom visited Newmarket, was present to see him run. The favourite was Mr. Wyndham's Dripsey, who was a general tip at Newmarket on the strength of a satisfactory trial with Nairobi, who has since been running well in public. She performed very badly indeed, and ran like a non-stayer. Dusty Miller won all the way, but he really had nothing to beat. He is engaged in the Two Thousand, and the £2,100 stake at Chester appears to be a good thing for him. He is entered for the Triennial and the Hardwicke Stakes at Ascot, and for the Eclipse Stakes, and he now appears to have a fair chance of winning the £10,000 race at Sandown Park, but a victory at Chester would involve a 7 lb. penalty. Dusty Miller is entered for the St. Leger, but he is not engaged in the Derby. It is a curious fact that the winner of the Newmarket Biennial has never yet been successful at Epsom, but horses which were beaten in the earlier race have several times won the Derby.

Prince of Orange was a general selection of the papers for the Column Stakes, but it seemed inconceivable that Lord Wolverton's colt, who is certainly no flyer, could give 18 lb. to Glacis and 13 lb. to Acclaim. The Duke of Devonshire's colt won cleverly, and he was thoroughly fit; but he is only moderate.

Baltinglass was included in the field for the Wood Ditton Stakes, but he is so big and generally backward that he might as well have remained in his stable. Some infatuated simpletons must have backed Major Loder's colt for a good deal of money, as he actually started at 3 to 1, but 300 to 1 would more nearly have represented his chance of winning any race whatever in his present condition. I mentioned a fortnight ago that Baltinglass had been suffering from a cracked heel, and had therefore been stopped in his work for several days. The race was won in a canter by Bilton Park, who is better known as the Crosshaven gelding, and he was a general tip.

I predicted that Pom would win the Fitzwilliam Stakes, and he was so much fancied that only the slightest shade of odds could be obtained in a field of twelve. Mr. Hall Walker's colt won with extreme ease, in spite of his 7 lb. penalty. Lord Londonderry's Pearmain was backed freely, and she was a strong tip of "the sharps." Pom's hollow victory was the more creditable inasmuch as he did not get away well. He is a very smart colt, and has evidently improved considerably since his successful début at Liverpool. Of course, Pom is now extolled as "by far the best two-year-old that has been out this season," which seems to me to be nonsense and rubbish, as there is no line whatever between this colt and either Little Flutter or St. Elf, who won a good trial before Liverpool, and nothing could have been more hollow than his victory in the Sefton Park Plate. The pair can meet in the Woodcote Stakes at Epsom, but Pom has a previous engagement in the Salisbury Foal Stakes, when his 7 lb. penalty is more than extinguished by a 10 lb. breeding allowance.

There were seventeen starters for the Ashley Plate, which was won by the favourite, the well-galloped filly by Cherry Tree out of Svelte, who cost 125 gs. as a yearling, while the beaten lot included Rambling Rector, by Florizel II. out of Wise Flower, whose price at the sale of Lord Londonderry's yearlings was 2,000 gs. This colt is not yet properly fit. I am disposed to fancy that Vega ought to have won this race, and shall be surprised if she does not reverse the running with Svelte filly if they meet again.

Peter Bell was a "boiling" tip for the Maiden Plate on Wednesday, and there was a frantic rush on him directly the numbers were up, but backers had reason to repent of their impetuosity, as he was soon displaced by the Duke of Devonshire's filly by Tarporley out of Lady Sneerwell, who had been well tried at Beckhampton, and she won in a canter, having 7 lb. the worst of the weights with the original favourite.

There was a large field for the Granby Plate, which was declared to be a good thing for Bolted, while Peter Parley was also heavily backed, but the King won this race with Pearl of the Loch, the filly by Persimmon out of Loch Doon. I mentioned last week that she had won a trial, but her friends were presumably frightened by the flaming tales about the form of the favourite, as she started at 10 to 1, and carried very little money. Her trial, however, was not a high one.

Sir Ernest Cassel's filly by Love Wisely out of April Morn had won a trial with Lord Sefton's Duegna and other animals, and she was everybody's tip for the Double Trial Plate on Thursday, and started with slight odds betted on her in a field of eleven, the tragical result of this plunge being a bad beating. Prieska, who won easily at the finish from Taal, was not backed for sixpence.

Nearly all the papers went for Troutbeck for the Biennial, and odds were lavishly betted on the Duke of Westminster's horse, but he had no chance with Radium, who won easily. A fortnight ago I confidently predicted that Troutbeck would be beaten by Radium, as it seemed quite impossible that the St. Leger winner could give a stone to Mr. de Rothschild's horse over this severe course.

The Craven Stakes was the race of the week, and the result was highly satisfactory to me, as I have always derided the idea that Slieve Gallion is a non-stayer, and have several times pointed out the absurdity and folly of attaching any importance to his defeat in the Middle Park Plate, as he had been seriously amiss for some time before that race was run. A fortnight ago I expressed the opinion that "we shall see Slieve Gallion win the Two Thousand, unless he is defeated by the dark Kingsclere colt, Lord Falmouth's St. Martin." Slieve Gallion won his race in a common canter, simply losing his opponents. The Craven Stakes, moreover, has been decided over the R.M. since the An.M. was abandoned, so that Slieve Gallion was running over the Two Thousand course. He has palpably improved in every respect during the last six months. This race was a conclusive public trial of Slieve Gallion's stamina, for everyone knows that the R.M. is a more severe track than the Derby course. There was a lot of cackling about Galvani at Newmarket, but Major Loder's colt will never beat Slieve Gallion again, and his defeat of the Beckhampton colt in the Middle Park Plate was utterly wrong, as has always been maintained in Truth. Slieve Gallion's engagements are the Two Thousand and Derby, and six races at Ascot, where he will, no doubt, be reserved for the St. James's Palace Stakes on the Cup day. His only engagement between Ascot and Doncaster is at the Liverpool July Meeting, and after the Leger he is entered for the Kingsclere Stakes at Newbury, and the Champion Stakes at the Newmarket Second October Meeting, which last will be one of the best races of the season if it brings out Captain Greer's colt (supposing him to have won the great three-year-old stakes), Keystone II., Orwell (if she wins the Oaks), Polymelus, The White Knight, My Pet II., and Polar Star. Spearmint is entered, but we have yet to learn whether he will stand another stiff preparation.

Olympian was very much fancied for the Craven Stakes by people at Newmarket, but I do not believe that the stable had any real expectation of success. Olympian is an enormous horse, and I hear that many good judges are of the opinion that he will develop into a roarer before long. He is still backward. Some weeks ago I expressed the opinion that Lord Derby's colt has not the slightest chance for the Derby, and the manner in which he performed on Thursday confirms me in this view. He cannot get down a hill at all comfortably. If he can stay (which is exceedingly doubtful), Lord Derby's best course would be to follow the policy which Mr. Vyner adopted with Minting, and withdraw the colt from the Derby, in order that he may be kept fresh for the Grand Prix. If, however, Olympian lacks stamina, it would be useless to send him over to France, and he might more profitably be kept for the Duchess of York Plate of £1,300 at Hurst Park, a race which is run on the Saturday before Ascot.

Linacre is a handsome colt, but I do not fancy he is well endowed with stamina, and in any case Slieve Gallion clearly holds him safe enough after last week's running. Saxham has not been doing well lately, and even when he is at his best he cannot be trusted. The Ardvourlie colt was backed for a good deal of money, on the strength of a gallop with Pane and Zarifer, but he need not be thought of in connection with the classic races, as Slieve Gallion gave him a stone, and could have given him two stone.

The Crawfurd Plate was won cleverly by the Hungarian horse, Bon Marché, who started favourite. He is a son of Bona Vista, the sire of Cyllene, and is a very nice horse indeed. I suppose Bon Marché will run at Sandown Park on Friday for the Princess of Wales's Handicap (five furlongs), his weight now being 8 st. 13 lb., and he ought to win this race. He is entered at Ascot for the All-Aged Stakes, but I am told that he always shows his best form during the spring, and that after May he is not likely to be dangerous in any race. He was much the best-class horses in the field for the Crawfurd Plate.

Dalharco (who won at Lincoln) and Zarifer were very heavily backed for the Babraham Plate, but Killeagh won after a most exciting finish with Banana. It was a good performance, as Sir E. Cassel's horse had very much the worst of the weights with the two favourites. When referring, a fortnight ago, to the Goodwood Cup entry, I stated that Killeagh "is expected to retrieve his reputation this season," but I had thought that the Irish horse would "go for" a more important handicap than the Babraham Plate. Zarifer has not much stamina, and he could not stay the course on Wednesday.

Polymelus has been struck out of the City and Suburban. Truth announced many weeks ago that Mr. Joel's horse certainly would not run at Epsom.

Lord Rosebery and Lord Durham witnessed a trial of Bezonian and Traquair over the R.M. on Friday. Traquair was dead beat at the end of six furlongs, and he will be wisely reserved for T.Y.C. races. Bezonian is a very nice colt, and it is quite likely that he will prove the best of the Newmarket lot both in the Two Thousand and in the Derby.

Whenever the King wins a race the successful animal is at once magnified into a flyer of high class. Last year there was a deal of hysterical ranting about the merits of Victoria, after she had won a race at the Epsom Summer Meeting, but she started three times afterwards, and was always beaten. Now we hear the same braying concerning Pearl of the Loch, and one gander describes her as a probable One Thousand and Oaks winner. His Majesty's filly is smart over four furlongs, but she is never likely to distinguish herself over any course beyond an easy five furlongs, and she is a mere pony. Two of the animals which finished behind Pearl of the Loch last week will beat her the next time they meet. Pearl of the Loch is likely to be run through for her spring engagements, as she is now probably a much more useful animal for racing than she will be two months hence.

The ignominious defeat of My Pet II. in the Prix Hocquart at Longchamps must have considerably disconcerted those wiseacres who have been indulging in florid eulogies of Mr. Raphael's colt. It seems to have been thought that My Pet II. would win any races in France for which his owner decided to start him, and he was described as a good thing for the Prix du Jockey Club. My Pet II. simply cannot stay, and his breeding (by Perth out of My Mary) is certainly not indicative of stamina. There was no other reason for his defeat last week, as he was quite fit and perfectly well. He cannot get beyond a mile, and he obviously stands no chance whatever for either the Prix du Jockey Club or the Grand Prix. He will win plenty of races over six furlongs or an easy mile, and if his owner is well advised he will not run the risk of impairing his colt's fine speed by having him trained for any long-distance event.

Gingal did not start for the Doveridge Handicap at Derby, for which race Rachel was declared to be a certainty, and so freely was Mr. Craven's mare supported that odds were finally betted on her in a field of six, everything being more or less backed. Camisard, who won in a canter after having made all the running, improved to an astonishing degree on his miserable exhibition in the Newbury Cup, when he was well backed.

Little Flutter gave Attraction 10 lb. in the Sudbury Stakes, and won with exceeding ease. He is evidently a very smart colt, and has the fine speed which is a marked quality in the stock of Missel Thrush. It may be hoped that Little Flutter and Pom will meet at Salisbury in the Foal Stakes on May 31. Pom would have 4 lb. the worst of the weights, and the distance is five furlongs.

Next week will be devoted to the Newmarket First Spring Meeting, and if the racing is as good as it was last week nobody will have any reason to complain. There will be a largely increased attendance, and it is understood that the King will come down in time for the races on Wednesday, and that his Majesty will stay at the Jockey Club until Friday afternoon.

There are fifty-four entries for the Hastings Plate on Tuesday, and the colt by Ladas out of Ardvourlie ought to be able to win, while Glacis has another chance. The Chippenham Plate on Friday is a good thing for Polar Star.

As to the two-year-old races, three of last week's disappointments will have a chance of retrieving themselves in the First Spring Stakes—Bolted, Peter Bell, and Little Goose. The Newmarket Plate on Thursday may be left to St. Elf and the dark colt by Stoccado out of Principality, the latter having 10 lb. the best of the weights. St. Elf will have to give 5 lb. to the Lady Sneerwell filly. The May Plate on Friday has fifty-three entries, and the filly by Love Wisely out of April Morn may win, as her bad running on Thursday was so far below her private form that it must have been all wrong.

There are 106 entries for the Two Thousand, but I shall be surprised if there are more than twelve starters. It is no use to enter upon a prolix discourse concerning the form of the various candidates. In my opinion Slieve Gallion will win the Two Thousand, unless the dark St. Martin is a flyer, and Waugh will find no difficulty in galloping Lord Tweedmouth's colt now that he has a line through Dusty Miller's victory in the Biennial. If the brother to Quintessence is decidedly superior to the Duke of Westminster's colt, he would be a dangerous opponent to Slieve Gallion. Dusty Miller is himself likely to run well if he represents the Kingsclere stable. As to the Newmarket lot, it is clear that the stables there will have to find something considerably in front of their candidates for last week's three-year-old races. The best of the home-trained lot may turn out to be All Black or Bezonian. I hear that Linacre may very likely be reserved for the Newmarket Stakes. All Black won a trial on Friday over the R.M., and this is a course which will suit Mr. Bailey's colt admirably, whereas he is not likely to find himself at home on the Epsom gradients. Not a bet has yet been laid on the Two Thousand, and I do not suppose there will be any genuine speculation until the numbers are up. The chances of some likely starters may depend to a considerable extent upon the state of the ground.

The One Thousand can be left alone until next week. Bellatrix does not appear to have much chance after her poor display at Newbury. Orwell, who is the best of the fillies on public form, was far behind in All Black's trial on Friday, and I do not fancy she will be fit before Epsom. Dripsey ran so very badly in the Biennial that her admirers at Newmarket insist that she must have been amiss, and if she comes to the post all right and in her best form on May 3, she is expected to run prominently for the One Thousand. The Kingsclere stable may be represented by Lord Falmouth's Frugality, by St. Frusquin out of Wise Virgin. The Duke of Westminster has nothing entered, and the only one left in of the Duke of Portland's lot is the dark Caroline Roche, by Carbine out of La Roche, who, I believe, has been relegated to the stud. Lord Rosebery's Caterina, who won at Newbury, may turn out the best of the Newmarket lot, and Mr. Hall Walker's Witch Elm should be dangerous if she has trained on.

THE C.T.C. AND THE PROPOSED INQUIRY.

I have received the April number of the Cyclists' Touring Club Gazette, and I have read in last Saturday's Daily Mail a letter by Mr. O. H. Beatty, the vice-chairman of the C.T.C. It will be remembered that the council have, by means of a postal vote, challenged the demand for a committee of inquiry which was passed at the general meeting in London. After the resolution in favour of the inquiry had been passed it was proposed that the committee should consist of five members of the council and five non-members. The suggested members of the council who were present, with one accord, begged to be excused, Mr. Gurney, the treasurer of the club with an income of £10,000 a year, saying that he was not now able to devote the time to coming up to London and going through the office expenses and so forth. That was why he would not serve on the committee. The day after the general meeting a council meeting was held, and at this meeting an offer was made by the Reform Committee that the council should nominate all the members of the committee of inquiry. The council resolved to take no action and to proceed with the postal vote. Mr. O. H. Beatty was present at this meeting. In the face of this offer Mr. O. H. Beatty writes to the Daily Mail and says, "The Council have no objection to inquiry by any representative and unbiassed committee." The words are italicised in the Daily Mail. In view of the facts that I have stated I can only say that Mr. Beatty is guilty of a blazing indiscretion, or a gross terminological inexactitude. Does he admit that the council cannot produce a representative and unbiassed committee from its own body and the members of the club? This is surely an admission of incompetency which would scarcely be discreet. Yet if this is not the case Mr. Beatty has been guilty of an egregious travesty of the facts of the case in order to secure the votes of the members. The only other alternative is that he has been suffering from a singular mnemonic lapse. On the facts of the case it is as clear as daylight that the council neither wants nor courts inquiry by any committee whatever. It is also clear that the chairman and the treasurer will not assist in the inquiry. It will be idle for Mr. Beatty to urge that the council has changed its policy from the day when the offer was made. The offer has not been withdrawn by the Reform Committee. The offer held out prospects of a peaceful solution. The council has declared war. Why is there such an objection to an inquiry? Why do the treasurer and chairman refuse to help? What is the good of a treasurer who has no time to devote to the affairs of the club? Why does he not resign? What is the reason for all this obstruction? The matter must be cleared up.

With this exposure of the real facts of the case, Mr. Beatty's attempt to catch votes by discrediting the nominees of the Reform Committee falls to the ground. He says the committee of inquiry was pledged to get rid of the secretary, assistant secretary, and perhaps others. He threatens a postal vote on that issue when, if ever, it comes to pass. Perhaps by that time the mystery of the relationship that exists between not only the chief officials, but leaders of the council as well, will be cleared up. There are one or two outstanding matters that require explanation. A few years ago Mr. Shipton, on his own initiative, deleted the words "cyclists" from the declaration form, the form of membership that had to be filled up. Was he ever surcharged with any expense that the club was put to in that respect? How is it that neither in the Gazette nor in Mr. Beatty's letter is there any reference to the conduct of the chief clerk, Mr. Cladish, who was fined for assaulting a member? It is a piece of gross effrontery for Mr. Beatty to ask members to support a council which retains the services of a clerk who has so conducted himself. Mr. Beatty, referring to the opposition, says: "By their fruits ye shall know them." The present council are known by their fruits, which are waste, bluff and bunkum, garlanded by a grotesque travesty of facts, the prize product of the Vice-chairman of this Council.

A final warning to the members of the Club. The council has fixed a special council meeting for the same day as the special meeting at Birmingham. This means that the councillors will have their fares paid and travel free to squash reform. This is the way the Club funds are squandered.

In fine weather, with a strong wind and a light ball, Sheffield Wednesday beat Everton in the final tie for the Association Football Cup. It was not a great game. But it was a typical final match. It was one of those games that show that the players are human beings over-anxious to win, not merely for money, but for the honour and glory of lifting the cup. To see the professional players in a cup-tie final is to convince those who write about them as mere salaried circus performers that such criticism is wrong. It was a game full of excitement to the players and spectators, and the huge multitude was carried away when, a few minutes before time, Sheffield scored the winning point.

By the way, counsel's opinion has been taken, and it is that professional players come under the Workmen's Compensation Act, which applies not only when they are playing but when they are practising. I wonder what the effect of the Act will be upon the financial stability of clubs. Cricketers will also come under the Act. The insurance companies will probably not push for this class of risk. The Hon. Alfred Lyttelton might really have mentioned the matter when his fellow member, Mr. Marks, got domestic servants included.

For the second time Devon and Durham have played a drawn game in the final for the County Championship of Rugby football. This match was played at Exeter, when the Durham forwards showed just as fine form as they had done in the previous match, where, with a little help from their threequarters, they would have won.

There has been some excellent play at the Covered Court Lawn Tennis Championships at the Queen's Club. Wilding won the final of the singles against Caridia, who would be a most valuable player if he did not make so many bad mistakes. He has some brilliant strokes, but he needs steadiness. In the doubles Wilding and Ritchie had a fairly easy win against Gore and Caridia. Gore had been short of practice, but by the time the week was out he had quite recovered his form. He played superbly, and if he had shown such form in the singles Wilding would have been more closely pressed. Miss Eastlake Smith won the ladies' singles.

Dawson has run up a break of over 23,000 at billiards. This was the upshot of his match with Lovejoy, with whom he had a match of 25,000 up to be played in a week. With the anchor stroke the audience dwindled away. That is a sure sign that the stroke is not merely dead but—the additional word that Lord Beaconsfield applied to Protection.

Cambridge won the golf match against Oxford, and the result has raised all the arguments as to whether the game should be decided by holes or the result of each match. The University match is decided in the old way, and that is by holes. Cambridge won by one hole, and lost four matches to three, one being halved. Barry, the ex-amateur champion, became very steady when he found himself being beaten by Durham-Robertson. The result of the match depended on the last hole. Allen was leading Bruce by twelve at the sixteenth; he won the next, and in spite of a fine attempt on the last green Bruce could only halve the hole. Of course, the Southerners cannot understand why matches should not decide the scores. The metaphysically-minded but as yet untutored golfer of the north in the old days regarded the team as being but an entity, and it was this entity against the other entity that was engaged in match play. The essence of match play is "holes." The players are but component parts of that abstract entity for which they have to win holes. Their individualism is sunk in the team. People educated in the atmosphere of Knox had no difficulty in regarding the team as an actual living entity. Andrew Lang would no doubt regard this case as an instance of anthropomorphism.

MAMMON.

Idle Stock Markets—A Revival Checked by New Issues—The Outlook—Easy Money and a Generous Sinking Fund—The L.C.C. Loan Success—The Straits Settlements as a Borrower.

Pronounced idleness was, perhaps, the chief feature of the Stock Markets throughout the week. There was scarcely a really strong feature in evidence anywhere, and those who laid in stocks a few weeks ago in anticipation of an early revival following the reduction in the Bank Rate have shown a disposition to get out rather than go on paying contangoes. Money has remained very easy, and the House has just heard the promise of Mr. Asquith, given in his Budget speech, that fifteen millions of debt will be redeemed in the current national year. Both these are strong "bull" points which cannot fail to have a very direct influence upon the Stock Exchange in the course of the next few months. For the moment, however, markets, both in London and abroad, are held in check by the knowledge of large impending new loans. Against the competition set up by fresh securities which, necessarily, are having to be placed on terms more attractive than those offered by existing stocks, the Consol market is, for the present, unable to contend, and the bad example set by the Funds, in the existing backboneless condition of the House, is quickly communicated to other sections. Doubtless, too, the legacy of wreckage left by the troubles of March is still a force, unseen but none the less effective, in preventing a revival. If cheap money has come to stay awhile, and there is reason to expect that it has for some months, at any rate, markets cannot fail to derive sensible benefit. An impetus will be given to the purchase of securities generally, which will be reflected in a steady appreciation of values, and houses that are still nursing stocks "taken over" from people who recently got out of their depth will have an opportunity of distributing them amongst the public. Thus the outlook is for a gradual readjustment of values to a more normal basis, and a clearing away of the congestion that now prevails in certain places.

A little disappointment was perhaps felt in some quarters last week that the Bank rate reduction from 5 to 4½ per cent. of the previous Thursday was not followed by a further fall to 4 per cent. It is, however, unusual for the official minimum to be lowered two weeks in succession, and the probability is that the reduction to 4 per cent. will come in the course of the next week or two. It is true that owing to the fall in open market rates here the Bank of France has commenced to withdraw gold, and that the process may continue, but the weekly arrivals of the yellow metal from South Africa and elsewhere are now so large that the matter ought not to prevent our Bank rate coming down to 4. The exports to France will probably be in moderate amounts spread over the next month or two, and, looked at in its proper light, the despatch of coin from London is reassuring, indicating that Lombard Street is regaining more complete independence, and that funds sent here by the Bank of France to assist us in weathering the recent period of strain and stress are no longer required.

The principal financial event of last week—apart from the Budget—was the issue of the London County Council loan. This took the form of Three and a Half per Cents. at 97, of which £2,500,000 was placed privately, and a similar amount offered to the public. The terms were certainly attractive—though, I might add, not more attractive than it was desirable to make them in order to be sure of success—and the portion of the loan issued to the public was covered many—some say twenty—times over. Due consideration was shown to applicants for small amounts, those applying for £100 getting in full, but the big subscribers were allotted no more than 3 per cent. of the amounts asked for. The London County Council issue has been followed by one on behalf of the Straits Settlements, which also requires £5,000,000. The terms, as announced last Saturday, were Four per Cent. Five-year bonds at 99 per cent.; these may be converted at any time during the next five years into Three and a Half per Cent. Inscribed stock, the conversion terms being £105 stock for each £100 bond to those who convert within the first year, £104 stock per £100 bond to those who convert within two years, and so on, with the bonus diminishing by 1 per cent. each year. The money is required in connection with the acquirement of the Tanjong Pagar Docks, which will provide a valuable base for our fleet in the East. This is the first loan offered here on behalf of the Straits, and though the amount is large, the money is for works that will be essentially of a revenue-earning character. Bearing this in mind, also the fact that the new issue is a strict trustee investment, there is no question that the scrip is yet another addition to the numerous bargains that of late have been placed before the pampered investor. Probably the Indian Government will be the next borrower to really concern the London market, a sterling loan of £3,000,000 being under consideration. I do not forget the German and Prussian loan for £20,000,000, of which £15,000,000 is being offered publicly this week, but it is doubtful if any material portion of this issue will be taken by the English public.

Home Rails Idle and Dull—Central Londons and Scottish Stocks Exceptionally Firm—Formation of a Scotch Railway Shareholders' Association—The Hull and Barnsley New Issue—Americans Still Taking a Rest—Wall Street Preparing for a Long Period of Dulness—The Crop Killer Season.

So far as the leading English lines are concerned, the Home Railway market last week was about as disappointing as other departments of the Stock Exchange. The traffic returns were up to the best anticipations, but with no increase of public business the tendency was for prices to go back on sales by the professionals who had laid in a little stock in the hope that the reduction in the Bank rate would awaken a better demand. There was a modest inquiry for Central London ordinary, in anticipation of the board adopting a system of graduated fares, in order to meet the competition of the motor 'buses. At present, of course, the uniform fare of twopence, while having much to recommend it on the score of simplicity, severely handicaps the company in the struggle for short-distance traffic, and the recent run of traffic decreases has forced upon the Board the necessity for an alteration in its method of charging. Another feature of the week was the demand for Scotch railway stocks, and particularly the preferred issues, which, it will be remembered, I drew attention to a week ago. There seems reason to hope that before long the agitation for the abolition of useless competition between the three leading Scotch lines will result in tangible benefit to the stockholders. The various boards have already confessed to the need for retrenchment, and apparently they are to be spurred on by the stockholders themselves, judging by the fact that already a large body of dissatisfied proprietors have agreed to form a Scottish Railway Shareholders' Association, having for its aim the protection of the rights of the shareholders. The association will, it is announced, select from time to time well-known commercial men, and put them forward for seats on the directorates. It hopes to attract thousands of proxies which are usually placed in the hands of directors, and thereby prove a factor in the direction of economy and the cutting down of unnecessary competition. How Home Railway prices have moved lately may be seen from the following table:—

Home Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest.	Apl 13 1907.	Apl. 20, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Caledonian 3 p.c. Pref.	80	72⅞	68	69	+1
Do. Def.	42½	28⅝	29⅛	28⅛	-1
Central London	96½	82½	73	77	+ 4
City and S. London	47½	39	42	42	—
Furness	69⅜	61⅜	61½	61½	—
Glasgow and South-Western Def.	42⅛	37¼	35½	35½	—
Great Central 1894 Pref.	81¼	69	59¼	62	+2½
Do. "B"	40⅜	32½	23¼	28½	+ ¼
Do. "A"	19½	15½	14½	14½	—
Great Eastern	90⅞	79½	75¼	74⅜	- ⅜
Great Northern Pref.	105	98⅜	99	99	—
Do. Def.	48⅞	39½	41⅜	41	- ⅜
Great Western	144	122⅜	126½	125	-1½
Hull and Barnsley	50	42¼	47	47	—
Lancashire and Yorkshire	110½	100	102½	102¼	—
London and Brighton "A"	130⅝	111½	101	100	-1
London, Chatham, and Dover	16¾	13	13⅜	13⅜	- ⅛
Do. 4½ p.c. Arbitration Pref.	99½	85	82	82	—
Do. do. 2nd Pref.	64½	48	49	50	+1
London and North-Western	163½	147½	149½	148½	-1
London and South-Western Def.	57½	44⅜	50½	49½	-1¼
Metropolitan Consolidated	89½	59	47	47	—
Metropolitan District	87½	18¾	14	14	—
Midland 2½ p.c. Pref.	70⅜	64	65¼	65¼	- ¼
Do. Def.	74⅞	62½	64¼	63¼	-1
North British 3 p.c. Pref.	78⅜	72⅜	68	68½	+ ½
Do. Def.	47½	38⅜	35⅞	34⅝	-1¼
North-Eastern Consolidated	147½	134½	139¾	138¾	-1
North Staffordshire	105⅜	90⅜	98	98	—
South-Eastern "A"	56¾	44¾	40¼	40	- ¼

Induced by the easier tendency of the Money Market, the Hull and Barnsley has just decided to issue £400,000 of the £750,000 preference stock that was sanctioned at the meeting held in February. The new stock bears interest at 4 per cent., and ranks after the existing 3½ per cent. preference stock. A novel feature about the issue is that the company reserves to itself the right to redeem at 110 on giving six months' notice. However, as the stock is being offered at par, the provision does not make it appear less attractive. Existing stockholders, to whom the issue is in the first place offered, need not ponder long as to the desirability of taking up their pro ratâ allotments. The Hull and Barnsley is one of the most progressive lines in the country; for the past twenty years its gross earnings have grown almost continuously, along with the development of the port of Hull, and it is in order to provide extra dock accommodation and more rolling stock to cope with the rapid increase in the traffic that the present issue is being made. The addition to the company's capital does not cause me to really modify what

How to Operate in Stocks Successfully.—See Halford's Adviser (post free).—Palmerston House, London, E.C. Established 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

I have said for some months past regarding the attraction of Hull ordinary stock. Eventually the new preference will entail an addition of £16,000 a year to the company's fixed charges, but very little of this will fall upon the current year, and not all of it upon 1908 (the instalments being spread over a twelvemonth, and interest being met only on the amounts paid up). Moreover, the company's earnings are increasing so rapidly that the dividend, which for 1906 was 2¼ per cent., ought to be raised by at least another ½ per cent. in respect of the current twelvemonth. On that basis the yield at 55—eight points over the present quotation—would still be a clear 5 per cent. It is worth noting, by the way, that a dividend of 2¾ on "Hulls," which calls for £90,000, would mean that the full interest on the new four per cent. preference stock was covered nearly six times. The latter stock is quoted by the Stock Exchange at quite a nominal premium, and those of my readers who are not shareholders, and have, therefore, not been offered an allotment, might well try and pick up some of the scrip in the open market.

The American railroad department, so far as last week's doings are concerned, calls for little comment. While the enormous liquidation effected in the first quarter of the year, and involving a shrinkage in values estimated at somewhere about $2,000,000,000—has undoubtedly restored the market to a comparatively healthy condition, the process has effectually scared away the public. The big leaders, too, are still resting after the excitement of the previous few weeks, partly from choice dictated by the dubious outlook in several important directions, and partly from necessity arising from personal injuries of a financial character sustained in the recent conflict. New York houses, indeed, have given evidence, by the wholesale discharge of clerks, that they are preparing for a long period of dulness. Last Friday the sales in the New York Stock Exchange aggregated no more than 312,000 shares, and in the first quarter of an hour only fifteen transactions were reported—a state of affairs that is almost unprecedented. Possibly we shall have to wait for the next decided movement in Americans until more definite news of the crops comes to hand. It is, of course, too early to form any pronounced judgment, and for the present the professional "bulls" and "bears," who now monopolise the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, will each in turn be able to score off one another by means of varying advices regarding the condition of the new crops. Last week some attention was paid to a special report issued by Bradstreet's Agency, to the effect that unfavourable conditions prevailed in the wheat and oats areas, owing to cold weather, drought, and the ravages of insects. Spring wheat seeding had been delayed, and the cotton crop, according to this report, had also sustained serious damage. The report may be placed on record, but it should be remembered that this is the season of the "crop killer," and "bears" who attempt to take liberties on the strength of premature information may have cause to regret their action. My table follows:—

Americans.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	April 13, 1907.	April 20, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Atchison	114⅛	89	97¼	96¾	– ⅜
Do. 5 per Cent. Pref.	109¼	101	99½	99	– ½
Baltimore and Ohio	129½	109⅞	102½	100½	–1⅞
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	101½	93⅛	93	92	–1
Chesapeake and Ohio	68⅝	54	43½	42½	– ¾
Chicago, Milwaukee	204½	152½	139½	137½	–2
Denver and Rio Grande	52½	38⅝	31¼	29¾	–1⅜
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	93⅞	85⅝	78½	77½	–1
Erie	52½	40	25	24½	– ¾
Do. 4 p.c. First Pref.	85½	77	57	56	–1
Do. 4 p.c. Second Pref.	77	65¾	40	39	–1
Illinois Central	188⅝	171	150	150	—
Louisville	160⅜	143¾	121	120	–1
Missouri, Kansas	45⅜	31⅞	37½	37⅛	– ⅜
New York Central	159½	130⅜	123xd.	122xd.	–1
N. Y. Ontario and Western	57⅛	45½	39½	39	– ½
Norfolk and Western	100⅜	87½	80	77½	–2½
Do. 4 p.c. Pref	96½	91½	86	86	—
Northern Pacific	235	190½	138xd.	136xd.	–2
Pennsylvania ($50)	75½	63⅜	64½	64½	– ½
Reading ($50)	85⅜	59⅞	56	54½	– ½
Southern	43¾	33	22	21⅞	– ⅛
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	105	97	67	67	—
Southern Pacific	99⅝	64⅜	86½	85½	–1
Union Pacific	203	144⅝	142½	140⅜	–1½
U.S. Steel	52⅛	33¾	39	38⅛	– ⅞
Do. 7 p.c. Pref.	117	102⅛	103½	103½	+ ½

Canadian Railway Earnings—Why they should Continue to Show Bumper Increases—Quebec Centrals—The Rosario Meeting—Reassuring Statements—Set Back in Mexican Rails.

During the past week there was a fair amount of quiet buying in Grand Trunk Railway stocks, and on any improvement in the general House atmosphere these stocks should be among the first to move. The encouraging points made at the half-yearly meeting, to which I referred a week ago, have helped to stiffen the market, while dealers could scarcely help being impressed by the recent traffic returns, which have repeatedly made the most confident estimates look paltry. Moreover, there is reason to believe that the Trunk will continue to enjoy bumper traffics for some months to come. According to a Canadian contemporary the Department of Trade and Commerce at Ottawa has received an official report from Winnipeg stating that the amount of last year's wheat crop in the West still remaining to be shipped is placed at 36,739,000 bushels. In interior elevators on February 28 there were 21,239,000 bushels, and the amount yet to be marketed was estimated at 15,500,000 bushels. In order to ship out all this wheat between March 1 and August 31 the railway companies will have to move an average of 200 cars per day for the whole six months. For the same period last year the average amount moved by the railways was 690 cars per week. In addition there must be taken into account the transportation of oats, barley, and flax, which, combined, almost equal the wheat crop. The same contemporary adds: "It is a matter of general relief all round to find that the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway have lifted the embargo on grain, and it has at last started to move out after having been held up from three to four months. There is an active demand for all kinds of grain in Europe and a heavy movement to Atlantic ports is about to take place." Here we have to a large extent the explanation of the fine traffics reported by both the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk during recent weeks, and what is of more interest to the market a virtual promise of their continuance until the new harvest is ready to be moved.

A minor Canadian railway that has derived its full share of the prosperity ruling in the Dominion is the Quebec Central. Rather more than a twelvemonth ago I drew attention to the bright prospects for this line and ventured to predict that the Income bonds would receive their full 7 per cent. in respect of 1906. The prophecy has been borne out, and, according to the report, the 7 per cent. dividend (which compares against 5½ per cent. in respect of 1905) has been earned after making liberal allowances for the upkeep of the property. Gross earnings showed an increase of $115,600, of which $61,100 was retained as extra net revenue. A sum of $27,800 was charged against net revenue for alterations and improvements as compared with $15,000, and out of the surplus remaining after payment of dividends ($47,700 against $26,500), $29,000 has been applied to replacement of two locomotives and $6,000 to car renewals, against $15,000 applied to betterments, leaving $12,700 to be carried forward against $11,500 brought in. There is now good reason to hope that the Income bonds will continue to receive interest at the full rate, though, bearing in mind the fact that the bonds are redeemable at par in 1922, the present quotation of about 120 seems high enough for the present, as the yield, allowing for redemption, is not more than 4½ per cent. To those wanting a likely gamble the $25 ordinary shares, standing at 11, might be worth locking away. It takes $33,800 to pay 1 per cent. on these shares, and during the last three years the net revenue of the company has been expanding at an average rate of $40,000 per annum.

Stockholders in the Buenos Ayres and Rosario Railway who have been rendered nervous by the recent tremendous rise in expenses and the doleful news about the maize crop should derive a measure of comfort from the statements of the chairman at last week's meeting.

Seeger's Hair Dye.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—Hinde's Ltd., 1A, Finsbury, London.

After mentioning that of the total increase in operating costs £185,000 came under the head of wages, £154,000 under stores, and £94,000 under coal, Mr. Morrison went on to point out that it was not the rise in wages, per se, that had swollen their working expenditure, but the large amount of useful work done on maintenance, which in the long run would be in relief of future contributions to the renewals fund. It was the same story with regard to the big outlay on stores. While there had been during 1906 a rise in the cost of many of the stores and in the freight, what had affected this item as much as anything was the increased amount of work done on maintenance and the greater volume of traffic handled. This explanation gives point to the remark I made last week about the scope for savings in lean years, and the statement applies in greater or lesser degree to all Argentine railways. As regards the traffic outlook for the Rosario, the cablegram received from Buenos Ayres on the 16th is reassuring. The message read:—

"Wheat crop and linseed crop have turned out excellently well. The increase from these will in a great measure compensate for the loss in the maize crop, estimated at 50 per cent. Recent rains have fallen opportunely, assuring winter feeding for cattle, and facilitating tilling operations, which are proceeding rapidly. Area under cultivation greater than last year. Sugar plantations are reported to be in good condition, and increased tonnage may be expected. General goods and passenger traffic continue brisk. Every reason to anticipate another satisfactory year's working."

Since the dividend announcement Mexican rails have experienced a sharp reaction. The market last week was disturbed by the various reports concerning earthquakes in Mexico, one story, which was afterwards declared by the company to be without foundation, being that the line had subsided in several places, and that traffic on a portion of the system was suspended. Owing to the big "bull" account that has been built up in Mexican rails, the stocks naturally proved vulnerable to adverse rumours, particularly as there is a feeling that the pace has lately been a little too fast. The market is now being reminded of what the chairman said in May last about the provision required to be made from revenue for relaying some 150 miles of line, a matter that was expected to cost £1,000 per mile. The absurdity of the rumour about savings of from £50,000 to £80,000 per annum by the substitution of oil for coal as fuel has been demonstrated by the reminder that the company's annual bill for coal, coke, and firewood only comes to about £100,000 all told. Below will be found my usual comparison of prices:—

Colonial and Foreign Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	Apl. 13, 1907.	Apl. 20, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Canadian Pacific	208	161⅞	180½	180¾	+ ¼
Grand Trunk	29 11/16	25 1/16	31 3/16	31⅜	+ 1/16
Do. 4 p.c. Guaranteed	105¼	101½	102	102¼	+ ¼
Do. 5 p.c. First Pref.	123⅝	114½	121½	121¼	− ¼
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	115	105⅜	112½	112⅝	+ ⅛
Do. 4 p.c. Third Do.	70½	60 1/16	74	74¾	+ ¼
Mexican	50⅞	22⅛	53	47½	−5½
Do. 8 p.c. First Pref.	144⅜	118⅝	143½	140	−3½
Do. 6 p.c. Second Pref.	93⅜	49½	96	89½	−6¼
Interoceanic of Mex. 7 p.c. Pref.	11 15/16	6	11⅞	11⅝	− ⅛
Do. 7 p.c. "B" Debs.	124	109	116	116	—
Mexican Central 4 p.c.	90½	7 1/16	85	85	—
Do. First Incomes	30	18	24½	24	− ½
Do. Securities "A" bearer	95	88 7/16	91	91	—
Do. Do. "B" Do.	81½	65⅝	81	80	−1
Nat. of Mexico 4 p.c. First Pref.	61⅞	37½	56	54	−2
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	31⅝	19½	24	23	−1
Bengal and North Western	149½	144	150	150	—
Madras 5 p.c.	127½	120½	122½	122½	—
Antofagasta Def.	180½	162	154½	152½	−2
Nitrate Rails	16⅜	14⅛	15½	15½	—
Argentine Great Western	130½	111	108	108½	+ ½
Do. North-Eastern Debs.	83½	64⅜	77	78	+1
Buenos Ayres and Pacific	136½	120	116½	117½	+1
Do. and Rosario	120⅞	111	105½	105½	+ ½
Do. Great Southern	145	122⅝	123½xd	123½xd	+ ½
Do. Western	138⅜	123½	121 xd	121½xd	+ ½
East Argentine	120	87	118	119	+1
Cordoba Cen. (C.N.S.) Income Debs.	75½	63⅜	66½	66½	+ ½
Cordoba and Rosario First Pref.	108⅜	85	88½	88	− ½
Entre Rios First Pref	98	85	90½	90	− ½
Great Western of Brazil	16 1/16	12½	11½	11⅝	+ ⅛
Leopoldina	86½	69½	77	76¾	− ¼
San Paulo	214⅜	199½	217	217	—
Central Uruguay	92½	82	88½xd	88½xd.	—
Costa Rica	29 1/16	25	25	29½	+ ½
Cartagena (Colombia) Debs.	80½	78	73½	73½	—
Colombian Nat. Second Debs.	88½	76½	77	77	—
Colombian Northern 5 p.c. Debs.	81½	76¾	82½	82½	—
Manila 6 p.c. Debs.	126	112	110	110	—
Guayaquil and Quito 6 p.c. Bonds	93½	85	52½	49	-3½
Cuban Central	7 7/16	6⅛	6 7/16	6 7/16	—
United of Havana	103	105⅜	106 xr	106 xr	—
Western of Havana	15⅜	12½	12¾	12½	+ ⅛
Mashonaland Debs (2nd issue)	94½	87¾	87½	86	-1½
Rhodesia 4 p.c. Debs.	81⅜	76	78	77½	- ⅜
Ottoman (Smyrna to Aidin)	23⅜	19½	21½xd	21½xd	—

Railway Fixed Interest Stocks—Some Sound Securities that Yield from 4 to 4¾ per Cent.

(Continued from last week.)

In last week's issue it will be remembered that in dealing with the subject of promising Railway fixed interest stocks, I confined my remarks to securities in the British and American markets. A third group that may profitably engage the investor's attention is that comprising the senior issues of British railway companies operating abroad—in Canada, South America, and elsewhere. The wonderful reign of prosperity enjoyed by Canadian and foreign railway companies has, of course, been accompanied by a substantial advance in prices, but there is a comparatively large number of stocks of the soundest quality that still return very attractive yields. Below I give a list of twenty such stocks; of course, these must not be regarded as in any way exhausting the bargains offered by the Foreign and Colonial group; they are, like Mr. Chamberlain's arithmetic, simply illustrations:—

III.—COLONIAL AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Stock.	Interest per Cent.	Yield per Cent.
Antofagasta and Bolivia Deb	4½	£4 7 6
Argentine Great Western Irred. 2nd Debs.	4	4 3 3
Bahia Blanca Guaranteed	4½	4 12 3
Buenos Ayres and Pacific 1st Cum. Pref.	5	4 13 0
Buenos Ayres and Rosario Consol. Pref.	7	4 6 9
Buenos Ayres Great Southern Pref.	5	4 3 9
Buenos Ayres Western Pref. (new)	4½	4 8 3
Canadian Northern Quebec Debs.	4	4 2 6
Grand Trunk Pacific Debs.	4	4 0 9
Grand Trunk Second Pref.	5	4 12 6
Cordoba and Rosario 1st Debs.	4	4 12 6
Cordoba Central Irred. Deb.	5	4 6 6
Cuban Central Mort. Debs.	4½	4 9 6
Great Western of Brazil Perm. Deb.	6	4 14 6
Leopoldina Deb.	4	4 9 0
Mexican Perpet. Debs.	6	4 6 3
Ottoman 1st Debs.	4	4 9 0
San Paulo Non-Cum. Pref.	5	4 6 3
United of Havana Irred. Deb. (1906)	5	4 14 0
Western of Havana Deb.	4½	4 4 0

It will be seen that a buyer who spreads his money over a few of the above selections will have no difficulty in obtaining an average of 4½ per cent. As with the American bonds given in my second table I have, when choosing redeemable stocks, selected only those with long periods to run, so that buyers need not worry themselves about the question of redemption. In the case of Ottoman Railway first debentures the company has the option of paying off at any time at 110 per cent., the year of final amortisation being 1935. As, however, the present price of the bonds is nearly 10 discount, premature redemption would in this instance involve an acceptable profit. Western of Havana debenture stock is also redeemable at any time, on the company's option, but at 120 per cent.—which compares against a present price for the issue of about 107. If the company does not choose to pay off at a premium of 20 per cent., the stock remains irredeemable. Among Canadian issues there can surely be no question about the solid character of Grand Trunk Pacific debentures, seeing that they enjoy the full guarantee of the parent company. The recently issued Canadian Northern Quebec Fours, which are guaranteed by the Canadian Northern, are only a whit behind in point of merit. Trunk second preference was, up to a few years ago, an investment with a distinctly speculative flavour, but the line has made great strides of late, and so far as the outlook can be judged the margin behind the stock should steadily increase. Last year the interest was covered nearly three times, and earnings are still "swellin' wisibly."

In the South American section I would give first place to San Paulo Five per Cent. Preference. There is no need for me to urge the merits of this stock; I will let the figures talk. The amount of the preference issue is £1,000,000, therefore 5 per cent. calls for £50,000. For five years the company has paid not less than 12 per cent. upon its £3,000,000 ordinary stock. If it should pay more than 12 per cent. for two consecutive years, the Government claims the right to reduce tariffs. The result of this dividend limitation policy has been that the company has, after spending enormous sums on raising the physical standard of its property, piled up accumulated reserve funds of no less than £1,364,000, of which £946,000 is general reserve, £300,000 is placed to the credit of rolling stock renewals, and £118,000 represents provision for income-tax. This is without including the balance in hand, which in the last accounts was £321,600. In the last completed half-year the margin of income behind the preference stock was over £800,000, which meant that the dividend on that stock was earned seventeen times over. It may be noticed by some people that the 5½ per cent. debentures of the company show a similar yield to that on the preference. I might, therefore, mention that should the Brazilian Government expropriate the line in 1927, which it has the power to do, the debenture stocks would be paid off at par, thereby involving a loss to those who bought at the present prices. The rights of the capital stock holders, however, should not be prejudiced by Government purchase, as the clause dealing with the point stipulates that the proprietors shall receive "such an amount of stock as will secure a return equal to the average dividends of the five previous years, but not less than 7 per cent. per annum."

"Truth" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to the Manager, "Truth" Building, Carteret-street, S.W.

Of the other stocks included in my table it would be a matter of some difficulty to place them in exact order of merit. Selection must become largely a matter of individual fancy. Eight out of the twenty stocks are those of Argentine railways, and in view of the great progress made by the Queen of South American Republics during the past decade—thanks to a period of stable government and wonderful crops—the credit of Argentine railways now stands higher than ever. The management of the leading lines have worthily upheld the best traditions of British conservatism, and, helped by the enforced limitation of dividends, the companies have placed themselves in a position to withstand a lot of rough weather. During the next few months the market will be watching with a good deal of interest to see how traffics are affected by the big shortage in this year's maize crop. This, however, is hardly a matter that concerns prospective buyers of the senior issues, which I have detailed above; in fact, short of a revolution or an earthquake, I do not see how the interest on these stocks can possibly be defaulted upon. Buenos Ayres and Pacific First Preference looks distinctly cheap, seeing that it returns rather over 4⅝ per cent., while Bahia Blanca Four and a Half per Cent. stock, which enjoys the Pacific Company's guarantee—ranking just ahead of Pacific Preferences—gives an almost equally generous rate. Buenos Ayres Western Four and a Half per Cent. Preference, which returns £4 8s., is another undoubted bargain; it is safe to say that the shares would not be obtainable at their present price were it not that the issue had to be made quite recently, when the state of the Money Market was about as unfavourable for the borrower as it could be.

With the attractions of United of Havana Five per Cent. Debenture stock of 1906 I dealt specially a fortnight ago, but for the benefit of new readers I have added it to the group now under consideration. Here, again, the fact that the stock is a comparatively new creation, and that the company has just made a further issue, largely explains why the yield is so high as £4 14s. per cent. By way of conclusion, I would suggest to those with capital to employ, that it would be a good plan to spread their money over the three groups to which I have drawn attention, choosing one stock or more from each, according to the amount of the principal. After all, the motto that it is not good to have all your eggs in one basket should be borne in mind, particularly when the investor steps outside the ring of Trustee stocks. By a little judicious distribution amongst the various securities enumerated, the capitalist may reasonably hope to obtain an average of 4 to 4½ per cent., and stand secure against all the financial winds that blow.

"Finance."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the Central Stock Exchange, Ltd. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper.

Activity in the Kaffir Market Confined to the Leading Diamond Shares—The Leaders of the Mining Industry and the New Government—Rhodesian Gold Output for March.

Business in Kaffir gold descriptions has been anything but brisk during the past week. Though there was recently some outside demand for shares of the "investment" class, public interest has, on the whole, been very limited. Latterly the professionals have had the market practically to themselves. The result has been that the quotations of the leading gold shares have been marked down slightly almost every day, and perhaps it is something to be thankful for that prices have not materially relapsed. The "bears," however, are not so daring now as they used to be in respect of Kaffirs, for the reason that prices have been brought down considerably in the past few years, while the position of the market is such that it does not take very much demand to cause a spurt. The quietness of Kaffir gold descriptions in face of the brighter outlook for the mining industry has given rise to disappointment amongst those interested, but, of course, this is not the only department of the Stock Exchange in which dealers are complaining of the dearth of business. That there is a disposition on the part of the public to pick up Kaffir gold shares at the current level of prices is evidenced by the correspondence to hand from my readers, and this fact tends to strengthen my belief that when Stock Exchange business generally revives Kaffirs will share in the activity. Of course, there still remains some uncertainty in regard to the mining industry and the labour question, but it should not be long now before we have a definite announcement on the matter by the new Government, the chief point at issue at present being the retention of the Chinese. Meanwhile, it is of interest to note the attitude of the leaders of the mining industry towards the new Ministry, and a cabled summary to hand during the week of Mr. George Albu's remarks at the meeting of one of his companies supplies useful information on this point. Speaking for all the mining houses, Mr. Albu declared that the industry was prepared to assist the new Government in every possible manner, and extend its most hearty support in solving the numerous difficult problems which had defied even the genius of the late Government. He added that the assurances given by the new Government satisfied him that no step would be taken to disorganise the industry or prejudice its future expansion. He asked, however, that a definite policy should be decided upon without delay, for, as he rightly observed, theories and estimates would not keep the mills running.

While Kaffir gold shares have been very quiet, the diamond descriptions have experienced a fair amount of activity during the past week, but the general effect upon quotations has not been of a nature calculated to please holders of the shares, as the following table shows:—

Share.	April 13, 1907.	April 20, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
De Beers Pref.	17⅞	17⅞	—
,, ,, Def.	26⅝	26⅜	– ¼
Jagersfontein Pref.	4¼	4¼	—
,, Def.	9⅞	9 1/16	– 3/16
New Vaal River	5⅛	4 15/16	– 3/16
Premier (Transvaal) Pref.	8¼	8¼	—
,, ,, Def.	13¼	12¾	– ½

Paris has been a source of weakness in respect of its favourites, and there have also been realisations in connection with options which were opened for the end-April account, and which, therefore, matured on Monday last. New Vaal Rivers have continued an active counter, and the quotation has suffered a further substantial decline, having been under £4 at one time, but beyond talk of forced liquidation, no special reason has transpired for the weakness of these shares.

Apart from a little fluctuation in the shares of the Banket group in which interest has been recently stimulated by the news to hand as to the development of the Eldorado mine, speculation in Rhodesians has been at a very low ebb during the past week, and it would seem that this section is waiting for the Kaffir market to revive and thus lead the way. The Rhodesian gold output for March was largely in excess of that for February, as was to be expected, but the latest return is disappointing in that it does not compare favourably with the January figures, as will be seen from the following table:—

	1903.	1904.	1905.	1906.	1907.
	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.	Oz.
January	16,245	19,359	32,531	42,950	47,048
February	17,090	18,673	30,131	38,037	40,482
March	19,626	17,756	34,927	44,574	46,887
April	20,727	17,862	33,268	42,423	—
May	22,137	19,424	31,332	46,729	—
June	22,166	20,402	35,256	47,664	—
July	23,571	24,339	34,693	48,485	—
August	19,187	24,669	35,765	50,127	—
September	18,741	26,029	35,785	48,410	—
October	17,918	24,919	33,383	45,644	—
November	15,714	26,183	32,861	48,503	—
December	18,750	28,100	37,116	48,529	—
Total	231,872	267,715	407,048	551,875	134,417

However, the returns for the first quarter of the current year exceed those for the corresponding period of 1906 by no less than 8,856 oz.

Westralians Rather Dull—Kalgurlis a Feature with a Substantial Relapse in the Quotation—A Chance for Mining Investors—The Great Fingall Report and the Company's New Interest.

The Westralian Market has been rather dull, though as regards most of the leading shares there has been no particular pressure to realise. The feature of the week has been the substantial fall in the price of Kalgurlis, which, it will be seen, show a loss of nearly a point on the period, after changing hands under £10 apiece at one time:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Apl. 13, 1907.	Apl. 20, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Associated	3	1 1/16	1 3/16	1 1/16	- 1/16
Assoc. Northern Blocks	1 3/8	11/16	1	1 1/32	+ 1/32
Cosmopolitan	8/3	3/6	4/6	4/3	- 3d.
Golden Horseshoe (£5)	6 3/8	4 1/2	6 1/4	6 1/4	-
Great Boulder (2/-)	23/-	20/3	23/9	22/9	- 1/-
Do. Perseverance	13/-	7/3	6/-	6/3	+ 3d.
Great Fingall (10/-)	6 5/16	2 1/4	2 1/4 xd	1 15/16 xd	- 1/4
Hainault	1 1/32	1 1/4	1 1/8	1 3/8	- 1/8
Ivanhoe (£5)	7 1/2	6 1/4	7 1/16	7 1/8	- 1/16
Kalgurli	12 3/4	8 1/4	11 1/4 xd.	10 3/8 xd	- 3/4
Lake View Consols	1 1/16	7/8	29/32	31/32	- 1/16
L. & W. A. Exploration	21/10 1/2	8/6	13/-	12/9	- 3d.
Oroya Brownhill	3 1/4	2	1 21/32	1 5/8	- 1/32
Sons of Gwalia	2 1/16	1 1/16	1 1/2	1 1/2	—
South Kalgurli	1 1/32	11/16	29/32	29/32	—
Australian Commonwealth Trust	3 5/8	1 1/4	1 1/16	1 1/8	- 1/8
Consolidated Deep Leads (4/-)	1/2	1/2	4/-	3/9	- 3d
Loddon Valley Goldfields	2 1/16	1/16	1/8	1/8	- 1/8

The relapse in Kalgurlis has not unnaturally given rise to some nervousness amongst shareholders as to the mining position, but it would appear that the condition of the market in the shares largely accounts for the heaviness of the fall, no great amount of selling having taken place. As a matter of fact, I understand only a few hundred shares have actually changed hands, but dealers were not anxious to put such comparatively high-priced stock on their books, and, as the lot on offer had to find a home, the market price was considerably reduced. On the other hand, it has taken little demand since to cause a moderate recovery, and it seems to me that those on the look-out for a mining holding giving a good yield might do worse than take advantage of the fact that the relapse has not been fully regained to pick up some of these shares. Dividends of 7s. 6d. a quarter are being paid, which represent a yield of over 14 per cent. per annum on the current market price.

Great Fingalls have not been able to maintain the recovery to over £2 to which I alluded last week. The annual report of this company has just been issued, and has served as a reminder that the position of the mine is none too satisfactory. Although over 40,000 tons of ore were treated last year in excess of the 1905 tonnage, the net profit for 1906 was not much more than half the amount earned in 1905, the average grade of the ore having been 25s. 6d. per ton less. Consequently the past year's dividends amounted to 18s. per share, as against 30s. 6d. per share for 1905. It is estimated that the ore reserves are sufficient to maintain the present output for about 2½ years, and as the rate of dividend is now 2s. 6d. per quarter, the amount in sight may be put at about 25s. per share, beyond which the outlook is very uncertain. The results of work at the lowest levels have proved disappointing, but there is a chance that the experience of improving values below the poor zone which occurred in the mine at the Nos. 2 and 3 levels may again be repeated. Work is in hand with a view to proving whether or not the hope is well founded. The future of the company, however, is not to depend solely upon its gold mine in Western Australia; it is announced that the directors have secured a working option on the well-known Burra Burra copper mines of South Australia, with the ultimate view of purchasing the property, and immediate steps are to be taken to prove the mine in depth by diamond-drilling. This is not the first West Australian gold-mining company to take an interest in another mining field, the Lake View Consols having led the way in this respect.

Recovery in the Copper Group—Zinc Corporation Affairs—Lengthy Official Statement—Broken Hill Prop. Dividend Disappointment—West African Recovery not Maintained.

A steady recovery in the price of copper has had a favourable influence upon the shares of the leading producing companies during the past week, though Tintos were at first sold from Paris, where there seems to have been a good deal of wreckage to clear up. On the other hand, in addition to the improved metal quotation, Tintos have been helped by a rumour as to satisfactory rains having fallen at the property, which has raised the hopes of the "bulls" that the production in the current year will not show a falling off. For the present, at any rate, it would seem that the copper favourites have seen the worst, and the outlook for the share market being mainly dependent upon the metal position, I shall not be surprised if the recovery makes further progress in the immediate future. In the market, as a matter of fact, a recovery in Tintos to 100 is being predicted. Apart from Great Cobars the Australian copper descriptions have been somewhat quieter of late, but in the event of the recovery in the metal quotation being maintained these descriptions will no doubt come in for more speculative attention, and with the weeding out of the weak "bull" element that has recently occurred such shares as Mount Elliotts and Mount Lyells should be among the first to benefit from improvement in general conditions. The following table shows how prices have moved on the week:—

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Apl. 13, 1907.	Apl. 20, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Abosso	1 1/16	1 1/16	1 1/16	1 1/16	- 1/16
Ashanti Goldfields (4/-)	17/9	7/9	16/6	16/-	- 6d.
Gold Coast Amalgamated	3 3/32	1 1/2	1 3/8	1 7/16	- 1/16
Taquah and Abosso	2 3/4	1 1/16	2 1/4	2 1/16	- 1/16
Wassau	1 3/8	1/2	1/2	1/2	- 1/8
Egyptian Mines and Exploration	10/6	1/3	1/6	1/3	- 3d.
Nile Valley	13/-	3/-	2/-	1/3	- 9d.
Camp Bird	33/6	22/-	24/6	23/6	- 1/-
Esperanza	5 1/16	2 1/2	2 1/16	2 1/2	+ 1/16
Le Roi (£5)	2	1	1 1/16	1 1/2	+ 1/16
British Broken Hill	58/-	30 7/8	40/-	38/9	- 1/3
Broken Hill Proprietary (8/-)	5 1/8	3 1/16	4 1/16	4 1/16	- 1/16
Zinc Corporation	2 1/8	1 1/16	18/6	16/6	- 2/-
Anaconda Copper ($25)	15 3/8	11 1/8	13	12 1/16 xd	+ 9d.
Arizona (Pref. Ord. 5/-)	3 1/2	3	66/6	64/6	- 2/-
Great Cobar (£5)	9 1/16	4 3/8	10 1/2	10 3/8	+ 1/16
Mount Lyell	52/6	33/-	47/-	46/-	- 1/-
Mount Morgan	4 1/2	3 1/2	4 1/16 xd	4 1/16 xd	+ 1/16
Rio Tinto (£5)	91 1/8	63 3/8	86 1/2	89 1/2	+ 3
Dolcoath Tin	29/6	10/-	28/6	28/6	+ 1/-
Pusing Lama Tin	3 1/16	3/4	2 1/16	2 1/16	—
Balaghat	36/-	22/6	16/- xd	14 6xd	- 1/6
Champion Reef (2/6)	30/-	9/6	10/3	10/6	+ 3d.
Mysore (10/-)	7 1/8	5 1/2	5 1/8	5 3/8	- 1/8
Siberian Mines	2 1/8	1 1/16	1 1/8	1 1/16	+ 1/16
Siberian Proprietary	16 1/4	3 1/8	4 1/4	4 1/4	—
Waihi	9 13/16	6 5/16	9 5/16	9 1/8	- 1/16

In the Broken Hill group there has been a large business transacted in Zinc Corporations. The shares have been heavily sold, and at one time the price dropped away to nearly 14s., but there has also been a good deal of "bear" covering, and during the week the quotation has fluctuated considerably. The position has been cleared up somewhat by the issue of a lengthy official circular, signed by Mr. F. A. Govett, the chairman of the London Committee, who, it will be remembered, was elected to that position when Mr. Daly, the managing director, resigned about nine months ago. The chief point about Mr. Govett's statement is that it confirms the market rumour as to the company needing money. Owing to the delay in arriving at the stage of commercial production, working capital has had to be used—instead of profits, as was hoped would be available—to meet instalments due on the purchases of tailings, as well as for the preliminary experimental work and installation of an expensive plant. Consequently "the capital provided will not be sufficient to carry the company right through until the No. 1 plant of 1,000 tons per day will be in work." A few large shareholders have advanced £50,000, but a debenture issue at a later date is foreshadowed, and Mr. Govett anticipates no difficulty in effecting this "when the proper time arrives." As regards the important matter of the plant and process, the circular gives little fresh information. It it hoped that in the course of a few weeks the three units forming the No. 2 plant will be at work treating about 500 tons a day, but no figures are given as to the results being obtained with the first unit, which has been adapted to the Cattermole process. It still remains to be seen, therefore, what the costs and profits under this method of treatment will be. But in view of the results that have been and are being achieved with the same process by the Sulphide Corporation, there is no reason to think that the Zinc Corporation will not be able to work at a profit, although the latter has to allow for an expenditure of about 4s. per ton more than the former, the sum mentioned representing the original cost of the tailings purchased from other companies, whereas the Sulphide Corporation is treating its own material. It will be some months yet before the results of work on a commercial scale are obtained by the Zinc Corporation, and pending the arrival of these the price of the shares may not experience much recovery. The advancing of £50,000 by a few large holders at this juncture must, however, be considered a very practical demonstration of confidence in the ultimate success of the enterprise, and it would certainly appear that the worst is now known, in which case it is not a time for real holders to throw their shares on the market. If the company does obtain results equal to those which the Sulphide Corporation is now reported to be earning with the Cattermole process, there should ultimately be a substantial recovery in the price of Zincs. Among the other shares in this section of the mining markets Broken Hill Props. have continued to receive chief attention. A sharp relapse in the price has followed the recent improvement, as the dividend just declared is at the old rate of 2s. 6d. per share, whereas the market had looked for at least 3s., and the most optimistic for 3s. 6d. per share. As I pointed out last week, there seemed good ground this time for the hope of an increased distribution, having regard to the chairman's statement at the last meeting, and in the face of this it is wondered what reason the directors had for continuing to pursue a very conservative policy—ultra conservative, it is considered in many quarters. However, sooner or later shareholders must surely benefit from the increased earnings, seeing that the company has built up a large reserve out of profits, and advantage might be taken of the opportunity afforded by the relapse in the quotation to pick up cheap stock.

Treatise on Options.—Mr. Arthur Crump, late City Editor of the Times, described "Options" as "The most scientific and prudent way of operating on the Stock Exchange." This system, although very popular on the Continent and in America, is not so well known amongst Investors here as its merits justify. We have just published a new Treatise on this subject, which will be sent post free on application to The Secretary, London & Paris Exchange, Ltd., Bankers, Basildon House, Bank, London, E.C., or from any of its Branches.

The recent recovery in West Africans has not been maintained, the public not having responded to the call of the dealers, who, by the way, might certainly have chosen a more opportune time for making an effort to obtain outside support for the Jungle market. With the public disinclined to increase commitments in the principal departments of the Stock Exchange, it was hardly to be expected that it would be induced to take much interest in West African shares, notwithstanding the fact of share quotations being at a comparatively low level. However, there is ground for the hope that, sooner or later, business in "Jungles" will expand to some extent, intrinsic conditions having improved. Railway rates have been reduced, which should favourably affect working costs at the mines, and recent work at some of the properties has been attended with better results. The Abosso and Prestea Block A in particular are developing satisfactorily, as is evidenced by the fact that the management of each concern has considered the question of increasing the capacity of the treatment plant, and the directors of the Abosso have already ordered an additional twenty head of stamps. It is cheering, too, to see that the Wassau mine, which has been the cause of much disappointment in the past, is improving in value at depth.

"A British Goldfield."

Under the above heading in Truth of February 20 last I commented on the Stock Exchange gamble in the shares of the Chastan Syndicate, the founders of which were reported to have discovered the existence of many miles of gold-bearing formation somewhere in Great Britain. The affair was "wrop in a mystry," and it seemed to be a case of mystery lending enchantment to the undertaking, as the £1 shares had been run up in price to £5 10s. apiece. I pointed out that this was not the first mysterious syndicate on whose shares a big premium had been established, and I added: "Whether the Chastan will prove less disappointing than the others when the air of mystery no longer surrounds its affairs remains to be seen." With the unveiling of the mystery, interest in the shares of the Chastan Syndicate died down, and they became a nominal market at about £2. It appears that the property is in the Forest of Dean, and a report made by experts for independent shareholders is anything but favourable in regard to the important question of the payability of the auriferous deposits. "Wherever sampled they are disappointing in that no values, even approaching to anything that might be considered payable, were located." But the directors are not content to take this as conclusive. "No satisfactory or conclusive test," they say, "can be applied until the reef is opened out at a depth and bulk crushings made." And on the strength of the flight of imagination indulged in by the managing director at the first meeting of the syndicate held on Monday, the price of the shares picked up to about £3 10s. This is rather reminiscent of the history of the ill-fated Etruscan Copper, whose directors persistently counselled shareholders to disregard expert opinion of an unfavourable character. Etruscans were once up to about £5, but are now not worth as many shillings.

More City Philanthropy.

There is evidently a widespread belief in this country that the City is an abode of philanthropists whose only aim in life is to enrich other people so that they may themselves enjoy, as their only reward, the luxury of doing good. Obviously this must have been the simple faith of all who swallowed the story related in a circular issued last week by Hamilton Smith and Co., "stock and share dealers," 80A, Fenchurch-street, E.C. This eminent firm invited remittances "without a moment's delay," for "an investment" in certain mining shares on which a dividend was recently declared. It was represented that on an "investment" of £50, "commanding" 100 shares, "the dividend alone represents a profit of £110," and, as though this were not sufficiently tempting, "we undertake to say, within the next three months, we shall be able to show you a profit (including the dividend) of something like £250 to £300." Hamilton Smith and Co. left their intelligent clients to assume that they were ready to do all this out of pure benevolence. There was not a hint that they wanted any remuneration for themselves, nor was there—needless to say—the remotest reference to the possibility that the "cover" on which the shares were to be bought might run off—indeed, it is probable some innocents would not understand from the circular that the operation was to be on a cover basis at all. Still more dazzling was the prospect held out by Wm. Tyler and Co., Pinners' Hall, Old Broad-street, in a circular which also recommended a purchase on a cover basis of some shares in another mining company. In this case, also, a dividend has been declared, and "on a £100 investment made at once, calculated on a moderate estimate of only a 7 point rise, the account would stand approximately thus: Dividend £300, profit £700, cover returned £100." In other words, you would pay Tyler and Co. £100, and they would pay you back £1,100, "charging no commission." The gullibility of the public who send money to these bucket-shops must indeed be boundless and bottomless.

A concern styled the Consolidated Securities Company, 10, Drapers'-gardens, E.C., is trying a different tack. It points out very forcibly the risks of speculation on margin. "You buy, say, twenty-five Southern Pacifics at $97 each with £5 margin. Now, every fluctuation of one point means £5. Therefore your deposit of £5 will be wiped out on a drop of only one point." This warning against the cover-snatching bucket-shops is given with the disinterested object of persuading you that an investment in low-priced shares, taken up and registered in your own name, "is both safe and profitable, and constitutes an open door to small investors whereby they may with ease and security avail themselves of the opportunities hitherto restricted to the magnates of the money and stock market." The company furnishes a list of nearly 150 industrial and mining companies whose shares it will sell at from threepence to five shillings each—such very promising investments as Colombian Hydraulics at threepence, British Mutoscopes at ninepence, Niekirks at a shilling, and so forth. For a small sum you can buy quite a lot of these valuable securities, and as they will be your very own, you will be "placed in the privileged position of being able to wait until it is possible to get the higher price aimed at." Some examples are cited of shares that have had a big rise from as low a level, and the purpose of the Consolidated Securities Co. is to convince you that if you act upon its advice you also may make huge profits—say, a trifle of £691 17s. 6d. on an outlay of £46. Think of the poor deluded gulls on whom this company unloads its worthless rubbish locking up the shares and waiting patiently for the predicted profits, under the impression that they are enjoying a precious privilege "hitherto restricted to the magnates of the money and stock market"!

Insurance Notes—Life Policies and the Budget—Death Duties—Income-Tax—"Exposing" a Life Office—Estimates and Results.

In this column I only talk insurance, not politics, but the Chancellor of the Exchequer has introduced various points which have a distinct bearing upon life assurance, and call for comment. The arrangement that extremely wealthy people are to pay Death Duties at a higher rate than before naturally reminds us that life assurance is the best way of providing for the Death Duties. By means of a policy, which can be paid for annually, the money for these duties is available whenever it is needed, and can be paid direct to the Inland Revenue Authorities by the insurance company without waiting for probate and without realising other investments. These annual payments are a much smaller strain upon an estate than the provision of the big sum which the Chancellor of the Exchequer demands.

There is a very simple way of seeing the cost of life assurance that would provide for the Death Duties. State in pence the cost of assuring £1 at death, and multiply this figure by the rate per cent. that has to be paid for Estate Duty. This gives the percentage of our total capital which is required to provide for the Death Duties. If, having got this result, we divide it by the rate of interest we are earning on our capital, we obtain the number of pence per £1 of income that Estate Duty would cost us; in other words, we obtain the equivalent of Estate Duty in the form of Income Tax.

Some of my readers are not very arithmetical, so perhaps I had better give an illustration of these simple rules. To start with I will give the cost per annum in pence of assuring £1 at death by annual payments, for the rest of life.

Age at entry	25	30	35	40	45	50	60
Annual cost in pence ...	3·8	4·3	5·0	5·9	7·1	8·7	13·6

Now take the case of a man of 45, who has an estate of £10,000 to £25,000. For each £100 of capital he has to pay an Estate Duty of £4, and as it costs him 7.1d. a year to assure £1 it will cost him 2s. 4½d. a year to assure £4; therefore the Estate Duty will cost him 2s. 4½d. per cent. per annum of the capital value of his estate. If we suppose that the estate is yielding an income at the rate of 4 per cent. upon the capital, and we divide this 2s. 4½d. by the rate of interest, which is 4, we find that it would cost him just over 7d. in the pound of income to provide for the Estate Duty. This is a convenient method of seeing the equivalent of Estate Duties in the form of Income Tax.

The fact that a man can deduct his life assurance premiums from the income on which he has to pay tax is a considerable boon to the holders of life policies, and helps to make life assurance the profitable investment that it is when properly selected. This is a point which I may illustrate in detail some other time, but in the meanwhile I should like to point out the effective reply to Mr. Asquith's critics, from an insurance point of view, when they complain of the distinction between earned and unearned income. We are given pathetic pictures of a widow with an unearned income of £300 a year being subjected to the hardship of paying tax at the rate of 1s. in the £ on £140 of this income—this amounts to £7; while a man who has an income of £300 derived from his own earnings has to pay a tax of only £5 5s. The obvious suggestion, to my mind, is that the man who earns his income and has no capital must pay a relatively substantial amount every year for life assurance in order to provide for his dependants, while the widow can leave her dependants a permanent income from capital. It therefore seems to me that instead of the distinction between earned and unearned income being in any way unjust, it would not have been open to criticism had the difference between the rates of income tax on earned and unearned income been considerably larger than it is.

A correspondent asks me to expose the New York Life Insurance Company because of the way in which it has treated him. I am disposed to comply with his request for various reasons. In the first place, my correspondent's case is typical of many others. The gist of it is that he has received bonus results on a policy, which for one thing he thinks are bad, and which for another thing are much less than it was estimated the bonuses would be when he took his policy. Another reason for referring to this matter is that I am always ready to listen to people's grievances, and if they are real to comment upon them with a view to obtaining redress if possible, or allowing them to serve as a warning to others. A third reason is that I have such a profound belief in the merits of life assurance that when I think people's grievances are not real I like, if I can, to prove this to them, in order that they may dismiss their discontent, and feel as satisfied as they ought to. In 1887 my correspondent took a policy for £1,000, on which he paid a premium of £47 19s. 7d. for twenty years. The policy guaranteed the payment of the sum assured at the end of twenty years or at the death of the assured if he died in the meantime; if, and only if, he lived for twenty years he was to receive a bonus. It was estimated at the time the policy was taken that this bonus would be £556, to be paid in cash along with the £1,000 assured. It is because this bonus is only about three-fifths of the estimated amount that my correspondent feels he has been badly treated.

I am very familiar with the estimates of future bonuses which the American life offices used to issue, but which they do not issue at the present time. These estimates have done the companies a great deal of harm, and it is certain that in some instances, at any rate, the actuaries of the American life offices refused to have these estimates calculated in their departments, and they were arrived at—Heaven knows how!—by certain people connected with the Agency Department, whose chief business was to sell policies. While I always thoroughly disapproved of these estimates, it is only fair to say that the "estimate" my correspondent sends me says that the figures "are presented as estimates only, and are not to be considered as promises or guarantees." In all the circumstances, it is perhaps natural that a policy-holder should be disappointed at getting much less than he expects, but he goes on to complain that the results are decidedly bad, and although he might have obtained better results in a few of the best English offices, I do not see that he has anything to grumble at. If he had chosen to pay an extra £2 1s. 8d. a year, making his total premium £50 1s. 3d. a year, he could have had a guaranteed addition to his policy of £16 12s. a year, which would have converted his tontine assurance into an annual bonus policy that would have amounted to £1,332 at the end of the twenty years. Comparing this with a similar policy taken in an excellent and typical British life office, the Scottish Widows' Fund, the annual premium would have been £52 6s. 8d., or £2 5s. 5d. a year more than the New York Life premium. The New York Life policy would have guaranteed an annual addition to the sum assured of £16 12s. beginning immediately, and in the Scottish Widows no bonus at all would have been paid until the policy had been in force for five years. At the end of twenty years the Scottish Widows policy would have amounted to £29 more than the New York Life policy, but the assured would have paid the Scottish company £45 more than he would have paid the New York Life. I am not saying that this is the best result that could have been obtained for the money, and I am not justifying the former American habit of issuing estimates of future profits; it is all very well to say that people ought not to have been misled by these estimates, but as a matter of a fact they were misled, and in many cases they bought the policies in the expectation of receiving the results that were put before them. On the other hand, it is only fair to point out that even though the actual results prove much less than the anticipated results, the actual results are good in themselves, and are better than those of many first-class British offices. I feel sure from the tone of my correspondent's letter that he is a reasonably-minded man, and that on reading what I have said above he will realise that he has nothing to complain of except that perhaps his hopes were raised too high by the estimate which was given him. It is announced that a provisional agreement has been arrived at under which the Law Accident Insurance Society, Limited, will enter into association with, and pass under the control of, the London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Company.

Notes on New Issues.

An issue of 40,000 ordinary shares of £1 each at the price of £3 per share is announced by the directors of D. H. Evans and Co. For the last five years a dividend of 22½ per cent. has been paid on the ordinary shares of this company; and the new shares will rank for dividend equally with those already existing. The increase of capital is required for the rebuilding of a new block of additional premises; and the premium of £2 per share, less expenses of this issue, will be placed to reserve. The Aluminium Corporation, Limited, has been formed to acquire certain freehold land and water rights in North Wales for the purpose of establishing works to manufacture aluminium and to carry on business in that commodity. The capital is £500,000, divided into 440,000 seven per cent. participating preference shares of £1 each and 60,000 ordinary shares. The latter are allotted to the promoting syndicate, and subscriptions are invited for 300,000 of the participating preference shares. These shares must be regarded as distinctly speculative.

"Vigilant's" Letter Box.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of Truth.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

Government Securities.

Disponendo.—The internal bonds you name are not officially quoted, and I know of no means whereby the record could be ascertained.

Railways.

Flo.—I do not recommend a purchase; in fact, I thought I had already made my views upon Americans sufficiently clear in recent articles. Captain.—Hold Canadian Pacifics as an investment. Trunk Thirds are good for a moderate rise in the course of the present year. At the present price Rosarios look cheap to buy for investment. Byzantine.—1. Hold National of Mexico Preferences. There is a fair chance of an improvement within the time you mention, though it would be better if you could regard them as investments to sit upon, say, for a year or two. 2. There is room for a rise of a point or two in this stock between now and the meeting, which is due in May or the beginning of June. But until something is done in the matter of the company's concession—a portion of the property, under existing arrangements, reverting without payment to the Government in about fifty years' time—the stock cannot be considered a good investment. John.—1. What is the use of calling the stock if such action involves a loss? As regards the limit you name, the shares are still some way from attaining it, but if you can get the figure mentioned, better take advantage of it. 2. It is very seldom the terms are attractive enough to make such a form of speculation desirable. If you could buy outright I would suggest Grank Trunk Third Preference.

Mines.

Rhino.—Many thanks for your letter and the subscription to the Truth Toy Fund which you are good enough to send as an acknowledgment of the value of the advice you have received from "Vigilant." The subscription is duly acknowledged in the "Entre Nous" columns. 1. They appear hopeful holdings for dividends, but I see no reason at present to expect much advance in market value. 2. The prospect is not very bright. 3. A good selection. 4. Ferreira Deep, Witwatersrand Deep, and Knights Deep should suit you. E. B.—I connot trace No. 1. As regards the other, I have no reason for doubting the honesty of the management, but I cannot say whether the directors have much mining knowledge. Gull.—1. It depends upon the articles of association. Presumably, in the matter referred to, the directors have power to sell the undertaking, and after all it is only a case of an old concern under a new name. 2. I am afraid that Klerksdorp Gold will never do any good for its shareholders. Tanks.—I would hold for a better market, though in view of the creation of a prior charge a recovery to the old high level cannot be looked for. Dubitans.—I think you might hold for some recovery. Brigade Major.—Keep all for a better market. Bolus.—1. The new shares seem a fair speculation. 2. A moderate improvement seems justified, but there is little market interest in the shares at present. Union.—The shares should improve in a buoyant Kaffir market, and I think you should hold for a recovery. Calamine.—1. I would hold for recovery. See my notes this week. 2. As it turns out, the not uncommon mistake was made of the market proceeding too early to discount results, and the delay has consequently caused a relapse in prices. Knowing the speculative character of such shares, those who bought have no particular ground for complaint, though the management might perhaps have been more communicative. 3. I think it very improbable. 4. I have no reason to think they are not. Obviously no one is infallible.

Mixed.

Discrimination.—1. I would hold, as satisfactory dividends should be ultimately forthcoming. The fall seems to have been overdone. 2. As you say, on the statements made, the shares would seem very promising, but I do not care to advise a purchase except as a pure speculation. 3. I will make inquiries as to this concern. Enquirer.—The Brazilian and Japanese bonds should be good enough for your purpose. In regard to the Cuban bonds give the preference to the Five per Cent. Gold bonds, standing at about 102½. The debentures are a fair commercial investment. Verdant Green.—I see no reason to advise a sale of the securities you already hold. With regard to the employment of the £500 I have anticipated your requirements by an article on Railway fixed interest securities, which commenced last week, and is concluded in the present issue. Calcutta.—You are, in my opinion, making a mistake in putting all your capital into one security, particularly as the obtaining of 5 per cent. necessarily involves some risk. Better sell part of your present holding of the bonds, with a view to spreading your money over say six or eight different stocks. Read previous answer. Ripon.—There is nothing unusual about such a delay, which is the fault not of the broker but of the companies themselves. Policeman.—1. A reconstruction scheme was considered at the meeting held last month, the proposed assessment being 1s. per 4s. share. 2. A further purchase should turn out satisfactorily in the long run. 3. No. Disgusted.—1. Obviously a most imprudent policy. 2. Further purchases would be a fair speculation, but you would probably do better elsewhere at present. Canute.—1. Not much likelihood of it at present. 2. These are nearly at the price named, and should rise above it. 3. Some improvement in the position was reported at the meeting last week, but the prospect of a dividend next year is not very rosy. Ecuador.—There is no market in the shares, but you might see if your broker can obtain a price. E. L. D., Carlisle.—1. I would suggest your communicating with the English Association of American Bond and Shareholders, Limited, 5, Great Winchester-street, E.C., which would save you the trouble of collecting the dividends yourself. 2. A sound and desirable investment. 3. I have not noticed them. 4. Quite suitable. Beacon.—1. The Four and a Halfs (first series). 2. Brazilian (Western of Minas) Fives are as cheap as any. 3. The additional Kaffirs mentioned should improve when business becomes more active, but I prefer New Kleinfonteins. 4. No. 1 company's are quite distinct. East Rand Coals are quoted about 1s. 3d. Paterson.—Of those named I would select Japanese, Cammell, Laird, and Lever Preference. Shield.—1. Purely a gamble. 2. It might be genuine enough, but it does not add to the attractiveness of the shares. 3. I cannot trace it. If it circularises leave it alone. Xem.—Nos. 2 and 3 are the best of the four as investments. Blenheim.—None seem to possess exceptional speculative merits. The present price of No. 1 is about 22s. 6d., dividends being declared in January and June. Sulphides are fair, and the same may be said of South Durhams. Consult a Stock Exchange Year Book. Solus.—1. Could be improved upon. Say Paquins. 2. An option would not be attractive. Bert, Weybridge.—Would make a hopeful investment. The concern is believed to be participating in the prosperity of South America. Dabbler.—1 and 2. Are not worth averaging. In fact, No. 2 is scarcely attractive. 3. Sound enough. Lavender.—Would not advise any averaging. As to Electric Tractions, they may go higher within the near future. G. M.—1. Might be held. 2. I know of no reason for an advance. They are likely to hang about the present price even if the profits advance further. Syntax.—None are speculatively interesting, and most would make a risky purchase. Thread.—1. These should be held for an improvement. 2. Not very hopeful. Ennis.—1 and 2. Keep the shares you have for the present. 3. The dividend on these seems to be well secured, but you must not expect any considerable rise in price. Oliver.—Too risky for your purpose. See my articles last week and in the present issue on railway fixed interest securities. S. L. C.—I am referring elsewhere to this concern. Peter and others.—Your inquiries shall be answered next week.

Insurance.

F. Kent.—The company is genuine, but not worth investing in. I advise you not to pay any more. J. L. H., Birkdale.—For your purpose I should advise the Essex and Suffolk Equitable Fire Insurance Company, of 58, New Broad-street, E.C. J. B. S.—Yorkshire Insurance Company; Legal and General, or Northern. Siwel.—Insure with the Railway Passengers, 64, Cornhill; or the United Legal, 222, Strand. D. Welch.—I have never heard of the Association. I have been making inquiries, but have not yet heard the result. Safety and other Correspondents.—Your questions will be answered next week.

Miscellaneous.

Nemo.—Yes. F. H.—The Charing Cross Bank is really a usury-shop, run by a man named Carpenter. Have nothing to do with it, either as a depositor or a borrower. R. C. F. C.—Thanks for your note; I will make inquiries. Glasgow, J. L. B., Anglo-Indian, Miss N., and other correspondents.—Warnings against the International Securities Syndicate have repeatedly appeared in Truth. Its advertisements are grossly misleading, and its charges outrageously exorbitant. F. M.—The article to which you refer is simply an advertisement. Read preceding answer. Justitia.—These are questions on which the advice of a solicitor should be obtained. Speculator.—1. No. 2. I cannot say, nor can I make any recommendation; see Rule 8. Polly Parker.—I am afraid that it is, to all intents and purposes, a swindle. About a year ago an American mining paper reported that it had been unable to confirm the existence of the alleged valuable property of "the Great Cariboo Cold Company," not even in the official reports of the Minister of Mines for British Columbia. Llangedwyn. — I replied to your former inquiry on March 27, to the effect that I could not undertake to fill up such a form, and that you had better get a stockbroker to do the business. As to your present questions, in one sense the bonds are "genuine," but their value is another matter. You could obtain them through Messrs. N. Keizer and Co., 29, Threadneedle street, E.C., or the London branch of the Crédit Lyonnais. Set Square.—Read the latter part of preceding answer. I do not give advice as to the merits of different bonds of this class. R. C. J.—Both the mine and the bonds are extremely speculative, and therefore quite unsuitable for your purpose. You could get a better return than at present from an industrial investment, such as Imperial Tobacco Company's Preference or Bradford Dyers Ordinary. Star.—In June and December. Caution.—I believe the society is quite reliable. Sergeant-Major.—1. Extremely speculative. 2. A fairly promising purchase. Horrey.—1. A hopeful speculative lock-up. 2. I have no reason to criticise it, but see Rule 8. 3. Yes, by some investments. Week-Ender.—Might be best avoided. Try some good building society. H. T. S.—Neither is known in this country, so that I am not in a position to express an opinion. C. J. S.—Since the Cautionary List was published I have made two or three references to this new bucket-shop; plainly a swindle.

Miscellaneous—'Bus Shares Rise—Brewery Securities Stagnant—Textiles Weak Owing to Fears of a Labour Dispute—Babcock and Wilcox's Position.

In the Miscellaneous Market an outstanding feature of the week has been the continued advance in the ordinary stock of the London General Omnibus Company. There has now been a recovery of over twenty points from the low water mark to which the stock dropped in March on the appearance of the report, showing that £15,000 had to be withdrawn from the reserve fund for the payment of a five per cent. dividend. The shares of the London Road Car Company, which only a few weeks since passed its ordinary dividend for the first time in twenty years, have also had a substantial rise, and those of the London Motor Omnibus ("Vanguard") Company have likewise improved. These changes are chiefly due to a belief that at last there is a good prospect of the different companies concerned entering into an arrangement for the avoidance of the present system of cut-throat competition and the revision of unremunerative fares. Some informal meetings have been held to discuss the subject, and such an arrangement, if it can be carried out, would obviously be advantageous to all the companies. To what extent the gain in this direction would compensate the old companies for the losses which they are incurring through the introduction of motor traction is another question. No doubt the difficulty will be overcome in time, but the period of transition must inevitably be a trying one for the proprietors. In this connection it may be noted that the dividend on the ordinary shares of Thomas Tilling, Limited, is 5 per cent. for 1906, as compared with 8 per cent. in 1905 and 10 per cent. in the two preceding years. Though the higher price of forage is also mentioned, there is little doubt that the falling off in the sum available for distribution is mainly attributable to what the report describes as the considerable difficulties and consequent expense of the motor omnibus service. The vendor-directors of this 'bus company deserve credit for having, in view of the altered conditions of the trade, made over to the trustees ordinary shares of the nominal value of £25,000 in order to wipe out the amount at which goodwill for established routes stands in the books.

The fear in some quarters that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would impose some additional taxation on the liquor trade proved to be unfounded, but neither this fact nor the certainty that there will be no fresh licensing legislation this year has stimulated business in brewery issues. The market remains quite stagnant. In the textile section some uneasiness, due to rumours of possible labour troubles in Lancashire, caused a slight temporary weakness. It appears that the weavers have demanded an advance of wages, which the employers have refused, but there does not seem to be any reason for anticipating a serious development of the dispute. Daimlers have been the most active among motor and cycle shares, a sharp spurt occurring on the confirmation by the shareholders of the capital re-organisation scheme. The first advance was not fully maintained, but on the week both the ordinary and the preference shares are a trifle higher. Iron, steel, and engineering companies' shares have remained firm. Babcock and Willcox, Limited, the manufacturers of the well-known water-tube steam boilers, again pay the handsome dividend of 20 per cent. per annum on the ordinary shares, which has now been distributed for three years in succession. With reserve and dividend equalisation funds now amounting to £445,000, or nearly half the paid-up capital, this company stands in a strong financial position, and the volume of its business so far during the current year has been increasing. On the basis of the 20 per cent. dividend, the ordinary shares at the present quotation give a yield of about £5 2s. 6d. per cent., while the six per cent. cumulative preference shares—whose dividend is covered fifty times over—return well over 4 per cent. Both may be recommended as sound industrial investments. James Nelson and Sons' shares have receded on the report which, as I indicated last week, shows a heavy drop in the trading profit, though the previous year's dividend of 10 per cent. is again paid. As the record of this company proves, the business of importing meat from the Argentine is liable to very wide fluctuations, a circumstance which some investors have lost sight of when a fat year has been recorded. Hudson's Bays have hardly moved during the week, but a severe fall has taken place in Canada North-West Land common shares. Elsewhere in this week's Truth is published the fifty-fourth report of the Yokohama Specie Bank, Limited, which was presented to the shareholders at the half-yearly meeting at Yokohama last month.

The Carlton Hotel, Pall Mall, S.W.—1593 Gerrard. Famous for its beautiful Restaurant and Grill Room. Under the same Direction as the Ritz Hotel.

VIGILANT.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

A WOMAN'S LOVE.

LADY MILDRED BECKWITH was one of those women who pride themselves upon their wifely devotion; and in her case the pride was by no means without foundation. Her husband, Jervoise Beckwith, M.P. for one of the metropolitan constituencies, owed not merely his seat in Parliament, but even practically everything he had in the world, to her. The only daughter of a duke, and heiress of all her father's large personal estate, she had married Beckwith—then a briefless young barrister—from love pure and simple. The union, of itself, was sufficient to make him. But Lady Mildred did not rest content with that. She devoted herself, after marriage, to his interests with whole-hearted and untiring energy—the energy of an intense and absorbing love.

And yet that love—intense and absorbing as it was—had (though Lady Mildred was not aware of this) its limitations. You would have shocked her terribly if you had told her so. She would have repudiated the imputation with indignant heat. She would have declared, with perfect honesty, that no wife ever loved her husband more truly than she loved Jervoise, would have pointed to a thousand decisive proofs, in the shape of sacrifices she had made for him. But, for all that, the limitation was there—the limitation which, though now concealed as well from herself as others, it only needed the application of a crucial test to make apparent. Such tests generally come sooner or later. This one came to Lady Mildred Beckwith after ten happy years of married life.

* * * * *

Piccadilly-circus at half-past eleven on a cold, cheerless night towards the end of March. The scene how full of what is called "life"—of what might more truly be called living death! Much tawdry finery, much paint and powder, much bold laughter and outward mirth! But what a hell of aching misery behind it all! What a foretaste, here on earth, of the everlasting torments of the damned!

A tall, well-dressed man, of gentlemanly appearance, in young middle-life, stood in the full glare of one of the lamps outside Swan and Edgar's talking to a haggard, bedizened, but still good-looking member of the unhappy sisterhood. While he was thus engaged, an electric brougham, threading its way slowly through the throng of pedestrians, who here crowded the roadway, passed within a few feet of him. A handsome, fair-haired woman, wrapped in an opera-cloak, happened to look out of the window of the brougham at that moment, and saw the man talking to the unfortunate. A strange look—a look of mingled amazement, anger, pain, and unutterable scorn came over her refined face. She clenched her little white hands. She bit her lip. The colour faded from her cheeks. But she said nothing—made no sign. And the brougham passed on.

Shortly afterwards the man, too, proceeded on his way. He did not know that he had been observed. But, for some reason, his face was pale and troubled. His swinging steps carried him swiftly along the northern pavement of Picadilly, until he came to Bond-street, up which he turned, and then into Bruton-street. Here he stopped at one of the houses on the south side and let himself in with a latch-key. The man was Jervoise Beckwith, returning on foot, as usual, for exercise, from the House of Commons. The lady in the brougham who had passed him while he was talking to the unfortunate, and who, without his knowing it, had observed him, was Lady Mildred, his wife.

She had been to some social function at the Hotel Cecil, from which she was not expected to return until the small hours. It was with some surprise, therefore, that Jervoise Beckwith saw the electric light full on in the library, and, entering, found his beautiful wife standing by the fire.

"What, Mill! You back already?" he exclaimed, as he went forward to kiss her.

Lady Mildred drew herself up very erect—a commanding figure of young womanhood, and motioned him back with a gesture, more expressive than any words, of bitter contempt and disgust.

"Do not come near me, please. I decline to have anything to do with you."

And her proud blue eyes flashed and scintillated upon him in withering scorn.

"Why, what is the matter, Mill?" he ejaculated, amazed, it would seem, and almost paralysed by this freezing reception.

"If you want an explanation—though I should hardly think there is any need for me to supply it—you have only to carry your mind back to the occurrences of half-an-hour ago."

"What do you mean?" he demanded quickly, changing colour as he spoke.

"Ah! I see by your look that you understand me. Yes! I passed within a foot of you while you were talking to that—that creature at Piccadilly-circus; and I heard you asking for her address. . . . You might, at least, have spared me this loathsome insult, and yourself this depth of degradation. You might have looked a little higher for my rival—I do think—than to a common woman of the streets."

"Hear me, Mill. You are cruelly mistaken——"

"Mistaken? How very likely! Was not the creature's character clearly written in every line of her—in every daub of paint on her haggard face—in every flounce and frill of her tawdry attire?"

"The woman was an unfortunate. I do not dispute that. But I—I—only spoke to her out of—of—pity," he stammered.

"To be sure. And you only asked for her address out of pity, I suppose!" she retorted, with biting sarcasm.

"Yes. That was my sole reason," he answered, "I—I wished, if possible, to do something for her."

"And why should you wish to do something for her—a woman of such degraded and infamous character?" she cried, with flashing eyes.

"I will tell you," he said.

"No doubt you will make up a very pretty story," she scoffed.

"I give you my word I will tell you nothing but the truth. I knew that poor creature many years ago. She was engaged to an old friend of mine—a man I knew very well. He betrayed her, under promise of marriage. I believe he meant to keep his promise at the time when he made it. But he subsequently fell in love with another woman, whom he married, and left this poor girl to her fate. She went to the bad, in consequence. How utterly to the bad I was not aware, until I met her and recognised her at Piccadilly-circus to-night."

He spoke hurriedly and with confusion, studiously avoiding his wife's eye. She was sure that he was trying to impose upon her with a trumped-up story, calculated to excite her pity, and her lip curled with a scorn even greater than before.

"Dear me! How very tragic," she rejoined, with cold, mocking irony. "But a little vague, don't you think? Surely, while you were about it, you might have added a few details to make the story more circumstantial. The name of your friend, for instance, and one or two other trifling particulars of that kind."

"What I have told you is the truth," he answered quickly, still, however, avoiding looking her in the face, "But I cannot mention names, because—because——"

"Oh, I quite understand your reason," she exclaimed. "If you mentioned names, it would at once furnish me with the means of testing your story, which no doubt would be highly inconvenient to you."

"You wrong me. Before Heaven you wrong me!" he ejaculated.

But the guilty confusion of his manner belied his words. She turned away from him in disgust and contempt. Then, not deigning him so much as another glance, she sailed proudly out of the room.

He still remained where he stood, as if stupefied. Presently, he sank into a chair, and buried his face in his hands.

In the meanwhile, Lady Mildred was pacing the floor of her bedroom upstairs, with pale face and clenched hands.

"I loved him—ah, how I loved him!" she muttered. "And now, in requital, he has insulted me and lied to me! I will never forgive him—never! never!" The test had, indeed, come, and Lady Mildred's love was unequal to the strain.

* * * * *

More than a week had elapsed—a week of bitter estrangement and misery for those two, when, one morning, a woman rang the door-bell of the house in Bruton-street and asked to see Lady Mildred. After some questioning, she was admitted, and was shown into the library, where Lady Mildred was sitting.

The woman was quietly dressed, and her manner was humble and diffident. But Lady Mildred recognised her in an instant, and an expression of indignant, withering scorn flashed at once into her blue eyes.

"You?" she ejaculated. "You? How dare you come here? How dare you contaminate my house with your presence?"

The woman's haggard, wasted, though still good-looking, face was very pale. She answered, humbly:

"Forgive me, my lady. I know I am not fit to breathe the same air with you. But I was driven to come, for I have something that I must tell you."

Lady Mildred's expression denoted the extreme of loathing and contempt, as she replied:

"No doubt my husband has put you up to come and tell me some pretty story."

"Indeed, no, my lady," answered the woman, pressing her thin hands tightly together. "I have only come to speak the truth—to corroborate what your husband has already told you."

"Ah, my husband has been at you, then? I am sure I congratulate him on his choice of a confidante," rejoined Lady Mildred, with biting scorn.

The woman bowed her head.

"God help me," she answered, in a low, broken voice, "I cannot resent what you say. I know I am one of those who have forfeited all claim to common consideration. But hear me, I implore you, for two or three minutes, while I tell you my true story."

"True? Ah, of course," said Lady Mildred, with a mocking sneer.

"I was once engaged to be married to a great friend of your husband's—a man——"

"You are repeating your lesson well," interpolated Lady Mildred.

"A man," went on the other, disregarding the taunt, "who was above me in station, a born gentleman, indeed, while I, although I had been well-educated, was only a poor shop-girl——"

"Dear me! Did you really begin life so respectably as that?" remarked Lady Mildred, with cruelly intentional insolence.

The woman winced. Her pale face flushed. But, except for that, she took no notice of the merciless sneer.

"But he loved me—yes, at that time he did love me," she continued, pressing her hands to her bosom. "And I—ah, God! How I loved him!"

"It is strange to hear these creatures talk of love," said Lady Mildred, as if speaking to herself and uttering her thoughts aloud. "Strange, and, when you come to think of it, rather sickening."

Again the woman winced. But again she ignored the interruption.

"I was so happy in his love," she went on, and, as she said the words, a sudden, wonderful light shone in her tired eyes. "He came into my life like an angel from Heaven——"

"Scarcely from Heaven, I should imagine," interposed Lady Mildred, with a sneer, "considering (for I assume you are going to repeat the pitiful story my husband has put into your mouth) the way in which he treated you."

The woman pressed her hands tightly to her bosom.

"It was my fault as much as his," she said. "I loved him so. I could refuse him nothing. Besides, he had promised to marry me——"

"And broke his promise, and deserted you to marry another woman. At least, that is how the fairy story went, to the best of my recollection," answered Lady Mildred, mockingly.

"No, my lady. There you are wrong," cried the unfortunate, earnestly, and again that wonderful light shone in her tired eyes. "He did not desert me for the other woman. I gave him up to her—of my own free will—because I loved him."

"Better stick to the authorised version of the fairy tale, I think," said Lady Mildred, with cold sarcasm. "For that, if not exactly probable, was at least within the bounds of possibility."

"I cannot wonder at your believing me incapable of such an action, my lady," said the woman, humbly. "I sometimes wonder whether it can have been true, when I look back on it, myself. Yet it was what I did. Yes, though my happiness, my reputation, everything that made life worth living, depended on his marrying me, I gave him up to that other, because" (and again that wonderful light in the tired eyes) "because I loved him."

"Possibly you could not help yourself," rejoined Lady Mildred, her lip curling in its incredulous scorn. "At any rate—according to the authorised version—the gentleman appears to have been very willing to be given up by you."

"Ah, my lady! You may mock. But hear me out. I will tell you just how it was. She—that other—was far, far above me in every way. She was a lady, pure, refined, beautiful and well-born—one who could enter fully into all his life—one who could make his career what it ought to be, what God had surely meant it to be. But it was not only that. He loved her. He did not tell me so. He would not have wounded me by any such admission. But I soon found it out. And at first I was jealous and angry. . . . And then, after a while, love showed me a better way. I would not let him marry me and make me an honest woman, though he would assuredly have done so, for he was a gentleman and a man of his word. But I gave him up—gave him up of my own free will—gave him up to her, for his sake—because I loved him."

The words flowed from the woman's lips in an eager, fervent stream that pulsed, in every tone, with reality and truthfulness. The wonderful light in the tired eyes shone brighter and brighter, shedding upon the poor haggard face a new radiance, and investing it, for the moment, with all, and more than all, the beauty that must once have belonged to it in the far-off days of youth and freshness and innocence.

Lady Mildred could not but observe this—could not but see that the woman was recalling a vivid personal experience. No other recollection could have called up that look to her face—could have imparted that earnest thrill to her tone. Yet her ladyship tried to blind her eyes and to harden her heart to all this, and so far succeeded as to preserve an outward show of cold, incredulous disdain.

"You have really repeated these inventions very well," she said, with rather a forced sneer. "I must congratulate you upon your histrionic powers. If you should ever wish to lead a more respectable life, I would recommend you to try your fortune on the stage."

"Inventions?" exclaimed the woman, fixing her haggard eyes earnestly, almost fiercely, upon Lady Mildred's face. "Is your husband an invention—are you an invention?"

"What do you mean?" cried out Lady Mildred, quickly.

"I mean—though I had not intended to tell you this, but you have stung me into it—that the man whom I gave up was Jervoise Beckwith—that the woman to whom I gave him up was yourself!"

The truth was out. Lady Mildred knew it was the truth. She could not doubt it. She saw it written in every line of the woman's face; she heard it thrill in every tone of the woman's voice. She turned very pale. But she said never a word.

"Yes," exclaimed the woman—and the wonderful light shone brighter even than before in the tired eyes. "I gave him up to you—because I loved him. And I myself went right down to hell—because I loved him. And I am glad I went down to hell, for his sake—because I loved him."

"Forgive me. I have wronged you," said Lady Mildred, in a low voice, now finding words. And then, with a sudden, impulsive gesture, she put out her hand to the woman. . . . . .

When Jervoise Beckwith came home that afternoon, his wife went up to him, and, laying both her hands upon his shoulders, looked into his dark eyes.

"She has been here," she said; "and told me all the truth. Oh, Jervoise, why did you not tell me yourself, my husband?"

"Because," he replied, "I was ashamed to confess to you that I had once been mixed up with a woman of that sort."

A few hours before, Lady Mildred herself would have used much harsher language of the woman. But now her husband's words somehow jarred upon her. "Because I was ashamed to confess that I had been mixed up with a woman of that sort." . . . . "Because I loved him." . . . Lady Mildred was silent. The tragedy of it all came deeply home to her. "Ashamed . . . of a woman of that sort." "Because I loved him." The man's point of view, and the woman's, summed up in those two brief sentences. . . . Alas! In the heart's blood of how many poor women is this tragedy written; in how many a haggard and ghastly face does it cry aloud to Heaven from the streets of London every night!

ART NOTES.

THE NEW GALLERY.

ANYONE who is interested in ghosts and ghost lore should certainly pay a visit to the New Gallery. He will learn much about the relationship of ghosts to art, and quite a lot about ghosts who have nothing to do with art. He will learn, for instance, that you can have a ghost, or any number of them, long before you are dead. Mr. Sargent has several, and they seem to have been very industrious during the last few months. They have all been painting portraits and sending them to the New Gallery, where a lot have been accepted and hung. They are sensible and obliging ghosts who do not want to stand in the light of their living self, so they sign their portraits by other names, but you have only got to look at them once to recognise them as the work of some spiritualised portion of Mr. Sargent, weaker, naturally, with little of his life and go in them, but quite as much like his own work as some of his own work is, as for instance, two large portraits by his material hand which are hung in the North gallery, one of Dr. Warre, very fierce—as he might have appeared to an Eton boy with a guilty conscience—the other of Mrs. Harold Harmsworth, determined—if we may judge from the result—to look her very nicest now that she is having her portrait took by the great Mr. Sargent. Truth to tell, I should have been inclined to put this down to some ghost Sargent, so much is it below his usual work in virility and conviction, were it not for the signature, and for one of the hands, which is painted as only as the flesh-and-blood Sargent could paint it.

You cannot make any hard and fast lines about these artistic spooks. Some of them only come into existence after a painter's death, others seem to go out of it as soon as the painter himself dies, or very soon afterwards. Take Mr. Whistler, for instance. When he was alive he had almost as many spooks as has Mr. Sargent at this moment. As soon as he was dead his ghosts began to die, too, so that now you may enter half-a-dozen picture galleries, one after the other, and not see the work of so much as one of them. Burne-Jones, on the other hand, seems to have vitalised a much tougher breed of ghosts, who still persist in their artistic endeavours even to this day. There are several of them at the New Gallery at this moment, all very true to type; showing the same pale, discontented, anæmic, flat-chested, soulfully soulless young women, doing the same sort of impossible things in the same sort of impossible way. It is a curious thing that even the inanimate objects around them seem to have caught the trick of overcoming the laws of nature. There is one picture of this type—it is in the South Room—which fascinates me. It shows a number of young men—I think they are young men, that is to say, though they might be young women—taking the Holy Grail to Sanas. They and it are packed very uncomfortably in a very small ship, which seems to have been designed by a church architect with Gothic tastes, and which floats in obstinate resistance to all the laws of nature. They have set lighted candles around the casket and they are escorted by two angels. There is a high wind blowing; the sea is covered with neat little waves that look as if they have kept their foaming crests in curl-papers overnight, but not one feather of the angels' extremely ornamental wings is blown out of place, not one hair upon their heads is shifted by the wind. It may be, I admit, that they are spiritual and, therefore, not subject to being blown about. (Has anyone ever noticed whether a ghost's robes are blowable, I wonder?) But that does not explain the candles. They are not spiritual candles, for their flames are certainly bent over by the wind; but although there is no land in sight—which supposes that the journey has been going on for at least an hour, they have not gone out. It is idle to suggest that the young persons, or even the angels, can have relighted them; the period of the picture is obviously previous to the invention of matches. The whole thing is a fascinating mystery.

Next to this picture, I think the most fascinating part of the New Gallery show is the political portraits. There are several of them, and they all show us distinguished politicians trying to look like anything in the world but what they are. There is Mr. John Burns, for instance, painted by Mr. P. F. S. Spence, and doing his best to look like a cockatoo waiting for a lump of sugar. Quite close to him is Mr. Arnold-Forster, who for some reason seems to have impressed Mr. Harris Brown, who has painted him, as a would-be poet, composing spring anthems for the sixpenny magazines. And there is the Right Hon. John Edward Ellis, M.P., painted by Mr. Percy Bigland, and looking as if he found the operation extremely painful, but was determined to pass for an optimist or perish in the attempt. Talking about portraits, quite the most striking is Mr. J. E. Blanche's "Lucien Simon." It is not at all flattering—I should not be surprised if the sitter had felt rather annoyed when he looked at it—but it is astonishingly alive and astonishingly painted. Another fine portrait is Mr. T. Austen Brown's "At the Window." It is noble in tone and vivid in suggestion, though I must confess to being a little puzzled at the subject, which is of a fashionably-dressed lady gazing out of a window into a rather squalid French village street. Is she a tourist waiting for a broken-down motor to be set right again? She is not dressed for the part. Is she——but it is a fine painting, any way.

While I think of it, I should like to notice one very remarkable thing about the present exhibition—that the hanging arrangements seem to have got disarranged. In one of the rooms, particularly, so many of the worst pictures shown are hung in the best positions—on the line—that it reminds me of the Topsy-Turvey House—I think it was called—at one of the exhibitions, wherein the ceilings were where the floors should have been, and so on. I quite admit that the Hanging Committee are entitled to hang their pictures as and where they like, and there is perhaps something to be said for varying the old convention and giving the bad painters a chance; but, after all, the primary object of a picture-show being to sell pictures, it would be as well, from motives of expediency, not to put so many of the smallest strawberries on the top of the basket.

Personally, I do not think the New Gallery is this year quite up to its usual level, but it contains some fine pictures, nevertheless. There are quite a number that I should like to buy if I had the money, which, as it happens, I have not. Here are a few of them. In the South Room, Sir James Linton's "Admonition"—not because I think it a very fine picture, but because it shows such refreshing evidence of care and knowledge—Mr. Byam Shaw's pre-Raphaelitish "Caged Bird," and two portraits, Mr. George Henry's "Miss Innes," because the grey dress is so finely painted, and Mr. Alfred Priest's "Clement K. Shorter, Esq.," which is one of the most convincing idealisations of "the literary gent." I ever saw in my life. Mr. Peppercorn has one of his powerful little landscapes here, but I should not care to buy it, because it is a shade too gloomy for my taste.

In the West Room, Mr. Alfred East's very fine and dignified landscape, "The Dignity of Autumn," arouses my cupidity; so does Mr. Charles Bartlett's "Mother and Child, Brittany"; and I think I should like Mr. George Wetherbee's "Uncharted Seas," because it has some very pretty mermaids in it, one of whom reminds me of somebody I know.

In the North Room I should be grateful for Mr. Lee Hankey's "Goose Girl," though it verges perilously close to the "pretty-pretty," and Mr. Hughes Stanton's big "Fontainebleau," and Mr. P. F. Walker's very restful and airy "Mouth of the Thames," which is unmercifully skied but is a fine picture all the same. And in the Central Hall there is a real Sargent, an "Architectural Study," quite masterly, which I would give a good deal to possess.

I come next to the pictures I would not like to possess at any price. There is, first and foremost—but I see that I have already exceeded my space, and must leave any consideration of this fascinating topic until next week.

MUSIC.

THE PITCH QUESTION AGAIN.

A RECENT concert room incident and subsequent controversy, brought about by the inability of a popular vocalist to sing certain songs set down to him at a pitch above the diapason normal, have brought up once more a bothersome question which has too long vexed the souls of British musicians. When, some sixty or seventy years ago, the makers of brass intruments in this country began screwing up the pitch of these for the purpose of gratifying the liking of the military bandmasters for the more "brilliant" effects thereby secured, it was not generally realised, probably, what confusion and inconvenience would ultimately result from their procedure. It was the old case of England preferring to be a law unto itself against the rest of the world. On the Continent the matter was long ago settled by general agreement on a satisfactory basis. From the time of Bach and Handel onward the pitch adopted by all the musical nations was practically uniform, and when the possibility occurred of undesirable deviation therefrom this was promptly checked. In 1834 a congress of physicists met at Stuttgart to consider the question, and their decision was practically identical with that afterwards adopted (in 1858) by the French Government, whose diapason normal (517 vibrations for C) has since become generally recognised and adhered to. But, of course, this was far too logical and sensible a course to commend itself to our insular ideas, and so it has come about that we are still worried with a problem which other nations have long since disposed of. While a few of our leading concert orchestras, including the Philharmonic, have, within the last ten years or so, conformed to the Continental standard, all the military bands, most of the provincial bands, and the greater number of the organs throughout the country, still adhere to the old high or "brilliant" pitch beloved of Costa, and any alteration of this unsatisfactory condition of things seems, at present, as far off as ever.

It is the cost which would thereby be entailed which chiefly stands in the way, of course. If the military bands could be persuaded to lead the way, the rest would soon follow suit. It is only because they have to rely chiefly on the services of the Army bandsmen for their brass that the ordinary provincial orchestras are unable to make the change. Is there any hope, then, of the military musicians moving in the matter? It is to be feared, not much. There are two arguments against the change from their point of view—the one musical, or perhaps one should rather say martial; and the other financial. The first is voiced by authorities such as Lieut. Rogan, the well-known bandmaster of the Coldstreams, who holds that for the particular purposes of military music the higher pitch is the better. Not only does it lend itself, he declares, to more brilliant musical effects, but also, and as a consequence, its carrying power is greater, and therefore it is better adapted to the needs of march and parade ground. To this the best reply, perhaps, is that what is good enough for France and Germany ought to do for us also. We need not try to be more brilliant than the French or more military than the Germans. Unfortunately, the second obstacle is less easily disposed of. This is, of course, the heavy cost which would be involved in making the change. What would this amount to? The sum has been variously estimated by different authorities in the case of the regimental bands throughout the country at from £10,000 to £30,000. Now the instruments of the military bands are provided, as every one knows, by the officers, and since they are not as a class consumedly interested in the pitch controversy it is hardly to be expected that they will put their hands in their pockets to find the needful funds. Neither is it any more likely in the present state of affairs that the War Office will make a grant for the purpose, and so it is to be feared that we must continue to rub along for the present under the existing conditions.

Indeed, we may think ourselves lucky in that so far as the principal concert orchestras are concerned the diapason normal is now the rule. It is now over ten years since the Philharmonic Society formally adopted (in 1895) the Continental pitch, which may now be regarded, therefore, as quite definitely established, to the great satisfaction of the many eminent singers and others who visit us from abroad. In earlier days the case stood very differently, of course. Sims Reeves, it may be recalled, gave up singing at the Handel Festivals solely on account of the pitch difficulty, while Mme. Patti was another who found it necessary to take an equally strong line over the matter. As regards the general adoption of the diapason normal, there are, as has been noted, not only the military bands to be reckoned with, but all the other brass bands throughout the country, representing a value of thousands of pounds, and nearly all the organs. Among the latter, one of the worst offenders at present is that of the Albert Hall, to adapt which it has been estimated would entail a cost of some £1,500, a sum which those concerned have not at present seen their way to provide. Consequently, certain works lying very high for the voice, such as Beethoven's "Choral" symphony and Mass in D, can never be thought of by the Royal Choral Society. In other cases, where organs have been altered, the step has sometimes been regretted afterwards, when it has been desired to co-operate with bands still retaining the higher pitch, so that altogether the present state of affairs is eminently unsatisfactory.

In connection with the laying of the foundation stone on Saturday of the new concert hall to be erected in Great Portland Street, it is interesting to read the statement that the hall "is already well booked into 1908." Those concerned are certainly to be congratulated on this happy state of things, in view of the fact, which I recently referred to, that all the leading concert agents have pledged themselves not to have anything to do with the hall so long as it remains under the management of the firm at present associated with it. One of the reports of Saturday's ceremony in an esteemed morning contemporary contains, by the way, a delicious howler:—

Dr. W. H. Cummings, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, in inviting the Lord Mayor to lay the stone, said they were standing within a few yards of the place where Faber [!] composed "Oberon."

This reminds one of the undergraduate who wrote in his examination paper with judicial reserve of the writings of Bishop Barclay.

A good many interesting concerts have been given recently. At the Philharmonic concert on Thursday, Mme. Clara Butt was the heroine of the evening, and sang magnificently as usual. New works were also heard—a violin concerto by M. Tivadar Nachez, and a Coronach by Mr. John McEwen—but neither produced a very overwhelming impression. At the Queen's Hall symphony concert on Thursday Mr. Percy Pitt's sinfonietta, first heard at Birmingham, was an interesting feature of the programme. It is a trifle over long, but contains many happy ideas most skilfully treated. Kreisler's superb fiddling was another feature of this concert. Yet another recent orchestral concert of note was that given on the Tuesday previous in honour of the Colonial Premiers, the most memorable feature of which was the magnificent performance of the "Choral" symphony under Nikisch, and with the aid of the Sheffield choir. At the last of the London Ballad Concerts Mme. Clara Butt appeared, and enthusiasm ran high. Next season, as I stated some weeks ago, these concerts will be transferred to the Albert Hall—a somewhat striking departure on the part of Messrs. Boosey. Miss Elena Gerhardt and Mr. David Bispham are other well-known vocalists who have been heard again; Miss Evelyn Suart, who is one of the best of our latter-day native pianists, has given an enjoyable recital, while a word of welcome is due to the Hambourg Quartet, a new chamber music organisation which ought to do well.

The controversy over the question of musical examinations in Australia has, it appears, had a somewhat unfortunate sequel in the shape of threats of legal proceedings on the part of Trinity College, London, in respect of what that institution regards as reflections upon itself uttered in the course of the discussion. The following letter has, I understand, been addressed to Professor Franklin Peterson, Ormond Professor of Music at Melbourne University, and the leader of the "Australia for the Australians" movement, in this matter:—

Abchurch House, Sherborne Lane,
King William Street.
January 18, 1907.

Sir,—We have been consulted by Trinity College of Music, London, the members of its board, and its head officials, with reference to the defamatory statements made by you in a speech delivered in the Town Hall, Melbourne, on April 25 last, at the Conference of University Delegates representative of Australia and New Zealand, when you stated, amongst other matters, that Trinity College of Music was a mere commercial undertaking, owning no responsibility except to its shareholders, and that it came under the Trading Companies law, and had to put "Limited" on all its publications.

As there is not, and was not, the slightest justification for your unwarrantable attack on a great public institution and its members and officials, we are instructed to call upon you to immediately and unconditionally withdraw the statements complained of, and also to publish a full and unqualified retractation and apology (to be settled by us) in such Australian, New Zealand, and London papers as our clients may determine upon, and also to pay the costs and expenses of such respective publications and our clients' costs of and incidental to this application, and of the said retractation and apology

Should you decline . . . . an action for slander will be commenced against you without further notice.

(Signed) Phillips and Cummings.

To this Professor Peterson replied:—

March 13, 1907.

My letter of the 12th September, addressed to Trinity College, London, disclaimed responsibility for the statements in the Age of the date you mention (the letter was duly acknowledged), and on more than one occasion I have publicly denied making any such statements as that Trinity College is a Limited Liability Company, owning no responsibility except to its shareholders, or that it is compelled to put "Limited" on all its publications. I may refer you to, e.g., the Musical News of October 20, 1906.

The history of Trinity College is, of course, well known. As originally constituted, it was, in fact, a limited liability company, and if any remarks similar to those quoted were made in regard to it, they were doubtless uttered by some one who had this circumstance in mind. In 1896 it was reconstituted, and in its present form it is not a limited company. Also it is well known that for many years now it has been doing much useful work. In fact, it is in a position which should enable it to disregard such polemical utterances as those cited, and doubtless after Professor Peterson's explanation the matter will be allowed to drop.

Among forthcoming concerts, quite the most interesting will be the Charles Santley Jubilee Concert at the Albert Hall on Wednesday next. Mr. Santley will be assisted on this occasion by some of the most distinguished artists of the time, vocal and instrumental, as well as the London Symphony Orchestra. During the performance a presentation will be made to Mr. Santley on behalf of the Charles Santley Jubilee Testimonial Fund, of which Lord Kilmorey is the hon. secretary.

May 8 is the date which has now been fixed for the production of Strauss's "Salomé" in Paris at the Châtelet Theatre. There was some difficulty at first, it may be recalled, over the requirements of the Société des Auteurs Dramatiques, one of whose rules forbids its members to take part in any performances of their own works at theatres with which they may be connected as managers or otherwise. The proviso is devised in the interests of authors and to prevent those in authority from utilising their positions to push their own works, but Strauss scented danger in it. As he put it:—

If the society saw fit it could forbid me to direct "Salome" at the Berlin Royal Opera. To be sure, my representative in Paris assures me that these statutes are not to be taken in a strictly literal sense, but as being friendly to the authors. He is not, however, in a position to procure for me a written assertion that this is so from the society, and my good judgment tells me that in a contract which binds my family for fifty years after my death it is not prudent to leave it to the will of the society whether or not they will some day use their legal powers.

From the fact that the performance has now been definitely announced it would seem that the difficulty has been overcome.

Following up previous successes in the same town, the Moody-Manners Opera Company are giving in Sheffield this week another series of special performances for the benefit of local charities. By the amalgamation of two of their companies, an orchestra of sixty and a chorus of nearly one hundred have been obtained, the works to be given consisting of "Aïda," "Lohengrin," "The Flying Dutchman," "Faust," "Tannhäuser," "Madama Butterfly," and "La Bohème"—a selection which could hardly be bettered by Covent Garden. What is so singular concerning opera in the provinces is that whereas some towns take to it with the greatest enthusiasm, in others perhaps not fifty miles distant precisely the opposite condition of things will rule. Thus, Glasgow is, I believe, excellent from the touring companies' point of view, while Edinburgh is hopeless. Each centre seems, in fact, to be a law unto itself in this.

For Mosquito Bites, Wasp or Bee Stings, nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia. Price 1s. per bottle. Beware of imitations.

matter, so that crowded houses at Sheffield may be followed by a dismal frost at Leeds or Bradford. What is the explanation of this curious state of things?

"John Coates has returned from opera in Germany to concerts in England." Thus a recent advertisement. Is there anything more intended by the form of it than meets the eye? Are we invited, that is to say, to note the fact that whereas in Germany this popular singer finds success on the operatic stage, in his native land he is condemned to concerts? I do not know. I only ask for information. Anyhow, there would seem to be no doubt that Mr. Coates has once again found no little favour with his German hearers. Cologne was the place this time, and "Romeo and Juliet" one of the operas. "The way in which he used his voice and made it subservient to the work of art, his acting supported by his heroic and elegant appearance, vocally especially—a high compass, full of brilliance along with the vivacity of his passionate acting—all merit unreserved praise." Thus the Kölnische Zeitung, and if the syntax is doubtful the meaning is not. Mr. Coates may certainly be congratulated on having made such a good impression on his German hearers.

It is a pity that the recent case involving the question of the right to express disapproval of a public performance was not fought out, since thereby we might have obtained an interesting judicial decision on a point of no little interest. Perhaps it has been decided already. If not, it certainly ought to have been. Arguments may be adduced on both sides. In the recent case, counsel for the gentleman who hissed, and thereby got himself ejected, pleaded that, as the management did not object to applause, they had no right to resent demonstrations of the other sort; and the magistrate seemed disposed to take this view, though he eventually suggested a compromise and thereby escaped the responsibility of definitely committing himself. Yet there is certainly room for discussion as to the soundness of this reasoning. Thus the manager might argue that while he took no exception to a form of demonstration which did him no harm, he was not bound on this account to put up with that which tended to injure his business. One may accept a good without recognising a corresponding obligation to withstand a wrong. I imagine, however, that if the case had gone on, the disturber of the peace would have proved his case. Perhaps we are too chary as a rule of exercising our rights in this respect.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—In reading Mr. Lonsdale Ragg's "Dante and his Italy" (1) I recalled the following fine passage from "Froude's History":—

> And now it is all gone—like an unsubstantial pageant faded—and between us and that mediæval age there lies a gulf of mystery which the prose of the historian will never adequately bridge. They cannot come to us, and our imagination can but feebly penetrate to them. Only among the aisles of our cathedrals, only as we gaze upon their silent figures sleeping on their tombs, some faint conceptions float before us of what these men were when they were alive; and perhaps in the sound of church bells, that peculiar creation of mediæval age, which falls upon the ear like the echo of a vanished world."

Dante's "Inferno," e.g., seems to us to-day, so far as its horrors are concerned, as much a nightmare of the imagination as Beckford's "Vathek"; yet Mr. Lonsdale Ragg's learned work suggests to you that when Dante said in a letter, "I found the original of my Hell in the world which we inhabit," he was uttering an unexaggerated truth. In fact, Dante modelled his Inferno upon the ideas of some of the gentlemen he placed there. Take, e.g., Frederic II., whom Dante places in the red-hot tomb of the heretics, and his son-in-law, Ezzelino da Romano, who in the Inferno is immersed up to his coal-black locks in the boiling blood of Phlegethon, both are simply suffering the torments they delighted, when on earth, to inflict. "An eternity of torture," says Mr. Lonsdale Ragg of Ezzelino da Romano, "could not be too much for a man who had burned alive eleven thousand citizens, to the accompaniment of songs and military sports; who had literally blotted out all the noblest and most prosperous families in his dominions, sparing neither age nor sex, and subjecting his victims often to outrage worse than death itself." What an Irish Catholic bishop once said of some heretic, that "hell was not hot enough, nor eternity long enough" to punish the heinousness of his heresy, Dante and his contemporaries, not unnaturally, thought of such wretches as Ezzelino da Romano. Nor was his father-in-law, Frederic, much less diabolical.

> There was a famous diver, named Nicola, who, to please Frederic, performed prodigies of strength and skill in the dangerous waters of the Messina Strait. After a lengthy performance he declared that he had come to the end of his strength. Frederic, for whom he had already fetched up a gold cup thrown into the depths of the whirlpool, promptly sent him again to see him drown. Another story tells of a physiological experiment performed on two of his faithful knights, to whom he first gave an excellent dinner together, and then sent one off for a hard day's hunting, and put the other to rest on soft couches. All this that, by a most inhuman act of vivisection, he might compare the results in each case upon the human digestion!

An even more characteristic product, perhaps, of the age which inspired the Inferno was the Archbishop of Ravenna and Legate in Lombardy, who in his youth was rejected by a Toledo necromancer as too mild to be an apprentice to the Black Art. "You Lombards," he said to the future archbishop, after he had tested him and found him wanting in ferocity, "you Lombards are not made for the Black Art. Leave it to us Spaniards, who have more of the ferocity of the demon about us." The necromancer recommended his would-be apprentice to enter the Church as the milder of the two intermediaries between this world and the other, prophesying for him more success in theology than in necromancy. The Christian mildness of the boy stood him in such good stead that he became Archbishop and Legate, with despotic power over his dependants. How he used this power you can infer from the following instances of its exercise:—

> A servant forgot to put in the salt when the archbishop was starting for a river expedition to his country seat. The culprit was bound with a cord, flung into the water, and dragged all day long at the tail of the barge. Another member of his household he caused to be tied to a large spit and roasted slowly before the fire, while the rest stood weeping for very pity. A third, whom he accused of "wasting his goods," he threw into a dungeon to be devoured by rats. And these are but instances of numerous cruelties exercised by the archbishop on "those who were of his family."

For less offences—for such an offence, e.g., as a false accusation—a man might be, and was, in that age, first flayed alive and then burnt alive! In a word, you have but to read Mr. Lonsdale Ragg's extremely interesting and suggestive picture of life in Italy in Dante's day to understand the poet's pleasure in creating such an Inferno as the most appropriate place for the gentry he consigned to it.

M. R. Huchon's "Mrs. Montagu" (2) is a Frenchman's natural and graceful tribute to a lady who was French in her esprit, and who emulated in London the example set her in Paris by Mmes. du Tencin, du Deffand, and Geoffin, of instituting salons where conversation took the place of card-playing. Mrs. Montagu is always associated in my mind with the peacock hangings of her own salon. She was vain, showy, and shallow, though unquestionably bright and witty. She was thoroughly French in her power of converting the solid meat she found in such critics as Johnson into light and exquisite dishes, and was yet more French in her readiness and wit. Could anything be readier than her witty retort to M. Suard of the French Academy, who said to her, apropos of Voltaire's "most blackguard and abusive in-

(1) "Dante and His Italy." By Lonsdale Ragg B.D. With Twenty-two Illustrations. (London: Methuen and Co. 12s. 6d. net.)

(2) "Mrs. Montagu and Her Friends." By R. Huchon. (London: John Murray. 6s. net.)

(3) "Beside Still Waters." By Arthur Christopher Benson. (London: Smith, Elder, and Co. 7s. 6d. net.)

(4) "Under the Pompadour." A Romance. By E. W. Jennings. (London: T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.)

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi-Metal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

vective against Shakespeare," which she had just listened to, "Je crois, Madame, que vous êtes un peu fachée de ce que vous venez d'entendre." "Moi, Monsieur! Point du tout. Je ne suis pas amie de Monsieur Voltaire." Again, in allusion to Voltaire's plagiarism of Shakespeare, she said, when D'Argental's description of that poet's works—"un enorme fumier"—was quoted to her: "Ce malheureux fumier avait engraissé une terre ingrate." What a contrast between her style at its worst and that of Fanny Burney, from whom M. Huchon quotes the following characteristic description of sweeps:—"Those hapless artificers who perform the most abject offices of any authorised calling, in being the active guardians of our blazing hearths." Fanny delivered herself of this sentence apropos of Mrs. Montagu's last convivial party to chimney-sweeps with which the Queen of the Bluestockings wound up a life of numberless charities and lavish hospitalities.

I have not often read a book with an apter title than Mr. Arthur Christopher Benson's "Beside Still Waters" (3). They are the essays of a man who has been in the mad race and rush of life, has seen its futility, and stepped aside to commune with his own heart in stillness. His communings may not be either practical or profound, but they are delicately and eloquently expressed, and the expression is that of a philosophy which will appeal to an ever-growing audience. Even those condemned to live, and, by a still deeper damnation, compelled to enjoy life in that "dreadful obsession, London," can understand and sympathise with Hugh Neville's problems and perplexities, and even with his solution of them in his discovery of the great secret of happiness: "To be sincere and loving and quiet, that was the ineffable secret; not to scheme for fame or influence, or even for usefulness; to receive as in a channel the strength and sweetness of God." Such is the Quietist moral of these introspective essays, and even those whose lot or even liking has led them to live in a crowd and as the crowd, must feel sufficient dissatisfaction with the result in happiness to make them love to linger if only in thought with Hugh Neville "beside still waters." You are transported far enough from still waters in Mr. Jennings' "Under the Pompadour" (5), which is almost bewildering in the number and variety of its characters and of its incidents. In a word, if you are in a mood for a stirring story of smugglers, highwaymen, press-gangs, intrigues, and treacheries, hair-breadth escapes, and harrowing recaptures, etc., by all means read "Under the Pompadour.'—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely, DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

Mr. Frederic Villiers' "Peaceful Personalities and Warriors Bold" (Harper and Brothers, price 10s. 6d. net) is an eminently entertaining book of reminiscences. In what he describes as his "vagrant wanderings" in different parts of the world during the last thirty years or so, the famous war artist-correspondent has made the acquaintance of a host of distinguished and remarkable men, and gathered a rich store of personal impressions and anecdotes. His recollections of his campaigns since the days of the Russo-Turkish war, in which he began his career, would alone have provided Mr. Villiers with ample materials for a readable book, but peace scarcely less than war has favoured him with varied and interesting experiences. His memoirs are illustrated from his own sketches.

Just now the Empire is so much with us in the newspapers, we are so surfeited with speeches and gorged with leading articles, that I am a little doubtful whether this is an opportune moment for mentioning any book on the same theme. Still, it ought to be, if the Conference is making any real impression on the public mind and bringing about—as we are assured is the case—a more serious study of the questions with which it is concerned. In this connection Mr. Walter Meakin's volume, "The Life of an Empire," recently published by Mr. Fisher Unwin, price 6s., is well worthy of attention. He sketches the growth and present organisation of the British Empire, and discusses the diverse and complicated political and social problems which confront it in different parts of the world, in a manner at once interesting and instructive, though one may not necessarily agree with all his views. In regard to Imperial Federation, for example, Mr. Meakin seems to have an imperfect conception of the difficulties that stand in the way of any possible scheme.

Probably the very title of M. André Siegfried's book, "The Race Question in Canada" (Eveleigh Nash, price 7s. 6d.) will come as a shock to a good many readers here, it is so often assumed that all differences between English and French Canadians have been obliterated and the two races united in one happy family. M. André Siegfried deals with the question from the point of view of a Frenchman, but with an evident desire to be just to the British, whose supremacy in the Dominion is, he admits, assured not only by mere numbers, but by the weight of history, economic forces, and social forces. "Canada will not become French again." In a struggle between two types of civilisation the English has been victorious because, though "commoner and more material," it was incontestably better adapted for the needs of a new country. The author thinks that Canada will remain indefinitely a British colony. Canadians, English and French alike, will not hear of annexation to the United States. "It is not the American nation that menaces the Canadian nation; rather, it is the American form of civilisation that threatens to supplant the British." The book should be read by all who wish to obtain a clear understanding of the political situation and outlook in the Dominion.

One of the most valuable books about our Eastern Empire that has appeared for a long time past is Abdullah Yusuf Ali's "Life and Labour of the People of India" (Murray, price 12s. net). The author, a member of the Indian Civil Service, gives a singularly well-written and interesting description of the life of the people in town and village, their customs and habits, social tendencies, and economic condition, and on the subject of education he has some especially illuminating chapters. The volume is illustrated.

In "The Real Australian" (Fisher Unwin, price 6s.) Mr. Alfred Buchanan attempts "to mirror in some fashion the social life, the literary life, the individual life, the present day life of a developing Continent and four millions of people." Globe-trotting authors have essayed the task after a hurried visit of a few weeks. Mr. Buchanan is not an author of that class, but a resident who writes of Australian characteristics and aspirations with knowledge and insight.

"Merry Garden and Other Stories" is the title of a new volume by "Q." (Mr. A. T. Quiller-Couch) which Messrs. Methuen and Co. are publishing. The same firm announce a cheap edition of Miss G. E. Mitton's "Jane Austen and Her Times," which first appeared a few months ago.

Many readers will remember a beautiful book about country life entitled, "Idlehurst," by John Halsham, which was published several years ago. Mr. Halsham is publishing with Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co. this week a new volume, "Lonewood Corner: A Countryman's Horizon," which may be regarded as a counterpart to "Idlehurst," although it follows its predecessor at a safe distance. There are natural differences in the outlook now and then, and the author has intended his spy-glass to take in a wider sweep of the horizon.

In a handsome volume, price one guinea net, Messrs. Cassell and Co. have published a revised and enlarged edition of Mr. R. Kearton's "British Birds' Nests." One of the new features is a series of fifteen beautiful coloured plates of typical birds' eggs, and there are, in addition, six Rembrandt plates of birds and over 400 half-tone illustrations from photographs taken direct from nature by Messrs. Richard and Cherry Kearton. When it first appeared Dr. Bowdler Sharpe, of the British Museum of Natural History, described this as an epoch-making work, and, in the eleven years which have since elapsed, the Messrs. Kearton have secured a great number of additional photographs of rare birds and nests. The book will interest and delight every student of ornithology.

"A Free Solitude," by Alice Perrin (Chatto and Windus, 2s. 6d. net), is an admirable picture of the corner of life which the author has made peculiarly her own. The solitude is the Siwâla Valley, a paradise for sportsmen lying among the southern spurs of the Himalayas, where Benjamin Wade has settled down to a contented existence. Into the paradise enters a serpent, feminine naturally, to destroy his serenity. Under her influence he is about to end his peaceful and beneficent life when fate intervenes. It is not the happiest intervention possible, but it suffices. Mrs. Perrin has many delightful descriptions of life in the Siwâla Valley, and in particular the picture of the family life of an Eurasian household is brilliantly delineated. But the book is chiefly notable for its atmosphere, the intangible something which is the breath of life to the creations of the novelist's brain.

Mrs. Harold Gorst has chosen to follow up the success of "This Our Sister" with another novel in the same vein. "The Soul of Milly Green" (Cassell, 6s.) is an admirably observed study of fatuous femininity. Milly is the spoilt child of the lower middle class. She has been foolishly brought up by an adoring mother, and marries in haste her cousin Arthur. He is a backboneless person, quite incapable of protecting his girl wife from the temptations to which she is exposed, and to which she eventually succumbs. Step by step her progress is traced downwards, until she drops into the abyss which inevitably awaited her. It is a powerful story, realistic in the best sense of the word, and it makes an indisputable appeal to every one who can appreciate truth in their fiction.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Have you ever noticed how different people look from what one would imagine them to be? The most good-natured, kindly face I know belongs to a man who spent most of his life as governor of a prison. Then there is Quentin, who, if the conventions would only oblige him to wear his hair longer, would look the ideal knight of romance, plus his delightful sense of humour, in which some of the troubadours and cavaliers occasionally seemed lacking. Yet Quentin is the shrewd, long-headed man of affairs, strong of will, though gentle and courteous. Then there is that dear little man, Georgicus, who is the very soul of chivalry, but is belied by an almost grotesque appearance. Were he to look what he is, every one would admire and many love him. As it is, no one gives him a second glance. Yet we who know the soul of him not only admire, but reverence him. Outsiders would never suspect that there was anything beyond the merest commonplace residing within the insignificant frame. This is real tragedy in its way; infinitely pitiful.

The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland are always kind in lending Stafford House for charitable functions, and on May 9 a concert will be held there at 3 p.m. in aid of the Royal Ear Hospital. It is under very distinguished patronage, and the artistes include Miss Margaret Cooper, Mr. John Harrison, Mr. Ivor Foster, and Mr. Charles Capper. Tickets, at a guinea and half a guinea, may be obtained from Stafford House.

Another philanthropic forthcoming event is in connection with the Gordon Hospital in Vauxhall Bridge-road. It is to be a sale of work and other useful articles held in the Hospital itself on Tuesday, June 11. This is under the immediate patronage of Princess Victoria and Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein, the Ranee of Sarawak, the Duchess of Rutland, and many other ladies of exalted position. Money is wanted for the sadly needed renovation of the wards, and it is hoped that the sale may produce a goodly sum. It will be opened by the Ranee of Sarawak, and the two sister Princesses have promised to be present. Lord Buchan, President of the Hospital, is also taking a lively interest in the sale.

When cows first heard that they were to be milked by machinery they must have had a horrid shock. They are not unacquainted with machines. Have they not seen a steam-plough careering round the fields, and breathing noisily the while? They must also have watched the grass being slain by a steam-mower, and these performances could not fail to shake the poor cows to the very soul with an agonised prophetic tremor at the idea of anything so coercive being applied to themselves. I see that in America one of these machines enables the operator to milk two cows at once.

Marvellous country, America! Did you see that an American wife applied for a divorce because she could not stand her husband's jokes? I thought of this the other day when at luncheon we made the acquaintance of a man whose whole conversation was a series of ancient anecdotes and remarks that he evidently intended to be facetious, for he laughed heartily at them himself. At first I thought he was merely imbecile, and wondered why our charming hostess had invited him to join our fairly intelligent circle. But the poor man was endeavouring to be funny and failing every time. It was then that I remembered the American lady and compassionated her plight, for the judge refused her a divorce, remarking that a man cannot be prevented saying stupid things in his own house. But just imagine what it must be to listen to a succession of banalities at every meal from a man who thinks one has no sense of humour if what he calls jokes do not provoke one's laughter. This man that we met seemed one mass of quotations, producing one at regular intervals like minute guns and applying them in a manner meant to be facetious. He was for ever apostrophising his "prophetic soul," and observing that "by the pricking of his thumbs something wicked this way comes" whenever anyone entered the room. You probably know the type. It seems such pure waste to spend half an hour in the company of a man whose spirit is so dilapidated. When we were leaving, my hostess said in a low voice: "I'm afraid Mr. —— has bored you. He's rather silly, but he's very rich, and he is looking for a wife."

I suppose he will find one. A rich man has not often much difficulty in doing so. But just think of what it would be to be married to a package of hackneyed quotations and worn-out old jokes. I really think I should prefer a barrel organ playing all day in the house.

Does your laundress ever lose your things? We had an experience of the kind some time ago, and are rather glad now that it so happened, since it led to our making a change, and discovering a much more satisfactory laundry than we ever had before, the Britannia Hygienic Laundry Company, the works of which are in Gowlett-road, East Dulwich, but it has several branches. Not only do they wash clothes admirably, but they clean or dye costumes, blouses, skirts, dressing gowns, golf capes, feathers, stoles, boas, hats, men's suits and overcoats, and all kinds of curtains, hangings, carpets, etc. Silk, satin, or velvet gowns are dry-cleaned, and the Hygienic Laundry makes a specialty of cleaning officers' dress, undress, and mess uniforms, and also hunting coats, which, as you know, get sadly splashed and stained in bad weather. Even furs are beautifully cleaned by this capital laundry, which also undertakes to repair and re-line them. White or light coloured shoes are cleaned, as well as gloves. This is pretty complete, isn't it? The beauty of it is that with the dry cleaning process it is unnecessary to unpick the garment. I always think that many a gown that would be well worth the cost of being cleaned would never repay the additional expense of being re-made. Don't you?

I almost forgot to say that they clean holland blinds, eiderdown quilts, and tapestry table covers, and glaze

REDFERN.—Exclusive and original Models in Walking, Dinner and Evening Gowns, Theatre Wraps, &c. Paris millinery, lingerie, blouses, &c.—REDFERN, Conduit-street and Bond-street.

"LA SAMOTHRACE"—Every corset of the LONDON CORSET CO., 28, New Bond-street, W., is made in Paris. The very latest models. Not connected with any other establishment.

chintz; all those little etceteras that bother one so every now and then, and which it is such a comfort to send away with the washing on a Monday instead of making into parcels, tying them up, addressing them, and getting the carriers to call for them.

We are going on May 10 to hear a lecture by Mr. Oliver Bainbridge, traveller and explorer, on Native Life and Customs in Southern Seas, illustrated by pictures. It is to be at the Society of Arts, John-street, Adelphi, under the auspices of the Society of Women Journalists. How I wish the owners of the Hall would alter its decorations. The mysterious mural painting that disfigures it at present is unintelligible to most persons, including your cousin Madge. Besides, it is extremely hideous, with all due respect to the Society of Arts.

What a bold spirit has she who ventures to choose a man's tobacco for him! And even bolder still—his ties! I was with Sybilla the other day, when she blithely stepped into a tobacconist's shop and bought cigars as a birthday present for Jack. She spent a couple of sovereigns on them, and I silently wondered what Jack would really think of them. I pondered the question whether, in the event of their turning out his very particular detestation in tobacco, he would sacrifice himself, as a woman probably would, and smoke them. I admit that such a course of conduct is a great mistake. Would it not lead to future presents of a similar kind? And yet what courage would be needed to reveal the truth? "My dear Sybilla, it was most kind and thoughtful of you to buy me these, but I must be honest and tell you I would not smoke them for a kingdom!" Poor Sybilla! She has all the rashness of the newly-married. But time will cure her, with the help of what may be described as a firm and judicious husband. Jack is very good, and very conscious of being very good—in fact, he ought not to be called Jack, but John.

I say again, poor Sybilla!

Among other responsibilities which have to be brought to the door of bridge is that of people having to consume tea full of tannin. Whatever time tea may be served, there are sure to be some players who must just finish the rubber, which often means a matter of a quarter of an hour or more. Result: tannin tea—otherwise slow poison. Now, I do not want to poison my bridge enemies, let alone my bridge friends, and I have been worrying myself how to get over this tannin tea trouble. Ingenuity and invention have come to my aid. Some clever person has invented an anti-tannin teapot. It is quite a lovely invention. The pot is divided into two sections, and the tea-leaves are held suspended, which not only prevents them from stewing, but also prevents them from getting into the spout. The pot, too, pours so beautifully, which is such an advantage when one is "negotiating" for a big party. I am very proud of my Lyceum tea-pot, which is the name given to my newly discovered treasure.

Vanishing London is disappearing so rapidly that we hardly have time to say farewell to our pet bits before they are gone. Mrs. Baillie Saunders, author of the prize novel, "Saints in Society," has collected in a booklet some very interesting recollections of Marylebone during the last fifty years. It is difficult to realise that in 1857 many of the smaller shops were still lighted by candles, and that counters had not only to be set back but hollowed out to leave room for the crinolines! In a draper's shop in Marylebone High-street three ladies so filled the available space that to let one out the other two had to leave the shop! Hertford House was then a quaint white house embowered in trees, to which Louis Philippe fled in 1848 disguised as a sailor. Manchester-street boasted a fine row of elm trees as a boundary to its pavement, and a wooden hustings stood at the end of Portland-place. Mrs. Baillie Saunders tells a delightful story of Gladstone, who, when his house in Harley-street was attacked one Sunday by thousands of working men, who were only driven off by a double line of mounted police, gazed upon the débris of his hall, and wearily remarked that "the mob had broken the Sabbath!"

Useful though we find American colloquialisms, we still use them in inverted commas, and bar them from the serious press. In fact, we use them as slang, but across the Atlantic they are part of the language. In a serious account of a concert in Boston, a paper of that city says "the nub of the concert was the Grieg concerto with Katharine Goodson as the pianist," and goes on to say of her that "the tremendous technique was only a means to an end; back of it were poetry and musicianally (sic) intelligence." These phrases would not be admissible here. By the way, throughout the tour from which Miss Goodson has just returned, the press has sounded a curious note. After exhausting the vocabulary of appreciation, the notices nearly all remark that "her performance was a revelation to many whose preconceived notions of English virtuosi have been formed from the performances of 'favourite' English singers," or "her reception by her associate players showed that her advance heralding was unlike that of some artists from across the sea, where more fancy than fact appeared in the preliminary notices." If this is really so, it is fortunate that Miss Goodson has gone to redeem the musical honour of England.

How we are advancing in the great business of dining and lunching well in London. I do not say that we have an embarras de richesse. This there cannot be in a city of millions, to say nothing of a city of millionaires, as there is room for all who will cater for our requirements in the way of food. Even in the matter of mere feeding every one likes a change, and a change, too, not only in what is actually consumed, but in the surroundings amidst which one consumes it. The surroundings are, in the present day, almost as important as the food, for unless they are agreeable, a good dinner cannot be appreciated—to say nothing of digested, or even enjoyed. I am, therefore, going to give you a hint, which I know you will find valuable, and for which I also know you will thank me. Try the Hotel Dieudonné, in Ryder-street, St. James's, and if you are not more than satisfied—well, I will give you a luncheon at Pearce and Plenty's, as it will be evident that you prefer quantity to quality, the rough-and-ready to the delicately refreshing and refined. M. Guffanti, the energetic proprietor, has just had the whole place redecorated in the best taste, and the food is what it always has been—as good as you can get anywhere. It is a great advantage, for the eye to be at rest and the body comfortable, while the inner man—or woman—is being more than satisfied and gratified. This you will get at Ryder-street, and you need not be a millionaire to enjoy it.

I have received the following from Mona:—

My Dear Madge,—Chrysanthemums in small pots are, as you say, most useful for room decoration—ordinary plants are much too big, except for corners or a few special positions—but you cannot produce them satisfactorily by the means you suggest, which practically amounts to starvation. If you attempt to keep in small pots plants raised from cuttings at the usual time—in December or January—they will still grow, but the growth will be thin and weak, and the flowers will be small and worthless. There are several methods of producing these charming dwarf chrysanthemums. One of the best for the present time is to select plants which have made their first "break," to wait until their shoots are long enough to use as cuttings, and then to strike them in the greenhouse. As soon as they are rooted they should be potted separately, and eventually transferred to six-inch pots. They will need very careful watering during the summer, for, of course, the soil naturally gets dry more quickly in pots of this size than it does in larger ones. Each should be allowed to carry only a single flower at the extremity of the shoot, but with good cultivation it will be large. This method is recommended by one of the leading growers in the kingdom. By another method which you may try later in the year—in August—even smaller plants with large flowers may be obtained in three-inch pots. It involves sacrificing a big plant or two, but that does not matter, as several can be set aside for the purpose. When the buds have been "secured"—a technical expression which means selecting those that are to be left for growing into flowers, and rubbing off all the others—a notch is cut in each stem, about eight inches below the bud on it. The stem is then slit at the notch in the same way as carnations are for layering, and a small pot broken in halves down the middle is fitted round it, supported by being tied to a stick and filled with moist sandy soil. As soon as roots have formed, the stem is severed immediately below the pot. These cuttings make delightful little plants. People who do not know how it is done wonder how they have been grown to carry such large flowers.

"Vivella" (Regd.), the high-class washing material which does not shrink. Useful every minute of the twenty-four hours, For Man, Woman and Child. The Queen says: "'Vivella' has borne the test of years. You can wear it all the year round." To be obtained in latest colourings and designs from the leading Drapers.

Corset Krutoid.—The latest nouveauté Parisien in tricot forms an elegant and smart up-to-date contour and lengthens the waist line.—Write or call at Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., The Royal Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, London.

At the same time, I must confess that we often treat our chrysanthemums in a very unnatural way. If you have read Miss Jekyll's "Wood and Garden," you may remember how she worried the exhibitor of an artificially trained plant, and how he could only say, "Well, they think it a nice variety." "And when I press him further," she goes on, "and say I consider it a very nasty variety, and does he think nasty varieties are better than none, the question is beyond him, and he smiles vaguely and edges away, evidently thinking my conversation perplexing and my company undesirable." There can be no question that while flower shows have their advantages, they are also responsible for much that is wrong in horticulture—for stiffness of form, crudeness of colouring, and especially the craze for size. Unfortunately, the chrysanthemum lends itself readily to such extravagances. Whether, when we got it from the Japanese, we adopted their treatment of it, I do not know, but in their country formality reigns supreme. I have been reading, in the Royal Horticultural Society's Journal, a very interesting article on the subject, by a Japanese writer, Mr. N. Hayashi. Nothing, I gather from it, is left to the individuality of the cultivator; nothing is allowed for the individuality of the plant; every detail is governed by conventional rules, which are as rigid as the laws of the Medes and Persians were. There must be something lacking in Eastern races, something which makes them distrust their powers of initiative, something which causes them to dread exceptions. And in the cultivation of chrysanthemums, no exceptions are permitted; all, according to the method selected, are grown precisely alike. There is the single stem method, similar to our own for exhibition, with one huge flower, but the petals must conform to definite rules as to shape, number, curve, and so forth. These plants attain an extraordinary size, often sixteen or seventeen feet high. But it is in the method called zukuri, or giant plant, that conventionality reaches its extreme limits. The object here is to produce on each plant 1,080 flowers, no more (quite enough, one would think) and no less. This is managed by stopping it first, so as to cause eight shoots to break; each of these is stopped so as to produce three; each of these three, and so on (some of the weaker shoots being left alone towards the end), until at last the right number is obtained. "Staking these shoots," we are told, "requires the most skilled management"—a statement easy to believe. I have not mentioned the rules as to manuring, and so forth, but I have said enough to show that gardening of that pattern might as well be done by a machine. And that is really the criticism which might be applied to many of our own exhibition plants—they look as if they were machine-grown.

It is time that you were making preparations for getting your early-struck chrysanthemums into their flowering pots. The first week in May, or even the second, will be soon enough, but everything should be got ready. For drainage, many of the large growers use old mortar or crushed oyster shells, as the lime which they contain is beneficial to the plants. The finer portion is mixed with the soil, and the coarser put at the bottom of the pots. A mixture of fibrous loam, leaf mould, and coarse sand, with a little crushed charcoal and a sprinkling of any good artificial fertiliser, makes an excellent soil. It should be moist enough to hold together when pressed in the hand, but not so moist that it will not crumble easily, and it should be rammed lightly into the pot with a wooden rammer. This is important, for if the soil is loose the growth is soft and sappy, an unfavourable condition for the production of good flowers. For them, you want short-jointed hard wood. For this reason, too, the plants must have as much light and air as possible. If they are in a cold frame, the glass should now be off all night, as well as all day, unless severe frost threatens. Or they may be stood outside, with a framework of poles round them, so that mats can be hung over them in case of need.—Your affectionate cousin, Mona.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

My Dearest Madge,—Great social quiet reigned here last week, the inevitable reaction after the strenuous Punchestown week. It was just as well that it should be so, for the strenuousness of the weather, in keeping with everything else during the week, left an aftermath which included many aches, pains, and catarrhs, to say nothing of more serious ills of the kind. However, those who are inured to open-air pastimes in woful weather must also further inure themselves to their consequences. We women are such offenders in the matter of bringing evil on ourselves that we ought to have acquired the habit of bearing it with a good grace. How absolutely reckless of consequences most of us are where fashion is concerned. Think of the very ignoble army of martyrs that have been, are, and seemingly always will be, in the cause of the small waist. What suffering and distress are endured in the present, with a certainty in the future of greater evils. One wonders how the idea of an hour glass figure ever caught on with women. It is so much against every ideal of beauty and health. It can hardly be supposed that its gruesome association—a suitable one, too, unfortunately—with Death, had anything to do with the matter. Fred always says, when he notes any of my friends compressed within the limits of seventeen-inch waists, or even less, that they are "waisting away."

The Spring Cattle Show of the Royal Dublin Society, held at Ball's Bridge, made Dublin full last week. Lord Ardilaun, the president of the society, came from the country for the occasion and received the Lord-Lieutenant when he paid a State visit to the show. All the light and leading amongst those who farm were present, and our sex were well represented. Do you not think that the sight of hundreds of fat cattle is enough to make one take to the "simple life"? How horrible to think that these unwieldy-looking beasts are being fattened up for us to eat. There is something so savage and unrefined in the thought of eating meat when it is brought before us so realistically. However, we had horses to look at and jumping competitions in the enclosure, and over here we never tire of the horse in all his circumstances.

Lord Aberdeen left Ireland at the end of the week, going to London for the marriage of his son this week. Lady Aberdeen remains at the Viceregal Lodge, the weather having been too

"When he was at school, Jimmy Moggridge smoked a cane chair and he has since said that from cane to ordinary mixtures was not so noticeable as the change from ordinary mixtures to the Arcadia." The experience of Jimmy Moggridge is repeated every day. Imitations of Craven Mixture come and go—they come because Craven has the largest sale in the world, they go because they can no more compare with the matchless taste and aroma of Craven, than a paper rose can compare with Nature's unmatchable original.

The tobacco of Kings and the tobacco of Princes, the tobacco of men of action and men of thought, the world over—is Craven Mixture. And the reason for this is Craven itself. No tobacco in the world can compare with it. In taste and aroma it stands alone. Craven gives pleasure which none but smokers of Craven can understand—the deep satisfying witchery of the very soul of tobacco.

In every good tobacco shop all over the civilized world you will find Craven Mixture. It is packed in four sizes, in patent vacuumized tins. 2oz. 1/3; ¼lb. 2/6; ½lb. 5/-; 1lb. 10/-.

The quotation is from "My Lady Nicotine," by J. M. Barrie. Craven is Barrie's "Arcadia."

Craven

bad to allow of her going with Lord Aberdeen. Although very well now she has to guard against a return of her illness. How terribly recurrent the chills and colds of this year have been. Lady Liverpool was laid up for a long time at Dublin Castle, and has only lately been able to move to her father's place at Enniskerry for change of air. Lord Liverpool is not as yet going to give up his place of Lord Chamberlain in the Viceregal household. Mr. Birrell has lent him his official residence in the Phœnix Park for a few months, as the Chief Secretary's Parliamentary duties will not allow him to take up his residence there until the end of the session.

Next week the Irish International Exhibition will be opened with much ceremonial by Lord and Lady Aberdeen, who will be accompanied by a large Viceregal suite. It has sailed through troubled waters from the first moment of its inception, for which reason we think it may possibly prove a great success. Things over here, which, like the course of true love, never run smooth, frequently triumph in the end, also like true love. We like a bit of a struggle about most things, it is our way; we rarely miss an opportunity in that direction. And after all, opposition is the best tonic in the world, the greatest stimulant to the energy which leads to success. The weather has been mostly in such a mood of severity during April that we feel justified in nourishing hopes that May will come to us with a smiling face. We expect many visitors to our island from across many waters; on the whole, if there is anything left of us to be discovered we shall, no doubt, be fully found out this year.

The Royal visit will bring many again to Dublin; there is always excitement attendant on the movements of the Kings and Queens, who, even in a democratic age, excite human interest more than any other human beings, however great or gifted, as their position makes them, in a manner, supernatural. The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire are coming to spend some weeks in Ireland, at Lismore Castle, their beautiful place on the Blackwater. Lord and Lady Londonderry are expected to return to Mount Stewart, in Down, about Whitsuntide. Lord and Lady Shaftesbury have been staying at their residence overlooking Belfast and its Lough. Lord Shaftesbury has to do his duties in the northern capital this year as its Lord Mayor. Lord Hemphill has been spending the Easter holidays at his residence in Merrion Square. Lady Plunket, who lately gave birth to a baby in Dublin, will shortly visit her mother, the Dowager Lady Dufferin, at Clandeboye, where Lady Hermione Blackwood is also staying.—Yours ever,

CLARE.

Here are a couple of recipes for you. The first is potted veal:—

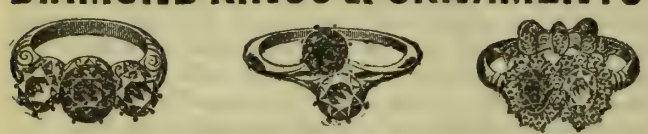
Use any veal that has been nicely cooked, beat it into a paste with a little butter. Season it with pepper, salt, and grated nutmeg, then add a little rasped cooked ham. Press it down into pots, and cover it over with clarified butter.

The other, petits pains de Merlan à la Riviera:—

Pound 8 oz. of the scraped flesh of whiting, adding 2 oz. of butter, 2 oz. of cold bread sauce, a spoonful of cold white sauce, the yolks of two, and one whole egg, and salt and pepper to season; pass it through a fine wire sieve into a basin, and work in half a gill of very thick cream. Fill six or 8 dariole moulds, previously buttered and decorated with truffle, and, with a teaspoon dipped in hot water, press the centre to form a cavity, which fill with chopped lobster or shrimps, mixed with a little sauce and the yolk of an egg; cover all with the remainder of the farce, twist a buttered paper over them, and steam them for half an hour, without allowing them to boil. Turn them out on a hot dish, garnish the centre with shrimps, scallops of truffle, and mushrooms dressed in a little sauce, pour the remainder of the sauce round.

Ever your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMOND RINGS & ORNAMENTS



Finest Quality, below Store and usual West End Prices.

SPINK & SON, LTD.,

DIAMOND AND PEARL MERCHANTS,

17 & 18, PICCADILLY, W., and 30, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C. Est. 1772.

TYPEWRITERS

Typewriters bought, sold, exchanged, repaired, or lent on hire at half makers' prices. Sent on approval. MS. copied.

TAYLOR'S, Ltd.,
74, Chancery Lane, LONDON.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

SICKNESS, EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY, BURGLARY & FIDELITY GUARANTEE RISKS

INSURED AGAINST BY THE

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

CAPITAL (fully subscribed) £1,000,000. CLAIMS PAID £5,000,000.

64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

APPEAL.

CITY OF LONDON TRUSS SOCIETY

For the Relief of the Ruptured Poor throughout the Kingdom.

ESTABLISHED 1807.

Patron: His Majesty the King.

Vice-Patron: H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G.

This Charity, which relieves nearly 10,000 Patients annually, celebrates its Centenary this year, and the Committee earnestly APPEAL for £5,000 to enable them to pay off the Loans from the Society's Bankers, and to continue the good work which has been carried on for the last 100 years. SUBSCRIPTIONS, DONATIONS, and BEQUESTS will be thankfully received at the Institution by 35, Finsbury-square, E.C. W. K. TAUNTON, Secretary.

STERILE MARRIAGE: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. By a late Senior Physician to a Hospital for Women. A new Edition just published. Post free, 3s. 9d.
London: Shelley & Co., Limited, 38, Gracechurch-street.

TATTERSALLS.

Messrs. Tattersall beg to give NOTICE that their Thursday Sales have commenced and will be continued during the Season.
Sales every Monday and Thursday.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS, sent gratis, with full particulars, Schools also recommended. Medical &c., Association, Ltd., 22, Craven-street, Trafalgar-sq., W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 Gerrard.

KENSINGTON PALACE GARDENS.

TWO LARGE detached TOWN MANSIONS, just erected, and known as "ARUNDEL" and "ESTCOURT," to be SOLD (Crown lease), or would be LET on LEASE. For particulars apply—

Holloway Bros., 43, South Audley-st., Grosvenor-sq., W

SOUTH KENSINGTON HOTEL

Noted for its Comfort and Convenience. QUEEN'S GATE TERRACE, S.W. One of the most fashionable Hotels in London.
Telephone No. 573 Kensington. Telegrams—"South Kensington Hotel, London."

WHITE AND SOUND TEETH

Insured to those who use

ROWLANDS' ODONTO

A pure fragrant dentifrice which arrests and

Prevents Decay.

Sweetens the breath and hardens the gums.

Sold by Stores, Chemists, and A. ROWLAND & SONS, Hatton Garden, London

THE CYCLE WITH A NAME

and reputation, guaranteeing its future behaviour and its owner's comfort and ease, is after all

THE BEST INVESTMENT.

For upwards of 30 years

OUR FAMOUS

Singer CYCLES

have been giving unlimited satisfaction in every corner of the globe, yet the price is no more than much of the comparative rubbish. The "Singer" perfect oil bath case makes cycling a luxury.

— LISTS FREE. —

Dept. T, SINGER & CO., Ltd., COVENTRY.

You cannot possibly have a better Cocoa than

EPPS'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

COCOA

You will find it the very Cocoa you want.

ENGINEERING.
A limited number of PREMIUM PUPILS are received at the LOUGHBOROUGH WORKS of the BRUSH ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING COMPANY, LIMITED, as an introduction to professional employment with associated companies at home and abroad. Pamphlets describing two courses—
(a) ELECTRICAL AND MECHANICAL ENGINEERING;
(b) TRACTION ENGINEERING (STEAM, PETROL, and ELECTRIC)—
will be sent on application to Colonel HILTON, Superintendent of Pupils, Falcon Works, Loughborough.

DIRECTORS.
Lord Vaux of Harrowden, G. F. M. Cornwallis West, C. S. B. Hilton, W. L. Madgen.

COUNTRY HOUSE AGENTS' LIST.

BRIGHTON & HOVE.—A. F. GRAVES, Auctioneer and Estate Agent, 9, North-street-quadrant, BRIGHTON. For particulars of all houses to be LET or SOLD, apply as above.

BOURNEMOUTH.—JOLLIFFE & FLINT, Estate and House Agents. Lists of Furnished and Unfurnished Houses for Sale or Let, free by post.—Offices, 1 Arcade, Bournemouth.

COWES.—MESSRS. MARVINS, Princes Buildings. Agency for Sale, Purchase, or Charter of Yachts. Also House and Estate Agency for Isle of Wight. Established 1868 and patronised by Royalty

EASTBOURNE HOUSES.—MESSRS. LAKE & CROWDER, Auctioneers, Surveyors, and Valuers, opposite the railway station. Telephone 8, Y. Agents for all the principal furnished and unfurnished houses.

OXFORD and READING.—HAMLET & DULAKE, Estate Agents, Auctioneers, Valuers, and Surveyors. Illustrated property list and all information gratis to applicants.

IMPORTANT TO LADIES:

You can get the real genuine

Horrockses'

Longcloths

and

Flannelettes

if you insist on seeing this stamp on the selvedge:

"HORROCKSES."

Obtainable from the Principal Drapers.

Established 1791.

Nothing comparable elsewhere

THE IMMENSE FURNISHING BUSINESS OF MAPLE & CO THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD (FOUNDED BY THE LATE JOHN MAPLE IN THE EARLY FORTIES) HAS BEEN BUILT UP ON A

SOUND COMMERCIAL BASIS

¶ Manufacturers always give Maple & Co the first choice of their productions because they pay prompt cash and are thus able to give their patrons the widest range and best specimens at prices quite different from those quoted elsewhere

1,350,000 SQ. FT. OF FLOOR SPACE

MAPLE & CO

LONDON BUENOS AIRES PARIS

"By reading one may entertain himself."—ISAAC BARROW.

Messrs. METHUEN call attention to their Spring Novels, which include books by Richard Bagot, John Oxenham, Jack London, W. B. Maxwell, Mrs. Sidgwick, and Mary E. Mann. Kindly ask for these at all libraries.

Also ask at your bookseller's to see Messrs. METHUEN'S new books on general literature, and send for their very interesting Announcement List, which is full of illustrations.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Please note that a new book by W. B. MAXWELL is now ready.

ODD LENGTHS.

Messrs. METHUEN are also republishing by the same brilliant author a novel, practically unknown:

THE COUNTESS OF MAYBURY.

On April 25 will be issued a new Volume of Stories by "Q," entitled:

MERRY GARDEN. 6s.

TWO NEW BOOKS.

LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU. By GEORGE PASTON. With 24 Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

This Memoir of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu is based upon her published and unpublished correspondence, but the chief events of her life are illustrated by references in contemporary works. This book is remarkably rich in unpublished letters.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE. By ARCHIBALD WEIR, M.A. Cr., 6s.

This book reviews in their logical connection the chief groups of events, both political and otherwise, which together formed the groundwork of European history in the Nineteenth Century.

SECOND EDITION.

THE LONG ROAD. By JOHN OXENHAM. 6s.

"No more attractive novel has come from the writer's pen."—SCOTSMAN.
"Its literary merit is of rare excellence."—WORLD.
"A fine love story."—MORNING LEADER.

SECOND EDITION.

BEHOLD THE DAYS COME. By the Hon. and Rev. JAMES ADDERLEY, Author of "Stephen Remarx." 3s. 6d.

"In purpose, spirit, and execution it is admirable."—The Rev. R. J. CAMPBELL.
"A remarkable book, close packed with thought."—BIRMINGHAM POST.

Methuen's Popular Novels
SIX SHILLINGS EACH

TEMPTATION	Richard Bagot
THE LONG ROAD	John Oxenham
THE COUNTESS OF MAYBURY	W. B. Maxwell
ODD LENGTHS	W. B. Maxwell
A HUMAN TRINITY	Ronald MacDonald
WHITE FANG	Jack London
BEHOLD THE DAYS COME (3s. 6d.)	Hon. and Rev. James Adderley
THE KINSMAN	Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick
DISCIPLES	Mary Crosbie
STEPPING WESTWARD	M. E. Francis
THE MEMORIES OF RONALD LOVE	M. E. Mann
A WILDERNESS WINNER	E. A. Barnett
THE OTHER PAWN	Mary Deane
THE PLOW-WOMAN	Eleanor Gates

Please ask for METHUEN'S SIXPENNY BOOKS everywhere. The new one is A METAMORPHOSIS, by RICHARD MARSH.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex-street, London, W.C.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

WINDOVER TALES.
By HALLIWELL SUTCLIFFE,
Author of "Under the White Cockade," "Rycroft of Withens," "A Bachelor in Arcady," &c. [Ready to-morrow.

THE PRINCE'S VALET.
By JOHN BARNETT.
The Daily Graphic says: "Full of adventure, both amatory and warlike."

POISON ISLAND.
Second Impression.
By A. T. QUILLER-COUCH ('Q').
Truth says: "There is enough thrilling adventure in 'Poison Island' to satisfy the boy, and enough of 'Q' to delight the man."

BESIDE STILL WATERS.
Second Impression.
By A. C. BENSON,
Author of "From a College Window," &c. 7s. 6d. net.
The Morning Post says: "This is a book to be read, not only for its incidental beauties, but also for a very striking picture of the beauty of refinement, both moral and spiritual."

LONEWOOD CORNER:
A Countryman's Horizons.
By JOHN HALSHAM,
Author of "Idlehurst." Crown 8vo, 5s. net.
[Ready to-morrow.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

FOR MAY. PRICE ONE SHILLING. CONTENTS:

FRÄULEIN SCHMIDT AND MR. ANSTRUTHER. Letters LIX.-LXIII. By the Author of "Elizabeth and her German Garden."
THE MAY MORNING AND THE OLD MAN. By MARGARET L. WOODS.
THE PROBLEM OF THE FLYING MACHINE. By Professor G. H. BRYAN, F.R.S.
THE COUNTESS OF PICPUS. Chaps. IV.-VI. By MAURICE HEWLETT.
BOYS AND BIRDS. By HORACE G. HUTCHINSON.
THE GROWTH OF A MILITARY SPIRIT IN CHINA. By Major CLARENCE DALRYMPLE BRUCE.
THE RISE OF INSURANCE. By HARTLEY WITHERS.
THE ROMANCE OF A BOOKSELLER By KATHARINE TYNAN.
A GREAT DARWINIAN AND HIS FRIENDS. By LEONARD HUXLEY.
THE BROKEN ROAD. Chaps. XIII.-XV. By A. E. W. MASON, M.P.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place, S.W.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—NEW SERIES.

SHAKESPEARE
By WALTER RALEIGH. 2s. net.

JOHN GLYNN
By ARTHUR PATERSON. 6s.

Sir. F. C. BURNAND writes to the Publishers:—"Powerfully written; honest straightforward masculine English characters. . . . The two sensation scenes are perfect: vividly descriptive and the dramatic action moving with the rapidity of thought. . . . 'Tis all excellent.'

F. C. Selous.	A HUNTER'S WANDERINGS IN AFRICA. Illustrated. Fifth and Cheaper Edition. 7s. 6d. net.
Owen Wister.	HOW DOTH THE SIMPLE SPELLING-BEE. Illustrated. 2s. 6d. net.
Edith Wharton.	MADAME DE TREYMES. 2s. 6d. net.
S. R. Lysaght.	ONE OF THE GRENVILLES. Cheaper Impression. 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., Ltd., London.

Price 7s. 6d. net.

THE CURE OF CANCER
and HOW SURGERY BLOCKS THE WAY.
By JOHN SHAW, M.D.Lond.,
Author of "Fibroid Tumour . . . a new treatment without operation"
(2s. 6d. net, post free 2s. 10d.).
The work demonstrates the curability of cancer without operation and the greatly increased mortality coincident with modern operative methods.
London: F. S. TURNEY, 22, Paternoster-row.

From One Man's Hand to Another

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has an exceptionally strong list of novels for summer reading. The first is a new volume in the "First Novel Library," "From One Man's Hand to Another," by G. H. Breda. The book is a poignant study of a woman's tragedy.

At all Booksellers'. Price 6s.

THE WOMAN

Fogazzaro's most powerful novel is "The Woman." While it is marked by many of the characteristic qualities of "The Saint," it represents a different phase of Fogazzaro's art, and therein lies the secret of its great popularity. The fourth large impression is now ready. Published by T. Fisher Unwin.

Price 6s.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE SECRETS OF THE VATICAN.

The only Complete Account of the Papal Palace in English, with an Account of the Papal System and the Organisation of the Vatican Hierarchy.
With 60 Illustrations, reproduced from Photographs and Old Prints.
By DOUGLAS SLADEN,
Author of "In Sicily," "Queer Things about Japan," &c.
Royal 8vo, 21s. net.
Detailed Prospectus on application.

Next week will be published

NEEDLES AND PINS.

A Sequel to "If I were King."
By JUSTIN HUNTLY McCARTHY,
Author of "The Flower of France," &c. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

ON THE 27TH INST.
NEW VOLUME OF STORIES
By W. W. JACOBS.

SHORT CRUISES.

With 38 Illustrations and a Cover Design by WILL OWEN.
Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

Three Editions Exhausted, Fourth Edition Now Ready.

INDISCREET LETTERS FROM PEKING.

Edited by B. L. PUTNAM WEALE,
Author of "Manchu and Muscovite," &c. 1 vol., Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE HORSE: Its Selection and Purchase.

Together with the Law of Warranty, Sale, &c.
By F. T. BARTON, M.R.C.V.S., Author of "Our Friend the Horse," &c., &c.
With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

A ROCK IN THE BALTIC. By ROBERT BARR. 6s. [Ready.
A GALLANT OF GASCONY. Romance of Margaret de Valois. By PHILIP L. STEVENSON. 6s. [Ready.
COLONEL DAVERON. By PERCY WHITE. 6s. [Shortly.
DEAD LOVE HAS CHAINS. By MISS BRADDON. 3s. 6d. [Shortly.
THE STRONGEST OF ALL THINGS. By MADAME ALBANESI. 6s. [Shortly.
THE PASSING OF THE THIRD FLOOR BACK. By JEROME K. JEROME. 2s. 6d. [Shortly.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 182, High Holborn, W.C.

GREENING'S LATEST NOVELS.

The name of GREENING on a Novel signifies that the book is of vital human interest.

A Stirring Romance of the time of Louis XIV.

A DRAGOON'S WIFE.

By E. PERRONET THOMPSON. 6s.

Daily Graphic.—"All students of history and most other people have heard of the terrible 'Dragonades' of Louis XIV when the unfortunate Protestants were delivered over to tortures by troops of Dragoons. In this forcible novel the horrors of the period are not brought into unnecessary prominence."

The Academy.—"The book is carefully and conscientiously written and gives a good picture of France in the seventeenth century."

The Scotsman.—"An animated vigorous romance, it cannot but have a hearty welcome from readers who want their interest in Fenelon and the religious history of his day stimulated by attractive and accomplished literary arts."

A DRAGOON'S WIFE.

DINEVAH THE BEAUTIFUL.

A Modern Romance. By ELLIOTT O'DONNELL. 6s.

Tribune says: "The colour and passion of the Arab country are well described. The character-drawing is also good."

Eastern Morning News.—"There is no lack of thrilling adventures in the volume."

A THRILLING NOVEL.

THE GOLD WORSHIPPERS.

By J. B. HARRIS BURLAND,
Author of "The Financier," &c. 6s.

THE LOAFER.

By GURNER GILLMAN. 6s.

A SON OF HELVETIA.

By ALINE WAKLEY. 6s.

AND THE MOOR GAVE UP ITS DEAD.

By ERIC HARRISON. 6s.

GREENING & CO., LTD., 51, Charing Cross Mansions, W.C.

- - THE - -

INVESTMENT of TRUST FUNDS

Popular Publication, price 2/6.

By HENRY LOWENFELD.

Revised as to Statements of Law by E. A. SCRATCHLEY, Barrister-at-Law.

Page 87 states:—"You will not only lighten the "labour of your Trustees, but you will also "ensure the maximum benefit for those for "whom you are providing."

(Briefly stated, this is the object of this book.)

Of all Booksellers, or from the Publishers of the

"FINANCIAL REVIEW OF REVIEWS,"

2, Waterloo Place, London, S.W.

Price 1/- NOW READY. By Post, 1/3

The Thirteenth Series of

QUEER STORIES

from "TRUTH."

PERMANENTLY ENLARGED.

This volume has a blue wrapper printed in red to distinguish it from the twelve previous issues.

Can be obtained at all Booksellers' and Bookstalls.

"TRUTH OFFICE," 10, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

TRUTH FOREIGN HOTEL LIST & CONTINENTAL GUIDE.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.—GRAND HOTEL HENRION CORNELIUSBAD. The Leading English house.

ALASSIO.—GRAND HOTEL, Alassio. The leading first-class house in the finest position. Electric Elevator.—A. MARSON, Prop.

ALASSIO.—HOTEL MEDITERRANÉE. Large garden. Sea view. Sheltered position. Auto. Garage. Moderate charges.—E. BOGLEOLE, Prop.

ALASSIO.—THE SALISBURY. Proprietor, Mr. JOHN CONGREVE.

BADEN-BADEN—HOTEL REGINA. Latest creation. The most up-to-date, elevated position.—J. LIPPERT, Proprietor.

BADEN-BADEN.—HOTEL STEPHANIE. Allee of Lichtenthal. The leading Hotel.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL BRISTOL AND DÉPENDENCE. First-class. Facing baths and Sprudel. Occupying finest position.

BAD NAUHEIM.—HOTEL PRINCE OF WALES. HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL EULER. First-class. Close to Central Railway. Situated in a quiet position.—Prop. A. S. BUCHER.

BÂLE.—GD. HOTEL VICTORIA and NATIONAL. Opp. central Stn. First-class. Private apartments with bath.—Pr., PAUL OTTO.

BÂLE.—GRAND HOTEL DE L'UNIVERS. Leading hotel. Suites of rooms with private baths.

BORDIGHERA. — HOTEL ANGST. Leading hotel. Patronised by English Society. Luxuriously furnished. English sanitation.—Proprietor, ADOLFO ANGST.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL ROYAL. High-class hotel. Full South. The most fashionable house. Garden.—L. PALOMBI, Prop.

BORDIGHERA.—HOTEL BELVEDERE LOMBARDI. The favourite English hotel.—Prop., G. WUNSCHMAUN. Madame is English.

BRUSSELS.—HOTEL DE L'EUROPE. Suites with private bath. Central heating.

CANNES.—ROST'S CONTINENTAL HOTEL. One of the finest hotels on the Riviera. Unrivalled Sea view.—Prop., H. ROST.

CANNES.—GRAND HOTEL DE PROVENCE. First-class, quiet and select quarter. Large gardens. English house.

CHEMIST. — GINNER & CO., Court Chemists. The English Pharmacy, 40, Rue d'Antibes, Cannes. Tel. 527.

CAPRI.—GRAND HOTEL QUISISANA. The leading first-class hotel. Every modern comfort.

CHATEAUX D'OEX. — GRAND and BERTHOD. 3,300 ft. Switzerland. Summer and Winter Sports.

COLOGNE.—HOTEL DISCH. The leading hotel in the town.

DAVOS-PLATZ. — GRAND HOTEL BELVEDERE. First-class.

DAVOS-PLATZ.—HOTEL VICTORIA. Favourite English House.

DRESDEN. — HOTEL BELLEVUE. — World-renowned. Very select. Situated on the Elbe and Opera Square. Suites and single rooms with private baths and toilet. Under the personal management of R. RONNEFELD.

EMS.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class.

EMS.—HOTEL FOUR SEASONS AND EUROPE. HOTEL FOUR TOWERS. First-class.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL MINERVA. Quiet and central. Patronised by English and Americans.—G. CANDRION, Proprietor.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL REGINA ET VICTORIA. First-class. Every modern comfort. Lately improved and redecorated. Full south.—Proprietor, CHIARI.

FLORENCE.—HOTEL ROYAL GRANDE BRETAGNE. First-class. Full south. Open all the year.—CHIOSTRI, Props.

GENOA.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Apartments, with bath. Quiet rooms, garden on the fourth floor, splendid panorama.

GENOA.—GRAND HOTEL ISOTTA. Best central situation. All modern improvements. Hot water heating.—E. MOSER, Dir.

GLION, above Montreux, Swiss.—NEW PARK HOTEL. First-class. Best situation. Own park. Open whole year. Winter sports.

HOMBURG (BATH).—RITTER'S PARK HOTEL. The leading hotel. Patronised by English and American Society.—Proprietor, C. RITTER.

HOMBURG (BATH).—VICTORIA HOTEL. Very first-class in every respect. The largest, also 4 villas. Finest garden.—J. BAEHL, Pr.

HOMBURG (BATH).—THE GRAND HOTEL. Suites with private bath and lavatory. All comforts.

HOMBURG (BATH).—HOTEL BELLEVUE. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Vacuum cleaning indoors. W. FISCHER, Prop.

KISSINGEN (BAD). — HOTEL VICTORIA and KAISERHOF. The leading English house.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU-SITE & RICHMOND. Motor garage. Leading hotels. Best situation. Open whole year.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL DE LAUSANNE. First-class. Facing railway station. Latest comforts.—AD. SCHAER, Prop.

LAUSANNE.—HOTEL BEAU SEJOUR. First-class family home. All latest comforts. Fine situation. Large garden.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL EUROPE. First-class. Finest situation. Very quiet. Entirely renovated. Latest improvements.—HAGEN BROS., Proprietors.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BRISTOL. Open from March 4. In the vicinity of Station and landing boats.—G. MUTH, Proprietor.

LUCERNE.—HOTEL BEAU RIVAGE. First-class family house. Write for illustrated pamphlet.—C. GIGER, Proprietor.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BELLEVUE AU LAC. First-class. Large dining-room, separate tables. Modern improvements.

LUGANO.—GRAND HOTEL METROPOLE. New hotel, unrivalled position, with latest improvements. The Hotel faces the English Church.—Proprietor, A. BROCCA, of Hotel Lugano.

LUGANO.—HOTEL BEAU REGARD & CONTINENTAL. First-class, beautifully situated in its own grounds. Nr. English church

MENTONE.—RIVIERA PALACE. Suites with private baths. 300 rooms.

MENTONE.—BEAU RIVAGE. First-class hotel at moderate prices. Full south, facing sea.—KASPAR TREPP, Proprietor.

MENTONE.—HOTEL DE TURIN. Central position, full south. Large garden. Modern comfort.—J. WARTH, Proprietor.

MILAN.—HOTEL DE LA VILLE. First-class. Near Cathedral. Post, Teleg., & Rly. Office in hotel. Central heating. Suites with baths.

MONTE CARLO.—GRAND HOTEL DE LONDRES. Opposite Casino. Modern comfort. Reasonable terms. Always open.—Manager, J. KAISER.

MONTE CARLO.—HOTEL DU HELDER. Modern comfort. Central heating. Situated close to Casino.—A. BREMOND, Prop.

MONTREUX.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. First-class. Patronised by English and Americans. Unrivalled situation and comforts.

MUNICH.—THE CONTINENTAL. Leading HOTEL and RESTAURANT. Entirely renewed and enlarged.

MUNICH.—HOTEL ENGLISCHERHOF. A good English house.—CARL POSCH, Proprietor.

NAPLES.—GRAND HOTEL. First-class. Situated in the finest and most select part of Naples. Magnificent view of town, Vesuvius, and bay. Proprietors, HAUSER & DOEPFNER.

NAPLES.—PARKER'S HOTEL. The English and most comfortable, in best situation. Splendid view of bay.

NAPLES. — GD. HOTEL DU VESUVE. Splendid position. Strictly first-class. Latest comfort.

NAPLES.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Recommended for its cuisine, position, and comfort.

NAPLES.—ELDORADO MODERN HOTEL. Good central situation. Moderate terms. Overlooking the Gulf.

NICE — GD. HOTEL DES ILES BRITANNIQUES. First-class, moderate terms.—Proprietor, ZAMBAIL. Summer, Hotel Roseg-Pontresina, Engadine.

NICE, Cimiez.—WINTER PALACE. One of the finest and most comfortable hotels in Europe.—J. AGID, Director.

OSTEND.—HOTEL DU LITTORAL. First-class family hotel. Facing sea, nearest the Kursaal.—Props., HILLBRAND & BROWN.

PALERMO.—EXCELSIOR PALACE HOTEL. New. Leading hotel. Opened February, 1906.

PARIS.—HOTEL CONTINENTAL. Most luxurious and comfortable hotel in Paris. Entirely renovated.—A. LOTTI, Gen. Mgr.

PARIS.—HOTEL St. JAMES and ALBANY, opposite Tuileries. Favourite rendezvous of English and Americans.—Proprietor-Manager, A. LERCHE.

PARIS.—MERCEDES HOTEL, Place de l'Etoile. Most modern hotel in Paris. Opened April, 1904. Luxuriously furnished.

PARIS.—HOTEL MONTANA, Avenue de l'Opéra. First-class. Latest and all modern improvements.—G. VAUTIER, Prop.

PARIS.—HOTEL DE L'ATHENÉE, Rue Scribe. One of the leading hotels.—E. AMBRUSTER, Manager-Proprietor.

PISA.—GRAND HOTEL and HOTEL DE LONDRES. The only hotel with central heating in Pisa.

FOREIGN HOTELS, &c.—contd.

PONTRESINA.—HOTEL KRONENHOF & BELLA-VISTA. First-class. Best situation. Open whole year. Summer and Winter resort.

RAPALLO.—VERDI'S HOTEL. Favourite English house. Charmingly situated. Electric light. Modern comfort.

ROME—HOTEL QUIRINAL. First-class. Situated on famous Via Nazionale, in finest part of Rome. Every modern comfort.

ROME.—REGINA HOTEL. New. Opposite Queen Margherita's Palace. One of the leading.—Managing Prop., E. BARBIANI.

ROME.—PALACE HOTEL. New. Up-to-date.
BEAUSITE HOTEL. First-class family house.

ROME.—WINDSOR HOTEL. Full south, via Veneto. Suites of apartments. Baths. Cent. heat., mod. comf.—CASTELLI & LANTENAY.

ROME.—HOTEL ROYAL.
The English House.

ROME—SAVOY HOTEL. First-class family hotel near the gardens.—Proprietor, J. LENGYEL.

SAN REMO.—GRAND HOTEL BELLEVUE. The most fashionable, of renowned reputation.—JULES LIPPERT, Proprietor.

ST. MORITZ.—THE BELVEDERE. English Family Hotel. Preferred position amongst the villas. Inclusive terms, Fr. 11 to 18.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ENGADINER KULM. Baths with suites and rooms. Golf, tennis, and all the winter sports.

ST. MORITZ.—PALACE HOTEL, the most fashionable. Proprietor, CASPAR BADRUTT'S ERBEN.

ST. MORITZ.—HOTEL ST. PETERSBURG. Family hotel. Sunniest position, adjoining Kulm and all the Sport places. Inclusive terms, 10 to 16 fr.

TERRITET, Switzerland.—GRAND HOTEL & ALPES. Well-known rendezvous of English and American clientèle.

TERRITET.—GRAND HOTEL BON-PORT. Favourite English house. Apartments with baths. Most sheltered situation.

VEVEY.—GRAND HOTEL and PALACE HOTEL. The Fashionable Hotels. Two tennis courts.—ENG. MICHEL.

VEVEY.—HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE. First-class. 120 rooms. Very latest improvements. Bath with private suite.—Proprietor, T. WHITE.

VEVEY.—Healthiest Swiss resort.—TROIS COURONNES HOTEL. First-class. Modern improvements. Most moderate term.

WIESBADEN.—FOUR SEASONS HOTEL and BATHS.—Finest position, opposite Kurhaus and Opera. Own mineral spring.

WIESBADEN.—HOTEL NASSAU. Connected with a Magnificent Bathing Establishment. Situated at the Curplace. "The English Home."

WIESBADEN.—PALAST HOTEL. Kochbrunnen Bath establishment. Rooms with private bath. First-class, up-to-date.

in the Patent

"Anti-Tannin"

LYCEUM TEAPOT

The objections attaching to the use of tea have been overcome in such a simple manner that every household should possess one.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES.

Tea can be perfectly made, not a single leaf finding its way into the cup.
Tea of full strength and without tannin.
The last cup of tea the same strength as the first.
No stewing of tea-leaves. Requires less tea.
No strainer to get choked. Best for palate and health.
Recommended by Doctors as ideal for Invalids.

OF ALL CHINA DEALERS, STORES, &c., or send postcard for fully illustrated List explaining the principle.

Sample Teapot in SILICON CHINA post free on receipt of stamps for 2/6.

THE LYCEUM TEAPOT COMPANY, Tyrrel St., Bradford, Yorks.

FOREIGN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

BEAULIEU.—HOUSES & ESTATES. E. KURZ. (Opposite Station.) Villas furnished, to be let or sold.

TRUTH HOTEL LIST.

AYR.—STATION HOTEL, adjoining station. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards. For Business Gentlemen, Families, and Tourists to "The Land of 'Burns,'" and Ayrshire district. Within few minutes' walk of sea shore. Convenient Golf Courses. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Dumfries, and Turnberry.

BELFAST.—GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL.—The Finest Hotel in Ireland. 200 rooms. Electric light throughout. Passenger lifts to all floors. Magnificent public rooms and suites of private apartments. Most central position. Very moderate tariff. Omnibuses from Hotel attend all steamers and trains. Telegrams, "Grand Central, Belfast."

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Finest position on front.
Splendid public rooms. Orchestra twice daily.
Tepid sea-water Swimming Bath. Garage communicating with the Hotel.
Private suites, with bathrooms. Write for Illustrated Brochure.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—ROYAL CRESCENT HOTEL, MARINE PARADE. High Class, for Families and Gentlemen. Finest Position in Brighton for health and quiet. Sea view from nearly all rooms. Electric lighting throughout. Telephone, No. 1403. Telegrams—"Crescent Hotel, Brighton." Under personal supervision of GEORGE LOGAN, Proprietor.

DUBLIN.—HOTEL METROPOLE, SACKVILLE-STREET (next General Post Office). Convenient for Railways, Steamers, and Amusements. Modern and luxurious. Electric Light and Passenger Lift. Sanitation officially certified. High-class Restaurant attached. Moderate Tariff. Descriptive matter on application to the Manager.

DUMFRIES.—STATION HOTEL, opposite station. Electric light. Lift. Billiards. Convenient for Firth of Solway, Castle Douglas, Sweetheart Abbey, Caerlaverock Castle, &c. Lovely Drives. Splendid centre for motor and cycle tours. Shooting. Fishing. Golf. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Turnberry.

EASTBOURNE.—The HYDRO HOTEL, a Select Residential Hotel, due south, facing sea. Spacious Lounges and Public Rooms. Garage. Special Week End Terms. Cinderella Dance Saturday. For Amusement Programme and Tariff (Illustrated), O. F. BERGANN, Manager.

GLASGOW.—ST. ENOCH STATION HOTEL. Best centre for business and pleasure. Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (4 tables). Restaurant. Within shilling cab fare of all railway and steamboat termini in Glasgow. Near electric cars and opposite subway cable railways. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Ayr, Dumfries, and Turnberry.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER, & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

MALVERN.—The IMPERIAL HOTEL (only 2½ hours from Paddington) facing due S., offers every comfort at moderate and inclusive charges. A cheerful lounge, with electric light. Central for Croome and Ledbury Hounds, loose boxes, hunters. Accommodation for Motors.—For tariff apply to Resid. Prop., F. MOERSCHELL.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
W. WORSTER, Manager.

TURNBERRY.—STATION HOTEL. "The most up-to-date Hotel in Scotland." Electric light. Lift. Lounge. Billiards (3 tables). Conservatory. Garage and stables. Sea Water Baths. Two fine golf courses for visitors. Lovely Climate. Charming district. Other G. & S. W. Rly. Coy.'s Hotels at Glasgow (St. Enoch Station), Ayr, and Dumfries.

Best position on Sea Front. ALEXANDRA HOTEL. ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA. Faces due South.
An Ideal Autumn and Winter Resort.
Patronised by the leading Families in the Kingdom.
Moderate Tariff; inclusive if desired.
Telephone No. 64.

PEEBLES HOTEL Hydropathic
Under Mr. A. M. THIEM'S Personal Management. Just RE-OPENED.
CONSTRUCTED FIREPROOF THROUGHOUT.
Entirely RE-BUILT and EQUIPPED on the most MODERN lines. Every Home Comfort. High-class Cuisine. Pure Bracing Air. Golf, Tennis, Croquet, and Bowling Greens. Motor Garage. Magnificent Recreation Hall.
A GERMAN BATH IN SCOTLAND.—The treatment of Rheumatism, Gout Dyspepsia, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Obesity, &c., is greatly shortened by the LATEST ELECTRICAL METHODS. ALL THE NEWEST BATHS. The Cure Department is under the direction of E. NEU, M.D. (Bonn University).

LEAMINGTON SPA.—REGENT HOTEL. Premier Hotel of Midlands. Ideal Spring Resort. Centre of beautiful and Historic Country enlarged, remodelled. Large Stable & Garage. Mod. Tel. 0659 & 109 Leamington.

BEN RHYDDING HYDRO HOTEL, Wharfedale, Yorkshire. 500ft. alt. Bracing air, lovely scenery, 9-hole Golf course. Static Electricity. High-frequency Currents. Radiant Heat X Rays. Vibratory Massage.—J. I. KIRBY, Managing Director.

R.M.S.P. THE ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY,
18, Moorgate-street, E.C., and 32, Cockspur-street, S.W.

WHITSUNTIDE HOLIDAYS.

TRIP from SOUTHAMPTON to LISBON and BACK.—Leaving May 17 by R.M.S.P. "Clyde," returning to Southampton May 25 by R.M.S.P. "Aragon." £10 return ticket. For particulars apply as above.

NORWAY PLEASURE CRUISES.
13 DAYS FROM £12 12s. "MIDNIGHT SUN." Two Berth Cabins. Luxurious Accommodation. Sailing June 8, 22; July 6, 20; Aug. 3, 17. Visiting Sand, Odde, Bergen, Fretheim, Gudvangen, Loen, Marek, Naess, and Molde.—Apply
ALBION S.S. CO., LTD., Newcastle-on-Tyne.

FIFTY-FOURTH REPORT of

THE YOKOHAMA SPECIE BANK, LIMITED

(YOKOHAMA SHOKIN GINKO),

Presented to the Shareholders at the Half-Yearly Ordinary General Meeting, held at the Head Office, Yokohama, on Saturday, March 9, 1907.

Capital Subscribed—Yen 24,000,000. Capital Paid Up—Yen 21,000,000. Reserve Funds—Yen 14,550,000.

President.—KOREKIYO TAKAHASHI, Esq.

Directors.

NAGATANE SOMA, Esq. | KOKICHI SONODA, Esq.
RIEMON KIMURA, Esq. | ROKURO HARA, Esq.
IPPEI WAKAO, Esq. | YUKI YAMAKAWA, Esq.
MASUNOSUKE ODAGIRI, Esq. | VISCOUNT YATARO MISHIMA
TCHUNOSUKE KAWASHIMA, Esq. | HYOKICHI BEKKEY, Esq.

Auditors.

NOBUO TAJIMA, Esq. FUKUSABURO WATANABE, Esq.

Branches :—

ANTUNG-HSIEN. HONOLULU. NAGASAKI. SAN FRANCISCO.
BOMBAY. KOBE. NEWCHWANG. SHANGHAI.
CHEFOO. LIAO YANG. NEW YORK. DAIREN (Dalny).
CHANGCHUN. LONDON. OSAKA. TIELING.
HANKOW. LYONS. PEKING. TIENTSIN.
HONG KONG. FENGTIEN (Mukden). RYOJUN (Port Arthur). TOKIO.

Head Office.—YOKOHAMA.

GENTLEMEN :—

TO THE SHAREHOLDERS.

The Directors submit to you the annexed Statement of the Liabilities and Assets of the Bank, and of the Profit and Loss Account for the Half-year ending December 31, 1906.

The Gross Profits of the Bank for the past Half-year, including yen 793,908.04 brought forward from last Account, amount to yen 10,447,288.75, of which yen 7,436,141.51 have been deducted for Current Expenses, Interests, &c., leaving a balance of yen 3,011,147.24 for appropriation.

The Directors now propose that yen 350,000.00 be added to the Reserve Fund, and yen 500,000.00 to the Special Reserve Fund. From the remainder the Directors recommend a dividend at the rate of Twelve per Cent. per Annum, which will absorb yen 720,000.00 on the old shares and yen 540,000.00 on the new shares, making a total of yen 1,260,000.00.

The Balance, yen 901,147.24, will be carried forward to the credit of next Account.

YUKI YAMAKAWA, Chairman.

Head Office, Yokohama, March 9, 1907.

BALANCE SHEET.

LIABILITIES.	Y.
Capital paid up	21,000,000.000
Reserve Funds	13,700,000.000
Reserve for Doubtful Debts	32,412.016
Reserve for Depreciation of Bank's Premises, Properties, Furniture, &c.	202,448.070
Notes in Circulation	7,285,224.088
Deposits (Current, Fixed, &c.)	122,963,332.060
Bills Payable, Bills Rediscounted, Acceptances, and other Sums due by the Bank	109,526,737.071
Dividends Unclaimed	5,277.077
Amount brought forward from last Account	793,908.004
Net Profit for the past Half-year	2,217,289.020
	Yen 277,726,581.032

ASSETS.	December 31, 1906. Y.	Y.
Cash Account—
In Hand	18,779,045.073
At Bankers	11,528,692.069	30,307,738.042
Investments in Public Securities		20,623,682.031
Bills discounted, Loans, Advances, &c.		102,195,645.014
Bills receivable and other Sums due to the Bank		121,844,798.037
Bullion and Foreign Money		806,688.060
Bank's Premises, Properties, Furniture, &c.		1,948,028.048
		Yen 277,726,581.032

PROFIT AND LOSS ACCOUNT.

	Y.
To Current Expenses, Interests, &c.	7,436,141.051
To Reserve Fund	350,000.000
To Special Reserve Fund	500,000.000
To Dividend— yen 6.000 per Share for 120,000 Old Shares = yen 720,000.000; and yen 4.950 per Share for 120,000 New Shares = yen 540,000.000	1,260,000.000
To Balance carried forward to next Account	901,147.024
	Yen 10,447,288.075

	Y.
By Balance brought forward June 30, 1906	793,908.004
By Amount of Gross Profits for the Half year ending December 31, 1906	9,653,380.071
	Yen 10,447,288.075

We have examined the above Accounts in detail, comparing them with the Books and Vouchers of the Bank and the Returns from the Branches and Agencies, and have found them to be correct. We have further inspected the Securities, &c., of the Bank, and also those held on account of Loans, Advances, &c., and have found them all to be in accordance with the Books and Accounts of the Bank.

NOBUO TAJIMA,
FUKUSABURO WATANABE, } Auditors.

London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow

Assurance Company, Limited.

Established 1881.

A Comparison of the 16th with the 26th Year.

ORDINARY BRANCH.

	1896.	1906.
Number of Policies issued	1,423	2,959
Sums Assured	£134,362	£267,221
New Annual Premium	£7,241	£14,227
Total Premiums received (New & Renewal)	£29,301	£81,084
Total Number of Policies in force at end of year	5,986	18,934
Annual Premiums on Policies in force at end of year	£29,162	£82,450

INDUSTRIAL BRANCH.

	1896.	1906.
Premium Income for the year	£242,174	£431,656
Policies in force	463,279	730,175
Annual Premiums on Policies in force	£274,216	£473,738

ACCIDENT BRANCH.

	1896.	1906.
New Policies issued	1,097	2,340
New Annual Premiums	£2,886	£6,282
Total Premium Income (New & Renewal)	£11,983	£23,134
	1896.	1906.
Income from Interests, Dividends, & Rents	£5,198	£29,616
	1896.	1906.
Total Assurance Funds on December 31	£140,012	£819,201

ADDITIONAL REPRESENTATIVES REQUIRED.
To Suitable Men Good Terms.

Head Office : Insurance Buildings, Farringdon-street, London, E.C., March, 1907. Apply, THOS. NEILL, General Manager.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY

(LIMITED),

HOLBORN BARS, LONDON, E.C.

INVESTED FUNDS - - £63,000,000.

BIRKBECK BANK (established 1851), Southampton Buildings, High Holborn, W.C. 2½ per cent. interest allowed on Deposit Accounts. 2 per cent. interest on Drawing Accounts with Cheque Book. All general Banking Business transacted. ALMANACK, with full particulars, POST FREE.—C. F. RAVENSCROFT, Secretary.

GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

Mortgages.] ESTABLISHED 1837. [Annuities.

CAPITAL—£1,000,000. FUNDS IN HAND—£2,000,000.

Chief Office : 103, CANNON STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Board of Directors.—ALFRED JAMES SHEPHEARD, Esq., Chairman.
Lord ARTHUR CECIL, Deputy Chairman.

H. E. DUKE, Esq., K.C. | ROBERT HENRY SCOTT, Esq., F.R.S., D.Sc.
Hon. R. C. GROSVENOR. | THOS. MCKINNON WOOD, Esq., LL.D., M.P.
WILLIAM MULLER, Esq. | Right Hon. Viscount VALENTIA, C.B., M.V.O., M.P.
CHARLES PRICE, Esq.

Double advantage policies issued securing TWO PAYMENTS of the amount assured—one payment on the attainment of a specific age, and a second payment at death thereafter.

Advances made on Reversions, vested or contingent, and Life Interests, and on Personal Security in connection with a Life Policy.

JOHN ROBERT FREEMAN, Manager and Secretary.

CONCERTS.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

CHARLES SANTLEY JUBILEE CONCERT,

Wednesday, May 1, 3 p.m.

Under the Patronage of

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.
HER ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCESS ROYAL.
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT.
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS CHRISTIAN OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.
HER ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCESS LOUISE, DUCHESS OF ARGYLE.
HER ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCESS HENRY OF BATTENBURG.
HER ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUCHESS OF ALBANY.
THEIR SERENE AND ROYAL HIGHNESSES PRINCE AND PRINCESS ALEXANDER OF TECK.
HER HIGHNESS THE PRINCESS VICTORIA OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.
HER HIGHNESS THE PRINCESS LOUISE AUGUSTA OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.
THEIR SERENE HIGHNESSES THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF TECK.
HIS SERENE HIGHNESS PRINCE FRANCIS OF TECK.

ARTISTS:

Mme. ALBANI.	Mr. BEN DAVIES.
Mme. SUZANNE ADAMS.	Herr FRITZ KREISLER.
Mme. CLARA BUTT.	M. EDOUARD DE RESZKE.
Mme. ADA CROSSLEY.	Mr. KENNERLEY RUMFORD.
Miss FANNY DAVIES.	Mr. W. H. SQUIRE.
Mr. JOHN COATES.	Mr. SANTLEY.

The LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

CONDUCTOR—Mr. LANDON RONALD.

ACCOMPANIST—Miss KATE EADIE. Bechstein Piano.

During the interval a Presentation will be made to Mr. Santley.

Prices of Seats: Boxes, grand tier (10 seats), £7 7s.; loggia (8 seats), £5 5s.; second tier (5 seats), £3 3s.; stalls, £1 1s.; arena, 15s.; balcony, 10s. 6d. and 7s. 6d.; (unnumbered seats) orchestra, 5s.; gallery (promenade, 300 seats only), 2s. 6d.

Tickets may now be obtained at the Hall and the usual agents'.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Earl of KILMOREY, K.P., A.D.C. (Chairman), Sir Frederick Bridge, M.V.O., Sir Francis C. Burnand, John Hare, Esq., the Honble. Spencer Lyttelton, C.B., Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, Sir C. Hubert Parry, C.V.O., Sir Charles Stanford, Major-General Henry Stracey, Sir Douglas Straight, H. Beerbohm Tree, Esq., Sir Charles Wyndham, Landon Ronald, Esq. (Hon. Musical Director), Hilton Carter, Esq. (Hon. Secretary).

CHARLES SANTLEY JUBILEE BENEFIT TESTIMONIAL FUND.

CHAIRMAN—His Grace the Duke of NORFOLK, K.G.

Contributions will be Gratefully Received by the Hon. Treasurer, Sir Douglas Straight, or the Hon. Secretary, the Earl of Kilmorey, K.P., A.D.C., at the Royal Albert Hall, S.W.

Contributions received to date:—£418 4s. 6d.

QUEEN'S HALL.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON NEXT, at 3.
Conductor, HERR ARTHUR NIKISCH.
(His last appearance in London this Season.)
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d. (all 1s. tickets sold), at Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall; usual Agents'; and L. G. SHARPE, 61, Regent-street, W.

ÆOLIAN HALL.
TUESDAY NEXT, APRIL 30, at 3.15.
LEONORE WALLNER.
FIRST VOCAL RECITAL THIS SEASON.
At the Piano, Mr. COENRAAD V. BOS.
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s., at Hall and usual Agents'.
Concert-Direction DANIEL MAYER.

BECHSTEIN HALL.
TUESDAY NEXT, APRIL 30, at 3.15.
ELYDA RUSSELL.
VOCAL RECITAL.
Pianist, Herr ALFRED ROTH.
Tickets, 7s. 6d., 5s., and 2s., at the Hall and usual Agents'.
Concert-Direction DANIEL MAYER,
Chatham House, George-street, Hanover-square, W.

MONDAY EVENING NEXT, APRIL 29, at 8, Mdme.
LIZA LEHMANN'S CONCERT. QUEEN'S HALL.
THE GOLDEN THRESHOLD.
(An Indian Song Garland for Quartet and Chorus).
THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.
(First performance of Complete Concert Version).
For list of eminent artistes see daily papers.
Tickets at usual prices, Chappell's Box-office, Queen's Hall, usual Agents, and BOOSEY & CO., 295, Regent-street. Tel. 1508 Gerrard.

EXHIBITIONS.

EARLY BRITISH SCHOOL.
SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, and includes selected Landscapes and Portraits by Early British Masters.
SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, 27, King-street, St. James's, S.W.

DORE'S GREAT MASTERPIECES. — Raphael's lost Masterpiece "The Holy Family"; Water-Colours of Devon and Cornwall, by J. SHAPLAND; Water-Colours by Mrs. F. A. HOPKINS; Sketches by Miss M. BEARE and Miss M. LOWNDS; &c.
DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond-st., W. 10 to 6. 1s.

AMUSEMENTS.

MASKELYNE AND DEVANT'S MYSTERIES.—St. George's Hall, Langham-place, W.—DAILY at 3 and 8. Mr. J. N. Maskelyne and £1,000 Ghost. Long and varied Holiday programme. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 4s., 5s., unreserved 1s. Children under 12 half-price. Babies not admitted. 'Phone, 1545 Mayfair.

AMUSEMENTS.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE. Mr. TREE.
ANNUAL SHAKESPEARE FESTIVAL.
APRIL 22 to APRIL 27.
TO-DAY (Wed.), MATINEE, HAMLET; TO-NIGHT (Wed.), TWELFTH NIGHT; TO-MORROW (Thurs.), and Friday, JULIUS CÆSAR; Sat., Mat., TWELFTH NIGHT; Sat. Eve., THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

On MONDAY, April 29, will be resumed the revival of THE RED LAMP, followed by THE VAN DYCK. Mr. TREE and Mr. WEEDON GROSSMITH.

ST. JAMES'S, KING STREET, PALL MALL. Tel. 3903 Gerrard.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a New and Original Play,
JOHN GLAYDE'S HONOUR, by ALFRED SUTRO.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. Miss EVA MOORE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

GAIETY THEATRE.—Manager, Mr. GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING at 8 (doors open 7.40), THE NEW ALADDIN, a musical extravagance. Box-office open daily from 10 to 10.

SAVOY.—TO-NIGHT and FRIDAY, 8.25, PATIENCE. Also April 29, 30, May 2, 4, 9, 13, 15, 16, 18. Sat. Mats., April 27, May 11. TO-MORROW, 8.25, THE GONDOLIERS. Also May 1, 3, 10, 14. Sat. Mat., May 18. SATURDAY, 8.25, THE YEOMEN OF THE GUARD. Also May 8, 11, 17. Sat. Mat., May 4.

APOLLO THEATRE, Shaftesbury-avenue.
HENRY LOWENFELD, Sole Proprietor.
TOM B. DAVIS, Sole Lessee and Manager.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 precisely.

ROBERT COURTNEIDGE'S production of
TOM JONES.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Under the Management of Mr. George Edwardes. Every Evening at 8.15, Matinee Every Saturday at 2.30, a new Comedy Opera entitled
THE LADY DANDIES (The Merveilleuses).

CRITERION THEATRE (next door to Piccadilly Circus Tube Station). Lessee, SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening at 8.30, CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company in
THE LIARS,
by Henry Arthur Jones. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.30.

GARRICK THEATRE. Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER and Miss VIOLET VANBRUGH. EVERY EVENING at 9 in THE DUEL, by Henri Lavedan.
At 8.15, Mr. Bourchier in "Doctor Johnson." MATINEE of both plays every WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.15, beginning Saturday next.

THE PLAYHOUSE, Northumberland-avenue.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. Cyril Maude. EVENINGS at 9. MATINEES, WEDS. and SATS. at 3 (by arrangement with Mr. Charles Frohman), CYRIL MAUDE as TODDLES. At 8.20 and 2.20, THE DRUMS OF OUDE.
All seats, including gallery, can be booked. Tel., 14,042 Central.

LYRIC THEATRE. Mr. LEWIS WALLER.
Lessee, Mr. William Greet. Under the Management of Mr. Tom B. Davis.
EVERY EVENING at 8.30, a play in four acts by Tom Taylor, entitled
CLANCARTY.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY at 2.30.

WALDORF THEATRE. Aldwych, W.C.
Six weeks only. EVERY EVENING, at 8 promptly.
SAT. MAT., at 2 promptly.

E. H. SOTHERN and JULIA MARLOWE.

FIRST WEEK.
Wed. Thurs. Evg. Sat. Mat.—JEANNE D'ARC.
Fri. and Sat. Evg.—TWELFTH NIGHT.

SECOND WEEK.—Mon. and Tues., AS YOU LIKE IT. Wed., HAMLET. Thurs., Fri., and Sat., and Sat. Mat., ROMEO AND JULET.
THIRD WEEK.—WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. Seats may now be booked. Tel. 3830 Gerrard.

ALHAMBRA.—New Ballet, "QUEEN of SPADES," Mlle. Alexia, Danseuse de Genre; Millman Trio, Mlle. Bresina, Urbanora, Up-to-date Pictures, "L'AMOUR," and Grand Varieties. Doors 7.45.
Manager, GEORGE SCOTT.

EMPIRE, Leicester Sq.—ADA REEVE, Bransby Williams, Living Pictures, THE DEBUTANTE, New Grand Ballet, Mlle. Genée, Première Danseuse, Miss Ruby Helder, Hengler Sisters, the Biograph, &c. Every Evening at 8. Manager, Mr. H. J. HITCHINS.

PALACE.—TORTAJADA, MARGARET COOPER, LES TROMBETTA, &c. GRAND NATIONAL, &c., on BIOSCOPE. EVENINGS 8 (doors 7.45). MATINEE, FULL PROGRAMME, SATURDAY at 2. Managing Director, Mr. ALFRED BUTT.

LONDON HIPPODROME.
TWICE DAILY,
at 2 and 8 p.m.
AN ENTERTAINMENT OF UNEXAMPLED BRILLIANCE.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION. — Portrait Model of the Rev. R. J. Campbell. The Late Baroness Burdett-Coutts. Realistic Tableau, Scene from Robin Hood. Delightful Music. Afternoon Teas. Open 10 till 10.

HENGLER'S CIRCUS.—TWICE DAILY, 2.30 and 8. Grand new Fairy Spectacle, "BEAUTY AND THE ENCHANTED PRINCE." Circus programme includes Martialo, the wonderful Continental Juggler, Celest on the high wire, Yelding in Blindfold Jockey Act, Hengler's Clowns, &c. Prices 1s. to 5s. Children half-price. Balcony, 6d.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the Control of the Committee.

A list of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

A BISSELLED Carpet is cleaner than a brushed carpet. Its pile is softer, its colours brighter, and its durability enormously prolonged.

All Stores and Ironmongers sell the BISSELLS at 11/3, 14/- and 15/6.

Franz Josef
the only palatable
Natural Aperient Water.

"TRUTH"

Can be obtained at THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,
224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

Something Unique in Flower Holders.

(REG'D)

No. 1. No. 2.

Height, 4½ inches,	1/-	Height, 4 inches,			10d.
,, 5½ ,,	1/3	,, 5 ,,			1/3
,, 6½ ,,	1/9	,, 6 ,,			1/9
,, 7½ ,,	2/3	,, 7 ,,			2/6

Box and Postage for Country, 4d., 6d., 8d., and 10d. respectively.

..THE..
"NEW FOREST"

Each Vase having 4 separate Channels—as well as the centre—enables the flowers to be held in position, and does away entirely with loose supports. Made in best English Glass, in White or Olive Green, at the low prices quoted under illustrations.

Alfred B. Pearce & Co. . . Estab. 1760.
39, LUDGATE HILL,
LONDON, E.C.

Channel Crossing, Sea-Sickness.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, in Truth, writes: "The only remedy is my trusty 'YANATAS.' It absolutely prevents sea-sickness." On sale at all chemists', 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. (the latter a sufficient supply for yourself and a friend), or by post (3d. extra) from STARKIE, Chemist, Trafalgar Sq., London, S.W.

ALCOHOLIC EXCESS

and DRUG HABIT cured at home in 3 to 7 weeks by the TURVEY TREATMENT without inconvenience. The only cure under British Medical Direction. Success tested by officials of the C.E.T.S. Mission, &c. Established 12 years. Over 5,000 recorded cases.—Write for Report of Public Test, or call, Med. Supt., TURVEY TREATMENT CO., Ltd., 24, Amberley House, Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Consultation to patients or their friends, free.

FREEMAN'S CHLORODYNE

For 60 Years Best Known Remedy for

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, DIARRHŒA, NEURALGIA, &c.

Of all Chemists, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. each.

TRADE MARK

CAUTION { To prevent disappointment, purchasers are cautioned against accepting any imitations that may be pressed upon them, as "being the same thing," just as good, &c. Every bottle of the genuine Freeman's Chlorodyne has the Trade Mark "The ELEPHANT" printed on the wrapper, &c., and the words Freeman's Original Chlorodyne engraved on the Government Stamp, which is the only TRUE CHLORODYNE.

"Fellowship among men is nowhere more harmonious than among smokers, since the weed seldom fails to create an atmosphere of the greatest peace and goodwill."

In order to get all the comfort, satisfaction, and hearty pleasure that tobacco can give, smoke

Gallaher's
"Gold Bond"
Mixture

It contains to perfection that sweet, delicious flavour, that free, even burn which all smokers delight in. Try "Gold Bond" Mixture to-day.

Sold in 1-oz. packets, and 2-oz. and 4-oz. tins.

TESTING SAMPLE FREE.

If you will send us your name and address, and also give us the name and address of your tobacconist, we will send you, post free, a Testing Sample of "Gold Bond" Mixture.

GOLD BOND CIGARETTES.
The Cigarette with the indefinable charm.

GALLAHER, LTD. (Dept. 121), BELFAST.
We belong to no Ring or Combine.

GOLD BOND MIXTURE

IDRIS GINGER ALE SWEET OR DRY

AS SUPPLIED TO H.M. THE KING

When the roots are not healthy and strong, or when they are affected by germs, YOUR HAIR will not—indeed, cannot—grow.

That is Why NOTHING CAN BE ANY GOOD for which is FALLING OUT or PREMATURELY GREY except

HAIR

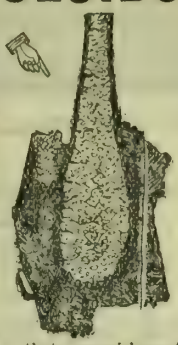
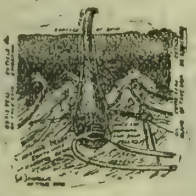
CAPSULOIDS

Magnified diseased hair as seen through the microscope, showing how all the connections at the bottom were destroyed by germs, after which it became loose, and simply fell out. This hair is now under the microscope in the Capsuloid Company's office.



Magnified, strong, healthy hair, as seen through the microscope, showing how its healthy root was so firmly fastened at the bottom that when it was pulled it tore away all the surrounding tissues from the bottom of the follicle. This hair is under the microscope in the Capsuloid Company's office.



This central diagram shows how a growing hair is placed in the scalp. You can see it draws all its nourishment from the little blood vessel which runs to the bottom of its root. All the growth of the hair occurs at that point. The growing cells draw their nourishment from the blood, and multiply and push upwards, so that, although you may see hair several feet long, all the growth of that hair has occurred, and is occurring, and always will occur only at the very bottom of the hair root.

The germs are there also, and just as the only means of nourishing the hair is through the blood, so also the only means of killing the germs is through the blood. Look at the three pictures, and use your own common sense. Do not imagine that this is a subject which can be understood by doctors alone. Although there was nothing but ignorance on this subject for the past 5,000 years, our advertisements during the past few years have taught you enough about the hair that you should no longer be ignorant, but should be able to see how preposterous it is to try to cure by rubbing stuff on the hair and scalp, when a cure, you can see as well, even, as any doctor, can only be something which passes through the blood direct to these harmful germs, causing their death, and then nourishing the growing cells, and making the hair root firm again, and then causing the hair to grow once more as in perfect health. We have so often given proof, that we do not need to tell you again that the first and only remedy which has ever been discovered that can do this is

CAPSULOIDS.

Dose: 2 Capsuloids 3 times daily. From all Chemists. Price 2s. 3d per box.

Special Sample given when this coupon is enclosed, and three boxes are ordered direct from us. Larger Sample with six.

COUPON TRUTH, 24/4/07

Send for valuable Free Hair Booklet which gives full Explanations. To be obtained from all Chemists, or direct.

THE CAPSULOID CO., LTD., 47, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C

SALE

The Opportunity of the Century.

£150000

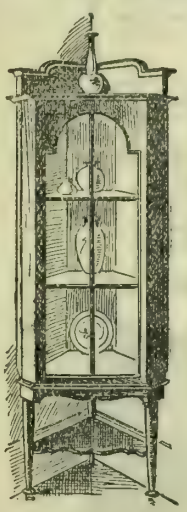
Special Illustrated Sale Catalogue Post Free.

OETZMANN & CO., in order to promote increased efficiency and to facilitate further development and extension, have converted their business into that of a Joint Stock Company.

GREAT INAUGURAL SALE.

The Directors are now giving their clients the full benefit of the very great discount off the actual cost of manufacture at which the Stock has been transferred.

£30,000 Given Away in Reduced Prices.



Solid Mahogany Queen Anne corner Cabinet, fitted with shelves & lined with Silk, £2 5s.

Unique Opportunity of Selecting from a New and Up-to-date Stock at Sale Prices.

EVERY ARTICLE IN STOCK AT COMMENCEMENT OF SALE REDUCED

FROM

10 to 50 PER CENT.

Off Original Prices.

OETZMANN & CO Limited.

HAMPSTEAD ROAD W.

Continuation north of Tottenham Court Road

By Appointment to H.M. THE KING.

Weekly Win!

By Appointment to H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

DAIMLER

Doubtless many readers will remember that during last season, we were so fortunate as to be able to advertise, week by week, a win at one of the numerous Hill Climbs and Trials held throughout the country.

We are are now enabled to resume this series, though in another direction, by announcing the fact that on April 15 judgment was given in our favour by

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS,

THE PRESIDENT of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division,

and

LORD JUSTICE KENNEDY,

in an important action brought by the DAIMLER COMPANY, to restrain another Company from trading in 'CARS under a name so closely resembling ours as to be likely to deceive.

THE UNANIMITY OF THE DECISION WAS A FEATURE OF THE CASE.

THE DAIMLER MOTOR CO. (1904), Ltd.

Coventry: Daimler Works. London: 219-229, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.

Manchester: 60, Deansgate. Nottingham: 96-98, Derby Road. Bristol: 18, Victoria Street.

THE TENSFELDT PROCESS

Electrolysis

HOME TREATMENT.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Everything that grows in nature depends upon a root for its growth, and until that root is destroyed the growth will continue.

When ladies realise this thoroughly, they will know how useless all liquids, pastes, &c., are for removing hair for ever.

The "Tensfeldt Apparatus" is Electrolysis simplified, and with it you can in the privacy of your own home kill the roots without leaving the slightest mark or disfigurement.

On receipt of 1d. stamp for postage, I will forward a copy of my book "The Face Perfect"—giving full particulars of this treatment—to all sufferers from this dread scourge of superfluous Hair.

Permanent Cure Guaranteed

All Letters Strictly Confidential.

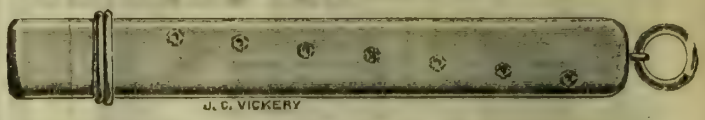
MADAME TENSFELDT, 28, Shandwick Pl., EDINBURGH.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

J. C. VICKERY

Jeweller and Silversmith
To H.M. The KING and H.M. The QUEEN.
179, 181, 183, Regent Street, W.

D E A R E S T



No. M 520.—Vickery's Exclusive Flat Gold Cedar Pencil Holder.

Set Diamond, Emerald, Amethyst, Ruby, Emerald, Sapphire, Topaz, forming word "DEAREST."

With Ring, only £5 15s.; with Stirrup Loop, £6 6s.

Other articles with gems forming word "Dearest."

Rings, Charms, Brooches, Bracelets, Pocket Knives, Lockets, &c.

THE New Scotch Tartan Skirt.

COPLAND & LYE'S "HIGHLAND" SKIRT.

Smart Walking Skirt in All-Wool Tartan. May be had in the principal Clan Tartans.

Price 42/- Carriage paid in Britain.
Bodice Material 10/6 extra.

COPLAND & LYE

Caledonian House, GLASGOW.

The Leading Specialists in Scotch Textiles.

Illus. Catalogue Post Free.

"Clachan" Scotch Tweeds, 58in. wide, 4/11 per yd.
"Kelvindale" Cheviot Tweeds, 54in. wide, 3/11 per yd.
"Hebridean" Scotch Tweeds, 56in. wide, 3/6 per yd.
"Caledonian" Winceys from 11½d. to 2/2 per yd.

Patterns Post Free on Request.

COPLAND & LYE, 165, SAUCHIEHALL STREET, GLASGOW.

TAILORING IN ITS BEST SENSE

Tailoring in its best sense is not so much a matter of Rules as of Perception. It is matter of assisting a customer in the choice of Material which will suit both the wearer and the purpose, and of afterwards—in no fixed way—fashioning that material into a garment which will fit perfectly, be properly comfortable, and have the full appearance of having been made for the wearer with all carefulness. It is a matter of successfully combining REASON with HANDICRAFT.

By following in his work the line of thought here indicated and charging Moderate Prices, Mr. Bult is able to satisfy the varied requirements of those who come to him for clothes.

"THE BYSTANDER" says: "There are few places where the man of average means can get the same quality, style, and fit in his clothes as at Mr. Bult's."

PRICE LIST (Illustrated with actual photographs) and Patterns will be sent Post Free on application. It should be stated for which garment the patterns are required.

John J. M. Bult

140 FENCHURCH ST. LONDON, E.C. Cash Tailor

FRILLED BUTTER MUSLIN

WITH NEW HEMSTITCH FRILLS, 3 yds. long, 8/3 per pair. PLAIN FRILLS, 6/9 per pair. Sample book of Plain and Fancy Muslins on approval. Carpets, Tapestries, Cretonnes, Art Silks, Art Serges. Patterns on approval. Book of Lace Curtains, Blinds Carpets, Linoleum, Furniture, Bedsteads, Bedding, post free.

THE BELVOIR WICKER ARBOUR.

With let-down flap Table; Basket for Books, Needlework, &c. Being light, it is easily turned in any position.

Shelters from wind and sun.

Price Complete in Striped Tick...£3 5 0
Shower-proof 4 7 6
Made to fold flat, 15/- extra.

Catalogue Free.

GORRINGE & CO., 91A Dept., Queen's Walk, NOTTINGHAM

NOW!

is when YOU need

Plasmon Oats

No Husk. All Oats.

Makes a delicious Porridge, only 4 minutes' boiling rquired.

SPECIAL FOR LADIES.

Invisible Eye-glasses

A New Era for Spectacle Wearers.

Do you wear glasses? If so, Dollond's Patent "Fairy" Frameless (Featherweight) Eye-glasses will appeal to you. They are delightfully easy and firm on the nose, and practically invisible. They are different to any other kind of eye-glasses, and quite unique in their daintiness. Being invisible they do not mar the smart appearance of the wearer, and in the words of the Baroness Orczy, "no well-dressed lady, who from necessity wears glasses, can afford to be without a pair."

Ask your Optician to show you a "Fairy," or write to us for an Illustrated and Descriptive Booklet.

DOLLOND & Co.

Established 1750.

Opticians to the Royal Courts of Europe.

223, Oxford Street, W. 113, Cheapside, E.C.
35, Ludgate Hill, E.C. 62, Old Broad Street, E.C.
5, Northumberland Avenue, Charing Cross.
83, Powis Street, Woolwich.

NOTE.—The "Fairy" Patent are the only frameless eye-glasses which give absolute satisfaction in wear. See the name "Fairy" on every mount, and firmly refuse any substitute.

"THE QUEEN OF Apollinaris TABLE WATERS."

SEND FOR PATTERNS OF

Robinson Brown's Silks & other choice Fabrics

PATRONIZED BY H. M. THE QUEEN AND H.R.H. THE PRINCESS OF WALES

WHY NOT BUY YOUR

Summer Dress Materials AT FIRST COST?

The "MYLETA," 21/-
Made from our best quality Glace Silk

WE SEND PATTERNS POST FREE on Approval.

Unequalled Value

of the newest materials in the most fashionable designs, colourings, and textures at popular prices.

Tasty Styles.

By comparing the patterns you will form a true idea of the advantages we offer.

Very elegant rich Glace Silk Underskirt, cut very full, 4½ yds. round frill at foot, with deep full shaped flounce, with tucks, gauging, and ruchings. Made from our best quality Glace Silk in Brown, Purple, Reseda, Helio., Biscuit, Nil, Cream, Light Blue, White, Grey, Dark Green, Cardinal, Ruby, Navy, and Black. Price 21/- Can be made in any other special colours to order in 3 days.

Lovely ENGLISH SILKS, in the new checks & stripes, from 1/- yd.
Smart BRITISH BLOUSE SILKS, in all the newest colourings, from 1/- per yd.
Rich BLACK DRESS SILKS, plain & brocaded, from 1/- to 6/11 yd.
Stylish WOOLLEN MATERIALS, comprising Tweeds, Serges, Vicunas, Voiles, Eoliennes, Crepolines, in the most tasteful checks and stripes ... from 10½d. to 5/11 per yd.
Dainty BLOUSE FABRICS, including Delaines, Muslins, Lawns, Zephyrs, Delainettes, ideal summer wear in endless variety ... ... from 3½d. to 1/11½ per yd.

Any Length Cut. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

WRITE FOR PATTERNS & ILLUSTRATED PRICE LIST POST FREE.

ROBINSON BROWN
The Royal Silk Warehouse, MACCLESFIELD

Robinson & Cleaver,

BELFAST. LTD.

Regent Street & Cheapside, LONDON; and LIVERPOOL.
Manufacturers to His Gracious Majesty The King, H.R.H. The Princess of Wales, &c., &c.
Carriage paid on Orders 20s. upwards in United Kingdom.

CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Samples Post Free.

BORDERED.
Children's .. .. .. 1/3 per doz.
Ladies' .. .. 2/6 „
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/6 „
HEMSTITCHED.
Ladies' .. .. 2/9 per doz.
Gentlemen's .. .. .. 3/11 „

IRISH COLLARS, CUFFS, & SHIRTS.

Illustrated Price Lists Post Free.

Collars—Gentlemen's four-fold, from 4/11 per doz.
Cuffs for Ladies, 5/11; Gentlemen's, from 6/11 per doz.
Matchless Shirts, with four-fold Fronts and Cuffs and bodies of Fine Longcloth, 35/6 the half-doz. (to measure, 2/- extra).
OLD SHIRTS made good as new with good materials in neckband, cuffs, and fronts, for 14/- the half-doz.

IRISH DAMASK TABLE AND HOUSE LINEN.

Fish Napkins, 2/11 per doz.
Dinner „ 5/6 „
Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2/11 each.
Table Cloths, 2½ by 3 yds., 5/11 each.
Kitchen Table Cloths, 11½d. each.
Linen Sheeting, 2 yards wide, 1/11 per yard. Surplice Linen, 10½d. per yard. Dusters, from 3/3 per doz. Glass Cloths, 3/11 per doz.

N.B.—To prevent delay, all Letter-orders and Inquiries for Samples of these goods should be sent direct to 40, W. Donegall Place, Belfast.

LETTERS FROM CELEBRITIES.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET ON NERVOUSNESS.

"Industrial Farm Colony,
"Duxhurst,
"April, 1907.

"Dear Friend,—Your letter is one of many which I constantly receive begging me to tell of something which can help to restore tired nerves and over-worn strength, and you ask me to do so because I come in contact with so many who for these very reasons fail in the race of life, having sought the wrong remedy for such loss of nerve-power.

"The description which you give me of your difficulty scarcely varies from that of which I am so often told. Work has become a drudgery, and life a heavy thing. You tell me that you go to bed feeling tired, and that you wake in the morning almost equally tired, that your food is distasteful to you, and that little things which used to sit lightly upon you have become heavy burdens; that even pleasure is toil. I know you have worked hard through many years, and have had much mental strain. This may in a measure account for your weakness, which is not brought about by any condition of actual disease, but which seems to arise from an even greater trouble—namely, that your nerve-force is seriously overspent.

"It is important to understand that in these days of worry and over-excitement, the over-work (mental and physical) to which most of us are subject calls forth an undue expenditure of strength, and that to recuperate the vigour we have lost we must consider what sort of food or remedy we require.

"Of course, the whole question of proper nourishment requires much thought and experience. Many forms of food and many restoratives are recommended, but having had to do with a great many people who have impaired their digestive organs and whose nerve-power has been seriously undermined, I do not think that I have come across anything which I believe a more suitable nutrient for all forms of weakness than Sanatogen. I do not know if you have tried it, but it seems to me, under the conditions such as you have described, an ideal preparation, because it provides a valuable tonic-food in the most suitable form. It consists, I believe, in the nourishing element of pure cows' milk, incorporated with which is a special nerve-tonic containing phosphorus. It has an invigorating power on worn-out nerves, and gives tone to exhausted tissues to a surprising extent. The feeblest system and the poorest digestive organs are able to assimilate it when they can really touch little else. I am strongly of opinion that you cannot do better than begin a course of Sanatogen if you wish to regain your strength.

"Sanatogen undoubtedly restores sleep and invigorates the nerves, and it braces the patient to health, for I have noticed that with the restoration of the digestive organs the mind becomes more quickly active, and work, both mental and physical, becomes more easy, and the freshness and keenness which such people have lost (apparently altogether) return gradually, and bring with them an enjoyment of life and a feeling of hopefulness not hitherto experienced.

"When the body is subjected to a course of Sanatogen the blood condition improves, the skin assumes a more healthy colour, the invigorated nerves are braced to a more healthy tone, and the whole human machinery is made fit for exercise and work and for fulfilling its functions in the most perfect manner. . . . .

Isabella Somerset"

The above is an abstract from a letter addressed by Lady Henry Somerset to an intimate friend. In view of the public interest associated with the subject, the recipient has obtained her Ladyship's gracious permission to make the contents widely known. Additional information on the same subject may be obtained from the Sanatogen Company, 83, Upper Thames-street, London, E.C. Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, in packets, at 1s. 9d., 2s. 9d., 5s., and 9s 6d.

A MASTER KEY

of this size.

BRAMAH LOCKS

FOR ALL PURPOSES can be made to a Master Key in suites, with subordinate keys for BUTLER, MAID or VALET, GARDENER, &c., &c., each suite independent of the other, but all opening to the MASTER KEY.

A choice selection of Despatch and Jewel Boxes, Travelling Requisites, strong and light, with real Bramah Locks, Steel Jewel Safes, &c., &c.

Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

BRAMAH & CO.,

By Appointment to H.M. the King. Sole Makers of the Genuine BRAMAH LOCKS.

100, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.

Nervous Disorders

A deficiency of the phosphates causes a lowering of nervous tone, indicated by exhaustion, restlessness, headache or insomnia.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

(Non-Alcoholic)

supplies the nerve cells with health-giving life force, restores strength and induces restful sleep without the use of dangerous drugs.

An Ideal Tonic in Nervous Diseases

If your chemist does not have it in stock he can obtain it from Bovril, Ltd., 152 Old Street, London, E. C.

HACKNEY

Furnishing Company, Ltd

No connection with any other firm.
A. M. STEWART, Managing Director.

EASY INSTALMENT SYSTEM.

CHEAPEST, BEST, MOST ECONOMICAL. NO DEPOSIT REQUIRED.

£10 worth	£0 7 0 per month	£50 worth	£1 9 0 per month
£20 „	£0 12 6 „	£100 „	£2 5 0 „
£30 „	£0 18 0 „	£200 „	£4 10 0 „
£40 „	£1 6 0 „	£500 „	£11 5 0 „

10 per cent. discount for cash. No large first payments. A full three years' credit. All goods delivered free in private vans. Carriage paid up to 300 miles. CATALOGUE POST FREE.

Compare our prices. No middle profits to pay.

TOWN HALL BLDGS., MARE ST., HACKNEY, LONDON, N.E.
N.B.—HOURS OF BUSINESS, 9 till 9. On THURSDAYS we close at 4 o'clock. Telegrams—"Furniments, London." Telephone No. 84, Dalston. On leaving Hackney Station ask for the New Town Hall. Our extensive premises adjoin.

Caution.—We supply all our goods at the prices advertised, and strictly adhere to our TERMS.

Nine Large Shops next to each other.

O.S. TOOTH BLOCK

THE BEST AND SAFEST DENTIFRICE.

The Rev. Edward Muckleston, M.A., Haseley Rectory, Warwick, says:—"I must say, with truth, that I prefer your preparation to all others."

OVER 5,000 UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIALS.

Sold by all Chemists, price One Shilling,

AND BY OSCAR SUTTON & CO., PRESTON.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Latest Methods. Lowest Fees.
Five years' Warranty.
"Originators of popular GUINEA Sets."—Vide Dispatch.
Mr. Labouchere in "Truth" writes:—"One of the largest practices in the world. Can do everything science and experience suggest to satisfy every customer."
PAMPHLET POST FREE,
GOODMAN'S, Limited, 2, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
and West End Branch, 61, Seymour-street, Edgware-road End.
BRIGHTON: 10, Castle-square.

OUR PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THE NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET-STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S-GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,466.

FORECAST OF THE RESULT OF THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE BOAT RACE.

The Prize of Two Guineas, in this competition, is awarded to RAM, whose forecast was printed in TRUTH of March 20th last.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 1,475.

It is a long while since I have invited my readers to construct an enigma, so I think, perhaps, that it is now time to set a Puzzle of that character. And I will ask Competitors to take for their model that good and exceptionally clever old enigma, which runs as follows:—

"I went to India. I didn't go there. I stopped there. I came away from there, because I never went there."

ANSWER: A watch.

It will be noticed that the whole point of this enigma lies in the double meaning of which the verb "go" and its tenses, and also the verb "stop," are susceptible. Taking the ordinary primary meaning of these verbs, the enigma makes paradoxical nonsense. Taking the special secondary meaning, it makes excellent sense.

Now there are plenty of other English words which are thus susceptible of a double meaning. And I invite readers of TRUTH to select one or more such and to work them up into an enigma.

Putting it concisely, I offer this week the usual Prize of Two Guineas for

THE BEST ENIGMA, IN NOT MORE THAN TWENTY-FIVE WORDS, TO BE CONSTRUCTED ON THE SAME PRINCIPLE AS THE EXAMPLE QUOTED ABOVE.

In order, however, to facilitate the efforts of Competitors, the "double-meaning" words may be any parts of speech, not necessarily verbs—provided the effect of intelligible sense underlying apparent nonsense is produced.

Nor need Competitors' enigmas be in the precise form of the model. All that is required is that they should be on the same principle.

PLEASE NOTE THAT:

(i.) No Competitor must send in more than one enigma.
(ii.) Every Competitor must give the solution of his enigma.
(iii.) All enigmas must reach TRUTH Office by the first post on Monday, May 6, 1907, at latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

VERBUM SAT.—Many thanks for your letter. I have duly noted the correction.

OISEAU.—I have read your long explanatory letter with great interest. I quite appreciate your point of view and never suspected either you or any other Competitors, who included the name of Jesus Christ in their lists, of irreverence. But at the same time I am convinced that the inclusion of the Masters' name in a Competition of this character would give offence to a large number of readers. And on that ground I decided not to print those lists which mentioned Him.

NESTOR.—I much regret that your solution of our "greatest men" Competition was received too late for inclusion.

DERULA.—You will have seen your name and address printed in last week's TRUTH. The Prize cheques are sent out periodically in batches.

COYOTE (C. S. Bengough).—Will you kindly adopt another nom-de-plume, as I find that "Coyote" is already appropriated. You will see I am printing your verses this week over your surname.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE No. 2—SPECIAL FOREIGN.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

ORIGINAL PARODY OF TENNYSON'S "BREAK, BREAK, BREAK."

AN ADDRESS TO THE CHANNEL TUNNEL.

Bore, bore, bore,
'Neath thy old, white cliffs, oh sea;
For in future my bread and butter
Will no more arise in me.

I have seen the fisherman laugh
As he sucked at his well-blacked clay;
I have noted the sailor lad
Take his swig in the alley-way.

And till lately, ships lurch on
With their gurgle and grind and grill.
Forgotten the stench of a varnish can,
And the sound of a voice that is ill.

Bore, bore, bore,
'Neath thy bed of old bones, oh sea;
But the smell of grease, and a dog that is dead
Will no more come over me.

Hakim.

Wake, wake, wake,
Thou island of the free,
For I hear a distant mutter,
From the lands across the sea.

Oh well for the Russian and Pole,
Who all are coming this way,
Oh well for the German Jew,
Who works for half your pay.

And the sweating den goes on
In spite of the "Aliens Bill,"
But where is the work for an English hand
At bench, or saw, or mill?

Wake, wake, wake,
Oh souls of the island free,
Oh, a living wage for ever and aye,
Is lost, lost, lost to thee.

Forzay.

Quake, quake, quake,
Thou men of the Franchise free,
For there comes an exciting flutter
Of femininity.

O well for the lodger bold
Who has things all his way.
O well for the married man,
Whose votes the elections sway.

And the portly brewers smile
As they sign themselves "M.P."
But O! for the vote of the female band,
In the Parliaments to be.

Quake, quake, quake,
Thou men of the House of C——.
The suffragette will triumph yet,
And make short work of thee.

Shaliwar.

On the 27th June, 1888, Lord Randolph Churchill laughed the Channel Tunnel Bill out of the House of Commons.—("Life," Vol. II., p. 381).

Wake, wake, wake,
From thy cold grave, Randolph C.!
For we would that they tongue could utter Thy thoughts on the Channel T.

O well for the foreigner's joy,
That he shouts at his "ballon d'essai"!
O spell of the traitor fad,
That may bring us to nought in a day!

And it greatly rests upon
Thee, our craven blunder to kill;
But Oh for the touch of a master hand,
And the sound of the Noes to the Bill!

Wake, wake, wake,
Tear the project to rags, R. C.!
Lest a slender space in an ocean bed
Fill with ruin and rack our E.

* Prompted by fear of "mal de mer"?

Makhila.

Wreck, wreck, wreck,
On your blinded course, O Peers;
And I would I could dare to reckon
The scope of my hopes and fears.

Oh well that the Land Purchase Bill
Had appeared in a happier hour;
Oh well for all sweeping schemes
When the Tories themselves are in power!

But the stately farce goes on
When a Liberal rules at the helm,
That similar measures and milder schemes
Must be wrecked "for the good of the realm!"

Wreck, wreck, wreck,
In a blinded party cause,—
Thus hasten the day when the People's House
Will, alone, make the People's Laws.

Entebbe.

ENGLAND.

Awake, awake, awake,
In the old way foams the sea,
And I would that the throng in the gutter
Caught the tide of liberty.

Is it well? For the hitherman's boy,
Flouts our brethren's love of fair pay.
Is it well that the sailor's sad
As he slings in his boat to-day.

And the statesmen's slips go on
In their "havers" over a Bill.
But it's "only more Dutch," to the famished band
Aground on a choice of ill.

Awake, awake, awake,
Look to thy flags o'er sea.
But tender the race: and they when once fed,
Will level some track for thee.

Cus-Cus.

"CULTORES VERITATIS FRAUDIS INIMICI."

(Lines suggested by reading "Thirty Years in TRUTH Office."—TRUTH, Jan. 9, 1907).

Strike, strike, strike,
At abuse and evil, O TRUTH;
And I'm glad to see you still hitting
As hard as you did in youth.

Oh! ill for the Horners and Moyles,
That they feel the full force of your fist.
Oh! ill for the swindling quack
That he enters your Cautionary List.

And libel actions go on
To the same conclusion still.
But oh! for a sight of the vanquished band,
And a peep at the lawyer's bill.

Strike, strike, strike,
At the root of all wrong, O Truth,
For the enduring strength of your paragraphs
Weekly recalls my lost youth. Coyote.

Strike, strike, strike,
At those old, gay drones, M.P.;
And the words that I long to mutter,
Ought not to arise in me.

Oh! well 'twere to wish a man joy
When his Suffragette sister's at bay,
Oh! well to hail her as mad,
When she shrieks for a vote all the day.

And sedately the "Bips" go on
To leaven with blunders the Bill;
But oh! that all such were a banished band,
And their astounding noises were still.

Strike, strike, strike,
And boot out those drones, M.P.;
If you end the days of the House that is head,
Bills never come back to thee. Bengough.

Shake, shake, shake,
In this seismic zone of ours.
Trembling we stand 'midst ruined homes,
Cracked walls and ruined towers.

Oh! well may the Frank and British
Bore a tunnel 'neath the sea.
Oh! well may the Spanish nation
Greet an heir to their dynasty.

With bombs do the Russian eagles
Try to tear themselves apart;
Whilst the ever-thoughtful Fatherland
Trains its youth to the war-like art.

Work, work, work,
Though the tremblings will not cease;
For two cities fair must rise again,
Ere the Pacific may have peace.

Valparaiso.

Break, break, break,
Our battalions both new and old;
To save a few pence to-day,
Oh Haldane, alas! you're too bold.

Army advisers rush on,
Heedless of precedents ill;
Oh for the touch of a Wellington's hand,
The sound of a voice that is still.

Break, break, break,
You'll break our Army, I fear;
Is it well to wait for a war
To show you danger is near?

'Tis well for favour'd men's sons,
'Tis well for titled wife's hub;
What chance has the soldier who works,
For the poor man, Captain, or Sub?

R. Dupp.

TO THE LORDS.

Pause whilst you may
In your headlong rush on fate,
Certain it is that you'll touch bedrock soon
If you go on at this rash rate.

Slow is the tide
But sure, in its ebb and its flow,
And sure is the might of the people when roused,
The people who want to know—

Why should a man
Whose ancestors ruled in the past
Enter by right in the House of the Lords,
Instead of by worth; by votes cast?

Pause whilst you may;
Should they rise in their angry hordes,
Throwing a sop to the people won't stop
The reform of the House of Lords.

River Digger.

Break, break, break,
On the Portsmouth Strand O sea;
Would that my thoughts could utter
What I think of "Down on your knee."

'Tis well for the Mercantile boy,
As he shouts on th' Exmouth at play;
'Twas well for the old sailor man
Who fought in Trafalgar Bay.

And our stately ships go on,
With most of the fittings ill-found;
Torpedoes, with all hands go down,
And a First-class oft goes aground.

Break, break, break,
Our "Handy Man" down on his knee;
But oh for Nelson again,
Or soon there'll be none go to sea.

Sailor Man.

Break, break, break,
The wastrels in silver and gold;
Oh would that my thoughts dare utter
The reasons why out here we're "sold."

'Tis well if you've money or "favour,"
Or petticoat influence, too;
For others, the chance of a life time
Through merit comes to but few.

Shake the Pagoda by all means,
But mind, native soldiers have pride;
Drilled all day long for a mere song,
Housed where fowls might abide.

Break, break, break,
The hearts of Ghurka and Sikh;
Oh for the help of a Roberts!
Or a Gordon with nought but his stick.

Sikh.

Break, break, break,
On India's shores O sea;
Would that the trees could utter
Our grievances! Ah, me!

'Tis well for the Simla clerk,
And the money'd Sahib at play;
And the Man on the Staff can laugh,
The luck has come his way.

The British officer's life,
Midst fever, cholera, plague,
In a native corps, is hard,
Costs much, with promotion vague.

Break, break, break,
I can't but break I say;
'Twixt servants, and mess, and rent,
There's nothing left of my pay.

Bajana.

Brake, Brake, Brake,
No brake on the Brighton-road;
I heard no shouts of the "bobby"
Concealed in a "trappy" abode.

'Tis well for the villager's boy,
As he shouts at the others at play;
'Tis well for the village infants,
The motor is now safe away.

This motor goes bounding along,
To the ship away by the sea;
Scudding round corners, thro' lanes,
Much too quickly for me.

Brake, Brake, Brake,
When on the parade by the sea;
Safe at old Bacon's again,
The first and the last ride for me.

B. Hive.

Slaves, Slaves, Slaves,
Imported from China's shores,
And I would that my ear could hear
Your ideas of English and Boers.

Oh! well for the Radical Press
To demand your return to Cathay.
Oh! well for the shareless man
Who views this without dismay.

The stories and lies flow on
In an inexhaustible stream.
But oh for a say of real truth
And light on the labour theme.

Slaves, Slaves, Slaves,
Who come from far China's land,
I doubt if the gas we listen to here
Will get you expelled from the Rand.

Alpha.

ENGLAND WELCOMING THE MEMBERS OF THE COLONIAL CONFERENCE.

Come, come, come,
Over the wild rolling sea;
For we are anxious that you and all
Should co-operate with me.

Oh! well for the Englishman's joy
At the thought that his rights are secure,
Oh! well for we are all glad
That our efforts are not premature.

And England's trade will go on,
Bringing greater grist to her mill:
For lo! there's help from her colonial boys,
Who can never forget Dover's hill.

Come, come, come,
To your good old Mother Country,
And we'll welcome you with a hearty huzza,
Though our clime may sultry be.

Rolling Stone.

OLD WELCOME CLUB, Earl's Court, S.W.

In connection with
BALKAN STATES EXHIBITION.

President:
Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS, V.C., K.G., K.P., O.M., &c.

Chairman:
PAUL CREMIEU-JAVAL, Esq., J.P.

Committee:
The Earl of Warwick and Brooke.
The Lord Burton, K.C.V.O.
The Lord Burnham, K.C.V.O.
The Right Hon. Sir Edward Carson, K.C., M.P.
The Right Hon. W. G. Ellison-Macartney.
Capt. the Hon. Alwyn H. Fulke-Greville, M.V.O.
Sir William Robinson, G.C.M.G.
Sir Thomas Sutherland, G.C.M.G.
Major-General Sir Owen Tudor Burne, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I.
Sir Eyre Massey Shaw, K.C.B.
Sir Richard R. Awdry, K.C.B.
Sir Henry Bergne, K.C.B., K.C.M.G.
Admiral Sir Albert H. Markham, K.C.B.
Sir Charles Malcolm Kennedy, K.C.M.G., C.B.
Sir George C. M. Birdwood, K.C.I.E., C.S.I., M.D., LL.D.
Sir Manchergee M. Bhownaggree, K.C.I.E.
Sir Walter Roper Lawrence, Bart., K.C.I.E.
Colonel Sir Augustus FitzGeorge, K.C.V.O.
Admiral Sir Adolphus FitzGeorge, K.C.V.O.
Sir John Furley, C.B.
Sir Arthur J. R. Trendell, C.M.G.

The Exhibition, which is under the patronage of H.M. the King of Servia, H.R.H. the Prince of Bulgaria, and H.R.H. the Prince of Montenegro, will be opened on May 4.

The Committee are now prepared to receive applications for membership. Members of the principal London clubs are eligible for election without being proposed and seconded. All other candidates must be proposed and seconded by members of the Club.

Subscription for the season, including admission to exhibition and special badge, three guineas.

Members are permitted to introduce as visitors three ladies and two gentlemen to the Club on every day that the exhibition is open to season ticket-holders. Members can also have the season tickets of their wives, daughters, and sisters resident with them endorsed as available for the Club.

Particulars and forms of application can be obtained from the Secretary, the Old Welcome Club, Exhibition-buildings, Earl's Court, S.W.

A THIN PAPER EDITION OF

TRUTH

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AND CAN BE OBTAINED ON ORDER OF ALL NEWS-AGENTS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

To all Countries included in the Postal Union:—

Three Months	£0	7	8
Six Months	0	15	4
Twelve Months	1	10	8

And to any address in the United Kingdom—

Three Months	£0	7	0
Six Months	0	14	0
Twelve Months	1	8	0

A tribute from "Truth"

"One is tempted to rise and call blessed the name of DUNLOP"

"For weeks at a time, perhaps, no thought of mishap or misadventure will so much as cross the mind. Hardly will pumping be needed, so stoutly the valves are holding, while punctures are unknown. Then how lightly and easily the heavy car glides or floats over the rugosities of the road, with every shake anticipated, and the biggest jar absorbed. Then is it one is tempted to rise and call blessed the name of DUNLOP, to whose inventive genius the pneumatic tyre of to-day owes its being."

Booklet of DUNLOP MOTOR TYRES on request.

THE DUNLOP TYRE CO., Ltd.,

Aston, Birmingham, and 14, Regent Street, London, S.W.

HAVE YOU TRIED THE DUNLOP GOLF BALL?

When selecting New

WINDOW BLINDS

AND

LACE CURTAINS,

Every Woman is Conscious that in the entire Furnishing scheme there is no detail on the settlement of which it is more essential that her discriminating taste

shall be directly exercised than in the choosing of Curtains, the designs and effects of which will either impart refinement and distinction to the appearance of her windows or be a continual adverse reflection on her good taste.

For many years past the fame of HAMPTONS' pre-eminence in the production of original and distinguished looking Lace Curtains has been attracting, in ever increasing numbers, the most fastidious Clientèle in Europe and America, with the result that HAMPTON & SONS' stock of is now acknowledged to be the most attractive collection of really interesting and beautiful designs to be found in either Hemisphere.

Exclusive Lace Curtains

See the 1907 Booklet N. 227 of the latest designs for Lace Curtains and Blinds, just ready and sent post free.

HAMPTONS

ONLY SHOWROOMS:

PALL MALL EAST, LONDON, S.W.

ARE YOU TAKING

an everyday care of yourself? Prevention you know is ever so much better than cure. A little irregularity of the stomach seems such a trivial thing to-day, but next week it is a malady, ever getting more serious: little ailments soon become big complaints. Cure that little irregularity at once. Neglect it, and it leads swiftly to dyspepsia, indigestion, flatulence, constipation, biliousness, headache, and perhaps a train of greater evils. Even these will yield to but why run the risk of so much suffering? What folly to delay—waiting till one is ill.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

A dose of these famous pills taken whenever the least weariness is experienced will effectually prevent any unpleasant developments. Don't wait till you have to be cured. Take an everyday care of yourself, remember always if you keep the bowels regular and the liver in working order you will never be troubled with indigestion and it's attendant miseries.

"Taking care" of course means that the standard remedy must be always at hand. In many thousands of homes BEECHAM'S PILLS are regarded as the family medicine and are kept in an appointed place always ready for use. When you notice a symptom you want to get rid of it at once: there is no time like the present. To be always prepared, you too, must keep a box of Beecham's Pills

AT HOME.

Sold everywhere in boxes, price 1/1½ & 2/9.

THE BEST ON EARTH.

SIR ANDREW CLARK'S INVARIABLE ADVICE WAS

"Let the Patient have Schweitzer's Cocoatina, if you please."

SCHWEITZER'S Cocoatina

THE COCOA for INVALIDS.

GUARANTEED ABSOLUTELY PURE SOLUBLE COCOA ONLY.

"This is Genuine Cocoa."—The Lancet.

H. SCHWEITZER & CO., LTD., 143, York-road, London, N.

DENT'S

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO THE KING.

WATCHES & CLOCKS.

Makers of the Great Westminster Clock "Big Ben," and Sole Custodians Since its Erection.

DENT

TRADE MARK

Send for NEW ILLUSTRATED C & W CATALOGUE FREE.

CAUTION.

No Instrument, from No. 38,000 upwards, is genuine without the above Trade Mark.

E. DENT & CO., Ltd.,

Find it necessary to inform the public that their ONLY ADDRESSES are—

61, STRAND, and 4, ROYAL EXCHANGE, E.C.

CHAS. KNOWLES & Co., LTD.

The Wykeham. From 3/3 per piece.

Manufacturers of

Art Wall & Ceiling Papers

Patterns on Application.

164, King's-road, Chelsea, LONDON, S.W.

The Largest Show-Rooms in London.

Jewsbury & Brown's ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE.

In Pots and Tubes.

Goddard's Plate Powder

For Cleaning Silver, Electro Plate, &c.

Sold everywhere 1/- 2/6 & 4/6

Printed for the Proprietor by Love & Malcomson, Ltd., 4 & 5, Dean-st., High Holborn, W.C., & Published weekly by H. Labouchere at 10, Bolt-ct., Fleet-st., E.C., in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to Reginald E. Booker, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st., Queen Anne's Gate, S.W.
Entered as Second Class Matter at the New York, N.Y., Post Office, 1903.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1583. Vol. LXI. Wednesday, May 1, 1907. Price Sixpence.

TO OUR READERS.

We receive hundreds of letters every week from "Readers of 'Truth.'" A large majority of the writers expect replies direct. Of the work, trouble, and expense involved in doing this we say nothing. But as experience has shown that a large number of our "Constant" and "Regular" readers who inquire about individuals with whom we have dealt in our columns over and over again are not actual subscribers to the paper, but merely occasional readers of it at clubs, libraries, or at friends' houses, we consider we must protect ourselves in the matter.

We have therefore decided that henceforth every reader who writes making an inquiry that necessitates a direct reply must enclose a stamped envelope and also a Coupon which will always be found at the foot of the 3rd page of the coloured cover. Without these no notice will be taken of the communication.

Inquiries addressed to "Vigilant," which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through his "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can "Vigilant" send replies by post.

No Coupon will be available that is over a fortnight out of date, except from correspondents residing abroad.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made Payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Buildings," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE King's return to England, which was originally fixed for Friday last, was postponed for a week, when his Majesty left Malta for Naples. The King is now expected to come back from the South of Italy by Milan and the Simplon Tunnel route, and his Majesty will arrive in London on Saturday evening. The King will reside at Buckingham Palace until the morning of Tuesday, the 14th, when he goes to Newmarket for the Second Spring Meeting, returning to town after the races on the following Thursday. The Court will leave London on Saturday of that week to spend the Whitsuntide holidays at Windsor Castle.

His Majesty will give a dinner to the members of the Jockey Club at Buckingham Palace on the evening of the Derby Day, Wednesday, June 5. The announcement has been made in some of the papers that the Queen and Princess Victoria "will dine with the Duchess of Devonshire at Devonshire House, and a small party will be invited to meet them, while there will be a ball afterwards." This is all the very purest conjecture, no such arrangements having been made. The Queen has more than once dined at Devonshire House on the Derby Day, and there has been a ball afterwards, but it is by no means a matter of course that the same programme will be followed this year, especially as the King and Queen of Denmark and the King and Queen of Norway will then be in London.

A weekly journal announces that "society is enlivened by the prospect of a garden party at Buckingham Palace early in the season." As a matter of fact, there will be no garden party at Buckingham Palace at any time this season. It is possible that the King and Queen may give a garden party at Windsor Castle during the visit of the King and Queen of Denmark and the King and Queen of Norway to England, but nothing is yet settled. If there is a garden party at Windsor it will probably take place either on June 22 (Saturday in Ascot week) or on the following Monday, June 24.

In addition to the two State Balls at Buckingham Palace this season, the King and Queen will give a ball at Windsor Castle on June 21, being Friday in Ascot week. Invitations for about 2,200 guests will be issued by the Lord Chamberlain for each of the State Balls. The invitations for the Windsor Ball will be sent out by the Master of the Household, the guests being selected from a special list.

Prince Fushimi of Japan, who is to arrive in London next Monday from Paris, will be received at Dover by the Prince of Wales, with whom he is to travel by special Royal train to Victoria Station. Directly after his arrival in London Prince Fushimi will pay a formal visit to the King at Buckingham Palace, and an hour or two afterwards his Majesty will call on the Japanese Prince at York House, St. James's Palace. Prince Fushimi is to spend Saturday, the 11th, at Windsor Castle, when he will visit Eton College, and he is to leave London on Monday, the 13th, for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, when he will be the guest of Sir Andrew Noble at Jesmond Dene until Wednesday, the 15th, when he goes to Edinburgh. The Prince goes on Friday, the 17th, to Buchanan Castle, the beautiful domain of the Duke and Duchess of Montrose on Loch Lomond, where he is to be a guest until Monday, the 20th, when he will proceed to Barrow-in-Furness. Prince Fushimi will afterwards visit Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Oxford, Portsmouth, and Southampton before he leaves England. The King has appointed Mr. Arthur Walsh (one of his Majesty's Grooms of the Bedchamber) to be in attendance on Prince Fushimi during his stay in England. Mr. Walsh will accompany the Prince on his provincial tour.

The visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the West of Scotland went off with complete success, and the very long programme of engagements on each of the three days of their stay at Blythswood House was got through without any difficulties or mistakes. The Prince and Princess will pay another public visit to Scotland during the second week in July, when they are to be the guests of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch at Dalkeith Palace, and they will visit the show of the Highland and Agricultural Society at Prestonfield, near Edinburgh, on Wednesday, July 11, and on Thursday, the 12th.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia, who are now at Clarence House, spent a week at the Hotel Ritz, Paris, on their homeward journey from the East, and were joined there by Prince Arthur, who had been on a visit to the Grand Duchess Marie of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha at the Château de Fabron. It is expected that the Duke and Duchess and Princess Patricia and Prince Arthur will leave London at Whitsuntide for Stockholm on a visit to Prince and Princess Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden, in which case they will stay there until after the celebration of the golden wedding of King Oscar and Queen Sophia on June 6, returning to England in time to spend Ascot race week at Bagshot Park.

The Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, who have been staying in Italy for several weeks, are to arrive in England shortly on a private visit to the Duchess of Albany at Claremont Park, after which they will join their yacht at Dartmouth for a cruise in home waters. The yacht will proceed to Dartmouth from Hamburg, where she has been laid up during the winter.

The daily papers informed us last week that the King had granted an unusual honour to Sir Frederick Treves and Sir Francis Laking, in recognition of their professional services to his Majesty, and went on to specify "that honourable augmentation to their arms, in the form of an addition to their shields of one of the lions from the Royal arms of England, had been granted by Royal warrant." Many of them then described this grant as "unprecedented," which is rubbish. Within the last century similar Royal augmentations were granted to Sir Henry Halford, physician to George III. and to George IV.; to Sir James Clark, physician to Queen Victoria, Prince Albert, and the Duchess of Kent; to Sir William Gull, Sir James Paget, and Sir John Williams. It was said some years ago that Sir William Jenner had more than once declined this honour, when it was offered to him by Queen Victoria.

Count Albert Mensdorff Pouilly is to return to the Austro-Hungarian Embassy this week from Vienna, and he will be included in their Majesties' house party at Windsor Castle during Ascot race week. Count Mensdorff spent two days of last week at Prague, where the Emperor Francis Joseph is staying for a fortnight. During the absence of Count Mensdorff from England Count Louis Szechenyi is acting as Chargé d'Affaires at the Embassy.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen have taken an active interest, since their arrival in Ireland, in the Irish Exhibition which opens this week in Dublin. Lady Aberdeen's illness did not interrupt her energetic promoting of industrial interests in Ireland in connection with the Exhibition, and in especial where women's work is concerned. The Exhibition will be opened by the Lord-Lieutenant and Lady Aberdeen on Saturday, the 4th inst.

Mr. Birrell is fortunate amongst Irish Chief Secretaries in the opportune moment at which he will bring in his Irish Bill. Ireland has been thoroughly discovered, the people of the country have been found out to be very much as any other race would be under the same circumstances. They object to having no voice in the management of their own affairs, and are not loyal when loyalty is made impossible to them. The example of General Botha must have a powerful effect on them; it comes at the critical moment. They can go and do likewise—grasp in friendship and brotherhood the hand of a former enemy when real friendship and brotherhood are established between them.

THE BLUSHING BRIDE.

Upon a Suffragette, Miss G.,
The truth has dawned with sudden rush;
And, plain as daylight, she can see
What prompts the "blushing bride" to blush.

'Tis just from very poignant shame,
To feel the folly of her plan,
In yielding up her hand and name
To such a specimen as man.

But viewing what those women be,
Whose type in Suffragettes is found,
Methinks, ere very long we'll see
A turning of the tables round.

No red the bride's bold cheeks will flush
For him, the wretch, to whom she's tied;
'Tis he, the bridegroom, who will blush
(And with good reason) for the bride.

Few people will dispute the recommendation of the Home Office Committee that there should be an official roll of baronets. There seems to be a disposition in many quarters not to take baronets seriously. From any such tendency I desire to dissociate myself, and I wonder that it should be visible in newspapers, seeing how extensively and honourably the Baronetage has been reinforced from the press. As every French recruit was said to carry a marshal's bâton in his knapsack, so every recruit in the ranks of journalism may feel in these days that he has a baronet's blood-red hand in his pocket. As a potential, if unworthy, mem-

For Appeals, see page 1105.
For the Truth Hotel List, see page 1111.
For Special for Ladies, see page 1115.
For Selected Foreign Hotels, see pages 1110, 1 11.
For Estates, Auctions, 1105.
For Amusements, see page 1109, and Supplement, page 8.
For Our Puzzles, see pages 1117, 1118.

ber of the Order, every one of us must earnestly desire that it should be kept select, and that the difference between the genuine and the spurious rank should be authoritatively certified. This is what the official roll is to do. That something of the kind is required in the public interest cannot be doubted, for the files of Truth, as well as the records of the criminal courts, bear testimony only too convincing of the extent to which innocent people are preyed upon by bogus baronets. If I were not treating this subject seriously, I should be tempted to say that other people besides rising journalists have felt baronet's hands in their pockets.

One advantage of official rolls is the opportunity they offer for striking people off. One naturally thinks of solicitors when advocating the institution of a Baronets' Roll, and it is rather surprising that the Home Office Committee has not done so. There is a great deal in the report about putting baronets on the rolls, but nothing about striking them off. This omission should be rectified when the necessary legislation comes under the consideration of Parliament. The bad baronet's power for evil would be in a great measure destroyed if, when he fell foul of the Companies or the Bankruptcy Acts, he could be reduced to plain "Mr." In the case of bankruptcy the title might be suspended till the debtor obtained his discharge.

Another measure which I would strongly advocate is that it should be made a penal offence for any man to use the title of a baronet until he was on the roll. The penalty should be specially heavy if it were shown that the offender was using the title to obtain money or promote companies. If a man desires to practise as a baronet he ought to be registered, like a doctor. While we are legislating on this subject it would be just as well to extend these provisions to the peerage. A bogus baron is quite as dangerous to the public as a bogus baronet. I have in my mind two individuals who have conferred peerages on themselves and are perpetually mixed up with all sorts of shady practices. They should be required, under a penalty, to prove their qualifications and register. I do not know why the same principle should not be applied to University degrees, and academic honours of all kinds. The law provides security for the genuineness of the marks on goldsmiths' and silversmiths' work. Is it less necessary to protect the hall-marks of social rank or intellectual attainments?

Mr. Rolle, who died on Saturday at Argeles, was a conspicuous territorial magnate, for he was the owner of two of the largest estates in the West of England, one of which includes extensive urban property of great value. He was an admirable man in every relation of life, holding high ideals of duty, endeavouring to realise them, and regarding himself as a trustee of his wealth, which he employed most liberally in works of beneficence of all kinds. He was a model landlord—indeed, few men would have spent money so lavishly on estates of which he was merely tenant for life—and he was also a devoted Churchman. He built three handsome churches in Devonshire, and restored several others.

Though a strong old-fashioned Tory, Mr. Rolle never played any part in politics, for he had no taste for the turmoil of public life, but he exercised much influence in a quiet way, for his position was exceptional, combining great wealth, unblemished character, and the regard and respect of people of all parties, it being universally known that he had no personal objects to pursue. He was a very hospitable man, but he liked quiet and retirement, and never cared for the hurly-burly of general society. He was very fond of music, and his taste in literature and art was excellent. Hunting was his favourite sport, and for a great number of years he maintained a smart pack of fox-hounds on his North Devon estate, but he was also a fine shot. His death is an irreparable loss to his family and friends, to whom he was always most kind and generous, and he will be sincerely mourned and long missed in Devonshire.

Mr. Rolle was a younger brother of the late Lord Clinton, and (through his mother) a grandson of the sixth Marquis of Lothian. In 1842, when he was seven years old, he unexpectedly succeeded to the vast property of the celebrated Lord Rolle, who had married his aunt late in life. The estates included the domains of Stevenstone and Becton, the former being noted for its large and picturesque deer park, while the latter is famous for its gardens and arboretum. Mr. Rolle married Lady Gertrude Douglas, daughter of the eighteenth Earl of Morton, and sister of the late Lady Fitzwilliam. He leaves only two daughters, and the estates (which were left by Lord Rolle in the strictest settlement) pass to his nephew, Lord Clinton, who has the whole property absolutely, as the entail will now lapse. It is curious that the present Lord Clinton has come in for three large successions—the Barony of Clinton estates, the extensive Scotch estates of his maternal grandfather, Sir John Stuart Forbes, of Fettercairn, and now (by far the most important of all) the great Rolle property.

Mr. Antony Gibbs, who died last Wednesday at Tyntesfield, his beautiful place near Bristol, was the grandson of the Antony Gibbs who established the well-known firm which still bears his name, of which Lord Aldenham is now the head. His father, Mr. William Gibbs (who married a daughter of Sir Thomas Crawley-Boevey, of Flaxley Abbey) purchased the Tyntesfield estate, rebuilt and enlarged the house, and improved and considerably extended the gardens and grounds. A notable feature at this charming place is the private chapel, which was built by Sir A. W. Blomfield in imitation of that of Exeter College, Oxford. The Gibbs family have been widely known for their munificence in contributing to Church objects, and for their gifts to Keble College. Mr. William Gibbs presented the chapel to Keble, and Mr. Antony Gibbs (and his brother, Mr. Martin Gibbs) gave the hall and library. The family also purchased several advowsons which were given to Keble College.

For Approved Charities, see page 1113.

The late Mr. Gibbs was most kind and liberal to his tenants and employees and to his poorer neighbours, and he was a great benefactor to the neighbouring parish of Wraxall, as also were his father and mother. He will be sincerely lamented and long missed throughout the district. He was all his life a staunch Conservative, and was lavishly generous in his pecuniary support of the party in Somersetshire. Over and over again he was requested to come forward for one of the county seats, and he would certainly have been returned at any election between 1868 and 1906 if he could have been induced to stand, but he had no wish to enter the House of Commons. His eldest son, who is a son-in-law of Mr. Walter Long, succeeded Sir Michael Hicks Beach (now Lord St. Aldwyn) as Member for Bristol West.

The Prince of Wales has consented to take the chair at a dinner to be held at the Hotel Cecil on May 14, in aid of the National Association for the establishment of Sanatoria for Workers Suffering from Tuberculosis. The object in view is to raise funds for the completion of the sanatorium at Benenden, Kent, a section of which has already been opened. It is desired to provide accommodation there for 200 patients, and the maintenance of the beds will be guaranteed by the friendly and other societies which are supporting the movement. Tickets for the dinner can be obtained from Sir A. Douglas, Bart., 18, Lowndes-square, S.W.

I am asked to mention that a ball in aid of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (Onslow District Ladies Committee) will be held at the Grafton Galleries on Wednesday next. Tickets can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary of the Committee, Mrs. Hylton Dale, 60, Onslow Gardens, S.W.

TO MISS EDNA MAY.

(On her retirement).

Farewell! We men of every age,
From callow youth to veteran grey,
Deplore your quittance of the stage,
Where long you've charmed us, Edna May.

'Twas less your histrionic art,
That won you such unquestioned sway;
(We loved the player, not the part),
'Twas just that you were Edna May.

My attention has been called to a practice which has lately been introduced in connection with the teaching of music at Charterhouse, and to which both parents and music teachers seem to have good reason to object. It was formerly the practice for the music teachers to send in their accounts to parents through the house masters. Under the present Headmaster the whole of the musical staff, with the exception of the bandmaster, were dismissed, somewhat summarily, and a new organist was appointed, through whom the accounts were rendered. Under the new arrangement a fixed charge of four guineas per term is levied, of which, according to my information, £3 goes to the music teachers, and the balance to the organist. The music teachers are obviously entitled to claim the whole of a charge which is ostensibly made to the parents by way of special payment for their work. But the parents have still more ground for complaint that a tax should be levied upon them in the form of a charge for teaching their sons music, which in reality goes into the pocket of the organist, who takes no part in that teaching. The salary of the organist is a charge which ought to be spread over the whole school indiscriminately, and there is no reason why a special charge for his benefit should be made to those parents whose sons learn music. I am under the impression that something of this kind is done at a good many other public schools besides Charterhouse, but it seems entirely indefensible.

Balliol College has received a very handsome gift from Lord Newlands, who has founded two "Jowett Fellowships," each endowed with £500 a year, which are to be awarded to two tutorial Fellows as additional emoluments. Lord Newlands has himself nominated the two first holders of these Fellowships, but future appointments are to be made by the Visitor, the Master, and a representative of the founder. Mr. T. A. Brassey has also been a generous benefactor, as he has not only founded a studentship in Historical Research, but he has collected a considerable endowment fund for the college from old Balliol men. This is a most seasonable gift, as Balliol is a very poor college.

There has been much speculation in Church circles for several weeks as to the new appointment to the historic vicarage of Hursley, near Winchester, vacant by the death of the incumbent, who succeeded John Keble in 1866, and who was presented to the living by Sir William Heathcote. Sir George Cooper, who purchased the Hursley Park estate a few years ago, has presented the Rev. H. C. Percival, who has been for fourteen years vicar of St. Peter's, Southampton, and who is well known in Hampshire as a zealous worker and an eloquent preacher. He is a High Churchman, so the Hursley traditions will be maintained. Mr. Percival was for some years curate at Wragby to the late Canon West, who was generally known as the Keble of Lincolnshire, and he was afterwards for nine years a chaplain of the Episcopal Cathedral at Edinburgh under Dean Montgomery.

Bishop Legge has nominated Archdeacon Hodgson to the vacant residentiary stall in Lichfield Cathedral, in the place of the late Canon Lonsdale. Archdeacon Hodgson, who is a moderate High Churchman, is one of the most popular and most highly esteemed ecclesiastics in the diocese, in which he has been working ever since his ordination in 1868. Between 1872 and 1906 he was successively vicar of West Bromwich, vicar of Walsall, and rector of Handsworth, and in 1898 he was appointed Archdeacon of Stafford by the present Bishop of Lichfield. His preferment to the vacant canonry has given much satisfaction, and meets with the hearty approval of both the clergy and the laity. The stipend is £500 a year, with a pleasant house and garden in the Close.

The Archdeaconry of Brecon has been placed at the disposal of the Bishop of St. David's by the resignation of Archdeacon Bevan, who was collated to this office in 1895 by Bishop Basil Jones. The Archdeacon has been working continuously in the diocese of St. David's for sixty-two years. The stipend of the post is £400 a year.

A distinguished Freeman of Canterbury sends me the following, which I am pleased to publish. I only know what I am told, and when I am told quite contradictory things I know nothing. But when my latest correspondent refers to one previous sinner, I must point out that there have been about half-a-dozen of them. I referred to three last week, and I did not put it as strongly as some of them. I cannot believe that all were inspired by nothing but a desire to make mischief:—

> Your correspondent who seeks to defame the good Dean of Canterbury, and to cause dissension in the ranks of Churchmen of High Church and Broad Church views, will not escape being pilloried. He does not speak the truth. I solemnly aver that there are no "strained" relations in the Chapter of Canterbury. It is ridiculous to suggest that plans made for the private and family convenience of the Canons were due to a decision on the part of the Dean. As a matter of fact most of the Canons had departed before anything had been said by the Dean. As to the conduct of the Dean, he is one of the kindest, most inoffensive, hardworking and most popular of our citizens. He is President of the Board of the Canterbury Hospital (at which he is a constant attendant), the Simon-Langton Schools, Smith-Payne Schools, and other institutions. We all go to him for advice and assistance in trouble. He has not been absent from his post for six Sundays since last October.

At the recent synod of the Roman Catholic diocese of Southwark, Bishop Amigo read a legal document relating to the Dawes Trust, the effect of which was, I am told, that the trustees are fully empowered to make use of the Petworth endowment for any diocesan purpose. It is difficult to believe that in endowing a mission Mr. Dawes, or anybody else, would give his trustees a free hand to disendow it whenever they pleased; and it is not less incredible that if such were the terms of the trust the fact would have been kept secret throughout the public controversy which has arisen over the Petworth endowment, and in which the Archbishop of Westminster has publicly joined. It is possible that the trust may have contained an alternative provision for the application of the Petworth endowment in certain contingencies, but that would be a very different matter, and would have no bearing on what has actually occurred. Bishop Amigo conveyed to his clergy the impression that this document was communicated confidentially, which is somewhat futile, for there can be no effective secrecy in proceedings at which about a couple of hundred persons are present. Nor does the attempt to avoid publicity make the justification of the Petworth doings any more convincing.

In a speech reported in the Carlisle Journal, the Rev. J. H. Cartwright, a Wesleyan minister, stated that "in Wetheral Council school, just before the Easter holiday, the Rector of Wetheral invited all the Church children to go to the rectory to receive an egg and an orange, but no others." Mr. Cartwright's audience received the statement with a cry of "shame," which is echoed and emphasised in a letter that has been addressed to me on the subject. It is assumed that the Rector's design was not only to give a treat to the Church children, but to fill the little Dissenters with pangs of envy and regret that they, too, are not of the faith that is sustained by eggs and oranges at the rectory. Let us be charitable, however. The reverend gentleman may have feared that if he extended his invitation to all the children he would be accused —and I have no doubt that he would have been— of seeking to bribe and proselytise those outside his own flock. Nonconformists are sometimes too ready to attach an exaggerated and sinister importance to a trifling incident of this kind. At the worst, they could at Wetheral easily counter this supposed piece of Anglican artifice by giving their own youngsters eggs and oranges. They might even go one better by substituting toffee for eggs.

Just before the end of the season at Monte Carlo a committee issued a circular appealing to the English and American residents and visitors for contributions to a fund for purchasing a site and building a new Anglican church. The circular has been severely criticised by a correspondent of Barnett's Weekly, Nice, and it is certainly a very unbusinesslike and unsatisfactory document. Though asking for money for the purpose named, the committee reserve to themelves the right to apply it to the improvement of the existing church if at the end of three years the amount obtained is insufficient for erecting a new one on a fresh site. This is a perfectly reasonable condition, but the committee proceed to say that the residue, if any, may be applied to augmenting salaries in connection with the present church, and then, in a passage obviously inconsistent with the preceding portion of the circular, they add that "in the meantime," if the "sustentation fund" in course of collection by the chaplain be not sufficient for what is required, part of the new church fund may be, at their discretion, expended upon keeping the old building in proper order.

In other words, it may quite possibly be discovered at the end of the three years that the bulk, if not all, of the money collected to build a new church has been diverted to the patching up of the old one. It seems to be thought locally that the chaplain has an ample revenue at his disposal for the latter purpose, and however that may be, the uncertainty as to the use that will be made of the money is scarcely calculated to bring a liberal response to the committee's appeal.

A firm in the City inquired of me the other day whether the criticism that has been directed in TRUTH against the Metropolitan and Provincial Association of London and Brighton still stands good. After seeing the accounts of the said association for last year, I have no hesitation in saying that it does. When I last referred to this charity, about two years ago, it was collecting about £800 a year at a cost of over 5s. for every pound collected, and spending another twenty-five per cent. of its income on salary and office expenses. The result was that it could boast of having given about 350 children a few weeks' change of air at Brighton at an expense vastly in excess of the cost of similar work under the Children's Country Holiday Fund, and of distributing 36,000 "free meals" in London, the value of which was extremely problematical.

NOTICE.—The BRITANNIA HYGIENIC LAUNDRY CO. have opened a West End branch at 306, Vauxhall Bridge road, South Belgravia. High-class work. Flannels specially treated.

KNOW HUMPHREYS, and be well dressed. HUMPHREYS, opposite South Kensington Station, one of the biggest and best Dressmakers. Unusual originality combines with sensible, not fancy prices.

The accounts for 1906 show precisely the same state of things. During the year £779 was collected. The bulk of it seems to come through collectors who evidently receive 5s. in the pound on their takings. This poundage and other expenses brought the mere cost of collecting £779 up to £211, and this without reckoning an expenditure of £58 on printing, stationery, etc., a great part of which can only be explained on the assumption that it relates to the circulation of appeals. The secretary receives £130, and with this and other items the total expenses of collecting and office administration for the year came to over £426. After allowing for the balance in hand from the previous year, the association only had £445 left to spend upon its home at Brighton and its free meals. In its report it boasts that it gave free meals during the year to 30,342 children, and that it took 414 children to Brighton for periods of from one to four weeks. The accounts only show an expenditure of £227 on food in London and Brighton. Deduct from this the cost of feeding 414 children for periods of from one to four weeks, and it will be seen that the 30,342 free meals in London must have been of a very exiguous character, unless some miracle was performed in the shape of feeding a multitude with a minute quantity of provisions.

The best way to test the value of a charity of this kind is to see what the actual relief alleged to have been given ought to have cost. The Children's Country Holiday Fund gives its children a fortnight in the country at a cost of 10s. per head. The 414 children whom the Metropolitan and Provincial Association sent to Brighton in 1906 could therefore have been dealt with by the Children's Country Holiday Fund at a cost of £207. The sort of "free meals" that are given to poor children by charitable agencies working in the slums of London rarely cost more than 1d. a head, at which rate 30,342 meals would cost £126. Even if we allow 2d. a head for these meals, the utmost value of the work done by the association during the year in question does not exceed £460. The actual expenditure during the year was £872. From this any one can see for himself that in subscribing to a piffling little charity of this class he is wasting half his gift, and that he could double the value of his charity by bestowing it on the Children's Country Holiday Fund or one of the excellent funds for feeding school children.

STAMMERING cured only by personal tuition; interview on written application.—Mr. A. C. SCHNELLE, 119, Bedford Court-mansions, London, W.C. Pupils taken in residence.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's speech denouncing Mr. Haldane's Bill from the Labour Party point of view is said to have impressed the House of Commons, but it must have been owing to something which does not appear in the speech as reported. It is simply nonsense to rave about "militarism" in connection with a scheme which really aims at nothing but knocking into efficient shape the very small amount of military material which we already possess; and equally so to speak of it as a step towards conscription when it studiously preserves the element of voluntary enlistment. Conscription will only come when the people refuse to furnish the two or three hundred thousand partially trained civilian soldiers who are essential to national security, and the only thing that is likely to make them refuse this amount of service is the preaching by their leaders of such doctrines as Mr. Macdonald's.

Personally, I am as much opposed to "militarism" as any Labour Leader, and as anxious for the era of universal peace and brotherhood. But, like the majority of people who share the same views, I am not disposed to throw away my weapons while all my neighbours are armed to the teeth. This is only the policy which has to be followed in all relations of life. Most professing Christians would like to see the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount carried out in its entirety. But, nevertheless, if a man sues them at law, whether for the purpose of taking away their coat or any other portion of their property, they consult a solicitor. I know I do. Soldiers and solicitors are inevitable evils as things are at present, and as long as we find it necessary to employ them, they must be fit for their business, whether it is to win battles or win actions.

Neither is it any use to declaim against class influence in the officering and administration of the Army, and to suggest that ploughboys are quite competent to lead our armies against "the best troops of the Continent." Here, again, my opinion is as strong as anybody's that in the ideal army there will be no class or social distinctions in the ranks, and that merit alone will conduct the private to the officers' mess, and in the fulness of time to the House of Lords. I don't think we have done half as much in this direction as we might. But it is no use blinking the fact that as things are an officer must spend a good deal of money, that his education is an expensive one, and that if the State is not to incur an enormous addition to its military expenditure, it must take for its officers for the most part men who can provide some of these necessary expenses themselves. It is very deplorable, but so are the taxes, and even tariff reformers have not yet promised to provide us with an army in which every officer will be commissioned from the ranks. Utopia is a very nice-looking place. I hope we shall all get there, and I am all for moving in that direction. But I am sure that the road is a long one, and that there are no short cuts—except into quagmires.

The Labour Party, if we are to judge by its accredited spokesman, is all wrong in its attitude to the Army, and it is best to say so plainly. The Labour men must recognise, as a great section of Continental Socialists do, first, that we cannot yet do without soldiers; secondly, that soldiering, as a form of employment, is a labour question of the first magnitude, to be considered in a practical spirit like any other working-class question. There is a great deal in the relations of the State to soldiers which is altogether wrong, and which it is the business of Labour M.P.s to put right. But this will never be done by visionary talk about the evils of militarism, or the superiority of ploughmen to highly-trained officers.

On the subject of General Stringer Lawrence's services in India, the correspondent whose letter I published last week writes again, as follows:—

> Lawrence was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Army by King George II., as can be testified on application at the India Office, and he certainly exercised that command, for it was expressly stipulated that in the event of his visiting either Bombay or Bengal he was to be on the Council of those places, which, I think, at that time could hardly have been called Presidencies.
>
> If Clive is entitled to a statue (and I am one of those who think that he richly deserves all the honour a grateful country can bestow), surely the man whose splendid achievements against a powerful European foe alone made the subsequent successes of Clive possible, is also worthy of his country's gratitude and remembrance.

Surely it is a somewhat strange arrangement for a sergeant-major to occupy permanently the position of manager of a regimental mineral water factory. This appears to be the state of things in an infantry regiment stationed at Poona. The sergeant-major took over this post about four years ago and has held it ever since. Prior to that date the manager was relieved periodically, like the canteen sergeant or the holders of most billets of the same sort. That is the practice in most battalions, and there seems to be more in favour of it than against it.

Apropos of something that was said in TRUTH the other day about the use of the coupon on the cover of TRUTH for the purpose of correspondence with the Editor, a "Tommy" writes with a curious grievance. He states that he bought a copy of TRUTH and cut out the coupon for his private purposes, having occasion, I suppose, to ask for advice about his investments or something of that kind. An active and intelligent sergeant noticed the paper in his possession in this mutilated condition, and since that date he has felt himself "a marked man." What that means I need not particularise. The fate of a man suspected of communicating with the Editor of TRUTH respecting the conduct of the sergeant-major, or anything else you like, may be best left to the imagination.

Beyond declaring solemnly that this poor fellow never did write to me (unless about his investments) until the day when he told me of his troubles over the coupon, I do not know what I can do for him. But I would point out to my friends in the Army, whether in positions of authority or not, that they are troubling themselves quite needlessly about coupons. The Editor of TRUTH has an open ear for anybody who wishes to confide in him. He does not want everybody who writes a letter to the office to send him a coupon. He only requires it from people who want advice about their investments, or who propound all sorts of puzzling conundrums for his solution, expecting replies by return of post, if possible, not to say by telegram. I hope this will be understood, not only in the Army, but everywhere else. When a soldier confides to me his trouble about his issue of boots or the shortcomings of his beer, or a working plumber asks me how to deal with a drunken wife, and encloses a coupon, it makes me unhappy. I feel that I ought to send him his sixpence back, and yet I do not want to hurt his feelings.

For several years I backed up the movement in favour of granting pensions to those members of the staff of the Ordnance Survey who, though classed officially as temporary civil assistants, were to all intents and purposes permanent employees. Last November the Treasury sanctioned a scheme which makes any man who has served for fifteen years as a temporary civil assistant eligible for transference to the establishment with the right to a pension on his retirement. On the whole, this scheme seemed to be a fair one, and I hoped that it would put an end to the discontent that existed. But some people are never satisfied, and I have now been invited to support a fresh agitation on the ground that any period for which a man has served as a labourer or chainman before ranking as a temporary civil assistant ought to be included in the qualifying fifteen years. As a reason for doing this, it is urged that men joining the Ordnance Survey from the Royal Engineers are allowed to count their military service. It appears to me, however, that this is a case in which the State can quite legitimately give a preference to soldiers, and it may save trouble if I say at once that I have no intention of advocating a further concession in the matter of their pension for the temporary civil assistants.

Profound disgust and resentment have been created among the clerical staffs of the various naval establishments by the Admiralty scheme for dealing with the complaints of the writers, which has just made its appearance. This scheme is the outcome of an agitation extending over about fifteen years, the basis of which is that the position of the writers in regard to pay and prospects has remained unchanged for a generation or two past, while every other branch of the naval service has its position improved, to say nothing of the corresponding class in the service of private employers. It is no exaggeration to say that of all the grievances that have been specifically put forward by the men during that time not one is really redressed by the new scheme, and the feeling is very general, if not universal, that the staff all round will be worse off under the new arrangements than it was before.

The result is not in the least surprising, for the scheme has been evolved by a committee of permanent officials who have deliberated with closed doors, taken no evidence at first hand, and made no intelligent attempt to understand the real troubles and desires of the men for whom they were to legislate. As mentioned in these columns not long ago, the Admiralty are ostensibly dealing with a memorial or petition three or four years old, and the most plausible explanation of the conclusions now arrived at is that the Committee has forgotten—if it ever knew—precisely what it was inquiring into. The best thing the writers can do now is to get their case ventilated in Parliament. It is a matter which some of the Labour M.P.s ought to take up, for the men concerned are working men to all intents and purposes, and it is only because they are of humble status and are scattered about in a way that makes concerted action difficult for them, that they are treated so shabbily and contemptuously.

It is some years now since I had occasion to refer to the superabundance of Ceylon "creepers." So many youths were being lured out from home to learn the art and mystery of tea planting that when they had completed their apprenticeship it was constantly found that they had simply wasted their own time and their parents' money, the supply of appointments being quite unequal to the demand for them. The statements that were published had a good effect for the time being, but it has again become desirable to sound a note of warning. "Creeper-mongering" is so profitable that officials on tea and rubber estates are sometimes tempted to take pupils without much regard to their future prospects. In a recent article on the subject, the Times of Ceylon demurs to the suggestion of a correspondent that the planting profession is already absolutely overcrowded, but admits that it is at least "well-filled," and adds:—

> We agree that the legitimate opportunity of the creeper-recruiter in England of last year has now passed away, and if Truth and other home papers will mention this fact it will be useful.

Truth mentions the fact, accordingly, for the guidance of parents who think of putting their sons into this well-filled profession.

Some of my Anglo-Indian readers have passed on to me a "private and confidential" circular with which they have been favoured by R. S. Kapure, who styles himself honorary secretary of the Punjab Orphanage Club, Amritsar. The purport of it is that the club is promoting a Derby sweep, tickets for which are issued to members only, but that if any outsider desires "to take part in this benevolent work"—in other words, to join in the orphanage gamble—he has only to forward the cash for as many tickets as he would like at one rupee each, and the club will at once qualify him for the purpose by electing him as an honorary member. I do not know whether there really is such a concern as the Punjab Orphanage Club. Anyhow, it is a transparent absurdity that a gamble of this sort should be permitted in spite of its illegality, simply because it is alleged that it is being promoted for a charitable object.

From a gentleman whose position enables him to know a good deal about such matters, I hear that the notorious Mrs. Henville is again writing begging letters. It is, therefore, desirable to repeat the warning recently given against her appeals, and those of her family. The party appear to have removed to Oxford, as they were talking of doing when I last heard of them, and their present address there is Hughenden Cottage, 88, Fairacre-road.

PUBS AND CLUBS.

[General Bruggins, in the smoking-room of his Club, airs his views on the Rev. J. R. Gamble's recent observations. Time: one o'clock a.m.]

What? Call those accurst institutions, the pubs,
A "social necessity," "working-men's clubs"!
Of what can this Gamble be thinking?
When the scourge and the ruin—deny it who can?—
Of the working-class woman and working-class man
Is the bestial habit of drinking.

I'd close all these villainous beer-selling shops.
Let Hodge be content with cold tea and weak slops,
Nor let him, at nightfall, be roaming,
When his duty's to sit, as morality bids,
Like a right-minded man with his wife and his kids,
And to do the domestic his home in.

It's——(Eh? One o'clock! You don't say so, by Heaven! And I told Mrs. B. I'd be in at eleven.)
That vicar he ought to be shot, sir!
(Hi! Waiter there! Yes, sir.) My goodness! What are Things coming to? (*Right, sir. A shilling cigar
And a glass of the usual—hot, sir.*)

The protest of the Regent-street shopkeepers against the design for the rebuilding of the Quadrant has a good deal of reason in it. A shop-front of the most approved modern type may not be a beautiful architectural feature, but it has a well-defined value as a commercial asset, especially in a thoroughfare which is essentially a promenade of people more or less bent on shopping. For a firm which has built up a large trade in such a thoroughfare, largely on the strength of its windows, it is a very serious matter to be suddenly reduced to the window space provided by Mr. Norman Shaw's design—not only a very limited space, but recessed between heavy piers of masonry, so that the contents of the window are only displayed to a person standing immediately in front. And if loss of trade is threatened by this alteration of the frontage, the Crown, as the ground landlord, as well as its tenants and sub-tenants, will suffer in the long run, though it may not do so immediately.

The shopkeepers are rather late in raising this question, because the façade of the Piccadilly Hotel is now practically completed, and there will be a very strong feeling that the continuity of the architectural design should be preserved all through the Quadrant, as it is in the old design. But would it be difficult to insert in the stone framework of the windows an ornamental bay window which would improve the design from the shopkeeper's point of view, without raising any æsthetic objections? There are plenty of highly ornamental shop-fronts in London of the style that I have in my mind, and an accomplished architect could carry out the idea in a way that would be an embellishment of the general design. If necessary, the frontage of the remaining buildings could be set back two or three feet, in order to make room for such windows. There would be no reasonable objection to the hotel projecting to this extent beyond the adjoining houses.

Jeffrey & Co.'s Artistic Wall Papers are on view at their New Showrooms, The Wallpaper Gallery, 31, Mortimer st, W. To be had of all decorators.—Factory, 64, Essex-rd., Islington, N.

If the height of the new hotel is to be that of the whole Quadrant, it strikes me that the whole design is open to criticism on the ground that the buildings will be too high for the width of the street. The hotel certainly looks overpoweringly huge, at present, not to say heavy and clumsy. This, of course, may be merely a false impression created by the contrast between the building and its neighbours. But when one pictures the whole street rebuilt on this scale and in this massive style, one cannot help wondering whether it is wide enough to stand it. Whatever the architectural effect, it strikes me that by the time the rebuilding is completed the shopkeepers will find a new cause of complaint in not getting enough daylight in their premises.

I was interested to see that the astonishing history of the Parsonstown and Portumna Bridge Railway came up last Friday before the Commission on Irish Railways. The whole story was told in detail in Truth of August 21, 1902, under the heading, "A Derelict Railway," and I would recommend the Commissioners to look at the view of the case there set forth. The points which require their special attention are the action of the Great Southern and Western Railway Company in regard to this line, the defeat of attempts to get in the uncalled capital by the extraordinary statement that the list of subscribers had been lost, the relations of Lord Clanricarde to the scheme, and the refusal of the Treasury, when the Public Works Loan Board were in possession as mortgagees, to assist the contractor (who had never been paid) in raising the amount needed to reinstate the line and set it working. The "stealing" of the railway piecemeal by the neighbouring inhabitants is only a picturesque detail in a story, the like of which surely never happened anywhere outside Ireland.

APRIL'S VAGARIES.

A fickle month was April e'er,
And never to be trusted;
But lately it has, fair and square,
Its own best records busted.

An August sun last Wednesday burned;
Our sweat ran down in rivers;
On Thursday, lo! to March it turned
And froze up all our livers.

Then Friday, with its cold and wet,
Was absolute December;
And p'rhaps this week—who knows?—we'll get
The fogs of drear November.

No! April doesn't know its mind;
'Tis governed by no lex, sir;
Wherein a likeness strange we find
To what is called "the sex," sir.

Of months the Latin grammars say,
"To mascula assign 'em."
This month, at least—my head I'll lay—
Is "genus femininum."

The result of the libel action brought against the Standard by the late members of the Highways Committee of the L.C.C. shows the need of more drastic and summary procedure than the ordinary machinery of the law of libel to restrain defamatory personal imputations at election times. No municipal election in this country has ever given rise to so much lying and slander as the last L.C.C. election. For the most part it was of the scientific electioneering type, which keeps within the limits of the law. But the Standard indiscreetly overstepped the safety line by charging the Highways Committee specifically and generally with "bribing" by the method followed by "Tammany" in New York, namely, "taking care of its friends and seeing that they are given well-paid billets." The specific instance mentioned of this general practice of bribery was the spending of 50 per cent. above the market value of certain tramway work, with a view to "put that money into the pockets of the friends of the executive."

The Standard now explains that this plain accusation of fraud and bribery "did not convey what we intended," and that "the last thing in the mind of the writer was to suggest that any act done by members of the London County Council or their friends was with a view of personal advantage to themselves or their friends." In other words, the writer said the exact opposite of what he had in his mind. With some years experience both of journalism and the law of libel, I should regard a gentleman with so little ability for conveying what he has in his mind as a dangerous member of a newspaper staff; and it is somewhat strange that the editor should have passed his copy without detecting the discrepancy between what was intended and what was said. The Standard is lucky to have got out of the mess with the publication of this singular explanation and a suitable expression of regret, and the payment of the plaintiffs' costs.

When the fight is over, and passions have cooled on both sides, no one can blame the plaintiffs for accepting the apology and dropping the action. At the same time it is regrettable that weapons of this kind can be used for electioneering purposes with impunity. What the Standard said, intentionally or not, in its libel, was said or insinuated in a dozen quarters, though in such a way that no individual Councillor or group of Councillors could allege that he was personally libelled by it. And it had its effect. To what extent it influenced votes no one can say. But plenty of people—ignorant, but certainly not uneducated people—at the time of the last election firmly believed that what they read about the raising of rates and the piling up of debt and loans by the County Council meant that the ratepayers were being plundered for the personal benefit of the Councillors and their "friends," and that in voting for the so-called "Municipal Reformers" they were striking against the system of municipal corruption described in the Standard libel as "Tammany." For this reason the result of the action against the Standard shows that not a particle of justification can be found, even when a specific instance of "Tammany" methods has been cited by the libeller.

Some weeks ago I noticed some interesting revelations in the Birmingham County Court concerning the methods of business of J. A. Palmer and Co., "C. A.," Colmore Chambers, Newhall-street, Birmingham, who circularise tradesmen against whom judgments are registered, offering their services "in protecting your estate from executioners." A still more instructive exposure was given in the Bangor County Court last week. Palmer—who has explained that the letters "C. A." appended to his name mean "corporate accountant," not "chartered accountant"—got himself appointed trustee under a deed of arrangement with some of the creditors of a tradesman at Llanfairfechan. This was in January, 1903, and between that date and February, 1906, the debtor paid Palmer altogether £287, which was actually £68 more than the amount of his original indebtedness. The creditors, however, had received nothing like the sums to which they were entitled. The dividends that were paid were paid very irregularly and after long delays; Palmer's returns to the Board of Trade were inaccurate, and the Judge found that in various ways he had committed serious breaches of trust. His Honour ordered Palmer to pay into Court a sum of £94 1s. 8d. still remaining in his possession, deprived him of all the remuneration that he claimed, and removed him from the trusteeship. Evidently tradesmen who are in financial difficulties might just as well leave themselves to the mercies of "the executioners" as seek the protection of J. A. Palmer and Co.

In answer to the solicitor who has been complaining of the difficulty experienced in obtaining information from hospital surgeons in preparing claims for compensation in accident cases, I have received a long letter setting forth the case from the surgeons' point of view. The most effective point in it is that the majority of these cases are settled without litigation, and that very few come into Court. This answers, up to a point, what I have said as to the doctor being sure of his fee if he is eventually wanted as a witness. But I cannot see that it justifies the refusal to give a solicitor any information about a case without payment in advance, and my present correspondent, though writing at considerable length, really does not address himself to this point.

The doctor is justified in putting himself in the same boat as the solicitor; that is to say, if it is a case for compensation, he is entitled to be paid a fee for his opinion. But the question is whether he is justified in requiring the solicitor to pay this fee out of his own pocket before the latter knows whether there is a case worth his while to take up. The natural result of this attitude on the doctor's part is that the solicitor, if he has any doubt about the strength of the case and the solvency of the client, will refuse to pay, and the patient may suffer in consequence. The evil consequences to the patient are not confined to the cases here and there where for this reason a good claim may be dropped. What is to my mind the more serious consideration is that the solicitors who are disposed to take up cases of this class for working men, and finance them out of their own pockets "on spec.," are the least desirable representatives of the profession, and the men who take the heaviest toll out of any cash their clients may recover. Everything that adds to the necessary preliminary disbursements of the solicitor before he knows what sort of a case he has got tends to drive the injured workman into the hands of this class of practitioners. I feel rather strongly on this point, having seen a great deal lately of the shady practices of certain solicitors in workmen's compensation cases.

Of course, the doctor may say that he too must protect himself against the shady solicitor, which is best done by following the principle of "cash with order." But surely the doctor can sufficiently protect himself by stipulating expressly with the solicitor for the payment of his fee in due course. If the case is a genuine one, the compensation is a certainty, and unless the solicitor is a downright rogue there is no reason why he should not see all the costs paid out of it. If he is a downright rogue he will not be able to catch the doctor a second time. My medical correspondent draws a moving picture of a house-surgeon going his rounds or assisting his chief in an operation, and called away at any or every moment to see somebody who wants information in a compensation case. But does he mean that the inconvenience of this will be less if a fee is paid? Or does he mean that to insist upon a fee chokes off such inquiries? The latter alternative confirms my view of the matter.

After all, it is as well to remember that a hospital is a charitable institution designed for the benefit of the patients and nobody else. It seems to me that the hospital managers should deal with this matter. In many cases all the information that a solicitor requires in the first stage of an accident case could be supplied by a secretary or clerk as well as by a member of the medical staff. In such cases it could be supplied for a very small payment, of which the hospital would get the benefit.

Brutality is cheap at Birmingham—at least, the brutality which is vented upon policemen. Mr. A. M. Chance, the chairman of the City Justices, drew attention to the matter at their meeting last week, and urged that more severe sentences should be passed for the protection of the police. He showed that over three hundred charges of assault upon policemen are dealt with every year, and that the great majority of the offenders are let off with fines of ten or twenty shillings, the option of such fines being given even in cases in which officers have been injured so seriously that they have had to be off duty for periods ranging from a week to a month, or longer. It was agreed that a similar return should be obtained with regard to assaults upon women, and probably it will be found that this form of violence is treated with equally misguided leniency. In Birmingham, as elsewhere, the magistrates rarely hesitate to inflict a term of imprisonment for an offence against property, however trifling it may be; but, as my Legal Pillory shows, they generally seem to think that it is sufficient to impose a small pecuniary penalty for any outrage on the person, and more especially for the kicking of a woman or a policeman.

The most outrageous sentences recorded in my Legal Pillory this week are those inflicted by the learned Recorder of Colchester upon three boys charged with petty theft. The most muddle-headed magistrate on the bench could hardly hope to rival the fatuousness of the sentences in question, and I trust that they will be forthwith brought before the Home Secretary for revision. An extraordinary manifestation of the motor-phobia to which the occupants of county benches appear peculiarly prone was given at Newbury, where a motorist was fined £5 and costs for not producing a licence which he had forwarded to another Bench for endorsement. In this case, and in those heard at Coventry, King's Heath, and Swindon, an interesting comparison is afforded as to the punishment awarded motorists for purely technical offences and that given to drunken drivers of horses whose actions on the highway had proved a real menace to the safety of the public:—

Perth Police Court. Alexander Paton, charged with assaulting Mary Ann Wilson by striking her in the face and kicking her. Fined 30s.

Birmingham Police Court. Before the Stipendiary and other magistrates. H. Parker, charged with assaulting Ada Hickman. He struck her several times in the face, blackening both her eyes, and damaged her hat and jacket. Fined 20s. and costs, and 2s. 6d. and costs for the damage.

Hertford Police Court. James Simpkins, charged with assaulting Celia Grumball. He knocked her down several times and struck her with a poker. Bound over to keep the peace.

Stratford Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Tabrum, Roberts and Tomlinson. Warwick Trivett, charged with assaulting F. T. Robinson. Robinson was knocked down several times, his head cut, and his eyes blackened. Fined 20s. and costs.

King's Heath Police Court. John James, charged with being drunk in charge of a horse and trap. He was driving at a furious rate and narrowly escaped a number of accidents. Fined 20s. and costs.

Swindon Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Stote, Chandler, Deacon and Riley. W. Pitt, charged with being drunk in charge of a horse and trap. He collided with and overturned one trap, and smashed the splash board of another. Fined 10s. and 5s. costs.

Loddon Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. Holmes, Crisp, and the Rev. H. Thursby. A. Williams, charged with cruelty to a horse. It was starved to death in a stable. Fined £1 and costs.

Alton Petty Sessions. E. H. Peddle, farmer, and A. Peddle, his son, charged with cruelty to over 400 head of cattle, sheep and horses, by starving them. A. Peddle fined £5 and costs, the case against E. Peddle dismissed because of want of evidence of guilty knowledge.

Perth Police Court. Before Bailie Isaac. David Donald, charged with begging. Twenty days' imprisonment.

Liverpool Police Court. Before the Stipendiary. Michael Kelly, a youth, charged with stealing a pocketful of rags, value 6d., belonging to the Dock Board. One month's imprisonment.

Barnsley Police Court. Albert Marshall, charged with game trespass. Fined 40s. and costs.

Ilkeston Petty Sessions. Ann Riley, 76 years of age, charged with stealing a pair of cycling shoes. Fourteen days' imprisonment.

Needham Market Petty Sessions. Before General Phillips, General Martin, and Messrs. Snell and Tidswell. George Thompson, charged with stealing a live fowl, valued at 2s. 6d. Three months' hard labour.

Newbury County Police Court. Before Mr. M. H. Best, and other magistrates. Mr. N. Wood, charged with failing to produce his motor-car licence when called upon. It had been sent to another Bench for endorsement, and not returned. Fined £5 and costs.

Coventry County Petty Sessions. Before Lieut.-Col. Beech, Messrs. W. Johnson, M.P., Taylor, Hollick, Woolton, and J. Marriott. J. W. F. Crouch, charged with exceeding the speed limit on a motor car. Fined £5 and costs.

Malmesbury Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. T. L. Hinwood and the Mayor. William Exell, charged with refusing to do his allotted task at the workhouse. Twenty-one days' hard labour.

Colchester Quarter Sessions. Before Judge Philbrick, K.C. George Brooks, H. Collins, and C. H. Skully, charged with stealing various small articles, the property of J. Lilley. The two first were boys under 14 years of age and Skully was 16. Skully two months' imprisonment, Collins and Brooks one month each, and a birching.

ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS. Nearly 8,000 convictions last year. Complaints marked "Private," absolutely confidential.—SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

Aberayon Petty Sessions. Evan Davies, farmer, charged with cruelty to sheep and lambs by starving them. They were simply skin and bone, and some were too weak to walk. Fined 1s. and costs.

Rhondda Petty Sessions. H. Clifton, charged with stealing a clipping machine and pair of scissors. He borrowed the article and afterwards sold them. One month's hard labour.

Retford Borough Police Court. Before the Mayor, the Rev. T. Morgan, Messrs. Hirst and Fletcher. George Cant, charged with causing a horse to be worked in an unfit state. It was attached to a dray loaded with hay, and fell on the shafts. When examined it was found to be suffering from old-standing lameness, and was totally unfit for work. Fined 10s. and costs.

I have pilloried a good many examples of Scottish justices' justice in the columns of TRUTH at one time or another, but have never yet met with a more astounding example than is disclosed in the following extract from the report of a case of theft of a pair of boots which appeared last week in the Glasgow Herald:

At the Northern Police-court on Friday, the lady and the two gentlemen were sentenced to 60 days' imprisonment each. William Sutherland, who gave evidence for the defence, impressed the magistrate the wrong way, with the result that his Honour (Bailie Wallace) sentenced him to 21 days' imprisonment for concealing the truth.

I have consulted an eminent legal authority on the subject, but he, like myself, had never heard that "concealment of the truth" by a witness was an offence punishable summarily in a Scottish police-court. Unless, therefore, the report is a mere piece of imagination on the part of the reporter, I should be glad to be further informed concerning the provisions of the Scottish law which place such drastic powers in the hands of the bailie.

An application was made the other day to the Birkenhead magistrates to grant a licence for a Sunday concert in aid of a summer camp for poor children. The promoters had, however, been injudicious enough to have advertised the concert before obtaining the licence, and when the application came before the worthy justices they rejected it with a great show of moral indignation on Sabbatarian grounds. Far be it from me to suggest that in this instance the shock to the magisterial dignity had more to do with the refusal than the shock to the magisterial conscience. The only moral to be drawn from the incident is to take nothing for granted where Shallow is concerned, for he is just as likely to prove deaf to the pleadings of philanthropy as he is blind to the claims of justice.

WHO WAS "SAMUEL"?

The Samuel whose spirit came—
As we've read in the papers—
And in the Jewish prophet's name
Cut such amazing capers,

He can't have been, from what befel,
The solemn Hebrew feller.
More like he was that Samivel
Whose other name was Weller.

With reference to a recent case before the Melrose J.P.s, in which a charge of cruelty against a farmer was found "Not proven," I have received a letter from the Chairman explaining the reasons why the Bench came to this decision. It was alleged that the accused starved a number of animals, and, as I stated in a paragraph a fortnight ago, the failure of the magistrates to convict him was sharply criticised by some of the local public interested in the S.P.C.A. Having regard, however, to various facts in favour of the defence, to which my correspondent now draws attention, I am inclined to think that the decision of the magistrates was a proper one, and I regret that exception was taken to it.

A member of the legal profession sends me the document printed below. Those of my readers who know the record of the Imperial Art Supply Company will readily guess the circumstances under which it was written. A lady desirous of home employment had paid 7s. 6d. to the rascal trading under this name for the "outfit" with which she was to colour prints or photographs for him, had been put off week after week with the usual intimations that her work "showed promise," and that this or that little detail required alteration, until she recognised how she was being fooled, and requested the return of her money. The following is the reply, and it is a frank, if unintentional, admission of the character of the trick:—

In reply to your letter, if you will be so good as to refer to the order form, you will see that the outfit is only returnable when your first effort shows no promise, and as your first effort did show promise, we expect you to keep on until the prints are correctly coloured.—Yours truly, p.p. The Imperial Art Supply Company.

It is no exaggeration to say that there must be thousands of women, mostly in reduced circumstances, who have been defrauded of their money by means of this trick. The innumerable warnings that have been given in Truth are in great part futile, because the people on whom the trick is played are not in a position to read sixpenny newspapers, and still more because the newspapers which they are more likely to see persist in publishing the advertisements of the Imperial Art Supply Company, and a host of similar swindles, perfectly well knowing their fraudulent character. The only way of checking such frauds is by making an example of the swindlers individually, and as the gentleman who forwards the above document is a lawyer, I suggest this course for his consideration. The amount of evidence respecting the Imperial Art Supply Company in my possession is quite sufficient to secure a conviction, and is at the service of anybody who will move in the matter; and I think there is enough of it to justify a request that the Public Prosecutor should take up the case, if anybody else will take the first step.

For the information of the American police, if they take any interest in this matter, I may mention that the latest communication from the gold-brick gangs received in this country was dated from New York on March 28, and that the address given for reply was 215, Reid-avenue, Brooklyn, the writer calling himself H. Charles Cambell. The letter in this case fell into the hands of the widow of the deceased gentleman to whom it was addressed, and I am told that she was completely taken in by it, but fortunately consulted the vicar of her parish, "who is a reader of Truth, and recognised the swindle at once." This just shows how important it is that country vicarages should be supplied with Truth. I know that the clergy feel this, and act upon it to the best of their ability, but seeing how limited are their means in too many cases, it is worth considering whether some arrangement should not be made to pay for the paper out of parochial funds. I commend the matter to the consideration of churchwardens.

I suppose that nothing will ever eradicate the belief of a host of greenhorns in the existence of an infallible betting system. Here is an interesting specimen of the letters which I continually receive:—

Would you kindly let me know, re the enclosed—is this system worth the five guineas, and could you send me particulars of how same is worked? I hope you will kindly let me know full particulars per return. I may tell you I have before paid pounds for worthless systems, and I hope this time, through your private information, that I will either purchase a good system or be saved five guineas.

The enclosure is a prospectus from "James Brown"—one of the innumerable aliases of E. W. Beston, of Birmingham—in reference to what is described as "The Longshot Certainty Method," which "successfully and consistently lands brilliant outsiders," and enables the backer "to win big profits with small stakes" at every meeting. Though "the system itself is worked without telegrams," James Brown includes in the price of five guineas "a week's two-horse wires," for which (he says) his ordinary charge is £5.

It does not seem to have struck the writer of the above letter as curious that the inventor of this "miraculous method," worked without telegrams, should lay stress on the fact that he gives away with it a series of "wires," which, on his own showing, would be superfluous. Nor does he appear to have considered it very strange that James Brown should be content to remain a touting tipster instead of devoting himself to the piling up of big profits by "backing triumphant long shots." My ingenuous correspondent evidently thinks it quite possible that I can tell him how a fortune can be made by this system, but let me assure him that if I knew I should use the knowledge for my own benefit rather than his. I do not know precisely what it is that Brown, otherwise Beston, calls "The Longshot Certainty Method." But I know enough of betting systems, and Beston, too, to be quite sure that it is a swindle.

A sufferer from the plague of moneylending circulars writes:—

May I claim your protection from the fraternity of moneylenders, in whose "interest" you exert the power of your pen? "I owe no man anything and I give tithe of all I possess," and yet this comfortable position is assailed by the money lenders week in and week out. In letters directed to my town and country houses they implore me to borrow any sum from £5,000 to £10,000 on my note of hand without any inquiries, and at little more interest than would be charged by my banker, from whose inquisitive spirit I must be anxious to conceal any temporary want of hard cash. One philanthropist reaches the high level of being "at home" from 4 to 6, and if I will confide to him my trouble he will relieve it within an hour. It is no exaggeration to say that these letters, marked "Private," reach me in such numbers as to suggest to my servants that I am carrying on a domestic or political intrigue of serious dimensions.

There are a good many of us who would like to be protected from this annoyance. At my own humble abode I have just received an offer of an advance of from £50 to £5,000 from "John Weston and Co.," 30, Duke-street, Piccadilly, though it is only a week or two ago since I explained in these columns that this is the newest alias of an unprincipled bloodsucker named Pockett. He is, however, too parsimonious a rascal to send out his circulars as private letters; they are distributed in open envelopes with half-penny stamps, so that one's servants may read them. Another of these sharks, "Mr. F. Watts" (otherwise David Feedman), 95, Jermyn-street, last week directed one of his circulars to Mr. Labouchere at TRUTH Office. That shows how hopeless it is for any one to expect to escape the attentions of these pests.

Dieudonné Hotel and Restaurant, Ryder Street, S.W. Excellent cuisine, prompt service, and comfort. Luncheons and Dinners Prix Fixe and à la carte. Mod. charges. Tel. No., 5265, Ger. Open on Sundays.

Here is the latest from Professor Harris Edison, the "Practical Astrologer" of Binghampton, U.S.A., whose trade circulars have already been noticed in TRUTH:—

DEAR FRIEND,—There must be some good reason why you have not sent me your order for a Yearly Horoscope or Daily Guide for 1907. . . . .

Possibly your expenses, which are, of course, heavier than usual at this time of year, has [sic] interfered. If such is the case I shall be very glad to help you.

From what I have seen regarding your indications I should not feel right in my own mind to let you go along a day further in a blind haphazard manner, for I certainly want to see you succeed this year, and do not wish to feel that you are losing any more opportunities for lack of knowledge.

My price for a Yearly Reading is four shillings, and I shall not reduce that price; but here is a way in which I can help you. I am willing to wait for my pay and profit until you feel perfectly willing to fully pay me. I figure that it costs fully 2s. 6d. to fill an order for a Yearly Reading, and this doesn't cover my work or profits. . . . . If, therefore you will send me 2s. 6d. in penny stamps or money order to pay me this expense of putting up your horoscope I will send on your Yearly Horoscope Reading at once and you can pay me the other 1s. 6d. any time before next September. That is, if you have derived benefit from it and are ready and willing to pay me. . . . . If you do not feel at that time ready and willing to pay me the balance you need not pay me another cent.

The American astrologers seem to have invested their ancient art with a sort of family likeness to the confidence trick.

Several inquiries have reached me during the last few weeks respecting a firm called the Auto-Fountain Company, of Cowcross-street, Smithfield, which advertises a small fountain for the purpose of table decoration. The inquirers, having ordered and paid for the said fountains, have been unable to obtain them. On communicating with the Auto-Fountain Company, I found it to consist of a man in no very large way of business, who explained that he made the things himself, and that he was rather overdone with orders, which had caused delay in delivery. He promised to attend to the dissatisfied customers, but week after week has gone by, and I hear that he has in no case kept his promise. Whether he intends to or not is really immaterial, for no tradesman has a right to take cash in payment for an order which he is unable to execute within a reasonable time. I mention the matter for the information of any of my readers who may contemplate ordering "auto-fountains" through this advertisement.

CLARIDGE'S HOTEL, BROOK-STREET, Grosvenor-square.—Over 300 rooms; nearly 100 bathrooms. Royal suite, private entrance. Situation ensures perfect quiet.

THE BUTTERFLY AND THE ANTS.

One August Morning, warm and bright,
Dame BUTTERFLY winged forth her Flight,
Now lingered dallying here, now there,
And revelled in the Sunshine fair.
But as she flitted to and fro,
Having no special where to go,
Her roving, circumspective Glance
Descried a Host of busy ANTS,
Who, laden all with Foodstuffs, pressed
Towards their subterranean Nest.
"Poor Things!" the pitying Dame declares,
"How far my Lot excelleth theirs,
Who Labour's Trammels never leave
From early Morn till dewy Eve;
While I enjoy these Gambols gay,
And please myself the livelong Day!"
She spake, and aimless onward sped
Where'er her vagrant Fancy led,
Now sipping of some honeyed Flower,
Now resting in some shady Bower;
And still not yet the Summer Sun
Through half his circling Course had run.
But now no more the Welkin bright
Avails to keep her Spirits light;
No more the Sight or Scent of Flowers,
No more the Cool of shady Bowers
Can kill, for her, the tedious Hours.
Yea! Sick of mere Enjoyment's Quest,
By Pleasure sated, cloyed, depressed,
She lades with Sighs her every Breath,
And owns she's simply bored to Death.
'Twas then, as on her Homeward Way
She sped, no longer blithe nor gay,
Her Wings Dame BUTTERFLY have borne
Past where she'd seen the ANTS that Morn.
But they, their arduous Labour done,
Were now, some basking in the Sun,
And some—more active Insects—played
At Games, and sported in the Shade;
But all, 'twas very plain to see,
Were happy as they well could be.
At whom the jaded Trifler gazed,
Envious in Part, in Part amazed:
"How is 't that you," she loud exclaims,
"Can thus enjoy your homely Games,
While me, my far more copious Store
Of rare Enjoyments simply bore?"
Whereto an Emmet made reply,
Cocking the while his small, black Eye:
"You're bored, 'cause Play without Cessation Soon palls through too much Recreation."

Moral.

Pleasure alone spells true Enjoyment,
Which comes as Respite from Employment."

SCRUTATOR.

THE KING AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

WHENEVER the King goes abroad it is now the practice of the sensation-mongers of the London press and their Continental competitors to discover some deep-seated diplomatic scheme as the reason for his taking a holiday. The climax of the nonsense promulgated in this way was the circumstantial account of an Anglo-Spanish naval and military alliance with which the Daily Mail kept up its reputation last Thursday. His Majesty makes a friendly call on a young sovereign who has married into his family, and forthwith Spain is going to construct a powerful fleet under British supervision, and to fortify four harbours for our use in time of war; we are going to finance the Spanish debt on a "Goschen" basis; and the two nations are to band together their navies and armies against all comers—particularly one whose name may or may not begin with W. Nothing like this has been sold for a halfpenny since we had the revelation of our agreement to co-operate in a forthcoming Franco-German war by seizing the Kiel Canal and marching on Berlin through Holstein. Again, the King of England continues his holiday cruise and meets the King of Italy. The newspapers are at once equally convinced, and equally well informed, of the deep international significance of the event. The two sovereigns discussed, we are told, not only the mutual relations of their countries, but the attitude of Italy towards proposals at The Hague for a reduction of armaments. A general agreement was arrived at between them. Finally, as the outcome of the whole tour, journalistic inspiration has crystallised into a League of Mediterranean Powers, for the further discomfiture of the aforesaid W.

By Englishmen of average intelligence and education, the constitutional position of the King is too well understood for them to believe all this trash. Our King acts on the advice of his Ministers, and his Ministers are controlled by the majority of the Members of the House of Commons. Our policy is, therefore, thus decided by the will of the nation, and whether that majority be Liberal or Conservative, the King adopts it, and acts on it. This is what is meant by self-government, and the King is far too constitutional a Sovereign, and far too wise a man, to seek to impose his views—whatever they may be—on his Ministers. But abroad it would seem that our scheme of government is not so well realised. All these stories, therefore, of the intrigues of our King when abroad are listened to, and are often accepted as gospel truth. The consequence is that at present most foreigners are under the impression that the King of England holds that the best manner to prevent war is to isolate Germany by uniting the Continental powers in a sort of alliance against her, and that he is actually engaged in giving effect to this idea.

Naturally, this does not conduce to a friendly feeling on the part of Germany towards us. It is most desirable, therefore, that the Germans should clearly understand that these stories are the mere irresponsible chatter of newspaper scribes, without one scintilla of truth. Unfortunately, we have a number of very silly people amongst us who are always determined that there shall be at least one country filling the position of our natural enemy. A few years ago it was France, and then these fools lavished their favour on Germany. Now that we are on the best and most friendly terms with France, the natural enemy with them is Germany, and they never cease from seeking to stir up ill-feeling between us and the Germans. As the relations of the British and German Governments are perfectly friendly and correct, and no rational cause of quarrel between the two nations can be discovered, it is by no means easy to persuade the public that there is any real ground for antagonism between England and Germany, outside the daily need of a newspaper to supply the public with highly spiced reading matter. Hence the attempt is made to represent the King as the exponent of the idea that Germany is the enemy, and so unscrupulous are the mischief-makers on our side that they do not hesitate to suggest that his Majesty is moved by his personal sentiments to overstep his constitutional functions, and to engage on his own account in an intrigue against a foreign Government with which his own is in perfect friendship. No one has more cause to resent this than the King himself. It is, indeed, a gross libel upon him, and the more gross because his position precludes his denying the acts and motives attributed to him. It is the duty of loyal subjects, therefore, not merely to discredit all such insinuations, but to protest against them as forcibly as possible.

Southampton.—South-Western Hotel.—The new Dining room, elegant Lounges, Smoke-room, with Restaurant and Grill room on ground floor now open.—For tariff, apply to Manager.

LORD PORTSMOUTH AND HIS TENANT.

The following letter from the Earl of Portsmouth, Under-Secretary of State for War, was published in the Times of Tuesday:—

I have just heard that reference has been made to my conduct towards one of my tenants.

I am reluctant to appear to concern myself with personal attacks or to intrude any private affairs of mine upon public attention: but I am told that, in justice to myself, I ought to say that the tenant in question did not leave his farm because I desired to have it overrun with excessive ground game, seeing that the farm was at once taken by an adjoining tenant, who must have known all the circumstances of the case, at an increased rent.

What Lord Portsmouth has been told that he ought to say is no answer whatever to the statements which were made in last week's Truth, and which were the subject of questions to the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on Monday. "The tenant in question," says his lordship, "did not leave his farm because I desired to have it overrun with excessive ground game." He left, of course, because he received twelve months' notice to quit. This notice was given subsequently to a dispute that had arisen beween him and Lord Portsmouth with regard to the killing of hares on the farm. The Ground Game Act entitles tenants to kill hares. Lord Portsmouth's agent informed this tenant and others that they must cease to do so. The tenant in question refused, pointing out that if the hares were not kept down his crops would suffer great damage. He also inquired whether, if he did give up his right under the Act, compensation would be allowed him for the damage to his crops. This question was not answered, but Lord Portsmouth himself addressed to the tenant a letter containing the passages I quoted last week. In view of what has been described in some quarters as his lordship's "denial," I now give the letter in full. It will be observed that there is a reference to "the common." This land is not, in fact, a "common" in the ordinary meaning of the word, but a part of the farm for which the tenant was paying rent:—

Hurstbourne Park, Whitchurch, Hants.
January 25, 1903.

Dear Sir,—I have seen Mr. Asprey, who appears to have desired to have had a friendly talk with you, which I hoped would have settled the question.

I have no intention to make a mountain out of a molehill, nor am I concerned about the trumpery loss of a few hares. To suppose any such thing would be an entire misconception of the matter.

I do not understand that you deny your having been in the habit of constantly shooting the hares over your farm and of having come into the common which is almost a part of the Belts, and killed several hares there. My keepers know that I neither listen nor appreciate being bothered by frivolous complaints. I have no intention, let me say in my own interests, of having my property destroyed by excessive ground game, but if you or any other tenant insist upon your power under the Ground Game Act of constantly disturbing the land in pursuit of ground game, I must at once and frankly say that I must adopt the only remedy which I possess of changing tenants, or farming the land myself.

I have no intention to listen to tales of one tenant against another, or to allow my keepers to be bringing me constant grievances; but having satisfied myself that in this case I have reasonable ground for complaint, the sum and conclusion of the whole matter is this, which no interview or talking over can affect, that if you cannot accept in good part the advice which Mr. Asprey proffered with, I can assure you, the most friendly intention, it would be fairer to both parties for you to arrange to leave, which I trust would be conducted on both sides with perfect courtesy and consideration.—Believe me, yours truly,

PORTSMOUTH.

As I stated last week, this tenant, though he had exercised his right to shoot hares, had always done so with due consideration for his landlord's sport, and there had never been any scarcity of ground game on the farm. Lord Portsmouth did not adopt his "only remedy" at once, and the tenant continued to shoot hares as before. In 1905, however, he received twelve months' notice, expiring last Michaelmas, to give up the farm, which he had occupied for over thirty years. Unless Lord Portsmouth can deny the authorship of the above letter—which I do not think that he can do—it seems idle to suggest that there was no connection between the tenant's insistence upon his rights under the Ground Game Act and his expulsion from his farm.

MR. RHODES AND UPPINGHAM SCHOOL.

The grievance of the Vicar of Whaplode against the "Rectors" who hold the great tithe of his parish was stated in my recent account of the matter somewhat unfairly to Uppingham School. One of the Uppingham Trustees has been good enough to forward a full explanation of the position of the school in relation to Whaplode; the Uppingham Trustees, as shown by their accounts, which I have before me, for two years receiving nothing directly from Whaplode parish. What they receive is an annual payment of about £620 (the amount seems to vary) from the Governors of Archdeacon Johnson's Hospitals. I gather that the last-named charity is a sixteenth century foundation, under which Uppingham and Oakham Schools benefit in connection with certain hospitals founded by Archdeacon Johnson. Further, the endowment of Uppingham School is inconsiderable, amounting to only £957 per annum in all, and the school is fully self-supporting. The school fees amount to £16,000 or £17,000 a year, or more, and the amount spent on exhibitions was £2,445 in 1905, which was more than four times the income received from the Johnson Trust in the same year.

It will be seen from this that when Mr. Rhodes talks, in the pamphlet which I quoted on April 17, about his parish being impoverished "because the great and affluent have given their sons an expensive education under cost price at Uppingham Schools and poor Whaplode Church has had to pay some of the difference," he is talking somewhat at random. Assuming that the £1,600 per annum derived from Whaplode tithe goes to the Governors of Archdeacon Johnson's Hospitals, less than half of it eventually finds its way to Uppingham School, and the number of those to whom it can be said to afford an education under cost price, that is to say the holders of exhibitions either in the School or at the Universities, is very limited, three-fourths of the exhibitions being provided out of the profits on the working of the school.

Nor is this the whole extent of the Vicar's mistake. He gives in his pamphlet a long list of gentlemen who are presumably the trustees holding the Whaplode tithe, and he states that "these practically represent the Governing Body of Uppingham Schools." This statement was followed in TRUTH of April 17. The Trustees of Uppingham School—there is no body known as Governors—are a different body of gentlemen altogether. It is true that nine of those mentioned by Mr. Rhodes are Uppingham Trustees, but they are only half the board, and there remain twelve on Mr. Rhodes's list who have apparently nothing to do with Uppingham School. It is also obvious that the Trustees of Uppingham School, collectively, have no responsibility, legal or moral, towards Whaplode parish. Even if they receive a portion of the tithe from the Governors of Archdeacon Johnson's Hospitals, they have no concern with it, and no power to deal with it, except in accordance with the terms of their own trust. The trustee who gives me this information states that during the fifteen years that he has held this office, no communication from the Vicar of Whaplode has ever come before the board to his knowledge, nor has he any personal knowledge of the Vicar's grievances. If Mr. Rhodes, however, had made any application to the trustees, it is clear that they could have done nothing for him.

Although Mr. Rhodes has been hitting somewhat wildly, as country parsons sometimes do, the grievances of himself and his parish are none the less substantial. But as I have indicated before, they are only the common grievances of all parishes the tithes of which have passed in bygone times into lay hands, or been otherwise appropriated to extra-parochial purposes. I presume that if Mr. Rhodes confines his attention to the actual Rectors of the parish, who may or may not be the governors of Archdeacon Johnson's Hospitals, he will be met with much the same difficulty as if he appealed to the Trustees of Uppingham School. A trustee has no legal power to spend the trust money in any way but as the terms of the trust direct. In the eye of the law he is a machine without reason and without conscience. The abuses that have grown up in connection with ecclesiastical property, and tithe more than anything else, can only be effectually remedied by legislation, and one of the great difficulties in the way of legislation is that those who are interested in the maintenance of the abuses are more powerful than those who suffer by them. Remedial legislation, therefore, is only likely to come from the Government, and only from a Radical Government. Some day, no doubt, a Radical Government will tackle the question, but I do not suppose it will be the present one, and I fear that the result will not be agreeable to the Church at large.

THE DAVIS NEWSPAPER TRICK.

During the past week a great deal of additional information has come to hand respecting the doings of Mrs. Davis, alias Walker, in the retail newspaper trade. There seems to be no end to the people who have been victimised by her, and they all tell the same tale, with immaterial variations. In one case a victim states that on complaining that she was not receiving the papers she had paid for, she received a letter explaining that Mrs. Davis was ill. This is capped by another witness who, on making a similar complaint, received a letter from Mr. Davis informing him of "my wife's unexpected decease." This letter, which is in the same insolent tone as other letters from Mr. Davis to aggrieved customers of Mrs. Davis, was written in the first week of March, and bore the address, c.o. Mrs. Flood, 96, Pershore-road, Birmingham. It is evident that the couple were then in that neighbourhood, because other letters written by Mr. Davis about the same time bear a Birmingham post-mark, but probably the address was only a temporary one. As I said last week, I do not suppose that the people who paid for newspapers are the only people who have cause to regret their dealings with Mrs. or Mr. Davis; and I have heard from a firm who supplied a small quantity of goods to the lady when she was at Stratton Hall, South Petherton, in the early part of last year, and have never to this day been able to obtain payment.

In view of all that has now come to light, it may interest those who have had dealings with this worthy pair to see the letter with which, as mentioned last week, I have been favoured by Mr. Davis. It strikes me as an amusing example of the sort of bounce to which such people resort when they feel themselves getting into a corner:—

Norton, Stoke-under-Ham,
Somerset.
April 20, 1907.

The Editor,
Truth Newspaper,
Carteret Street,
Westminster, S.W.

Sir,—My attention has only just been drawn to your paragraph regarding Mrs. Davis.

I wish to say that it is perfectly true Mrs. Davis received money from various persons for forwarding papers, and for twelve months has done so without complaint.

Of course you are not aware of the arrangements, and I am only sorry you inserted the paragraphs which bear such a damaging complexion to me, especially without enquiry as to the true circumstances.

As a matter of fact, Mrs Davis, when the whole of the transactions are collected together, is the person victimized, as she not only sold but purchased papers, and I can show many cases where people received very good exchange or cash in advance for papers never sent them at all. Mrs. Davis had to purchase therefore over again new. . . .

I wish to point out to you this very important fact: that in all cases the persons complaining have received copies of papers to the full value of their subscription at least, and in the majority of cases a great deal more, so your remarks as to their being "victimized" is incorrect.

I have in my possession receipts for all papers purchased, and the cost has far exceeded the amount which Mrs. Davis received.

The persons who buy papers second-hand are undoubtedly the most unreasonable people to deal with.

In many instances papers were discontinued on account of disgraceful postcards which are sent when a paper does not arrive by a particular post, and I think you will agree with me there are always circumstances to prevent a paper or anything sent through the post being delivered by a certain post.

You may be surprised to learn that postcards of this description are used as a means of blackmail, and I had to leave my friend's house where I stayed when I left Bude in consequence of postcards of this nature.

The method employed by these persons is very simple. They pay a subscription perhaps for two or three papers, and when they have been forwarded for a considerable time, probably six months or more, make a complaint and then demand the whole subscription returned on a postcard containing threats. This procedure is universal, and I have come to the conclusion that Mrs. Davis is not the first person who has been treated in the same way.

You will excuse this long letter, but with my assurances that any matter of complaint which you may receive can be fully explained by me, and I shall ask you to be good enough to give me particulars of any such.

I will not comment upon your paragraph, as I feel the statements which must have been put before you, doubtless on the face of them, justified your action, but I think you will agree with me, when you have investigated the matter and made fuller enquiry, that your remarks were somewhat premature.

In no case has the amount paid to Mrs. Davis been more than 3d. a copy, to include extra numbers and postage for 6d. papers, and 1½d. a copy for 3d. papers. This is apart from the cost of correspondence entailed.

You will gather from this that in the event of the papers having to be purchased new the loss soon becomes very considerable.

I enclose one postcard for your perusal. This person started on 1st October, paid 7s., to include postage and double numbers.

I have made no secret of my whereabouts, and all letters have been forwarded, but as previously stated, I was staying with friends who desired me to leave, and who have not been friendly since in consequence of these postcards.

The statements which you have published have brought about a state of things which you could not foresee, as a number of people who have been forwarding papers have returned balance to me and declined to send for the future.

I do not know why you should single out Mrs. Davis in particular as a transgressor in connection with the sale of second-hand papers, as there are in my possession a number of letters from different people who state they have on previous occasions paid for papers and never received any. I also have the names and addresses of some of these persons who are evidently doing the same thing now, but nothing has previously appeared in your columns regarding their "modus operandi."

The persons I refer to are "swindlers," and Mrs. Davis is not, which is quite easy to prove.

With regard to the whole of the transactions Mrs. Davis herself arranged them all, and I was not concerned in any way, and she always fulfilled her engagements.

It might interest you to know that a considerable number who subscribed received their papers regularly and renewed their subscription. Does this strike you as a swindle? You can have names and addresses if necessary.

In any case, before denouncing persons in this manner as birds of prey, and referring to their "victims," you should always make enquiries.

In conclusion I must ask you not to connect my name in any way with the transactions.

The best way to bring about a satisfactory settlement with the persons who are aggrieved is for you to send me the names and addresses to the enclosed address, and I am willing to do my best to meet them reasonably.—Yours truly, p.p. R. Davis.

It will be readily understood why I said last week that I could not accept the statements in this letter in the face of the mass of evidence I had respecting the game that Mrs. Davis had been carrying on. For the same reason the letter is not worth discussing now, and all the less so since Mr. Davis has not thought fit to offer any explanation of the numerous facts which were given in Truth last week. In point of fact, the only explanation he could give, so far as he himself is concerned, is that his wife had been playing all these tricks without his knowledge, and that she has even gone the length of writing letters to the customers in his name, including the one which gave the intimation, at the beginning of March, of her own recent decease.

Not the least amusing part of Mr. Davis's letter is the allusion to the inconvenience which he has suffered in consequence of the customers complaining to him on postcards, and the consequent unpleasantness that has arisen between him and the friends in whose houses he has been staying. This sounds very big. I suppose one of the friends was Mrs. Flood, of Pershore-road, Birmingham, mentioned above; but I note that he now instructs me to address him at Stoke-under-Ham to the "care of Mrs. Thomas Sweet," so perhaps this hostess is not so squeamish about the newspaper business. If Norton, Stoke-under-Ham, is not his own house, it is rather curious that Mr. Davis should have given this address to the Post Office for the re-direction of his letters. This happens to be the address to which, as mentioned last week, a registered letter from one of his creditors, enclosing their little account, was re-directed by the Post Office, and at which the said registered letter was refused, although Mr. Davis is writing to me from the same address a week or two later. Another curious fact is that this letter to me, though dated from Stoke-under-Ham, was posted at Catford. It would seem that Mr. D. was temporarily staying with another friend there, and he had apparently taken a typewriter to his friend's house at Catford, as the letter is typewritten, even down to the signature. One result of this is that it deprives me of the opportunity of comparing Mr. D.'s handwriting with that of various letters which may or may not be his in the correspondence with discontented customers. All these little points have their peculiar suggestiveness in relation to Mr. Davis's assumption of injured innocence.

One or two of my correspondents have expressed willingness to take proceedings against Mrs. Davis if others will co-operate, and I shall be glad to hear from any who will do so, in order that I may put them into communication with one another, as it is certainly a case where it is desirable to make an example.

THE TALLYMAN AND THE COUNTY COURT.

Two cases heard last week at Grimsby County Court, before Sir Sherston Baker, illustrate in a striking way the mischievous results of credit trading in working-class homes. The plaintiff in both cases was a local tradesman named Jacob Alge. The name apparently indicates both a foreign and a Semitic origin, and the employee who appeared as a witness to prove the debts for Mr. Alge is described by the reporter as "a Hebrew who could not read the book entries unless they were written in the Hebrew character." The two defendants were a dustman and a working painter, and were sued for the price of clothing sold to their wives. In each case the goods were sold by a touting agent who called on the women in their husbands' absence. The dustman's wife was alleged to have purchased in this way a costume at £1 10s., a skirt at 18s. 6d., and a quilt at 9s. She paid one instalment of 3s., and then disappeared. The dustman stated that she had gone off with the children, and he had no idea where she had gone to. She had, very considerately, left behind her the pawn-tickets for his Sunday clothes and his boots. He gave her 22s. a week for housekeeping out of his 24s. a week wages, but he only allowed her to have a weekly account at one shop. He had given her a new costume at Christmas, and he was not aware that she possessed the clothing supplied by the plaintiff. The painter's case presented still more interesting features. He was sued for the price of a lady's coat supplied to his wife. In the absence of his wife, who was ill, he stated in the box that one day when he came home, his wife showed him a coat which had been left at the house by a canvasser. The lady explained that she had told the man that her husband did not approve of such transactions, and the canvasser had insisted on leaving the garment in order that the husband might see it, promising to call the next day and take it away if the husband was not sufficiently charmed by its appearance to authorise the transaction. The husband proved obdurate, but when the man called again he refused to take the coat away, saying that his "boss" would not allow him to do so, and he actually offered to pay the first instalment of 3s. out of his own pocket if the woman would keep the garment. The man gave no address, and consequently the coat could not be returned.

In both these cases, after hearing the evidence, the Judge gave judgment for the defendants, making at the same time some strong observations upon the system of trading disclosed in the evidence. His Honour also intimated, no doubt on the strength of his judicial experience, that there was a great deal too much of this sort of thing in Grimsby. The observation is strongly confirmed by the Grimsby Daily Telegraph in reporting the cases. The writer states that there prevails in the town a general system of purchasing goods on "the one shilling per week system," adding that though the extent of the trade cannot be accurately estimated, "it provides employment for a large number of touts and collectors, some of the latter having, according to the branches of the trade with which they are connected, from 300 to 700 names—which we know of personally—on their books to be called upon weekly." I do not suppose that this state of things is in any way peculiar to Grimsby. It is merely an indication of the extensive growth of credit trading among the working classes all over the country. As long, of course, as a working man is in regular employment and earning good wages, tradesmen will naturally allow him and his wife to run weekly bills for household necessaries, as they do their larger customers of the middle class. But the development of the instalment system of payment, coupled with the enormous growth of the system of giving credit in this way to perfect strangers by means of newspaper advertisements and transactions by post, has undoubtedly caused the working classes of the present day to contract debts more freely than any other class, and to an extent more disproportionate to their means, the disproportion being aggravated by the fact that in a vast number of cases the working man's income is far more precarious than that of the class above him.

This state of things is undoubtedly a social evil, but by far the worst part of it arises from the practice of tempting wives into debt by means of house-to-house canvassing, which is so strikingly exemplified in the two cases described above. The tallyman has always been a curse to working class homes. Wives who contract debts behind their husbands' backs are of course, common to all classes of society, from the highest to the lowest; but the lower you go in the social scale, the easier it is to tempt a woman into debt, because the greater is her difficulty in supplying the harmless and legitimate needs of herself and her household out of her small available cash. With the increasing competition of credit traders, the tallyman—or his successor, the canvasser for orders on the shilling a week instalment system—increases and multiplies, and at the same time becomes more and more unscrupulous in his methods. When he fails to obtain a firm order, he has at his command a dozen fraudulent dodges of faking up a bogus transaction, like that described by the painter in the Grimsby case; and the fact that the customers are poor and ignorant people, with little knowledge of the law and an exaggerated fear of the County Court, gives the opening for extorting payment by bluff and threats even where the claim might be successfully resisted. For every working class husband who comes into court to fight the case out, like the two men mentioned above, there must be hundreds who tamely submit to be fleeced on the strength of transactions by their wives, by which they are not legally bound, or of downright fraudulent claims for which neither husband nor wife could be successfully sued. The whole system is a prolific source not only of domestic misery, but of a vast amount of systematic swindling.

It would be visionary to expect that means will ever be found of preventing people getting into debt, to whatever class of society they may belong. But in the case of the working classes there has grown up the peculiar evil that people are encouraged to get into debt wholesale who have no visible security to offer for the credit given them. This is the fault of the County Court system, and, so far as the County Court is concerned, the evil is remediable. Of the huge sums recovered every year from small debtors by County Court process, the proportion recovered by the actual levying of execution is insignificant. I cannot find any return which gives the exact amounts; but it is certainly no exaggeration to say that in nine cases out of ten where a debt is recovered it is recovered by an order for payment by instalments under a judgment summons, and the whole effective force of this procedure is derived—not, as in the case of a High Court judgment, from the impendng seizure of goods under execution—but from the committal order, suspended so long as the instalments which the Court orders are paid. In other words, the system of debt recovery in the County Court rests upon imprisonment for debt. Upon this is built up the whole fabric of working-class indebtedness, with its incidental evils. If the abolition of imprisonment for debt, which has been evaded by the fiction of imprisonment for contempt of court, were made a reality, a man would only be able to obtain credit in proportion to his tangible assets available for seizure in execution; the giving of credit on the strength of the debtor's ability to pay in process of time out of his future earnings would disappear; and neither working men nor working women would be tempted to mortgage their wages in perpetuity by continually buying goods to-day which they can only hope to pay for to-morrow. This I have pointed out again and again in connection with the various evils to which the present County Court procedure gives rise, and I regret very much to see that, although the Lord Chancellor has brought in a Bill recently for the amendment of certain minor points in connection with County Court practice, he has not ventured to touch what is by far the most important matter of all. There is, however, no man in the present Government with sounder views on the subject of social reform, and one can only hope that before he vacates the Woolsack his attention may be seriously directed to this great evil, which lies entirely under his jurisdiction, and, unlike many social evils, can be remedied without any expenditure of money—on the contrary, with a very great saving of money to every one concerned.

THE THEATRES.

"The Duel," at the Garrick.

Mr. Arthur Bourchier appears for the second time, at least, in a spiritual capacity. But whereas the bishop of "The Bishop's Move" was a more or less companionable person, in the moral duel between the two brothers, which forms the theme of M. Henri Lavedan's play, which Mr. Bourchier has eviscerated for the English stage, Mr. Bourchier has attempted the character of the ascetic. Sincerity was the quality looked for in Father Daniel, the monk, and sincerity compels one to lament its absence. This is not to be wondered at, and Mr. Bourchier is to be congratulated all the same upon his bold attempt to storm the fortress of Asceticism. But the creator of Blagden has not managed to convince as the creator of Father Daniel. He does all that cleverness can do and, indeed, sometimes a little more, when, as at the end of the play, he bestows words of advice which should come from the lips of Monsignor Boleyn upon his spiritual inferior. All this proves that even actor managers are only mortal, but they should always try to be artistic, and it does not enhance the value of Father Daniel's part to be suddenly put into the shoes of Monsignor. The quarrels between the two brothers, both during and in the absence of the Duchess, were the most effective part of the play, for Mr. Bourchier can be angry effectively whether as priest or layman, because loss of self control puts every one upon the same level. Miss Violet Vanbrugh gave us a plaintive Duchess. One felt that the Duke beat her. One felt that she was a real person, and yet, with the best possible of excuses for falling in love with Sir Paul Forester, M.D., there yet remained a feeling of dissatisfaction with the association of the couple. Can one blame the actress or the actor? If anything, Mr. Cyril Keighley was a little too matter-of-fact as the eminent physician. Neither the matter nor the manner of his wooing seemed to me very interesting, and one missed in this love affair the sense of the thing that might have been. Mr. Sydney Valentine was by far the most realistic of the characters, giving to the part of the Bishop in partibus all the verisimilitude imaginable, and showing how firm is his grip of the character, how strong and supple the art which he uses in its portrayal. Habited in what looked like pontificals, Mr. Valentine continued to be natural, and even the overstrained adoration of the Chinaman in attendance upon him hardly jarred upon one.

I have not seen the play in the French, but am credibly informed that Mr. Bourchier has added to it the superfluous character of Major Townley, who appears at odd moments and keeps the audience informed of the plot. He also makes one or two remarks about borrowing his tutor's knife at Eton "to vivisect a cat," which one may safely set down as alien to M. Henri Lavedan's intention. "Foreign classics as curtailed, added to, and adapted by theatrical managers," would form an interesting theme for some quarterly reviewer with a sense of humour.

"The Sunken Bell," at the Waldorf Theatre.

Mr. Sothern and Miss Julia Marlowe were not well advised in opening their London campaign with Hauptmann's "Sunken Bell" in an American verse translation. The play itself is an elaborate German allegory, with all the repetitions and redundances into which almost all German writers fall, save, perhaps, Nietzsche and Heine, neither of whom, by the way, were dramatists. The translation must, therefore, not be blamed for being lengthy, and often very fatiguing to hear. It contains some creditable lines, and if the total were reduced to about one-third we should very likely enjoy the whole. As it is, Miss Marlowe's attempts to bewitch the audience as she bewitches Heinrich signally fail, and Mr. Sothern, for all his gifts, also fails to save us from ennui. There is a sense of unreality about Heinrich's fall on the mountain; his healing by the elfish maiden has little to convince, and one is more interested by Heinrich's wife, a part not intended by the dramatist to stand out. That is because we feel that she, at least, is a human being. As to Heinrich's dealings with the Sprite Rautendelein and the dwarfs of the mountain, it may be very subtle allegory, but we are not sufficiently interested in Heinrich or in his elfin mistress to care very much what they do. I very much doubt if modern audiences can be made to enjoy these elaborate poetical allegories. This one, at any rate, was well mounted; and, indeed, what gave me most pleasure during the evening was the beautiful waterfall cascading among grey boulders with the sense of towering mountain over all, which was the scene of the first and penultimate acts.

Joan of Arc.

I do not know why Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe selected two plays both with foreign plots, and one altogether foreign, for their first week's performance. True, they conclude it with Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," incomparably their best performance, as it is altogether out of comparison as a play to its predecessors on their programme. They should have begun at the end. This version of Joan of Arc's story takes the form of a five-act tragedy, the work of Mr. Mackaye. Without being especially notable for its quality, the blank verse was pleasant enough to the ear, and sufficiently often broken into with dialogue of every day not to pall.

Mr. Mackaye has allowed himself full licence, and bestowed a couple of lovers upon the maid, one of whom is distinguished as the student Mr. Sothern. Mr. Mackaye has also had recourse to every sort of mechanical device for heightening the effect of his play. But it may be doubted whether the constant apparition of denizens from another world does not rather upset the audience in their contemplation of the players, their pleasure in the writing of the play. Bastien Lepage, it is true, has given us an immortal picture of the Maid harkening to the voices in the orchard at Domrémy. Mr. Mackaye might perhaps have done better to limit himself to this, and rely upon legitimate effects for his impression. Personally, I prefer to believe that seers of visions, like the Maid of Orleans, really do see what they profess to see, but I do not think that their visions should therefore be visible to the eye of any one. I should, therefore, have preferred to hear Miss Marlowe say, "My voices," and to listen and be satisfied with that. The general effect produced by this well-mounted tragedy was that of what the French call a succès d'estime. On Friday we were still wavering uncertain as to the full extent of the powers of our visitors. On Friday evening we were satisfied.

Twelfth Night.

Here Miss Marlowe and Mr. Sothern for the first time showed beyond cavil that their claims to distinction are real. Yet Miss Marlowe set one at first a little against her, owing to the peculiar blue raiment in which her Viola emerges from the tempest-tossed seas. Mr. Sothern's rendering of Malvolio was quiet and restrained, yet he soon made it clear that he knew the character in all its shades, and had made a careful selection among alternatives. Less salient as regards the other characters of the play than the Malvolio of Mr. Tree, Mr. Sothern's conception is not less satisfactory. Miss Marlowe's method was also quiet, and it was not until about halfway through the play that one realised how remarkably fine a performance hers was. She is an actress who should be seen two or three times in order to appreciate her thoroughly. Miss Kate Phillips's Maria and the Sir Toby Belch of Mr. Buckstone were notably fine performances, and this production of "Twelfth Night" will certainly rank high in the theatrical history of "Twelfth Night."

"Mr. George," at the Vaudeville.

"Mr. George" may be dismissed in few words. "Mr. George" is a lady, senior partner in a firm of Boston merchants during the war of 1773. How a young and pretty girl like Miss Billie Burke becomes senior partner to Mr. Charles Hawtrey is Mr. Louis Parker's little joke. He reveals this to us in the first act, by means of letters from the young lady's father, deceased. It must be admitted that it is a very mild, as it is a very harmless, little joke. There are two prim old maidenly sisters to dislike the advent of Mr. George in petticoats when they hoped for trousers. There are clerks in attendance on "Mr George" and Mr. Hawtrey, there is the young Englishman whom "Mr. George's" father wishes to marry his daughter, but, of course, she loves, and eventually marries, Mr. Hawtrey. Then there is the other young lady, Miss Russon, who comes on just often enough to make "Mr. George" jealous, and has the extrinsic interest of having also played "The Belle of Mayfair." Mr. Parker lets off a little joke at intervals like the popping of the cork of a soda-water bottle. For instance, there is a partition between the two partners in the office, and Mr. Hawtrey contrives to give some moments of himself by peering round its corner. But it is the sparkle of soda-water, and one cannot help regretting that Mr. Hawtrey had not shaved off his moustaches in a better cause. These adornments of the male figure will be sadly missed, and, unlike whiskers, have not a sworn enemy in Mr. Frank Richardson. Miss Billie Burke looked and played very daintily, confirming the impression she gave me as "The Belle of Mayfair," that she has in her the makings of an actress of comedy.

"Mrs. Wiggs, of the Cabbage Patch," at Terry's.

This play is an adaptation from a novel of the same title, which title has had great vogue in both forms in the United States. An American company, headed by Mrs. Madge Carr Cook, who plays the part of the omnipresent Mrs. Wiggs, is now presenting it at Terry's Theatre. The performance gave me rather the impression of scraps cut from the book and rapidly pieced together with a view primarily to raising a laugh. There is, no doubt, a good deal of humour and some wit about this extraordinary group of people living "down South." The humour is generally forced and the wit apt to degenerate into very tiresome plays upon words. But Great Northern Central Hospital, Holloway, N.—£7,000 owing to Bankers. £10,000 needed annually from voluntary sources.—Lewis H. Glenton-Kerr, Secretary.

I am bound to admit that this seemed to amuse the audience on the first night. I am not surprised that Mrs. Carr Cook found favour as Mrs. Wiggs, and I felt about several of the other players that, given the chance, they would prove excellent comedians. But the personages were so grotesque, and such obvious efforts were made to make the ridiculous ultra absurd, that one could not persuade oneself, even in the pathetic moments, which were numerous in connection with pretty "Lovey Mary," that the whole thing was not a joke from beginning to end. But the Stubbins of Mr. Frederick Burton remains in the memory as a very vivid impersonation of a happy-go-lucky wanderer, with more than the ordinary sense of humour. I repeat that the players are more than competent, but the play appeared to me—well—child's play.

THE COMPLETE CATECHIST.

The Royal Academy Catechism.

(For the Use of Visitors to Burlington House.)

Question: What is the Royal Academy?

Answer: The first important function of the London season.

Q.: Is it a very important function?

A.: It is a fairly important function; less important, indeed, than Ranelagh, or Hurlingham, but rather more important than Molesey Regatta.

Q.: Where is the Royal Academy held?

A.: At Burlington House.

Q.: By whom is it held?

A.: By the Royal Academicians—called, for short, the R.A.s.

Q.: Who are these R.A.s?

A.: Painters who are entitled to have their pictures hung in the best positions, or, as it is technically termed, "on the line."

Q.: Where are the pictures of the other exhibitors hung?

A.: Wherever they can be squeezed in without inconveniently crowding the pictures of the R.A.s.

Q.: Who goes to the Academy?

A.: Everybody.

Q.: What do they go for?

A.: A few go to see the pictures; more go to see the people; yet more go to be seen themselves; and most of all go that they may be able to say they have been there.

Q.: What styles of pictures are exhibited at the Royal Academy?

A.: All styles.

Q.: Name some of the more characteristic of these styles.

A.: The bread-and-butter style; the spasmodic-daub style; the allegorical style; the aldermanic-portrait style; and the Paris Salon style.

Q.: What do you mean by the bread-and-butter style?

A.: I mean the representation of some mildly interesting feature of domestic life, in which the innocence of infancy or the beauty of grandparental affection usually plays a conspicuous part.

Q.: What do you mean by the spasmodic-daub style?

A.: I mean the pigmentary gymnastics of some conjurer in colours, who, with a few desultory strokes of the brush, can instantly transform a blank canvas into the likeness of anything in the Heavens above, the Earth beneath, or the Waters under the Earth.

Q.: Can you always see what particular likeness is intended?

A.: Always. It tells you in the catalogue.

Q.: What do you mean by the Allegorical style?

A.: I mean a picture that, having no intelligible meaning on the face of it, must be supposed to convey some deep underlying truth. This is the most admired of all the styles.

Q.: Why is it the most admired?

A.: Because nobody understands it. People always admire what they do not understand.

Q.: What do you mean by the Aldermanic-Portrait style?

A.: I mean the counterfeit presentment of Jonathan Jones, Esq., Mayor of Mudborough-on-the-Marsh, arrayed in civic robes, or of Thomas Browne-Cox, Esq., solicitor, in the full uniform of a Volunteer Colonel.

Q.: What is the value of such paintings?

A.: Seven hundred guineas—to the painter.

J.: What do you mean by the Paris Salon style?

A.: I mean the picture of a young woman, unrobed for the bath, at which bishops and other respectable persons are careful not to look, though they frequently stop to admire the merits of some landscape, or other inoffensive painting, in its immediate vicinity.

Q.: What is the R.A.'s definition of Art Critic?

A.: A man who, having failed in the practical construction of pictures himself, applies his energies to the verbal destruction of the pictures of others.

Q.: What is the Chantrey Bequest?

A.: A Bequest for the annual purchase of the best works of art produced in Britain.

Q.: What do you mean by the best works of art produced in Britain?

A.: I mean the works of those contemporary artists who are personæ gratæ to the administrators of the Bequest.

Q.: To what classes of persons is the Academy most useful?

A.: To the diner out, whom it supplies with a fresh conversational opening between the hors d'œuvre and the soup, and to the clerk of the weather, who is thereby enabled to take his one little well-earned annual holiday.

Q.: Is the Academy of benefit to any other classes of the community?

A.: Yes; to one other class.

Q.: Who are they?

A.: The makers of picture-frames.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE EMPRESS MARIE IN FRANCE.

NOBODY could have imagined on seeing the Empress Marie Feodorowna at Le Bourget that Russian Fours are at seventy-three. She came in a train of five palace cars and five non-palatial for the lower domestics and culinary staff. The personnel of the train, sixty in number, acted under the direction of an experienced railway official assimilated to a general and wearing an imposing uniform. The servants of H.I.M., bath attendants, dressers, femmes de chambre, door guards, one of whom has, also by assimilation, the grade of brigadier-general, bring the number up to eighty. Above these are the Grand Master and Grand Mistress of the household or their deputies, the lady and maid of honour, the chamberlain, aide-de-camp, and secretary, and adjoined to them the attendants of the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess Alexander. No dog appeared; nor did we see a cow in a special compartment, as when the Emperor and Empress, with their baby Olga, came here eleven years ago. They had one of those magnificent Schleswig cows that are bred at Gatchina and house-fed seven months in the year in a byre, steam-heated and tapestried with doubled Japanese mats. The cooking staff was well in view at Le Bourget and busy as it could be preparing the mid-day meal. Magnificent was the show of silver and of copper utensils. The Tsar is inclined to look close to culinary matters. He has spent £60,000 in bringing the kitchens of the Winter Palace up to his standard, and would have had all the coppers lined with silver on the bi-metallic system if silver did not blacken vegetables rich in sulphur. One of these is cabbage, which so greatly enters into the tschi soup and other Russian dishes.

Scrubb & Co., Ltd., caution the public against the many injurious imitations of their Cloudy Fluid Ammonia that are being offered, and draw attention to their having affixed the signature of Scrubb & Co. to each bottle, without which none is genuine.

The Imperial train halted at Le Bourget—a place that we couple with a sortie of besieged Parisians in 1870—to be shunted to the Northern line and enable the Empress to become acquainted with M. Fallières. She wanted particularly to thank him for the many official attentions, as considerate as kind, which she had received at Biarritz. He greatly wished to pay her his respects, and through her to present ses hommages to the Empress Alexandra and son bon souvenir to the Tsar. The hommages are a chivalrous expression of inequality, the bon souvenir of equality with Nicholas. You will admire the two nice distinctions.

The train which halted at Le Bourget is not the one that took Nicholas and Alexandra from Cherbourg to Versailles, from Dunkirk to Compiègne, was too massive to take them by cross railways from Compiègne to Rheims, and had such a disastrous effect on sections of the Northern line. All the ten cars are roofed with some white glazed substance that can bear frequent washing with a hydrant, and might be taken for porcelain. The bodies of the cars are finely varnished and the Imperial Russian arms emblazoned on the panels. One is struck with the luxurious smartness of the general make-up.

The Mayor of Le Bourget had leave to place his municipal councillors and some of his relatives, neighbours, and other friends on the platform at a civil distance from the place where the car of the Empress Dowager was to stop. But the engine driver misunderstood, and just missed over-shooting the pointsman some distance in front. This enabled the people outside the station palings to have the best view of all that went on, and of the personages who exchanged official compliments. The President and the Empress Dowager did this in the most friendly way. M. Pichon has the seriousness of his medical education, and has learned to be ceremonious in the world of diplomacy. He did not feel called upon, we may assume, to change his manner. In not doing so he kept on the safe side. No blinds were anywhere drawn down. The sun was on the side farthest from H.I.M.

Equal rights had a fine victory in the Imperial train. If Una did not this time lead a lion, feminine gentillesse commanded giants, for such were the three Grand Dukes, the generals by assimilation, and, indeed, most of the whiskered and bearded creatures. The whiskers were full and long, and trimmed à la Skobeleff, leaving the point of the chin bare.

Those French who have seen the Empress Dowager speak of her as une gentille petite femme. She is still mignonne, gives the impression of a light step and light figure, though stouter than she used to be. If not exactly pretty, she was always, and still is, mieux que jolie, and has grace, animation, amiability, and one of those irregular faces that express so charmingly passing moods and emotions—pensive, bright, gay, affectionate, or merely futile. She is good company at a picnic or one of those shooting parties that Russian Empresses attend, and at which the Tsar is not above taking a turn at the gridiron or with the toasting-fork. H.I.M. is gourmande enough to enjoy vastly the meals in the open air. There is nothing of Bourbon appetite in the gourmandise which is her péché mignon, and which her mouth denotes. The Empress Dowager is attached to the companions, the fashions, and to some extent to the ideas current around her in her youth. Her manner of dressing her hair has never changed since her children were all in the schoolroom. Nor has the general make-up of her toilettes altered. It is neat, easy, and stamped by her personal taste. The face is more full than it used to be in the late Tsar's lifetime, but keeps in the right form—a proof of excellent health, no matter what the others say—and the face has likewise escaped heaviness. At Le Bourget, her well-hung black skirt scarcely hid the lightness of her movements. The corsage, in the nature of a blouse, and also black, might have been of Chinese crêpe. A light chain, with good-sized pearls at intervals of perhaps three or four inches, fell to the waist as if holding a watch. Passing round the neck it formed a long necklace from which a pearl and diamond ornament was suspended.

Every one noticed how natural were her movements and gestures, and the good-child graciousness of her manner. I have to coin this expression to convey one of her most attractive characteristics. She acted less as the Empress than as the hostess, unaffectedly glad to see her visitor and only desirous of making him feel at home. Without actually leading M. Fallières to the fauteuil next her own, she held out her hand as if doing so until she was seated, and then, pointing to a chair set for M. Pichon, begged him to sit down. It was dexterously and very nicely done. The chit-chat seemed to the outer spectators, for all went on in a glass house, agreeably brisk, and lasted a quarter of an hour by the station clock, when the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess Alexandra came forward to be presented to the President.

As the President left, the Empress-Dowager asked his leave to snap-shot him, ran back for her camera, and, in coming to the door, pushed aside with a quick little movement the giant keeping guard. The station-master then touched his hat to announce that the time for compliments had passed, gave the signal, and the long, white-roofed train steamed off, the Imperial lady waving her hand from the platform of her saloon until it had swept round a curve.

Seeger's Hair Dye.—Dyes the hair by merely combing through. 2s. the Case, or Trial Bottle, mailed free from observation, 7d.—Hinde's Ltd., 1A, Finsbury, London.

The Empress-Dowager is not a woman of genius, or possibly of mind, but a rare being. She has nothing of that fixed type that one finds in most members of Royal families, has good sense and wakeful wits that are never at a disadvantage. It appears that her nerves have been greatly shaken by the frightful state into which Russia fell through the war. The cheerfulness of Biarritz and the Atlantic breezes had a beneficial effect on her health and spirits. She said at Le Bourget that she hoped to revisit a place which had done her so much good.

The Montagnini papers show the Holy See in a new character—that of landlord or propriétaire of houses let in flats in Paris. All the law courts that had to deal with the will of the late Marquise de Plessis Bellièvre, leaving her town house in the Place de la Concorde to the Pope for a nuncio's residence, judged that his Holiness could not hold real estate in France. The reason they gave was his being a temporal sovereign, whether judged according to the Italian Law of Guarantees or his own contention as against the State of Italy. His counsel naturally asked: "How, then, can the Emperor of Austria, under the will of the Duchess of Galliera, hold as a residence for his ambassador her house in the Rue de Varenne?" The answer was that her undoubted heir did not contest its possession by his Apostolical Majesty. If he had done so, French judges must have admitted his right. The Emperor Francis Joseph holds by toleration. He could not sell the house in the Rue de Varenne if he wanted.

However, there are reliable agents of the Pope who have been holding real estate for him and allowing the management to remain in the hands of his more direct representatives. There are also estates that he holds because no claimant has sprung up, as the Emperor of Austria keeps on at the former residence of the Duchess de Galliera. Monsignor Montagnini, when there was a nunciature in Paris, and up to the eve of his expulsion, discharged the office of steward of the Papal estates. Had he had Irish tenants to deal with, I am afraid they would have given him but a short shrift. He had here for nothing the services of learned counsel, notaries, avoués, and other members of la basoche—that is to say, he paid them with monnaie du Pape. This encouraged him to be litigious when tenants resisted his too hard methods, and outran in his exactions the legendary Monsieur Vautour. Monsignor Montagnini in business transactions with tenants saw with equal eyes Jews and Catholics, rich and poor. Thus a community of nuns supplicated him to allow them, according to the custom of Paris, to enter into the possession, as tenants on a short lease, of a house belonging to the Pope in the Avenue de Beaucourt. He had made payment in advance of a quarter's rent a condition. All rents are paid quarterly in Paris, but never in advance save by shopkeepers whose goods are not a guarantee. The Superior represented that the affairs of the convent from which she had been expelled were in the hands of an official liquidator, but that there would not be a very long delay in receiving the sum which he had agreed to pay over to her. She had always served the Holy See with zeal, and she trusted with discretion. The answer was, "5,000 fr. down, or no further correspondence."

As a match-maker the ex-Papal Agent still affords amusement. The negotiations for the marriage of a princess nearly related to all the Northern Courts ought to furnish subjects to Capus or Octave Mirbeau. "Tout s'arrange" is the motto of Capus. This marriage of a high young lady on one side and the thickly-gilded and rather handsome heir to a patent medicine on the other side could have hardly taken place without the good offices of Monsignor. He obtained the titular savonnette de vilain for the young man, whose appearance would tell in his favour at a court ball or a diplomatic reunion. The life of this new-fledged nobleman had been mixed up with that of the unacknowledged but authentic daughter of a Queen before his marriage, and he had committed himself since to flirtations with her. She had made a princely match before he did. It was desirable to repair the breach in the ménage, but a delicate matter to do so. Naturally the Queen thus mentioned is interesting as a rebus to the butterflies of Paris-West. There were so many queens délaissées at the time the seductive Princess drew her first breath that no satisfactory guess can be made. Somebody has revived the talk about la quatrième fille du roi Léopold, but without having more than idle talk to go upon. As to Isabella II., she would have scorned any concealment. We may possibly hear of la fille unique du Maximilien et de Charlotte, whose birth had been hidden from family motives, springing from avarice. One can imagine a large crop of prétendantes to Royal birth springing out of the Montagnini papers.

Meanwhile, the Toulon Arsenal is fired, some say to destroy papers the Committee of Inquiry into the Iéna explosion had got hold of; Rente falls, and strikes are universal, or nearly so, while a vast trade in powdered talc for the adulteration of bakers' flour has come to light. Freethinkers and Catholics are in a state of fever about the Joan of Arc fêtes at Orleans. The questions raised on this subject have been narrowed into two: "Are the Freemasons to be admitted to the procession; and if so, will the Bishop and his clergy join it?" No Government could now afford to vex the Freemasons. Orleans, should the Ministry of the Interior give them satisfaction, will incur a heavy monetary loss, and possibly show ill-humour at the next municipal and legislative elections. The tradespeople there have been looking forward to an unheard-of influx of Catholic and Royalist manifestants behind Joan's banner. This meant an influx of money to private tills and rich octroi gains. The Catholic education the French have had through the ages makes them attach a significance to symbolical things (though they no longer symbolise anything) which Northern nations cannot understand. Freethinkers really act as Catholics in so vehemently insisting on the compass and triangle having a place of honour in the procession.

Talc, the substance I have mentioned in connection with bread adulteration, is used also as a powder to protect the face from sunburn, and to calm a skin irritated by eczema. It gives statuesque whiteness to neck and arms, and a satiny smoothness and gloss. It may be in its place as a help to beauty. It certainly is not in a baker's kneading trough. Thousands of tons of talc, I hear, are imported into England yearly. Is it for the bakers or the beautiful women? Most of the habitués of the Opéra who cannot resign themselves to a diminution of their charms are talced. The way they use it is first to apply it with a swansdown pouf, and then to rub it off. Enough always remains to whiten and smooth the skin.

A PEER AMONG THE PATRIOTS.

I AM writing this from a little town in Germany and I only hope you get it in time. Jessie and I have come here on a honeymoon—by a bit of good luck the piece she was playing in collapsed last week, and she'll get a fortnight's holiday, any way, before she starts rehearsing for the new one. We thought we would just slip off quietly and not let any one know where we had gone. Of course, that meant that we couldn't go to any of the regular places where everybody goes, so we settled to come here instead. We are in a little town not far from Hamburg; hit upon it quite by accident, stuck a pin into a Continental time table and took the place it stuck into. Jessie's idea—and a very good one, too, I think. What? It is as dull a little place as any I ever saw in my life, but, of course, we don't mind that. And as we are here Jessie thinks I ought to write something about the ructions that they are always trying to get up between England and Germany.

The funniest part of it all to me is how astonishingly like Englishmen all the Germans are—about here, any way. When we got to Hamburg we noticed it at once. We might easily have been—so far as the people went, I mean—in London, or rather, not in London, because that is much too cosmopolitan, but in some English town that is very English indeed and where they dress very badly. I never in my life saw such clothes as some of these Germans wear, they quite take your breath away. Another funny thing is that they speak a language that is exactly like English in sound, though you can't understand what it means. We heard a couple of labourers quarrelling—about the dock strike, I expect; they talk about nothing but the dock strike here, I'm told, and the only way I could tell that they were not English was because they don't use the one word that you can always be sure of hearing an English labourer use every time he opens his mouth. But as I was saying, in everything but their clothes, the people in Hamburg and round about it are more like Englishmen than most Englishmen are themselves nowadays, and the idea of going to war with them seems just about as funny as if Devonshire was to declare war on Essex. It isn't as if they wanted too, either. We have been talking to a lot of them about it in the train, and so on—at least, Jessie has, because she speaks German beautifully. She can do everything well. It only shows you how clever she is when I tell you—but about these Germans. She talked to them and translated to me and I took my hat off every now and then and smiled, and we got on famously. Quite a lot of them could speak English, too. We very soon found out that it is in Germany just as it is with us. They haven't the slightest idea of making war on us, but they are afraid we mean to make war on them sooner or later. Of course, it is all the newspapers; we have seen some of the articles they print, and I assure you, from the tone of them, you wouldn't know that it wasn't the—one of the London daily papers, perhaps I had better say, if it wasn't for the language.

We talked to one old chap in the train coming here from Hamburg, who thought it was rather a good thing for the two nations to bullyrag each other. He could speak English, had lived a long time in Liverpool, and according to him, as long as the newspapers made the two countries afraid of each other there would not be any fighting. In the old days, he said, people used to make war just because it never entered their heads that the other side could be nearly as strong as they were. But now, when the German papers are always pointing out that the English Navy is invincible, and the English ones always say that the German Army is much too big for us to tackle, there is much less chance of our ever really coming to blows. He told me one queer thing which I never knew before, though perhaps you did—that in the whole course of history the English and the Germans had never been to war with each other, though they had frequently backed each other up against a third party. He said a great deal more which I wish I could remember, because it struck me as being very much to the point; but there was a confounded little idiot of a German officer in the other corner of the carriage, with idiotic moustaches that curled up over his eyebrows, who kept making eyes at Jessie, and I wanted to kick him so badly that I didn't properly attend to what the other man was saying.

One thing he said was, I remember, that we English always made the mistake of thinking that every German was a Prussian, when, as a matter of fact, a Prussian was scarcely a German at all, but more than half Russian. According to him, it would be a much deadlier insult to ask a native of Bavaria or Hanover if he was a Prussian than to mistake him for an Englishman. And even if there were a few army contractors in Berlin who would like to go to war with us on the chance of making a fortune, there were I don't know how many millions of other Germans who would give half their fortune to stop such a thing. "Why don't your English newspapers quarrel with the Prussians, if they want to," he said, "and leave the rest of Germany alone? It is exactly as if we Germans were to quarrel with the Isle of Man about something, and then want to drag the whole British Empire into the dispute." He afterwards mentioned casually that he came from Hanover himself, and as we found out that Hanover was conquered by the Prussians about forty years ago, and has been trying to get its own rightful king back ever since, we thought perhaps he was exaggerating a bit. But it was perfectly true, what he said about Germany being not one country, but half a dozen. It gets a little confusing sometimes. For instance, Hamburg is a republic, and its lord mayor considers himself every bit as good as the King of Prussia, though he is perfectly content to be considered the same man's subject as German Emperor. Germany's rather a confusing place in many ways. For one thing, instead of being a despotic Empire, full of soldiers who all want to fight England, it turns out to be, as far as Jessie and I can make out, nearly all Socialists, who only serve as soldiers because they can't help it, and hate the Imperial Government nearly as badly as the English newspapers do. And in spite of that, all the men that you see try to make their moustaches grow as nearly like the Kaiser's as they know how to.

There is one thing, coming over here for a bit makes me realise what an awfully fine thing it is to be English. When you are at home you do nothing but read of how inefficient we are and how we are getting left behind by other nations, dropping down hill, and all the rest of it. But as you get further away, England swells up and up, until she is ever so much the biggest figure in the world. According to the German newspapers, she has the most wonderful Government, that spends its whole time successfully checkmating German policy. Fancy our poor old Government checkmating anybody? What? And our fleet is invincible, and our commerce—in fact, I am beginning to find out that you have no idea of what a fine thing it is to be English until you give up living in England.

There is one story about England that we have heard since we've been over here that makes you feel awfully proud of being English. I've never heard it before, though I daresay you may have, but Jessie insists on my putting it in anyhow. It was told us by a German who didn't like England at all, so I expect its true. He told it us as proving that England means to make war on Germany one day or other. It seems that two years ago, at the time there was some fuss about the Channel Squadron going for a cruise in the Baltic, it was expected to visit some German seaport. The sea is very shallow there, and the entrance to the port is very dangerous, because there is only a narrow channel through the sandbanks. When the British fleet was known to be coming, the German authorities had all the buoys taken up—I suppose because they didn't want our people to learn too much about the way in, and arranged for two German boats to lead them in. But the British Fleet arrived twenty-four hours before it was expected, and steamed right in, without worrying whether there were any buoys or not, as if it had come in and out every day for years and anchored off the port and fired a salute. Not being expected, there wern't any guns ready to return it, and they had to be sent for in a hurry from Dantzic, I think it was, and the salute couldn't be returned for five hours. And the best joke was that when the German vessels came in—having missed the Channel Squadron in a fog—one of them ran aground, and the British Admiral signalled to know if he couldn't help her off. Of course, the Germans made out that we had no right to know the way into German ports like that, but I think it shows that our Navy is pretty efficient, at any rate. What?

I started out to try and prove that a war between England and Germany would be impossible, and I still think so. I like the Germans—what I've seen of them—and, as far as I can make out, they like us, or most of them do. The only people who want to make trouble on either side are a few journalists, who think there is money in raising war-scares and a few politicians who can see their way to making party capital out of it. But there is one other point which it seems to me makes for peace, which you can't ever realise while you are at home, but you learn before you've been a week in any other country. There is no nation living that is going to go to war with England if they can help it, because England is much too strong, and powerful, and efficient, and wealthy for them to tackle. The only people who run down England are the English themselves, and they only do it because they don't know anything about other countries but what they read in newspapers. We may have a few motes in our own eyes, but they aren't a patch on the forests of beams that block up those of the rest of Europe. That's what I think about it, now that I am in Germany; and so does Jessie.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THERE are two forms of madness, dear Lady Betty: the madness we call sanity, and the madness we call insanity. Those who have the former badly, succeed; those who have the latter badly, we put into a strait-waistcoat.

. . . . .

The chief purpose of "society" is to manufacture temptations.

. . . . .

The conventionalities are more attended to than the Commandments.

. . . . .

No woman is so good as she looks; to know that is the first step towards the attainment of knowledge of the world.

. . . . .

The next, to know that few men are so bad as they seem.

. . . . .

No woman is complete without virtue; and few women think a man complete without vice.

. . . . .

Every generation has its own "modesty"; there is a fashion in virtue as in velvet.

. . . . .

Fine sentiments do not make fine characters.

. . . . .

Most women go to church to attract men, and to distract each other.

The funeral of the greatest is a holiday for the greatest number.

. . . . .

In the art and the literature of the moment peculiarity is the best policy.

* * * * *

"Who steals my purse steals trash . . . . .

. . . . .

But he who filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enriches him
And makes me poor indeed."

It is evidence of how far we have travelled since Shakespeare wrote, that more would prefer to lose their good name than their cash.

* * * * *

Class contamination is a serious matter. "A Class in the Unmaking" is a study for the philosopher and the politician. Circumstances have greatly impoverished the "Upper-class" in this country, and it is endeavouring to subsist on the "Middle-class." The names of the rich in the latter, in London and the Provinces, are eagerly sought for by members of the former, who then strive to get acquainted with these "obscure" wealthy. To these rich they attempt to sell art treasures; from them they endeavour to obtain subscriptions for charities and various undertakings; they cultivate their sons and daughters for matrimonial purposes; they introduce them to their tradesmen to receive a commission; and they exploit them in every direction—and laugh at them for their anxiety to attain social distinction! Meanwhile these "Middle-class" magnates abandon the simple qualities which made them a force in the community, and adopt the follies of the West End. A bridge has been built across the gulf which separated the two classes—and the West End extracts a toll from all who cross it!

* * * * *

The Fatted Class dreads that it will be killed for the return of the Radical.

* * * * *

It is the custom of the Tories to play upon the noble instincts of the many for the ignoble purposes of the few.

* * * * *

It is said there is a scarcity of money; are we suffering from Imperial Poverty?

* * * * *

The solid life or the soufflé life; the country is apparently deciding which it is to be. Light literature, light journalism, light entertainments, light conversation, light furniture, light treatment of even the exceptionally serious; on almost every side in England to-day the tendency is towards the light. There was a corresponding movement in the eighteenth century, but the progress of Liberal legislation, and the developments caused by the application of steam, stemmed the tide, and the nation returned to the solid. There is much to be said for both systems. The serious element in the present condition is that the English are inclined to make light of everything but—light money.

. . . . .

Moreover, when our predecessors in the eighteenth century adopted the soufflé style there were those amongst them who had the genius of the condition. There were painters who produced masterpieces of the kind, engravers, decorators, authors, poets, and wits; are we deserting the solid merely because it is tiresome without having the qualities which should accompany the soufflé system? From wit at its best to wealth at its worst is a far step.

. . . . .

There is a famine in fancy here at the moment; that has to be borne in mind. Imagination appears to have deserted us; the author seldom produces a classic; the painter, a masterpiece; the wit, a phrase that shall live; the orator, a speech that shall be quoted in after times; even in the small circumstances of life the existence of this famine in fancy is obvious!—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

MR. HALL WALKER, who had three entries for the Woodcote Stakes, has withdrawn two of them, one being Pom. He is now represented in the Epsom race only by the dark White Eagle, by Gallinule out of Merry Gal, who presumably is better than Pom at the weights. White Eagle is engaged in the Coventry Stakes at Ascot, and he would not have any extra weight to carry in that race for a victory at Epsom. This colt is grandly bred, and he must have been highly thought of as a yearling, for he was entered for nearly fifty races. His first engagement was the John o' Gaunt Plate at Manchester on May 23, but he has paid forfeit for that race, so he is to be reserved for Epsom, and Mr. Hall Walker has certainly given the public a very plain tip for the Woodcote Stakes. Pom has also paid forfeit for the Great Surrey Foal Stakes on the third day at Epsom, his owner being now represented in that race by the dark Master Magpie, colt by Gallinule out of Meddlesome, who has nearly thirty engagements. Pom is to be kept for the Hurst Park Foal Plate of £1,500, which is run on the Friday before Ascot, and he there has the benefit of a 10 lb. breeding allowance. Mr. Hall Walker has left in two for this race, the other being Wild Honeycombe, by Count Schomberg out of Honeydew, who is allowed 7 lb. He is represented in the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park on July 20 by White Eagle and Royal Realm, own brother to Colonia, while Master Magpie has been struck out.

The King's colt Slim Lad, who greatly disappointed the Egerton House stable last autumn after he had been well galloped, has discovered himself to be a non-stayer. I predicted some time ago that he would turn out to be of no use except in short distance races, and he is not likely to win any of the twenty-one engagements which were made for him two years ago.

Lord Wolverton's colt Larig, by Florizel II. out of Pitcroy, is still backward, but he will be worth remembering if he is kept for the Prince of Wales' Stakes at Ascot, as he will have a maiden allowance of 7 lb. in that race.

His Majesty's colt Perambulator is expected to make his début the week after next in the Newmarket Stakes, for which race forty-one horses are left in, the best known of the lot being Linacre, Olympian, Acclaim, Simon Square, Dripsey, Knight of Tully, and Lord Wolverton's three colts. There are neither penalties nor allowances in this race, which will be worth over £2,200. Perambulator is also engaged in the Payne Stakes a day later, along with All Black and Polar Star, but this race appears a certainty for Mr. Hall Walker's colt if he is in form. If the King's colt is beaten for the Newmarket Stakes he will no doubt be reserved for one of his Ascot engagements, when he would have the benefit of a maiden allowance.

Maintenon has broken down, and he goes to the stud at once. The removal of this horse from the Turf will deprive the race for the Ascot Cup of much of its interest, as the first appearance of Maintenon on an English course had been eagerly awaited. Mr. Vanderbilt is not likely to receive any sympathy from sensible people, as it was desperate fatuity to start such a horse three times in one week when the ground was heavy, and Maintenon was by no means fit. A man who so grossly overworks a horse which has already won him such a number of races does not deserve to own a flyer. If it was intended to bring out Maintenon for all his French engagements, willy nilly, there is no reason to regret his being scratched for the Gold Cup, as he must inevitably have become stale and jaded by the middle of June, and there would have been no chance of his showing his best form. Maintenon was beaten at Longchamps, where he ran his third race within a week, by Querido for the Biennial, the distance being fifteen furlongs. It was a fast-run race from start to finish. It is probable that Querido is one of M. Caillault's sealed nominations for the Ascot Cup, in which case that race may yet go to France, as he is a good horse, and a really stout stayer. Most of the English lot are certainly lacking in the stamina which is an absolutely necessary element if a horse is to win over this severe course, and it may be assumed with confidence that if Querido is engaged, his owner's other sealed nomination will turn out to be some animal capable of making strong running throughout. It will be remembered that essential service was thus rendered to Bachelor's Button last year by St. Denis, who made the pace such a cracker from the start that Cicero was dead beat a long way from home, and Pretty Polly's chance had been practically extinguished after two miles had been traversed.

I hear that Lord Derby has decided to reserve Keystone II. for her weight-for-age engagements, so she will not start for the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap. She is certainly the pick of the top weights, and I have always thought that whatever beat her on the 11th would be the winner. I am told that Keystone II. is to start for the March Stakes to-morrow, and she ought to win that race, after which she will be reserved for the Coronation Cup at Epsom. Now that Maintenon has disappeared from the Ascot Cup entry, Keystone II. will no doubt start for that race. I shall be surprised if Lord Derby's mare proves capable of staying the Gold Cup course in a fast-run race. The defeat of Pretty Polly demonstrated the folly of the notion that a winner of the St. Leger is sure to stay the Ascot Cup course, and, indeed, Major Loder's mare had won the Jockey Club Cup, distance two miles.

Sagamore, who has been undergoing a preparation for the Jubilee Handicap next week, has been scratched for that race, and there is something wrong with Mr. Raphael's colt. Sagamore was favourably handicapped for the Kempton Park race, as Polar Star had to give him 6 lb., and it seemed to me that if in his best form he would beat all the middle and bottom weights, the race appearing to be a match between this colt and Keystone II. I hope Sagamore's ailment, whatever it may be, will not interfere with his preparation for the Ascot Cup, but we have yet to learn that he can stay the mile and a half. If Sagamore is all right three weeks hence he will no doubt be entered for the Gold Vase at Ascot, and he would have no extra weight to carry in that race, whereas such dangerous candidates as Keystone II., The White Knight, and Polymelus have all incurrd penalties.

There will be some excellent racing next week both at Chester and at Kempton Park. The Chester meeting is likely to be a great social success, as there are to be large parties at Eaton Hall, Wynnstay, Cholmondeley Castle, and other country houses in the neighbourhood. The Chester Vase of £2,100, a new race at this meeting for threes and fours, distance one mile and a half, closed in November, 1904, with eighty-seven entries, but only twenty-four horses are now left in. The field may include the Duke of Westminster's Dusty Miller (7 st. 13 lb.), Mr. W. Bass's Sancy (9 st.), Mr. Fairie's Jubilee (7 st. 1 lb.), Mr. W. Hall Walker's Black Arrow (9 st. 5 lb.) or Knight of Tully (7 st. 2 lb.), and Mr. Joel's Earlston (7 st. 6 lb.). Dusty Miller ought to win this race, but he may find Mr. Hall Walker's candidate a dangerous opponent. The course will just suit Black Arrow, if this horse is now in form.

The Chester Cup has over forty horses left in, and there ought to be a large field. Lord Derby will be represented by Bridge of Canny (9 st. 5 lb.), unless the ground is heavy, in which case Gourd (7 st. 9 lb.) will start instead. In my opinion the Chester Cup is a good thing for M. Caillault's Querido (4 yrs., 8 st.). Querido is a smart horse, and a really good stayer, and this race appears a positive certainty for him after his recent running in France. Twenty-four three-year-olds are left in for the Dee Stakes, and Wool Winder ought to win easily if he has any pretensions to be regarded as a Derby horse.

As to the minor events, Jubilee or Jovial may win the Eaton Plate. The entry for the Badminton Plate includes Bucolic, Opal, Selaginella, and Counterfeit, but I shall expect the race to be won by Llangwm. Pastry has another chance of retrieving her reputation in the Ormonde Plate. Both Quelpart and Llangwm are engaged in the Stamford Plate, and probably the Sandown winner will be reserved for the Badminton Plate, leaving the other race for Mr. de Rothschild's colt. The Duke of Westminster's Buttercraig, who is engaged in the Mostyn Plate, in the Badminton Plate, and in the Ormonde Plate, is own brother to Dusty Miller. The Duke's Rydal Water, who is entered for the Stamford Plate, is half-sister, by Orme, to Troutbeck. Any two-year-old from the Kingsclere stable which runs at Chester, and which is fancied, is quite sure to be worth following.

The Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap can be better dealt with next week. It is now said that both Polymelus and Velocity will start, and I would expect Mr. Joel's horse to defeat the City and Suburban winner at even weights, but they both seem overweighted. Gingal was withdrawn from the Doveridge Handicap at Derby in order that he might be kept for this race, but surely Malua can give 8 lb. to Mr. Clark's horse. Polar Star has quite enough weight already with 7 st. 12 lb., and he will probably incur a 5 lb. penalty by winning the Chippenham Plate. Mr. Hall Walker's colt could not give 21 lb. to Meadow Rue, who has all along been a strong tip at Newmarket for this race, but I now hear that she will not run.

I am informed that M. E. Blanc's best colt will certainly start for the Prix du Jockey Club (French Derby) at Chantilly on June 2, and that the animal in question will then be reserved for the Grand Prix on June 16. If, therefore, M. E. Blanc's colours are seen at Epsom on the Derby Day they will be carried by his second string. He has two colts left in, Ouadi Halfa (who has been backed down to 11 to 1 by some infatuated mooncalves), and Myram, own brother to Jardy. If, however, Slieve Gallion wins the Two Thousand easily, and therefore appears a practical certainty for the Derby, it is highly improbable that M. E. Blanc will be represented in the Derby.

A well-informed French correspondent tells me that he considers the Oaks very much more likely to go across the Channel than the Derby. The field at Epsom on June 7 will probably include M. Michel Ephrussi's Procéda, by Brio out of Primrose, and one of M. E. Blanc's fillies, of which five were originally entered for the Oaks. Three of these were struck out when the minor forfeit was declared, but he can start either Zahra, by Flying Fox out of Bass, or Hélène, own sister to Adam and Ajax. We shall know all about the French fillies after the race for the Prix de Diane at Chantilly on May 26.

A writer in a weekly paper predicts that if Fra Diavolo starts at Newmarket on Friday for the Chippenham Plate, he will "bustle up" Polar Star, as Mr. Hall Walker's colt will be giving 10 lb. As a matter of fact, the pair would meet at even weights. If the writer of this nonsense had taken the trouble to read the conditions of the Chippenham Plate he would have discovered that there are no penalties except for winners this season.

I had expected that Gourd would win the Metropolitan, but Lord Derby's mare was not sent to Epsom, being in reserve for a later engagement. Mintagon was made a very hot favourite, the Cesarewitch winner being regarded as quite a good thing, but he ran miserably, and was really never in the race. Father Blind, who was not backed for a penny, won after an exciting finish with Turbine, who is certainly no flyer, and he was giving 18 lb. to the winner. Such a handicap has seldom been won by a worse horse, but Father Blind can stay, and he finished in very game style.

The City and Suburban has excited very little interest this year, and it is highly satisfactory that one of the most important of the spring handicaps should have been won by the best horse which has started at any meeting so far as the season has gone. Velocity, who was well backed at the finish, was in very much better condition than when he ran at Lincoln, when he was preposterously backward, as was also the case last year. He was the pick of the field, not only in class, but also in appearance, and he went better than anything in the preliminary canter. He won very easily indeed, and his victory was the more creditable inasmuch as he did not get off particularly well, and he nearly fell over one of the horses which had tumbled down in the course. Larino was made a great favourite at the last, there being a general rush on him, but he is exceedingly moderate, and has been extravagantly over-rated. The running proved that Velocity is some 3 st. 5 lb. superior to Larino, for whose defeat there is no excuse, and he was very well ridden by Wootton. There was an excuse for Dinneford, who was badly kicked at the post by Velocity. Slavetrader is not yet properly fit, and Cyanean had better be kept for T.Y.C. races. Newmarket people had become perfectly infatuated about Larino, and it is obvious that the handicap horses now trained there must be wretchedly bad.

The two-year-olds which ran at Epsom are all moderate. Opal and Pearl of the Loch were the favourites for the Westminster Plate, but they were both beaten by Lucian, a colt bred and owned by Lord Rosebery, who had lost several lengths at the start. Bolted, who had so grievously disappointed his friends at Newmarket, was again well backed for the Hyde Park Plate, being joint favourite with Mr. L. de Rothschild's Quelpart, the latter winning easily from Flitaway, who is half-sister, by Flying Fox, to Ouadi Halfa. Bolted appeared to be well beaten after going half a mile. Quelpart, by Grey Leg out of Guava, is a nice colt, and he had just failed to win a fairly high trial, but the form was justly regarded as being quite good enough for this race. Captain Forester ought to win at Bath with Flitaway, who cost 1,500 gs. as a yearling.

The only event of general interest at Sandown Park on Thursday was the Esher Plate, which was regarded generally as being at the mercy of Donna Caterina after her victory at Newbury, but Lord Rosebery's mare made a deplorable show of herself. The Irish colt Hayden, recently purchased by Mr. Croker for £2,500, was backed by most of the clever people, and many good judges regarded him as having been very unlucky in being just beaten by Doryanthes.

St. Cyril was favourite at the finish for the Cobham Plate in a field of sixteen, but the best money was on Llangwm, who was said to have been tried better than Opal. Be this as it may, Llangwm won in a canter, and I fancy he will turn out the best of last week's two-year-olds. He is a son of Missel Thrush, who is one of the best-bred horses at the stud, being by Orme out of Throstle.

The Sandown Park Stud Produce Stakes is the most valuable of all the spring two-year-old races, but it was contested by a grievously poor field of twelve, and Loates may think himself fortunate in having won a stake of nearly £900 with so utterly common a filly as Pendule. The wet weather must have affected the intelligence of backers when they tumbled over each other to take 9 to 4 about Hymettus for the Tudor Plate in a field of twenty-two, and the favourite was easily beaten by the unfancied St. Petersburg. His Majesty's colt Slim Lad ran fast, but he cannot stay. The course was very heavy, and the afternoon proved a very Moscow campaign for plungers, who must have been addle-brained to bet under such conditions except in trifling sums. There was a crash over the Princess of Wales' Handicap, the gambling being very heavy, and Bon Marché and King Sapphire were both backed for large sums, but Syphon, who had been beaten at Epsom, where he started favourite for the Great Surrey Handicap, won by several lengths. I suspect that Bon Marché would have been successful if Syphon had not been in the field. The winner had the race in hand a considerable distance from home. He got off very badly at Epsom.

The One Thousand will be contested on Friday by a very moderate lot of fillies, and it is a race which wise people will carefully leave alone. Orwell, who is the pick of the entry on public form, is backward; Bellatrix cannot stay the course if her Newbury running was correct; Donna Caterina's performance at Sandown Park was contemptibly bad; and Dripsey severely disappointed her friends by her defeat in the Biennial. His Majesty's filly Victoria has won a trial, but I do not fancy it was a high one. However, Victoria is quite likely to prove herself the best at present of the Newmarket lot. It seems to me, however, that Silver Heeled ought to win if she can beat Witch Elm. Mr.

Cunliffe's filly, who is by Florizel II., out of Game Chick, cost 2,000 gs. as a yearling. She only ran twice last season, and her second race was the Moulton Stakes at Newmarket, which she won cleverly from Galleot, who was giving her 18 lb. The One Thousand is a very dangerous race this year, for in a helter-skelter field of moderate fillies anything may win.

I desire to call the attention of the Lawn Tennis Association to an interesting advertisement that appears in their official journal. An enterprising firm offers a guinea racket or article of equal value to any player winning a club singles or handicap with the firm's racket. I congratulate the firm on its enterprise, but it does seem to me that the acceptance of such an offer would be contrary to the spirit of amateurism. The present Council is so shocked at the idea of trade influence that I feel sure it will legislate in the matter. I can quite undertand how the proprieties of Surbiton would be upset if any member of a local club took advantage of the offer.

All lawn tennis players will regret to hear that neither of the brothers Doherty will play in the championships this year at Wimbledon. The champion has decided on a year's rest. Lawn Tennis makes this statement definitely. Altogether, England's prospects in the Dwight-Davies Bowl Competition are not too bright. For I hear that Risely is suffering from a troublesome arm, and his partner, Smith, is none too strong in health.

A short time ago Mr. C. E. Green vigorously attacked the policy of playing Colonial cricketers in County Cricket. He has received the unqualified support of Lord Hawke. No doubt the speech was to some extent inspired by the fact that Mr. Marshall, the Australian, will probably play for Surrey. If County Cricket means anything it should mean that the players all belong to the county. I strongly object to players from the Colonies being engaged as professionals for home teams, and I as strongly deprecate the importation of players from other counties. The ideal of every county should be to have a genuine county team. Some counties prefer the commercial side. The gate-drawing powers of a champion team are not to be despised, and if you have that team it is childish nonsense to worry about whence the players come. It is no doubt easier to let your own county men slip through your fingers and then become virtuously indignant than to practise what you preach.

One had hoped that the Football Association was going to behave fairly to the amateurs. But with the return to power of the chairman of the council the old policy of repression and coercion is to be resorted to again. How the followers of the chairman beslavered him with praise when he retired! Napoleon has come back from Elba, and his faithful friends are on the warpath again. But everything is to be done decently and in order. At the general meeting the council will seek power to compel the recalcitrant Middlesex and Surrey Associations to take over the professional teams and to control and manage them. If these amateurs refuse to take over these duties then they will be cut off from the Football Association. Such a step will undoubtedly mean the secession of the amateur players from the Football Association. This body owed its existence to amateurs; it has been worked up by amateurs. Now that it is wealthy it has cast over the miserable and despised amateur, and has set itself to legislate solely in the interest of—not the paid player, but the men who run professional teams. For it is of paramount importance to remember that the paid player can neither serve on the council nor vote for the election of members. The object of the council is to take over the whole machinery of the Association and its large funds, and utilise them simply and solely for the benefit of those who directly or indirectly add to or make their living out of professional teams. The amateur is a nuisance, and he is not wanted. He does not even come under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

It is as clear as possible that the council are determined to crush out of existence those organisations which have all their work cut out to look after amateur interests. Unless the object is to capture the Association for professionalism it is difficult to understand why the present course is insisted upon.

The Association football season is over, and the destinies of league championships are settled. The South has not done badly. Bristol City, newcomers to the First League, have finished off second in the list, only three points behind the leaders, Newcastle United. Derby County and Stoke go down. I believe this is Derby County's first relegation to the Second Division. A correspondent some few years ago used to send me notes about the team. He said that the club always kept a good middle place in the list, and he was proud of the fact that the players were taken from the neighbourhood and not bought up from all parts of the country. I know not if this policy is still followed. I hope it is, and I hope the club will go up. I know that when the Corinthians used to go on their big Christmas tours the Derby match was always the most enjoyable. No team played a cleaner or harder game. In the Southern League Fulham just head Portsmouth, but the latter are probably the stronger team. Crystal Palace, the heroes of the cup-tie, are last but one in the list. Of course, Fulham's next-door neighbours are very pleased at going up into the First Division of the League in company with Notts Forest.

The Canadian lacrosse players continue their successful tour. The standard of English play is improving, but we have not enough room (terrestrial) for another winter pastime. All vacant spaces are needed for football and hockey.

By a large majority the members of the Cyclists' Touring Club carried the demand for a committee of inquiry at the meeting held at Birmingham. There were over 500 present, and only five hands were held up against the motion. I congratulate the members on the spirit they showed in going out of the way to be present at the meeting. The councillors who were as a body against the motion had their fares paid at the expense of the club. The simple device of calling a special council meeting was resorted to in order to frank the travelling fares of the councillors. This waste of club funds was absolutely scandalous. The councillors had the sense not to vote. Under the constitution of the club this resolution compels the council to go on with the committee of inquiry. It is nonsense to say the meeting is of no value compared with a postal vote. It is not for the council to challenge the constitution of the club in this way. The improbability of any persons having sufficient energy to carry out the demand for such a meeting was no doubt present to the minds of the framers of the constitution. But such people have been found and have succeeded, and the council has been thwarted in its scheme for burking inquiry.

Any possible trouble will be prevented if the members support the meeting by the postal vote. I would particularly call the attention of the members to the fact that those who say that the reformers are agitating for a biassed clique on the inquiry committee are mistaken. The Reformers gave the council the opportunity of selecting every member of the committee of inquiry. In the face of this offer Mr. Beatty, the vice-chairman, has the effrontery to say that the council has no objection to an unbiassed and representative committee. Furthermore, they have a treasurer who says he could not give the time that such an inquiry would make on his services. I notice that in the West Riding it is said the members object to London being so fully represented on the committee. I was quite prepared to see an attempt made to play off London against the provinces. Let me point out that the head offices are in London, that the inquiry will take up time, trouble, and money. If members on the spot are willing to do the work, surely those at a distance should be thankful that there are members of the club ready to devote their time to these labours. Furthermore, let them remember that the council could have named all the members of the select committee.

I have to thank a member and former contributor to the C.T.C. Gazette. for some interesting information. The sums paid to contributors are not on the lavish scale that I imagined from statements in the Gazette. He considers new members should join to force the necessary reforms through. My advice is for people to stick to their money until they see a policy of peace, retrenchment, and reform firmly established in the club.

One councillor, who is reported in the Times, said that the Reform party were making use of funds that had been subscribed for the recent action in the courts. This scandalous charge of misappropriation of funds is absolutely unfounded. Every subscriber to the "action" fund was written to and his assent obtained before a farthing of his money was used for reform. Only a few wanted their money back.

The Cambridge University journal, the Granta, has a singularly vigorous attack on certain writers in the press who can see no good thing in Cambridge rowing. The style of the writing and the knowledge displayed indicate that the writer is no novice at his work. The advice to Cambridge oarsmen is to go on and prosper. The writer ridicules the sculling theory.

The fascinating volumes on "Great Batsmen," "Great Bowlers and Fielders," "Great Golfers," and "Great Lawn Tennis Players," in which Mr. George W. Beldam illustrates the play of the leading exponents of the three games by means of action-photographs, are being reissued by Messrs. Macmillan at the reduced price of half-a-guinea each.

MOTORS AND MOTORING.

THE COST OF KEEPING A CAR.

WHAT is the lowest outlay on which it is possible to keep a motor-car? There is no question which the motorist is asked more frequently. "What can I do it on?" is the form which the inquiry usually takes, prefaced as often as not by a plea of utter inability to entertain such a ruinous suggestion. Yet there is much misconception on the point. People who live in fine houses and enjoy handsome incomes often run away with the notion that the delights of motoring are not for them, when they could afford a car perfectly well if they only went to work in the right way. The mistake is in assuming that the thing need be done in the ambitious manner usually assumed to be necessary. Naturally, if it is proposed to go in for a big and expensive car, with a man to look after it, an elaborate motor house and all charges in proportion, a pretty good banking account will be required. Buy a moderate-sized second-hand car in the first place, look after it yourself, share stabling accommodation with a friend, and your motoring need not cost you, with reasonable luck, more than £70 or £80, or, say, at the outside, £100 a year. Yet plenty of people who would think nothing of spending that amount on a grand piano or a trip to the Continent still cherish the delusion that motoring is a pastime only for millionaires.

And let it be emphasised that all the essential delights of motoring can be had for such a modest outlay as that named. For anything between £150 and £200 a thoroughly sound second-hand car can be bought to-day, and therewith the freedom of all the joys of automobilism. True, a more powerful and more costly car will go a good deal faster, climb hills quicker, and cover more ground, but how little these things amount to! It is, indeed, remarkable what slight real advantage your millionaire motorist obtains for his lavish outlay. His 60-h.p. Mercédès or 35-h.p. Daimler takes, as a rule, only the same number of passengers as the humbler automobilist's 8-h.p. De Dion or 10-h.p. Humber, and yields not a scrap more real enjoyment. Certainly he pays out of all proportion for such superior benefits as he does obtain.

"But is it really safe," some would doubtless be disposed to ask, "to get a car second-hand?" The inquiry is perfectly natural. Beyond question there are second-hand cars and second-hand cars, and circumspection is required in choosing between them. But given reasonable care and judgment, a second-hand car may be as safely acquired nowadays as one bought brand new from the makers. It is only a matter of finding the right article, and, with an almost unlimited number to choose from, there need not be the slightest difficulty in doing this. The advantage gained thereby from the pecuniary point of view it is hardly necessary to point out. Few articles of commerce depreciate more rapidly than a motor-car. In the case of a new car, the moment you take possession of it you may reckon that it has forthwith dropped in value by anything from 20 per-cent. to 50 per cent. There is enormous gain, therefore, from a buyer's standpoint, in getting one second-hand in the first place. Then if the car is a good one, and it has been properly looked after, it will often be possible to sell it again after a year or so's wear for almost as much as was given for it. From a practical point of view, also, it is infinitely better to get a good second-hand car than a second-rate new one at the same price. A good modern motor-car is almost indestructible if properly cared for, and should last its owner years. Many wealthy motorists are always buying new cars—greatly to the profit of those who pick up their discarded ones—but there is no longer the slightest necessity for doing this, and the wise owner nowadays will get a good car in the first place and stick to it.

As to the actual cost of up-keep, that depends, of course, on many circumstances—on the size of the car, the amount of use it gets, and so on. Certain preliminary inevitable charges, however, fall alike on one and all. Registration will cost £1 (happily this is not an annual charge). Somerset House demands in the shape of carriage tax: £2 2s. for a small car and £4 4s. for a big one, with 15s. a year additional for a driver if one is kept; driving licence costs 5s. a year; so that altogether the lowest annual charge under these various heads cannot be less than £2 7s., while it may be as much as £5 4s. Proposals have been made greatly to increase these imposts, but sufficient unto the day are the charges thereof. Insurance is another highly essential item which may be classed with these preliminary, and, so to speak, unproductive, outgoings. In the case of a small car, from £7 to £10 may be set aside under this head—certainly not any less. Then comes the question of stabling, and this in London is usually a pretty heavy item, though it may sometimes be reduced, as above suggested, by dividing the expenses with a friend. If, however, it can be managed, a separate stable is certainly to be preferred. In the suburbs adequate accommodation can usually be got for about £1 a month; in town from £20 to £25 a year would probably be nearer the mark. Certainly for a small car it should not be necessary to pay more than £20.

The next biggest item will be tyres. Tyres are an uncertain quantity in more ways than one. Nature of car, mileage, quality of tyres, character of driving, nature of roads, chance, and luck, are only a few of the several factors affecting this particular item. All that is quite certain is that under the best of circumstances the outgoings under this particular head cannot fail to be very considerable. Of one eminent automobilist it is said that his tyre bill amounts annually to something like £1,000, and the statement is by no means so extravagant as it sounds. In the case of a small car, run, perhaps, 200 miles a week on an average—that is, not every day, but chiefly on Saturdays and Sundays only—it would hardly be extravagant to allow £20 a year for renewal of inner tubes and outer covers. If the car is driven carefully, and the tyres are properly looked after—a most important consideration—the cost need not be quite so much, perhaps. But, speaking generally, it will hardly be less unless solid tyres are used.

Petrol may be put down in the case of such a car as that supposed—i.e., one of from 8 h.p. to 10 h.p.—at, say, another £20. Oil is a further cause of expenditure not to be overlooked, amounting, say, with grease, carbide, and paraffin for the lamps, to about £4 per annum. Repairs and replacements are, like tyres, an uncertain quantity. It may, however, be taken for granted that the better the class of car the less will be the average outlay required under this head. The facetious epithet of "repairers' pets" serves to indicate, on the other hand, the sort of bills which the luckless owner is likely to incur who has the misfortune to have a car of the less reputable kind. Even with the best cars, luck and chance may have a good deal to say in the matter. An undetected flaw may necessitate the renewal of your driving shaft, lubrication may be overlooked or go wrong, and result in a seized piston, gear wheels may wear badly, springs may break, cylinder jackets may be cracked by frost—in fact, there are a thousand and one things, great and small, which may happen, every one of which will mean expenditure more or less serious to set right. Still, in a general way, and barring serious mishaps not recoverable through one's insurance, from £10 to £15 should see a small 8-h.p. or 10-h.p. car through twelve months' incidents of this kind, including, in addition, all ordinary every-day renewals and repairs. Remains only "miscellaneous," in the shape of tips, washing car, charging accumulators, garage charges when on tour, and a hundred other odds and ends which keep the motorist's hand pretty often in the neighbourhood of his pocket. It would not be excessive, perhaps, to put aside £5 for these.

How, therefore, does it work out? Taking stable at £20, taxes at £2 7s., insurance at £10, tyres at £20, petrol at £20, repairs and replacements at £12, and sundries at £5, a total is arrived at not far short of £90 as something like the amount which a car of the sort assumed and used to the extent suggested might be expected to cost an owner driving it himself. In addition, of course, there should, strictly speaking, be brought into the account the further items of interest on capital and depreciation; but these do not entail actual out-of-pocket disbursements, and, with fine disregard of orthodox, account-keeping, may therefore be left aside on the present occasion. It is enough to know that for something less than £100 a year a four-seated motor-car can be run and maintained without difficulty. To which it may be added, of course, that if the owner were content with a smaller car still—say, a 6-h.p. Rover or a 6-h.p. De Dion—the total outlay involved would be proportionately lower.

MAMMON.

THE STOCK MARKETS AND CHEAPER MONEY—HIGHER SECURITY VALUES ALMOST INEVITABLE—TWO INFLUENCES CHECKING A RALLY—NEW ISSUES AND "WRECKAGE."

THE event of outstanding importance for the Stock Markets last week was the further cheapening of money rates. We have had declines in the German Bank rate from 6 to 5½ per cent., in the Dutch rate from 5½ to 5, and in our own official minimum from 4½ to 4. So far, Throgmorton Street appears to have derived no benefit at all from the process. Consols, indeed, when the decision of the central establishment was made known last Thursday, promptly declined, leading a humorist to remark that the stock had fallen "in sympathy with the Bank rate." But to declare that the lower monetary standard has already been discounted because prices have not immediately responded betrays a want of knowledge of the proper relationship that exists between the value of money and the price of securities. Providing of course, that lower discount rates have come to stay, there must as surely be a responsive move upward in the value of stocks as there was a move downward in stocks in answer to the stringent monetary rates that prevailed throughout the latter half of last year and the first quarter of the present. The installation of a 4 per cent. Bank rate has involved a reduction in the deposit allowance of the joint-stock banks to 2½ per cent. This must tend to bring considerable sums into the stock market, as depositors more generally awake to the fact that they can obtain at least 1 per cent. better terms upon the best securities than by allowing their money to lie in the banks.

Moreover, although by comparison with 6 and 5 per cent. a 4 per cent Bank rate seems low, it is still above the average rate for the time of year. Whether we are to witness a further reduction in the near future depends upon developments that cannot yet be definitely determined, but it is at least as likely as not that a 3 per cent. official minimum may be established between now and the early summer. The danger set up by an inflated "bull" account in Americans has been dispersed, and at the present time speculation in stocks of all kinds is almost a negligible quantity. Argentina, too, is no longer a drain upon us for gold; indeed, it would not be surprising if later on a portion of the vast amount of yellow metal—£28,000,000 within eight years—accumulated by that country should flow back to this side, having regard to the big alteration in the trade balance of the River Plate that will be caused by this year's smaller maize crop. The world's trade is still at high-water mark, it is true, but in some directions signs of a reaction have already set in, and if the tide is really about to turn, the money market will be quick to feel the change, because of the heavy increase that during the last year or two has taken place in the production of gold. On an average, £600,000 comes into the London open market weekly from Africa, Australia, and India. At the present time the Bank of England owes about £2,000,000 to the Bank of France upon bills that will mature within the next six weeks, but, unless something unforeseen occur, Threadneedle Street ought to be able to liquidate this indebtedness, and at the same time continue to add to its bullion stock.

No doubt two factors that so far have tended to offset the beneficent influence of cheaper money upon stocks have been the rush of public borrowers to place new issues of stock and the continuance of quiet selling by those who took over "wreckage" at the troublous March settlements. The new issues are necessarily tending, for the time being, to distract the attention of investors from existing stocks, but the bulk of the money recently raised on new securities will remain in the country. Even with the new Straits loan nearly four-fifths will go to the shareholders in the Tanjong Pagar Docks, a large number of whom reside in Great Britain. Thus it is easily possible for the Stock Exchange to exaggerate the effects of the present activity in the raising of new loans. The Straits Settlements, by the way, did not achieve the popular success of the London County Council. Of the £5,000,000 offered for subscription the underwriters have been left with 44 per cent. There was no question about the cheapness of the terms on which the issue was made, and the result serves to prove that the public appetite for gilt-edged fare is, for the present, not robust. Public borrowers will do well therefore not to force the pace. The Chinese Railway loan for £1,500,000 offered last week went like hot cakes, the lists only being open a few hours, but that was hardly surprising in view of the big demand that still exists for well secured investments yielding 5 per cent.

HOME RAILS FIRM—SCOTCH STOCKS A FEATURE—CITY AND SOUTH LONDON AND THE EUSTON EXTENSION—THE GENERAL TRAFFIC POSITION.

On the whole the Home Railway Market last week did not shape at all badly. Business in this department has been in a moribund condition for so long that the dealers are thankful for small mercies, and there has been evidence during the last few days of a little nibbling on the part of the public. To what extent it has moved prices may be seen from my usual table:—

Home Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	Apl 20. 1907.	Apl 27. 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Caledonian 3 p.c. Pref.	80	72¾	69	70	+1
Do. Def.	42½	28⅝	28½	29	+ ⅜
Central London	96½	82½	77	76	-1
City and S. London	47½	39	42	42	—
Furness	69⅜	61⅜	61½	61½	—
Glasgow and South-Western Def.	42⅜	37¼	35½	36	- ½
Great Central 1894 Pref.	81¼	69	62	62	—
Do. "B"	40⅝	32½	28½	28½	- ¼
Do. "A"	19½	15¼	14¼	14½	+ ⅜
Great Eastern	90¾	79½	74⅜	74⅜	- ⅛
Great Northern Pref.	105	98¾	99	99¼	+ ¼
Do. Def.	48⅞	39½	41	41⅜	+ ⅜
Great Western	144	122⅜	125	125½	+ ½
Hull and Barnsley	50	42½	47	47⅜	+ ⅜
Lancashire and Yorkshire	110½	100	102½	102	- ½
London and Brighton "A"	130⅜	111¼	100	99	-1
London, Chatham, and Dover	16⅜	13	13⅜	13⅞	+ ⅜
Do. 4½ p.c. Arbitration Pref.	99½	85	82	81	-1
Do. do. 2nd Pref.	64½	48	50	50	—
London and North-Western	163½	147½	148¼	148¼	—
London and South-Western Def.	57½	44⅜	49½	49⅞	+ ⅜
Metropolitan Consolidated	89½	59	47	46	-1
Metropolitan District	37½	18⅜	14	14	—
Midland 2½ p.c. Pref.	70⅜	64	65½	65	- ½
Do. Def.	74⅞	62½	63½	63¾	+ ¼
North British 3 p.c. Pref.	78⅜	72½	69½	70	+½
Do. Def.	47⅞	38¾	34⅜	35	+ ⅝
North-Eastern Consolidated	147⅞	134½	138¾	139	+ ¼
North Staffordshire	105½	96½	98	99	+1
South-Eastern "A"	55⅞	44⅞	40	40½	+ ½

Perhaps the leading feature was again the demand for Scottish railway stocks, the market evidently looking forward with some confidence to the outcome of the desire expressed by the respective boards to amend their ways in the matter of unremunerative expenditure, stimulated as they will be by the newly-formed Shareholders' Protection Association. It will require a good deal of patience before the return to the "simple life" re-instals Caledonian deferred into the ranks of cheap stocks, seeing that the present yield on the stock is not quite 2½ per cent., but any improvement in the company's credit must tell directly upon the three per cent. preferred. This stock can now be bought to yield about 4⅜ per cent., and as the full interest is already amply covered, it is one that may be comfortably "sat upon" by the investor for an ultimate rise. North British three per cent. preferred, which gives an almost identical return, is another stock to which the same recommendation applies. In the English group Great Northern Deferred has made up the fall that occurred in the previous week, and remains one of the most attractive amongst the low-priced stocks. Hulls, too, have benefited from a further absorption by investors, who are recognising the bright dividend possibilities for the current year, with which I have dealt several times of late. In the Underground group there has been some reaction, which is not unnatural, bearing in mind that the market had recently been forcing the pace, and that the benefits, arising—in the case of the Central London from graduated fares, and in that of the Metropolitan from more economical working and a possible revision of competitive 'bus fares—have yet to be determined.

City and South London ordinary has been firm in anticipation of the opening of the new extension to Euston, which will be formally effected on May 11 by Mr. Percy Harris, chairman of the London County Council. The company will then be linked up with the London and North-Western, the Midland, and the Great Northern Railway systems; also with the Piccadilly Tube at King's Cross and the Hampstead Tube at Euston. Thus the City and South London ought to give a good account of itself, and in the view of Mr. Stuart Wortley, M.P., the chairman, there is every reason to expect that the company will reap a substantial profit on the money spent in connection with the latest extension. As upon the basis of the dividend for 1906, the company's ordinary stock returns £5 9s. per cent., it appears to leave room for a fair levelling up. The company has just obtained powers to raise £200,000, either in preference or ordinary stock, on terms to be arranged later, and this sum ought to be sufficient to complete the financing of the new line. Among steady-going stocks to yield 4½ per cent., City and South London five per cent. preference of 1903 is worth bringing to the public notice. There is little doubt about the soundness of this security, and but for the fact that the price was affected by the new issue made last year, which had to be placed on unduly unsatisfactory terms because of the dearness of money, the stock would not be standing where it is now. If, as there seems good reason to hope, we have really entered upon a fairly lengthy spell of comparative ease in the Money Market, there will be an increasing demand for bargains of this type, and the competition among buyers cannot fail to affect values.

The stocks of the heavy lines have shown little movement during the week, this group, in the absence of public business, merely reflecting the dulness of Consols. Meanwhile the companies continue to pile up traffic increases at a rate which should enable them to retain substantially larger sums in hand at the end of the half-year after making due allowance for the extra cost of materials, and the customary increase in expenses that an enlargement of gross revenue entails. The position may be gathered from the following table, showing the aggregate receipts for sixteen weeks, the increase or decrease in 1907, and the increase or decrease registered at the corresponding date in 1906:—

Company.	Total 1907. (16 weeks).	Increase or Decrease in 1907.	Increase in 1906.
	£	£	£
Great Central	1,210,200	+ 37 500	+ 43,400
Great Eastern	1,505,800	− 6,400	+ 17,700
Great Northern	1,743,300	+ 35,500	+ 39 500
Great Western	3,590,200	+114,500	+ 32 400
Lancashire & Yorkshire	1,701 800	+ 46,800	+ 53,600
London & North Western	4,362,000	+132,000	+137,000
London & South-Western	1,315,000	+ 11,500	+ 20,700
London Brighton	852,000	− 28 600	+ 6,100
Midland	3,616,400	+119,000	+ 93,000
North-Eastern	2,865,700	+111,800	+147,900
South-Eastern & Chatham	1,268,400	+ 14,200	+ 9,200

The manner in which gains have been scored on top of substantial improvements a year ago is really remarkable, though, perhaps, no more than might be expected from the evidences given by the Board of Trade returns and other reliable sources of the vitality of trade at our leading industrial centres. For the present, at all events, there is every reason to look for a continuance of bumper traffics, and with this in view, and given a continuance of monetary ease, Home Railway stocks ought to come in for a larger share of attention from the public.

American Rails Quiescent—Wall Street Leaders on Holiday—The Market in the Hands of the Professional Punter—Serious Damage Reported to Winter Wheat—More Big Capital Issues Foreshadowed.

The American Market throughout last week remained in the subdued state that has characterised it since the upheaval which culminated a month ago. Prices have had such a severe fall in the past three months, and the "bull" account has been liquidated in such wholesale fashion, that the "bears" have been disposed to act with greater caution than of late. But the fact remains that, despite the comparatively high yields offered by stocks on the basis of last year's distributions, nobody seems willing to buy. Those who take the view that the decline has run its course refer in the same breath to the dangers of "bulling" the market at present—what with the aggressive attitude of the Government and State Legislature towards corporations, the threatened industrial reaction, the unfavourable reports from the crop centres, and the fear of further new issues. Others hold the belief that stocks must drift to a lower plane yet before the public will consent to re-enter the market, and they claim, in support of this view, the opinion of Mr. James J. Hill, head of the Hill Railroad Systems, who is said to be privately predicting dire stress among the dividend-paying corporations within twelve months, and also the assertion of Mr. George J. Gould that the enforcement of the two cent passenger rate must involve a reduction of railroad dividends. Whatever happens, the market seems as far off a boom as it could possibly be. Wall Street's leaders evidently share this attitude, for during the last few days there has been quite an exodus of magnates from New York to Europe for a spring tour, the number including Mr. H. H. Rogers (of the Standard Oil Company), Mr. George Gould, Mr. Blumenthal (Lazard Frères), Mr. Francis L. Hine (Vice-President of the First National Bank), and Mr. Paul Warburg (Kuhn Loeb and Company). With the "bosses" either absent or apathetic, the market has been left to the smaller professionals, or floor traders, as the New York reporter chooses to term them, and as the enforced motto of these sportsmen is "small profits—quick returns," prices have bobbed up and down serenely within about a dollar limit, the features of outstanding

How to Operate in Stocks Successfully.—See Halford's Adviser (post free).—Palmerston House, London, E.C. Established 1869. Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

Antipon, most successful of remedies for the Cure of Obesity, has received the highest praise from Press and public alike. The Illustrated London News says:—"Antipon not only speedily absorbs and throws out of the system all superabundant adipose matter, but increases strength and vitality." Price 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. per bottle, of all chemists, or of The Antipon Company, 13, Olmar-street, London, S.E.

interest being strictly limited. The net result of the week's movements is shown below:—

Americans.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	April 20, 1907.	April 27, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Atchison	114½	89	96⅞	97⅝	+ ⅞
Do. 5 per Cent. Pref.	109½	101	99	99¾	+ ¾
Baltimore and Ohio	129½	109⅝	100½	101½	+1
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	101½	93½	92	92	—
Chesapeake and Ohio	68¾	54	42½	43¼	+ ¾
Chicago, Milwaukee	204½	152½	137½	139	+1½
Denver and Rio Grande	52½	38⅜	29¾	30¼	+ ½
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	93¾	85⅞	77½	88	+ ½
Erie	52½	40	24¼	24⅝	+ ⅜
Do. 4 p.c. First Pref.	85½	77	56	56½	+ ½
Do. 4 p.c. Second Pref.	77	65¾	39	39	—
Illinois Central	188⅝	171	150	151	+1
Louisville	160¾	143¾	120	123	+3
Missouri, Kansas	45⅝	31 7/16	37½	37¾	+ ¾
New York Central	159½	130¾	122xd.	122½	+ ½
N. Y. Ontario and Western	57 7/16	45½	39	39	—
Norfolk and Western	100¾	87⅛	77½	79	+1½
Do. 4 p.c. Pref.	96¼	91½	86	86	—
Northern Pacific	235	190½	136xd.	139	+3
Pennsylvania ($50)	75½	63⅝	64½	65	+ ½
Reading ($50)	85⅝	59⅞	54½	56½	+2
Southern	43¾	33	21⅞	22⅝	+ ¼
Do. 5 p.c. Pref.	105	97	67	70	+3
Southern Pacific	99 5/16	64⅜	85½	86⅝	+1¼
Union Pacific	203	144⅝	140⅜	146½	+5⅞
U.S. Steel	52½	33⅞	38⅛	38	− ⅛
Do. 7 p.c. Pref.	117	102⅝	103½	104	+ ½

Union Pacific has been rather sought after by the "bull" clique. The specially high return given by this stock naturally renders it susceptible to favourable influences, and the market was last week treated to the news that the Inter-State Commerce Commission would not press its investigations into the Harriman group for the present, while there was also a story that a holding company was being formed to take over the Union Pacific's investments—with the ulterior object, it was said, of circumventing the Commission should the Union's ownership of the Southern Pacific be declared illegal.

Attempts made to lift United States Steel Common on talk of an increase in the dividend have not been very successful. Recently there had been talk of the stock going immediately upon a 3 or even a 4 per cent. basis, but the market is now veering round to the opinion that there will be no advance upon the present rate of 2 per cent., admitting the improbability of a bigger distribution now that people are all talking of a general trade reaction. Perhaps the paramount influence upon prices last week was the more generally unfavourable news regarding winter wheat. It is now apparently accepted that the early crop has suffered considerable damage through cold weather and insects, while there has also been delay in planting corn and spring wheat through adverse climatic conditions. It will, of course, be impossible to estimate for some months yet what the total grain yield is likely to be, but the market's sensitiveness to crop news is easily understood, for this is likely to be a critical year for the United States. Given a good harvest and the reactionary tendency of trade may be checked, if not arrested altogether, but a poor harvest will set the seal upon the backward movement. So far as the Money Market is concerned, time loans in New York are now being arranged on easy terms, thanks to the release of funds by the Treasury, but it is noteworthy that advances to railroads are still fetching very high rates. The fact is that bankers and financiers in New York already have more railroad scrip than they can conveniently take care of. From authentic figures it seems that in the first quarter of the year the total of notes, bonds, and stocks authorised by railroad and industrial corporations came to the huge sum of 670 million dollars, of which about 400 million has been issued. Of the authorised amount, 187 millions was in notes, 107 millions in bonds, and 374 millions in stocks. Nearly all the notes and bonds thus authorised have been issued, but only about 66 millions of the stocks. Thus, should money conditions get more favourable, there is every likelihood of a recommencement of the era of heavy railroad borrowing.

"FINANCE."—A concise weekly record of markets and prices, published by the CENTRAL STOCK EXCHANGE, LTD. (Established 1893), 66, Cannon-street, London, E.C. Post free for six months to applicants mentioning this paper.

GRAND TRUNKS AND BUMPER TRAFFICS—THE MEXICAN RAILWAY REPORT—HEAVY REVENUE OUTLAYS FORESHADOWED—A BOMBSHELL FOR THE MARKET—FAVOURABLE MEXICAN SOUTHERN DIVIDEND—UNITED OF HAVANA—DISAPPOINTING INTERIM DISTRIBUTION.

In the Canadian Railway group the recent remarkable succession of traffic increases is having its effect upon Grand Trunk stocks, and particularly upon the third preference, which stands to derive the most direct benefit. Since the reopening of lake navigation a month ago the carriage of traffic held back by weather conditions has caused a gross increase on the Trunk system of no less than £116,700, making the aggregate gain since January 1 £226,500. With so much old grain still waiting to be carried, as I mentioned last week, and with traffics likely to be further swollen by the transport of building material for the new Pacific road, there is reason to look for a rising Trunk market for some time to come. Canadian Pacifics have moved within comparatively narrow limits. Activity in these shares has been checked by the strike of coal miners in Alberta. This trouble appears to have had some effect on the company's earnings, for the last traffic, although showing an increase of $96,000, was not up to the high standard to which the line has conformed since the advent of milder weather. At the time of writing the news from the mining district reads more hopefully, and it is probable that the trouble will be smoothed out before long. The matter, in any case, is hardly one that need seriously concern Canadian Pacific shareholders.

The Mexican Railway Market, which was upset by the recent dividend announcement because dealers had flown their kite too high, received a bomb-shell from the report published last Wednesday evening. The paragraph, upon which all eyes were turned, is worth giving in full:—

> In view of the greater weight of new engines and the age of the bridges, a careful examination and testing of these structures has been carried out by an independent expert in bridge construction, who reports that reconstruction will in most cases be necessary to fit them for present traffic conditions. The cost of this, together with that of relaying the upper section of the road with heavier rails, after taking into account the value of old materials removed, and charging due proportions to capital, may involve a charge against revenue approximating £300,000, which it is proposed to spread over a period of years.

The terms of the announcement left the market much mystified, for without knowing over how many years it was proposed to spread this expenditure operators were unable to estimate what the effect would be upon the dividend outlook. Possibly the point will be cleared up at the meeting, though even if it is the fact remains that the board, in drafting its report, might have been more explicit. There would have been less room for a break in prices had the pace made by speculators lately been more moderate. Weeks ago, when the ordinary was in the sixties, I ventured the opinion that the "bulls" were over-discounting the future, and the setback in the stock to 42, which was touched last Thursday, serves as confirmation. Only in May last the chairman expressly stated that it would be necessary to relay 150 miles of road with heavier rails at an estimated cost of £1,000 per mile, and that the charge was altogether a revenue burden. He also told the proprietors that the era of heavy expenditure on ordinary maintenance of way and of rolling stock was drawing to a conclusion, but the era of large special renewals was about to commence. Some people, in the wave of optimism that was spread by the late run of handsome traffic increases, appear to have quite forgotten the warnings of the board, but they have now received a sharp reminder, which will modify, at any rate, for some little time to come, extravagant estimates of dividends on the ordinary.

Rather different to the effect produced upon the stocks of the old Mexican Railway by the half-year's dividend was that wrought upon Mexican Southern Railway ordinary by the results for the year 1906. In both cases the showings were very good, but whereas in the one the market had been over sanguine, in the other there had been no speculation worth speaking about. The Mexican Southern Railway is distributing 3 per cent.

for the year, which is ½ per cent. better than the rate paid in either 1905 or 1904, and is the best in the company's history. It is true that £2,000 less has been carried to contingency fund, and nearly £4,000 less carried forward, but against these items must be set the fact that the company in 1906 felt the full loss arising from the repayment two years ago of the 6 per cent. Subvention bonds of the Mexican Government. This matter involved a loss last year of £19,000, whereas the company in 1905 suffered only to the extent of £5,500. So far as the current year is concerned the line has started off in a manner which suggests that the dividend will be maintained if not increased, and as the ordinary can be bought at about 59, and moreover carries 3 points of dividend in the price, the stock looks a bargain. The dividend declared by the United railways of the Havana was not up to expectations. The actual rate was 5 per cent. per annum, as compared with 9 per cent. per annum, but, of course, the stock in the last twelvemonth has been "watered" to the extent of 50 per cent., therefore on the old basis the dividend is equal to 7½ per cent., as against the 9 per cent. declared a year ago. It is only an interim distribution, and for detailed information as to the company's position we must await the report due in October. But as the market had been talking about a payment of 6 per cent., which would be the equivalent of last year's payment of 9 per cent., the announcement has naturally had a damping effect upon the ordinary stock. My usual table follows:—

Colonial and Foreign Rails.	1906. Highest	1906. Lowest	Apl. 20, 1907.	Apl. 27, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Canadian Pacific	208	161⅞	180¾	180⅝	- ⅛
Grand Trunk	29 11/16	25 1/16	31½	31⅛	+ 1/16
Do. 4 p.c. Guaranteed	105½	101⅛	102½	100½xd	+ ½
Do. 5 p.c. First Pref.	123⅜	114¾	121½	118½xd	- ½
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	115	105⅜	112¾	111xd	+ ⅜
Do. 4 p.c. Third Do.	70½	60 1/16	74⅜	72¾xd	+1½
Mexican	50⅞	22½	47⅛	44½	-3⅜
Do. 8 p.c. First Pref.	144½	118⅞	140	141	+1
Do. 6 p.c. Second Pref.	93⅞	49⅛	89½	88	-1½
Interoceanic of Mex. 7 p.c. Pref.	11 11/16	0	11⅜	11¼	+ ⅛
Do. 7 p.c. "B" Debs	124	109	116	115½	- ½
Mexican Central 4 p.c.	90½	78½	85	85	—
Do. First Incomes	30	18	24	24	—
Do. Securities "A" bearer	95	88 1/16	91	91	—
Do. Do. "B" Do.	81½	65⅛	80	80	—
Nat. of Mexico 4 p.c. First Pref.	61⅞	37½	54	56	+2
Do. 5 p.c. Second Pref.	31⅜	19½	23	23	—
Bengal and North Western	149½	144	150	155	+5
Madras 5 p.c.	127½	120½	122½	120	-2½
Antofagasta Def.	180½	162	152½	140	-12½
Nitrate Rails	16⅜	14⅛	15⅛	15½	- ⅛
Argentine Great Western	130½	111	108½	107½	-1
Do. North-Eastern Debs.	83⅛	64½	78	78	—
Buenos Ayres and Pacific	136½	120	117½	115xd	+ ½
Do. and Rosario	120½	111	105½	103½xd	+1½
Do. Great Southern	145	122⅜	123½	124	+ ½
Do. Western	138¾	123½	121½	121¾	+ ¼
East Argentine	120	87	119	119	—
Cordoba Cen. (C.N.S.) Income Debs.	75½	63⅝	66½	67½	+1
Cordoba and Rosario First Pref.	108¾	85	88	88½	+ ½
Entre Rios First Pref	98	85	90	91	+1
Great Western of Brazil	16⅛	12½	11⅝	11½xd	- 1/16
Leopoldina	86½	69½	76¾	77½	+ ½
San Paulo	214¾	199½	217	213½xd	+2½
Central Uruguay	92½	82	88½	91	+ 3
Costa Rica	29 1/16	25	29½	29½	—
Cartagena (Colombia) Debs.	80⅛	78	73½	73½	—
Colombian Nat. Second Debs	88½	76¾	77	77	—
Colombian Northern 5 p.c. Debs.	81½	76¾	82½	82½	—
Manila 6 p.c Debs.	126	112	110	109	-1
Guayaquil and Quito 6 p.c. Bonds	93½	55	49	53	+4
Cuban Central	7 1/16	5⅝	6 1/16	6 1/16	—
United of Havana	193	105⅝	106	99½xd	-4
Western of Havana	15 3/16	12½	12½	12½	—
Mashonaland Debs. (2nd issue)	94¾	87¾	86	87½	+1½
Rhodesia 4 p.c. Debs.	81⅝	76	77½	78	+ ½
Ottoman (Smyrna to Aidin)	23⅜	19½	21½	21½	—

Recovery in Kaffirs Checked by the Uncertainty as Regards the Labour Outlook—Conflicting Reports Circulated—The New Vaal Diamonds the Centre of Activity During the Past Week.

Although the past week has witnessed some improvement in business conditions in the Mining Markets, Kaffir gold shares have not benefited to any extent. With the opening of the new account, the tone became more cheerful, and prices showed a tendency to improve, but the recovery was nipped in the bud. The reason for the quietness and dulness of Kaffirs seems to be the uncertainty as to the immediate labour outlook, despite the assurances that have been given that the new Government would not seriously hamper the mining industry. As I reminded my readers last week, the chief point at issue at present is as to the retention of the Chinese. The contracts of the first batches of coolies to arrive on the Rand three years ago begin to expire next month, and unless action is taken these workers will have to be repatriated. Conflicting reports have been circulated during the past week as to the intention of the Government in respect to this important matter. On the one hand we have been told that General Botha and the Rand magnates have come to a satisfactory agreement; that the mineowners would secure the success of a large loan required by the new Government, and in return General Botha would undertake that the latter should not interfere with the mining industry. On the other hand, a cable from Johannesburg asserts that the Chinese are to be repatriated without delay as their contracts expire, and adds: "There is no possible hope of retention, and the decision is final." In the face of such conflicting statements it is not to be wondered at that the share market has not made headway, and until a definite authoritative announcement on the matter is issued, improvement in business conditions in the Kaffir market is hardly to be expected. It is to be hoped, therefore, that General Botha will see his way to clear up the question at to-night's banquet, which is being given so that he may meet the London representatives of the Transvaal banking, commercial, and mining interests.

As a rule, the leading diamond shares have not been quite so freely dealt in during the past week as hitherto, but New Vaal Rivers have attracted a good deal of attention. The recent substantial fall in the quotation of these shares has been followed by an appreciable advance, as will be seen from the following table:—

Share.	April 20, 1907.	April 27, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
De Beers Pref.	17¾	18	+ ¼
,, ,, Def	26⅜	26	- ⅜
Jagersfontein Pref.	4½	4½	—
,, Def.	9¼	9 1/16	—
New Vaal River	4 5/16	6 7/16	+2⅛
Premier (Transvaal) Pref.	8½	8½	—
,, ,, Def.	12¾	12⅞	+ ⅛

The spurt in New Vaals would appear to be entirely the outcome of market manipulation. The arrangement of the settlement last week disclosed the existence of a "bear" position in the shares, there being a backwardation instead of the usual contango, and evidently advantage has been taken of the circumstances to "squeeze" those who had sold short.

Rhodesians generally have continued to move pretty much in sympathy with the Kaffir gold descriptions. Business has been on a slightly better scale in this section during the past week, but prices, as a rule, have not materially altered. At the close on Monday, however, activity suddenly developed in the shares of the Banket group, and Eldorado Bankets were in request up to 3, which price compares with the quotation of 1¾ ruling a few weeks ago. The improvement thus recorded is accounted for by the satisfactory reports that have come to hand as to developments—to which I referred at some length in recent notes—and by the fact that the crushing stage is expected to be reached very soon now. Those of my readers who bought the shares have an opportunity to secure a handsome profit, and I think they may as well take advantage of it, unless they wish to keep the shares for ultimate dividends.

Rand Mines, Limited, and its Extensive Interests—Points from the Annual Statements—Record Dividend Income from Subsidiaries in 1906—Comparison of Past Two Years' Results—Increased Dividends Foreshadowed—Highest and Lowest Market Prices for the Last Three Years.

In accordance with the promise I made a few weeks ago to review the position of the principal mines of the Rand, I am devoting a portion of my space this week to a number of deep level mines, the subsidiaries of Rand Mines, Limited, whose annual report has recently reached me by mail, together with a full account of the proceedings at the meeting held at

(Continued on page 1089.)

(Continued from page 1088.)

Johannesburg at the end of March. The importance of the Rand Mines' subsidiaries may be gauged from the fact that the mines which are producing the precious metal were last year responsible for close on 5 per cent. of the total gold output of the world. In order to show briefly how these companies did individually in the last two financial years I have compiled the following tables:—

COMPANY.	1906. Ore milled.	Gold produced.	Net profit.	Dividend.
	Tons.	Fine ozs.	£	%
Glen Deep	212,902	79,428	105,887	15
Rose Deep	315,650	111,377	139,706	20
Geldenhuis Deep	303 325	116,832	159,868	40
Jumpers Deep	214 739	75,277	32.940	—
Nourse Mines	334,485	142,016	182,096	25
Ferreira Deep	251,721	150,909	380.435	35
Crown Deep	341.464	135,678	246,840	80
Langlaagte Deep	265 460	94,218	86,065	—
Durban Deep	128,177	46,176	20,573	—

COMPANY.	1905. Ore milled.	Gold produced.	Net profit.	Dividend.
	Tons.	Fine ozs.	£	%
Glen Deep	331,667	134,771	101,336	10
Rose Deep	114,430	51,099	141,432	25
Geldenhuis Deep	210,484	134,980	195,792	50
Jumpers Deep	281,785	122,543	21,621	—
Nourse Mines	183,230*	74,045*	103,521*	15*
Ferreira Deep	188,333	65,311	318 922	30
Crown Deep	235,502	82,014	249,474	70
Langlaagte Deep	173,450	81,723	73,358	—
Durban Deep	304,353	106,012	39,919	—

* Nourse Deep results. Co. now amalgamated with Henry Nourse.

At the end of the past year the Glen Deep had cash and cash assets on hand amounting to £53,900 in addition to £8,717, the value of the gold reserve. The working profits so far during the current year have been above the average for the past twelve months. Rose Deep had £33,059 cash and cash assets available at the end of the past year, while the gold in reserve represented a value of £429. In the case of this company the prospect is held out of an increase in the rate of dividend. The developments in the mine south of the Simmer dyke have disclosed better values than have been mined during the last two years. This will increase the tonnage treated this year and it is expected that profits will be proportionately enhanced, in consequence of which, it is officially announced, "somewhat larger distributions of dividends may be looked for—probably in the current year, but in any case, for 1908." Geldenhuis Deep was not in so satisfactory a position at the end of the year as the two companies above mentioned. It had a cash liability of £10,080, against which gold in reserve amounted to £3,632, leaving a net liability of £6,448. A satisfactory feature, however, is that the company's liability in respect of debenture redemption has now been entirely liquidated, which means, of course, that in future all net profits will be available for distribution on the share capital after liquidating the cash liability mentioned. As regards the Jumpers Deep, the cash and cash assets (including the value of the gold reserve) were practically the same at the end of the past year as at the beginning of that period, the net profit earned being rather more than counterbalanced by capital expenditure. This company only last month rejoined the list of dividend payers. Since the beginning of 1906 the Nourse Mines has taken the place of the Nourse Deep, the latter having been amalgamated with the Henry Nourse. At the end of the year cash and cash assets amounted to £106,393 and the value of the gold in reserve was £9,174.

The Ferreira Deep had £79,784 on hand at the close of 1906, and the gold reserve was valued at £20,318. The directors of this company have decided upon a capital expenditure of about £117,000 for the purpose of increasing the crushing capacity by some 10,000 tons per month, but the financing of this operation is to be done out of current profits without interfering with the present rate of dividends. Ultimately the expansion of production should result in increased distributions, and it is officially stated that an advance in the rate of dividend may be looked for in about eighteen months' time, after which date it is anticipated that the company will be able to gradually increase its dividends to 50 per cent. per annum. The Crown Deep had cash and cash assets amounting to £68,011 at the end of 1906 and reserve gold of a value of £7,074. Some further capital expenditure may be necessary during the current year, but it is confidently anticipated that the rate of dividend will be somewhat increased. The Langlaagte Deep is expected before very long to enter the dividend list. The enlarged equipment of 200 stamps is now in operation at this mine, and the profits for the current year show a marked improvement upon the average for the past twelve months. It is anticipated that the company will reach the dividend paying stage at the end of the next financial half-year (July 31), but certainly not later than January 31 next. It will be a relief to Rand Mines, for, as the chairman remarked at the meeting, the financing of the Langlaagte Deep has at times been a severe strain upon the parent company, its indebtedness having at one time been as much as £600,000. That the feeling of relief will be quite as fully felt by Langlaagte Deep shareholders, there is little reason to doubt. The profit earned last year by the Durban Deep was unsatisfactory, barely sufficing for the repayment of the debentures and premiums. The extension of the crushing plant to 100 stamps and tube mills is to be taken in hand at an early date. A cable recently to hand reports the striking of the south reef in the eastern shaft, and it is satisfactory to note that the values are better than the average results of development on the same ore body in the western section last year.

As regards the finances of Rand Mines, Limited, itself, it is to be noted that the net profit for the past year amounted to £518,677, compared with £667,798 for the preceding period, although the income from dividends from subsidiaries was a record, namely, £576,913, or £92,430 in excess of the amount derived from that source in the previous year. From the statements above in reference to the prospects of some of the subsidiaries it will be gathered that there is reason to expect that the parent company will receive a still larger sum in the form of dividends on its shareholdings in the current year. The position of Rand Mines at the end of 1906 was that it had available cash and cash assets amounting to £757,244 after providing for all liabilities, with the exception of the £500,000 outstanding debentures. The balance mentioned is available for the redemption of debentures, the financing of subsidiaries or other companies, and, should occasion arise, the provision of working capital in connection with its claim holdings. A portion of the annual report of this company which is always of particular interest is that which refers to the changes that have taken place in its shareholdings during the period under review. This year it is shown that the company's holdings in the Glen Deep, Crown Deep, Village Main Reef, and Paarl Central have been slightly increased, while it would appear that none has been reduced. The directors have reverted to the practice of paying dividends half-yearly, and the last half-yearly distribution was 3s. per share for the six months ended December last. On the basis of dividends of 6s. per share per annum, the shares at the current market price yield under 5 per cent., but Rand Mines shares are dealt in as a favourite speculative counter, not being as yet seriously considered as an investment for dividends. Altogether, Rand Mines is interested in more than a score of mines, but its principal holdings are in the ten which comprise its own subsidiaries. Nine of these are producing and seven are now in the dividend list, and the facts and figures concerning them summarised above will, I venture to think, be of some assistance to those of my readers who are already interested in the companies referred to, and to others who may be thinking of becom-

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W. ing interested. Ferreira Deep appear to be "the pick of the basket," the prospective dividend return representing a yield of practically ten per cent. per annum on the current market price of the shares. The following table gives the highest and lowest prices touched during the last three years by the shares of the nine producing mines whose results are reviewed above:—

Share.	1906.		1905.		1904.
	Highest.	Lowest.	Highest.	Lowest.	Highest.	Lowest.
Crown Deep	13¼	10½	17	12½	16½	11½
Durban Deep	2 7/16	1	3½	1¾	3 7/16	2¼
Ferreira Deep	5⅝	4½	6½	5	6½	5
Geldenhuis Deep	8½	4⅝	11½	7¾	12	9⅜
Glen Deep	3¾	1⅝	5 7/16	3¼	5 7/16	3⅜
Jumpers Deep	3⅛	1¼	2¼	1⅜	3⅜	2
Llanglaagte Deep	2¾	1¼	3⅜	2	3 7/16	1¾
Nourse Mines	3⅝	2	5¼*	3¼*	5¼*	3⅜*
Rose Deep	5½	2¾	9⅛	4¼	9⅛	6¾

* Nourse Deep, before amalgamation with Henry Nourse.

Better Tendency Among Westralians—The Spurt in Associated—Ivanhoes and Sons of Gwalia—Deep Leads Firmer.

A little more interest has latterly been displayed in connection with the Westralian market, the issue of the annual reports of several of the principal companies having served to attract attention to the group. Some mining investors have awoke to the fact that good dividends are to be obtained on the shares of a few of Western Australia's leading gold mines, but apart from Ivanhoes, to which the attention of my readers was specially drawn in these columns when the price of the shares was only a trifle over £7, the quotations of the "investment" shares have not materially advanced, and still afford opportunities for satisfactory investment. Chief activity during the past week has been displayed by Associated, consequent upon the news to hand by cable from the mine as to developments, and it will be seen from the subjoined table of prices that these shares have had a good jump:—

Share.	1906.		Apl. 20, 1907.	Apl. 27, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
	Highest.	Lowest.
Associated	3	1 7/32	1 7/32	1 3/32	+ 3/32
Assoc. Northern Blocks	1⅜	1 1/16	2 3/32	31	+ 1/16
Cosmopolitan	8/3	3/6	4/3	4/3	—
Golden Horseshoe (£5)	6⅜	4⅝	6¼	6 1/16 xd	-7/9
Great Boulder (2/-)	28/-	20/3	22/9	23/3	+ 6d.
Do. Perseverance	13/-	7/3	6/3	6/6	+ 3d.
Great Fingall (10/-)	6 9/16	2¼	1 25/32	1 31/32	+ 1/32
Hainault	1 13/16	1¼	1 9/16	1 9/16	—
Ivanhoe (£5)	7¾	6 5/16	7⅝	7 1/16 xd.	+2/9
Kalgurli	12⅝	8⅝	10⅝	10	- ⅝
Lake View Consols	1 7/16	¾	1 1/32	¾	+ 1/32
L. & W. A. Exploration	21/10½	8/6	12/9	12/9	—
Oroya Brownhill	3¼	2	1⅝	1⅝	—
Sons of Gwalia	2 1/16	1 1/16	1¼	1 1/32 xd	+4½d.
South Kalgurli	1 7/16	¼	3/32	1/16	+ 3/32
Australian Commonwealth Trust	3 1/16	1½	1/16	1 1/16	+ 1
Consolidated Deep Leads (4/-)	½	¼	3/9	4/-	+ 3d.
Loddon Valley Goldfields	2 1/16	1/16	⅛	1/8	+ 1/8

Seeing that the dividends paid by the Associated the last two years do not justify anything like the present price of the shares, and that the ore reserves represent a profit in sight of, at most, 10s. a share, it will be gathered that a good deal depends upon the outcome of developments. The Associated has been expected to prove the continuation in its property of the famous Iron Duke chute, which has enabled the Oroya to pay such handsome dividends. This chute has been worked right up to the Associated boundary, but so far it has not been definitely located in Associated ground. A well-known mining engineer was sent out by the company at the beginning of the current year to direct operations, with a view to locating this important orebody, and he has just cabled that he believes it has been cut. Hence the revival of speculative interest in the shares, for should the chute be proved to extend through the Associated property and to be of as good value as it was in the Oroya, the outlook for Associated shareholders will be bright indeed. Kalgurlis have been kept back by the accident to the mill engine, which has caused a temporary curtailment of treatment operations, but there should be some recovery in the quotation before very long.

Ivanhoes are now ex the 9s. balance dividend for the past year, which made 24s. in all for the twelve months. Although they are not as cheap as when I reviewed the company's position some weeks ago, mining investors have still a chance of securing them at a reasonable price. At the annual meeting of the company last week Mr. F. A. Govett, the energetic and popular chairman, was unfortunately unable, through ill-health, to be present, but the exhaustive review of the position he had prepared was read to the shareholders by another member of the board. It may be remembered that the estimate of the ore reserves showed four and a half years' supply. But the position of the mine is really much better than this implies, as in that computation no ore below the 1,373-ft. level was taken into account. Mr. Govett says shareholders can make sure of the lodes 150 ft. below that level, and I quote the following paragraph from his address as summing up the position as near as possible at the present time:

> After our long and intimate knowledge of the reliable character of these wonderful lodes, I think you may add on two or two and a-half years for these two levels without putting any undue strain on the probabilities, and make fairly sure of your conclusions. That looks something like seven years down to the 1,670 feet level. I am not prepared to speak in any way of the grade of the ore between the 1,370 and 1,670 feet levels, but as far as we have gone there is no evidence of any material change. Lastly, in making your estimate of the probable intrinsic value of your property you must remember that, taking in the bullion reserve, we have over £100,000 of cash reserves, and you have to allow for the probable value of the mine below the 1,670 feet level. I do not care to place a figure on this probable value, but it would be no small sum.

Seven years' dividends at last year's rate would be equal to £8 8s. per share, while the cash reserves at the present time represent fully another 10s. per share. Another share in this market which is worthy of attention at the present price is Sons of Gwalia. Quarterly dividends of 1s. per share are being paid, which represent a yield of 18 per cent. per annum on the current quotation. The ore reserves above the No. 14 level on the main chute are estimated to be sufficient to maintain the present output for over two years, and before that date, of course, further development will have been done. Some weeks ago I referred to the discovery of a new ore chute to the south in this company's property, and it is to be observed that the annual report presented at the meeting on Monday last describes this discovery as "the most important development in the mine for some years." So far this ore body has been opened only on the seventh level, but the ninth and thirteenth levels should reach it in the current half-year, and, with the favourable results anticipated, the ore reserves should be greatly increased.

Deep Leads, after some weeks of depression, have taken a turn for the better, and at the present level of quotations certainly seem worth picking up as pure speculations. Further news from Loddon Valley may come to hand at any time, and, in the event of a favourable report, share values would doubtless experience a quick spurt.

Large Business in Copper Shares and Substantial Improvement in Prices—Mount Lyell Position and Dividend Prospects—Continued Activity in Zincs and a Further Cablegram.

The Copper group has enjoyed chief activity among the mining sections during the past week, and appears likely to continue to be favoured with a good share of business in the immediate future. The steady advance in the price of the metal to well over £100 per ton has naturally stimulated speculation in copper shares, and those who operated on the hints given in my notes last week have already had chances of securing satisfactory profits. Tintos, as the following table shows, have had a substantial rise, and have about as much more to gain to reach the 100 mark to which they are being talked in the market:—

The Ritz Hotel, Piccadilly, W. — 8090 Gerrard. The Restaurant and Hotel overlook the Green Park. Magnificent suite of Ball and Banqueting Rooms. Under the same Direction as the Carlton Hotel.

Share.	1906. Highest.	1906. Lowest.	Apl. 20, 1907.	Apl. 27, 1907.	Rise or Fall.
Abosso	1 1/8	1 1/16	1 3/16	1 1/4	+ 1/32
Ashanti Goldfields (4/-)	17/9	7/9	16/-	15/9xd.	+2d.
Gold Coast Amalgamated	3 3/4	1 1/2	1 7/8	1 15/16	+ 1/8
Taquah and Abosso	2 3/4	1 1/4	2 5/16	2 1/4	+ 1/16
Wassau	1 3/8	1/2	3/4	3/4	+ 1/32
Egyptian Mines and Exploration	10/6	1/3	1/3	1/3	—
Nile Valley	13/-	3/-	1/3	1/6	+3d.
Camp Bird	33/6	22/-	23/6	24/-	+6d.
Esperanza	5 5/16	2 1/4	2 1/8	1 3/4xd.	+6d.
Le Roi (£5)	2	1	1 1/2	1 7/8	— 1/16
British Broken Hill	58/-	30 7/8	38/9	40/-	+1/3
Broken Hill Proprietary (8/-)	5 1/8	3 5/16	4 11/16	4 3/8	+ 3/16
Zinc Corporation	2 1/8	1 1/16	16/6	16/9	+3d.
Anaconda Copper ($25)	15 3/8	11 1/8	12 11/16	12 13/16	+ 1/8
Arizona (Pref. Ord. 5/-)	3 1/2	3	64/6	68/6	+4/-
Great Cobar (£5)	9 1/16	4 3/8	10 3/8	11 1/4	+ 11/16
Mount Lyell	52/6	33/-	46/-	48/9	+2/9
Mount Morgan	4 3/8	3 1/4	4 3/8	4 7/16	+ 1/16
Rio Tinto (£5)	91 1/4	68 5/8	89 1/2	94 1/2	+5 1/2
Dolcoath Tin	29/6	10/-	23/6	25/-	+1/6
Pusing Lama Tin	3 5/8	3/4	2 11/16	2 11/16	—
Balaghat	36/-	22/6	14/6	19/-	+4/6
Champion Reef (2/6)	30/-	9/6	10/6	10/9	+3d.
Mysore (10/-)	7 1/8	5 1/2	5 3/4	5 7/8	+ 1/8
Siberian Mines	2 1/8	1 1/16	1 3/16	1 1/4	+ 1/16
Siberian Proprietary	16 1/4	3 1/8	4 1/4	4 3/8	+ 1/8
Waihi	9 5/16	6 5/16	9 1/8	9 3/16	+ 1/16

A feature in connection with the Copper group has been the revival of activity in the Australian issues, and it may be remembered that in my last notes I mentioned Mount Elliotts and Mount Lyells as likely to be among the first to benefit from improvement in general conditions. Both these shares have had a good advance during the past week, Mount Elliotts having been up to about 3¾ and Mount Lyells to 50s., and I shall not be surprised if they go above these prices in the near future. Mount Lyells have come into favour again on dividend anticipations, the next distribution being due to be declared about the middle of the current month. It is calculated that the company has earned £40,000 to £50,000 more profit in the past half-year than in the previous six months, and it is thought that, in the event of the Copper Market position continuing favourable, the directors may see their way to distributing 3s. 6d. or 4s. per share. The last distribution, it may be remembered, was 3s. 3d. per share. Some interesting information concerning Mount Lyell affairs has reached me by mail during the past week. I learn that the company has decided to erect another smelter, and that this furnace will be of much larger capacity than any of the five now in use. Further, the company proposes to erect large superphosphate works at Port Adelaide at an early date, these to be capable of dealing with not less than 20,000 tons per annum. As regards the mining position, Colonial advices state that the appearance of the North Mine (which contributes the payable ore) at and below the 700 ft. level is of a very bright character, "and the report which the directors will be able to submit at the next half-yearly meeting should be in the highest degree satisfactory to shareholders." Among the smaller priced Australian shares Chillagoes and Munganas have been in good demand on Colonial account, and I still hold a favourable opinion of the outlook for the former. As regards Munganas, the company is doing very well and is expected to still further improve, but I do not think the market anticipation of an early dividend of 2s. or 3s. per share is likely to be fulfilled. My information, from a quarter which should be well informed, is that if a dividend is declared next month it is not likely to be more than 1s. per share, while in the event of the declaration being postponed till September the amount might be 1s. 6d. per share. However, the company is stated to be earning profits at the rate of about 4s. per share per annum (100 per cent. on the capital), and when smelting is in full swing it is expected to reach the equivalent of 5s. per share, so that on any relapse in the quotation the shares should be worth picking up with a view to holding them.

Business in the Broken Hill group has not been very brisk apart from Zinc Corporations. These shares have been a rather better market during the past week, and although the quotation has not made much headway on balance there has been a fair amount of "bear" covering under the impression that the worst is now known. A cable to hand as to the results being obtained with the Cattermole process is of an encouraging character, in that it indicates that a gradual improvement in the rate of extraction is being obtained. Having regard to the Sulphide Corporation's results with the same process, the Zinc Corporation should be able to obtain a satisfactory margin of profit, and when it is definitely shown what can be done in this respect the price of the shares should further recover.

A Preposterous Prospectus.

Quite the most extraordinary prospectus of the past week was that published by H. de Vries and Boutigny, Limited, a company formed to acquire the business of stockbrokers, bankers, and estate agents carried on at Cairo by the firm of Messrs. H. de Vries and H. Boutigny. The capital is £300,000, divided into 297,500 ordinary shares of £1 each and 50,000 founders' shares of one shilling each. This business was only established in April, 1905. Now, after it has been in existence for just two years, the purchase price is fixed at £150,000, of which no less than £148,000 is for goodwill! An accountant's certificate states that in those two years the firm have made gross profits to the amount of £329,407 from land and share transactions and other sources. Whether their speculations will continue to be thus successful is, of course, quite another question. But if fortune should continue to smile upon them Messrs. de Vries and Boutigny would still take the lion's share of the profits. The articles of association entitle them to salaries in the dual capacity of directors and managing directors, those in the latter capacity being £3,000 each per annum. After payment of five per cent. of the profits to a reserve fund, Messrs. de Vries and Boutigny are to take 2½ per cent. of such profits (but not exceeding £10,000) as additional remuneration. The balance is first of all applicable to the payment to the holders of the ordinary shares, now offered for public subscription, of a cumulative preferential dividend of five per cent., while of the surplus then left the managing directors draw another five per cent. (but not exceeding £15,000) as further "additional remuneration," 50 per cent. goes to the ordinary shareholders, and the remaining 45 per cent. is allocated to the holders of the founders' shares, which are to be allotted to the promoters. Comment upon these arrangements would surely be superfluous.

"Threepence Per Share."

Sixpence per share is the levy usually proposed by "Lawson and Co., accountants and auditors," Chancery Lane Station Chambers, 31-3, High Holborn; but in one of their latest circulars, addressed to the shareholders of the Attasi Mines, Limited, they ask for threepence only. The circular is the customary appeal to shareholders to join in a combination with the object of taking proceedings for the return of the money subscribed to the various companies which were amalgamated into the Attasi Mines, and there is the customary assurance that those doing so will not incur any liability whatever beyond the proposed contribution of threepence per share. It is stated that counsel's opinion has been taken on the latter point. If this be so, counsel's opinion is incorrect. The judgment that was given in Spooner v. The Gresham Gold Syndicate makes it clear that every shareholder who joins in such a movement can be held personally responsible, not merely for his own proportion, but for the whole of the costs that are incurred in any action that may be started. Possibly the shareholders of the Attasi Mines have good grounds for an action against the directors and other persons. Be that as it may, however, "Lawson and Co."—this is only one of several names under which they have done business—should certainly not be employed for any such purpose. They are professional agitators, whose operations are generally far more profitable to themselves than to the shareholders whose cause they are so anxious to champion. The Attasi shareholders will, therefore, be well advised to have nothing to do with this firm; and the same remark applies, of course, to the shareholders of Clintons Gold Concessions and of the Goldfields of Matabeleland, who are also being circularised with a view to similar proceedings.

New Pension Scheme.—5s. a month will secure a pension of £20 a year guaranteed by Norwich Union Life Insurance Society. Sole issuing House, London and Paris Exchange, Ltd., Basildon House, E.C. Prospectus on application.

Since writing the above, one of the shareholders in Niekerk, Ltd., has handed me some circulars in reference to a proposed action against the directors which are being issued by Mr. Inglis Kaye. I observe that this gentleman's address is the same as Lawson and Co.'s; but that, of course, may be a mere coincidence. There is, however, the further similarity that Mr. Inglis Kaye solicits subscriptions of sixpence a share, and cites counsel's opinion—which is valueless in view of the judicial decision that has been given—to the effect that no contributor would be liable to any further amount beyond the sum agreed upon as his pro-ratâ contribution. Here, again, I recommend the shareholders not to take part in the movement Mr. Inglis Kaye is promoting, no matter how strongly they may feel that the management of the company requires investigation.

A Scholastic Co-operative Society.

"That Co-operative Societies pay (and pay well) is an established fact." Prominence is given to this statement in the prospectus of the Scholastic and University Co-operative Society, Limited. With equal truthfulness it may be added that although some co-operative societies pay well others have been miserable failures. The opinion I have formed upon its prospectus is that this new society is—to say the least—quite as likely to figure in the latter category as in the former. The matter is not worth discussing in detail, but I give that opinion here because I gather from my correspondence on the subject that advice may be useful to the schoolmasters, schoolmistresses and others who are being invited to subscribe for shares in the company.

Recent Publications.

A new book that will be both useful and interesting to investors or speculators is "The History, Law, and Practice of the Stock Exchange," published by Sir Isaac Pitman and Sons, price 5s. net. The rules, customs, and practice of the Stock Exchange are clearly described by a member, Mr. F. H. Carruthers-Gould, while Mr. A. P. Poley, of the Inner Temple, gives an excellent exposition of the law relating to the purchase and sale of stocks and shares. There is a particularly valuable chapter on speculative and gambling transactions with outside brokers which come within the provisions of the Gaming Acts.

Mr. Stephen H. M. Killik's "Manual of Argentine Railways" for 1907 has been issued by Mr. Effingham Wilson, price 2s. 6d. It is a most serviceable publication for all who are interested in Argentine railway companies.

Insurance Notes—Rival Life Offices—The North British and Mutual of New York—Comparison of Annual Accounts—The Folly of Transfer.

The two life assurance companies which attracted the largest amount of attention last year were the Mutual of New York and the North British and Mercantile; they both received a large amount of adverse criticism. The Mutual of New York was criticised because of the much-talked-of scandals, and the North British and Mercantile because of its adoption of the practice of policy-twisting by attempting to take advantage of the troubles of the Mutual, and obtain the British business of the American office for the benefit of the North British shareholders. We naturally turn to the annual reports of the two companies to see how they fared during the year. The result must be sorry reading for those British policy-holders in the Mutual who were persuaded to transfer to the North British and Mercantile. We should imagine, also, that the action of the North British directors will give rise to some strong comments at the annual meeting of the company. It is just possible that the action of the North British might have been condoned by the shareholders had it met with success, but since it has proved a conspicuous failure eminently calculated to do the company permanent harm, the directors are little likely to have their conduct approved.

It will be remembered that the North British engaged the services of Mr. Haldeman, formerly the British manager of the Mutual; that Mr. Haldeman and the Policy-holders' Committee had a list of the British policy-holders in the Mutual; and that this list was used for sending out North British prospectuses. Mr. Haldeman also took over to the North British a number of the Mutual agents, and the most strenuous efforts were made to persuade Mutual policy-holders to transfer to the North British. The opinion of the insurance community was unanimous in condemnation of the action of the North British, which was regarded as hitting below the belt in a fashion hitherto avoided by respectable British offices. The annoyance of actuaries was increased by the fact that Mr. Cockburn, the actuary of the North British, was at the time, or had been just previously, the President of the Institute of Actuaries, which is supposed to count for much in maintaining a high standard of professional conduct in the life assurance world.

The immediate consequence of this action by the North British was to give publicity to certain facts about the company anything but calculated to extend its business. It was widely pointed out that as a bonus-paying office the North British and Mercantile is vastly inferior to a great many other English and Scottish life offices. The company is a big one, its name is well known, and the tendency of the public is to think that they cannot go far wrong in buying their life assurance from it. Everybody, more or less, was reading about its policy-twisting, and consequently everybody, more or less, became aware of the inferiority of the North British from a policy-holder's point of view. Then there was a second fact to which a great deal of publicity was given, tending to dissuade the general public from assuring in the North British. The peculiar nature of the terms upon which life assurance was granted to members of the Civil Service was recalled to mind. If a man happens to be a Civil Servant, the North British will sell him exactly the same policy for £83 to £85 that one of the public has to pay £100 for, so that the public became aware of the fact that if they took policies in the North British and Mercantile part of their money was being used to give exceptional terms to members of the Civil Service, and to increase the business of the company for the benefit of the shareholders. Quite inopportunely for the North British, it had to publish the results of a quinquennial valuation last year, from which it appeared that the shareholders received £140,704, which in a mutual office, like the Mutual of New York, would have gone to increase the bonuses of the participating policy-holders. Reflecting policy-holders, considering that Civil Service schemes, and wholesale efforts at policy-twisting, were introduced for the benefit of the shareholders to the detriment of participating policy-holders, began to wonder what advantage they derived from giving the shareholders something over £4 out of every £100 paid in premiums for participating policies. They saw that if it were not for the shareholders their share of the profits would have been increased by about 14 per cent., and that their profits would have been larger still in the absence of the Civil Service scheme introduced solely in the interests of the proprietors. It seems to me that the publicity given to these facts about the North British must have had its effect upon the assuring public, who seem to have been very reluctant to take policies in the company. In spite of the tremendous efforts made to secure the Mutual policy-holders, and in spite of the addition of at least £10,000 a year to the salary list in consequence of engaging Mr. Haldeman and other representatives of the Mutual, the North British were only able to issue fifty-one more new policies in 1906 than they did in 1905. When the Civil Service scheme was introduced, the annual report of the North British stated for some years the number of policies issued under it each year, but the success of the new policy-twisting scheme was evidently not such as to make it palatable to the directors to follow their previous practice and give this information.

Polished Floors.—"Ronuk," Ltd., are prepared to estimate for the polishing and maintenance of all kinds of floors in Mansions, Hospitals, and Institutions. Write for pamphlet.—Manufacturers of "Ronuk" Polish, "Ronuk," Ltd., Portslade, near Brighton.

Thomas Goode & Co.—China, glass, pottery, fireproof ware. Sole agents in the United Kingdom for the famous "Bi-Métal" (copper lined with pure sheet silver) Cooking Utensils. Illustrated catalogues free.—South Audley-street, London.

It is now interesting to put the records of the Mutual of New York and the North British and Mercantile side by side and see how they compare. It will be remembered that Mutual policy-holders were advised to transfer because they were to gain by the change: of course, everybody who knew anything about the subject told people not to transfer because they were certain to lose. Even while scandals and extravagance were prevalent in the Mutual of New York, the results under the latter company's policies were in most cases better than those under the North British policies. Reforms, economies, and improvements were taking place in the Mutual, and there was no evidence of improvement in the North British, but rather of the reverse. As compared with 1905, the expenses of the North British increased from £129,563 to £145,629, an increase of £16,000, with really nothing to show for it. It is misleading to state the expenses in proportion to premium income, since the North British received a large amount in single premiums as the result of drawing the surrender values of policies in the Mutual. The apparent increase in the expenditure is therefore small; but the extra expenses will continue in future years when the single premiums will not be there to carry the burden of them. As compared with this increase in the North British the expenses in the Mutual have decreased by more than 7 per cent. of the premiums paid. On commission and expenses the North British spend 14 per cent. of the premiums, and pay 3 per cent. of the premiums to the shareholders, making a total expenditure of 17 per cent. of the premium income, a distinctly high rate of expense for a British company. The rate of interest earned by the North British decreased by nearly 2s. per cent., and the life and annuity funds are debited with £80,000, carried to the investment depreciation account. The rate of interest earned by the Mutual showed an increase of 4s. per cent. and an increase in the value of investments to the amount of more than £171,000. The North British, at its last declaration of bonus in 1905, maintained the same rate of bonus as before, while the Mutual of New York shows an increase of 20 per cent. as compared with the bonuses of one year ago, and of 50 per cent. as compared with the bonuses of two years ago. I hope the number of policy-holders who were foolish enough to transfer from the Mutual to the North British has been very small. They would have lost heavily by doing so had the two companies continued working under their previous conditions, but with the Mutual getting rapidly and vastly better, and with the North British tending rather in the other direction, the magnitude of their loss will steadily increase as time goes by. Unfortunately, the twisted policy-holders cannot change back again to the Mutual on realising their folly. If they ask the North British on what terms they can surrender they will find yet another significant contrast, once more to their disadvantage, between the North British and the Mutual.

MORTLOCKS. — Specialists in Luncheon, Dinner, Dessert Breakfast, and Tea Services. Old English and French Patterns and Models. Specimens sent on Approval. Carriage paid.—OXFORD-ST., AND ORCHARD-ST., LONDON, W.

"VIGILANT'S" LETTER-BOX.

1. Inquiries addressed to me, which must be accompanied by a Coupon, can only be replied to through my "Letter Box." Under no circumstances can I reply by post, and as there seems to be a misunderstanding in the minds of many of my readers, I wish to emphasise the fact that a coupon must be attached to every inquiry. A coupon will always be found at the foot of the third page of the coloured cover of TRUTH.

2. Six different stocks are the limit for an inquiry covered by one coupon. If it is desired to make an inquiry respecting a larger number of stocks an additional coupon or coupons (one for every half-a-dozen stocks) must be forwarded. The answering of many of the inquiries I receive necessitates a great deal of careful research, and I shall therefore be compelled henceforth to enforce this regulation. Its necessity will be apparent when I state that some correspondents send lists of 20 or 30 different stocks covering every class and description of Investment.

3. Name and address, which must accompany all inquiries, should be written on the communication; cards are apt to be lost or misplaced, causing unnecessary trouble.

4. Anonymous letters will not in any case be attended to.

5. A nom-de-plume or initials (the former preferably) should be given if it is desired that the real name shall not appear in the paper.

6. Inquiries should be put as briefly as possible, plainly written, and numbered.

7. Communications received after Friday may not be replied to in the following issue.

8. I do not recommend brokers or solicitors.

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

Brighton.—The Four and a Halfs are specially secured upon the tobacco monopoly, and the Six per Cent. bonds now being redeemed were secured upon the Customs. The others rank equally as a charge upon the country's general revenues. For the detailed particulars regarding redemption I must refer you to the "Stock Exchange Year Book." Lady Godiva.—I do not understand your allusion to discrepancies. That the credit of the public authority in question is of the highest is sufficiently evidenced by the fact that the issue about which you inquire was raised practically on a 3 per cent. basis, and that it is available for English trustees. Why the stock is not quoted in the Official List I cannot say off-hand; but I can only repeat that this is a matter that has no bearing upon the quality of the stock as an investment. The smallness of the total issue makes a narrow market for it inevitable, but there should be no real difficulty in disposing of such a gilt-edged stock, if you ever wished to sell.

RAILWAYS.

Canada.—The matter you refer to is quite a common one, and in practice it works well enough. You need not fear that by holding the shares in this manner you would be done out of any prospective "rights." J. B.—Under the guarantee the bonds ought to be all right. The fall has been due partly to the unfavourable results shown by the railway and partly to general market conditions, but a recovery is not unlikely before long. R. L. B.—The dividend depends upon the revenues of the whole system, though in the case of the Western branch the effect is only felt indirectly. Dewdrop.—The broker should have furnished the customary stamped receipt, but otherwise there is nothing unusual about the circumstances you relate. It not infrequently happens that there is some delay in getting stock where the market is a comparatively narrow one. Meanwhile the broker retains your money to hand over to the jobber when the bargain is completed. You can claim to have the stock "bought in" against the dealer, but this would be an arbitrary course to pursue, if, as there is every reason to believe, the delay has been unavoidable. Though you are without the actual transfer, you were legally the owner when the contract was made with the broker, and are therefore not prejudiced in selling at any time if you wish to do so. But, as I have said, you ought to hold a receipt for the money paid to your broker. As to your last question, the debentures are redeemable in 1936, or earlier if the Government exercises its option of purchasing the line. Brigade-Major.—The shares are worth keeping as an investment. There is a probability that they will go better when, later on, the company takes steps to deal with the accumulated revenues derived from its lands.

MINES.

Medicus.—I have no information respecting No. 4. The others should be realisable to better advantage by waiting. Cadena.—1. I should prefer to exchange into a longer-lived mine, and would suggest New Kleinfonteins or Knight's Deep. 2. A fair holding, but I think the two shares mentioned above are relatively cheaper. Leviathan.—They should all improve in an active market, and I would hold for the present. Royton.—1. There is a fair chance of Mount Lyells having a rise to about the price mentioned in the event of copper keeping up. 2. Dividend prospects do not appear to justify a substantial recovery, but they would be likely to have some improvement in an active market. I reviewed this group in my notes about a month ago. North Antrim.—Both are very speculative, and there is not much market in them. You could employ your money more hopefully elsewhere. Deep Deep.—None of the South Africans is near the dividend-paying stage, but the shares are fair speculations for a moderate profit in an active market. There is a fair chance of a dividend on the others before very long, and the shares are worth holding. Clyde.—

Developments have not been so satisfactory as had been hoped, but I think you might hold for some recovery. Rix.—1. At least 9s. per ton should be obtained. 2. A purchase to average should turn out well eventually. Marmo.—A hopeful speculation, nothing more. Paddie K.—1. Nine years. 2. About the same. 3. I prefer Casons. An early dividend is looked for.

Mixed Securities.

Arabis.—Abbontiakoons are a hopeful speculation among the smaller-priced West Africans. I should not advise a purchase of the other shares you mention. Camac.—1. They are all well secured, but I would hesitate to call them safe. The Russian bonds look attractive as a speculative investment, particularly the Fives. 2. The company has a large indebtedness to wipe off before profits will become available for dividends. 3. You could get 4⅝ per cent. on Grand Trunk Seconds, but it would be a difficult matter to obtain 5 per cent. in the group you mention with good security. 4. I know nothing of the business. 5. I believe the property has promising prospects. Surrey.—Better sell No. 1. You might hold No. 2 in hopes of a rise of a point or two. The stock is unlikely to go much lower. 3. Get rid of these. 4. A hopeful holding. 5 and 6. There is not a very active market in these, and you would probably do better if you were to exchange into something else. J. J.—1. Yes, a good investment, possessing possibilities of a further rise. 2. Both excellent. There is perhaps more to go for in the Railway Preferred stocks. As to Nos. 3 and 4, I do not think an advance very likely. Help.—1. I have a poor opinion of these. 2. Hold. 3. These bonds are not particularly attractive. At present a portion of the dividend is paid out of the proceeds of Government bond realisations, but this source of income will probably give out in 1909. The line is progressing, it is true, but the Income bonds can only be regarded as a very speculative holding. 4, 5, and 6. These should be kept. Cognito.—I could not advantageously advise you now which shares it will be best to sell next July; write again later on. Snap.—All are worth holding. Jumbo.—1. I do not see much attraction in them at the present price, and at best they can only be regarded as a speculative holding. 2. Yes. Yerrow.—1. Yes, I still think Arizonas a promising speculative holding. 2. Might be sold. 3. Not by any means attractive. Mahratta.—Nos. 1 and 2 are high-class investments. No. 3 are a fair commercial holding. Nos. 4 and 5 are risky in view of the possibilities of fresh legislation. 6. A decent holding of its class. Ajax.—1—5. A fair selection, and there is a chance of a recovery in capital values in certain stocks, especially the first and the last. 6. See my reply (3) to "Help" respecting this stock.

Insurance.

Redpath.—Thank you for your letter and information; I will refer to the matter. F. C. B.—Write to the Equitable Life Assurance Society, Mansion House-street, E.C., for details of their deferred assurances for children. Enquirer.—The majority of insurance companies pay commission through their agents, but it is dealt with as a general expense of the company and is not charged to each policy-holder separately. Enquiries.—Write to the Norwich Union Life and the Economic for their terms, stating the exact ages of the proposed annuitants. W. F.—The company is being taken over because its fire business was unsuccessful, and because the shareholders can realise a considerable sum for goodwill. The life policy-holders will be just as secure as before, and no worse off in the matter of bonuses. Rag.—There is no good company that complies with your condition (a). Condition (b) is observed in most satisfactory fashion by the Essex and Suffolk Equitable Fire Insurance Society, of 58, New Broad-street. B. W. J.—1. This company is thoroughly sound and good. 2. The first-named office is the better of the two for participating policy-holders. 3. You should certainly not withdraw; the company is getting better every day. Trojan.—The offer made to you is a disgraceful one; you would only lose heavily by accepting it. The original company is extremely good, while the other one is quite new as a life office, and its future prosperity an entirely unknown quantity. It certainly cannot be anything like as good as the company you are already a policy-holder in. A Reader, Shorncliffe.—The company is one of the best, and the rumour you have heard must certainly be devoid of all foundation. C. M.—It is true that few policies are satisfactory for this purpose, but you will be quite secure if you go to the London and Lancashire Fire Co. F. E. F.—I am afraid the company is in rather a bad way, but as the payment of your policy is so nearly due, you ought to keep up the payment of premiums. Take a copy of your premium receipt book and send the book in a registered envelope to the head office of the company, asking them to return it to you. Do this each time a premium is due, and if you have any further trouble let me know at once. I think you ought to be able to get your money all right.

Miscellaneous.

Jinks.—It appears to be a sound society, but I have, of course, no local knowledge of it. A. Tram.—You must send a coupon; see my rules. Gael.—There is a judgment of the Court of Appeal ("In re Gieve") on a similar contract containing an identical condition. The Court held that in view of the other conditions it was a gaming transaction in spite of an option to purchase the stock being given. I have returned the contract notes, and when the matter is closed I should be glad to see the correspondence with the firm for the purpose of publishing another warning against them. P. G. M.—The bank named in your second letter is sound. St. Briar.—There is no doubt that the drawings take place. Whether, however, you should complete the payment for the bonds (for which you have been charged a most excessive price) or sue Cunliffe, Russell, and Co. for the return of your money is a question for your own decision. As desired, I am sending the name of the Paris collector. M. G., Disley.—The only way of recovering the money is by suing Cunliffe, Russell, and Co. in Paris, and if you think it worth while to do this I will give you the name of a solicitor there. Stoney.—Laurie and Vincent are a bucket-shop firm of the worst class. I have had no reason to criticise the other concern; but I cannot make a recommendation. R. S. P., Mab and Ted.—Both the International Securities Syndicate and Cunliffe, Russell and Co. charge outrageously excessive prices for the bonds; have nothing to do with these or any other touting firms. G. H. N.—I have repeatedly warned my readers against William Tyler and Co. Innocenza.—I believe the firm would pay if you made a profit, but I strongly advise you not to engage in such methods of speculation; you would be almost certain to drop money. Wide-Awake.—I will give these people another notice. D. H. M.—The prospectus is referred to in another column. A. B. A.—It would be advisable to get rid of such stock, but by waiting a little time you may be able to do so more advantageously. There is no immediate prospect of legislation. Bunthorne.—1. Apply to the secretary for a new certificate, which is obtainable on certain conditions. 2. They are a trifle speculative. 3. Could be improved upon as an investment. 4. The valuation strikes me as being rather high, and I do not consider the shares particularly attractive. Tory.—As commercial investments they are mainly attractive because of the high yield obtainable. Exonian.—If a sale is at all possible it would be a matter of negotiation. The value is trifling. Continental.—Your best plan would be to get your own bank to give you an introduction or recommendation. H. T. S.—Neither of the concerns is known in this country, and I am therefore unable to advise you. Esmond and others.—Your inquiries shall be answered next week.

Industrials Generally Stagnant—Darracqs Active—Iron and Steel Shares and Textiles—Allsopps Rise on a Change of Management—Rally in Nitrates.

It cannot be said that the Miscellaneous market has derived any visible benefit from the further improvement in the monetary position—indeed, there is something like a relapse into the condition of lassitude from which this department lately seemed to be emerging. For the time being, at least, there is little or no investment demand for industrials, and speculation is at a standstill. Such a speculative favourite as Anglo "A" is quite neglected; Hudson's Bays exhibit scarcely any movement; and Pekin Syndicate shares show no signs of recovery from the level to which they fell a month or so back. Among motor and cycle shares, Darracqs have been the most active, and in view of the prosperity of the company a further rise both in the ordinary and the preferred issues may reasonably be expected. At the current quotation the preferred shares especially, yielding well over 8 per cent., make a promising purchase. The only other noteworthy feature in this group has been a sharp rise to 15s. of Riley Cycles, a small concern which is reported to be doing better now that it has turned its attention to the motor industry. Practically no changes have occurred in the leading iron, steel, and engineering companies' shares, and this section continues to afford several favourable opportunities for a good commercial investment. At the present prices Vickers, Son, and Maxim's ordinary shares return a trifle over 6 per cent., and Armstrong-Whitworth's and Babcock and Wilcox's 5 per cent.; and all three companies are in a strong and flourishing condition. In textiles almost the only alterations have been a fractional advance in Fine Cotton Spinners, and a similar decline in English Sewing Cottons. At the moment Bradford Dyers ordinary shares, at 24s. 3d., appear to be as attractive as any in this market, for reasons which I gave some weeks ago. Since its formation in 1898 this company—a combination of all the principal Bradford dyers—has never paid less than 7 per cent. on its ordinary shares, and the trade is still so prosperous that any reduction is extremely improbable, while an increase of profits even above the record figures for last year is quite possible.

The rare spectacle has been witnessed of an advance of two or three points in Allsopp ordinary and preference—the result of a change in the management, and a belief that the company is now doing better. Having regard to the past history of the company it would be unwise to be very sanguine, but for the sake of the shareholders it may be hoped that the assumption of the sole managing directorship by Mr. W. Gardner Sinclair will bring about the improvement in the fortunes of this brewery which is being counted upon. Other brewery securities have remained almost stationary, which is perhaps as much as can be expected in existing circumstances. It is, by the way, interesting to observe that at the meeting of the Cincinnati Breweries last week the chairman, in referring to the difficulties with which the company had to contend, mentioned the trebling of the taxation on "saloons" in the city, while the country trade had suffered owing to several towns having adopted local option and prohibited the selling of alcoholic liquors. Holders of English brewery shares have, at any rate, the cold comfort of knowing that this is not the only country in which the trade is hit by taxation and legislation. Nothing more has been heard of the rumoured agreement of the traffic companies in London for putting up fares, and meanwhile London General Omnibus ordinary stock has gone back a couple of points—after its substantial gain in the previous week or two. On the other hand, London Motor Omnibus shares and Road Cars are a fraction higher. The London Port and Docks Bill, promoted by the companies, met with the fate which I predicted for it. There never was the faintest chance that it would be passed, and its rejection having been at length recognised as inevitable produced scarcely any perceptible effect on the market. Nitrates have displayed more strength than for some time past, the outcome partly of a rise in the price of nitrate of soda, and partly of one or two satisfactory dividend announcements, whilst a cablegram reporting that the directors of the Chilian Nitrate Combination are consulting their associates as to the desirability of extending the convention has also had a favourable influence. In the new edition of his useful little work, "Nitrate Facts and Figures" (published by Messrs. F. C. Mathieson and Sons), Mr. A. F. Brodie James urges the directors of the various producing companies to issue periodical official statements giving the production of each oficina, and other details which would help investors in these undertakings to ascertain the real value of their investments. VIGILANT.

All Rights reserved.]

QUEER STORY.

SEED TIME AND HARVEST.

SHE was only a child, frightened, helpless, bewildered, and she came to his arms sobbing her heart out, her red lips, that were made for kisses, quivering pitifully, her big violet eyes drowned in tears.

"Tell me what to do," she sobbed; "I—I'm so frightened and miserable. You must help me, Jack. I can't help myself."

Jack Dunraven helped her according to his lights. That is to say, he laid down the law of honour, as he understood it, at some length and in the plainest of plain words. It was a somewhat strict law, because his code of honour happened to be strict, but it seemed to him the only one possible. He always followed it unflinchingly himself, and he expected other people to follow it unflinchingly too. When they did not, as sometimes happened, he was very much hurt and disappointed, and railed passionately at the weakness of human nature and the vagaries of Fate. It never occurred to him that it might be wise to modify the strictness of his code a little, departing somewhat from the letter of his law, on those occasions when the exigencies of human nature and the situation seemed to require it; and in any case he would have scorned such a course of action. He was a man who knew only black and white; grey, which, like charity, covers a multitude of sins, did not appeal to him.

"You see, Rosette," he explained, as tenderly as he dared, "we have both been awfully wrong. I have been more wrong than you, because I'm a man and ought to have helped you to do right, and found strength for both of us. I ought to have seen where we were drifting, but somehow I didn't. I have been blind, and this is the end of it. I have brought bitter unhappiness into your life, dear. My own life doesn't matter so much because it is my own, but yours, you see, isn't your own. It belongs to—some one else."

His deep, quiet voice shook a little in spite of his efforts to steady it, and the girl looked piteously up in his face.

"Oh, Jack!" she sobbed, passionately, "must it belong to some one else? Jack! Jack!"

Her little soft, warm hands clung to his arm, the gold-flecked waves of her hair were very near his face as she leaned towards him. He drew a long, deep breath. Just for a moment black and white seemed to be becoming inextricably mingled, just for a moment honour seemed to be fading away to a shadow; but it was only a moment, and it passed.

"Rosette, little Rosette," he said, his hand caressing her hair, "things can't be altered, you know, and they must just be accepted as they are. Oh! my dear, my dear, it was a bad day for you when we met. If you had never known me you might never have known the unhappiness that I'm afraid you will know now."

He sighed as he spoke, his thoughts flashing back over the last month and all it contained. How strange Fate was, he mused, and on what small things life's tragedies hinged. For instance, if Lord Bellefield had not invited him to shoot over his noted coverts in Yorkshire, or he had not accepted the invitation, he would not have met Rosette; and if he had not met Rosette his life and hers would have been free from the shadow of sorrow and regret that darkened them both.

It had been love at first sight, such love as comes to few men and women. Jack had looked at Rosette's little lovely face, with its soft cheeks like pink roses, its curved mouth like a red Japonica flower, its great innocent eyes like purple violets, and suddenly all his world had changed. It never would be the same again, he knew—never could be. Something had gone from it, something had come to it; life would be different henceforth and for ever. He had fought against his love, crushing it down in his tortured heart, hiding it from all the world, until the moment had come when he had seen its reflection in Rosette's eyes, heard its echo in her voice, and known that she loved him as he loved her. Then—then—He bit his lip in shame and remorse as he remembered what had happened then. For a moment he had been mad, utterly, blindly, helplessly mad, and his passion for the pretty child who was not for him had swept him away like a straw on a stream. For a moment he had held her in his longing arms, tasted the sweetness of her kisses, poured passionate love words into her ears, listening to her shy, faltering replies with a very ecstasy of delight. Then remembrance had come, and with it shame and torture unspeakable. Rosette was not for him, and he had tainted her honour and his own. The kisses that he had taken from her lips were stolen kisses, the love words he had listened to were stolen too—stolen from another man. He was nothing but a thief, for he had taken that which was not his to take.

The thought lingered with him, filling his heart now as he stood looking down into Rosette's tear-dimmed eyes, listening to her heart-broken sobs, and caused his sense of duty to be even more unflinching and unwavering than usual. Some men would have helped the girl to break the hated chains that bound her, counting it no wrong to take her away from the man to whom she was promised in marriage, Lord St. Clare, whose name was a byword in London society, but whose rank and wealth had given him the first choice of the beauties of the marriage market; but not so Jack. She was only a helpless child, sold by an unscrupulous father to a dissolute roué, before she knew the meaning of love and marriage; but her promise had been given, and to Jack that meant everything. Nothing could break her promise, or alter her fate now. She was Lord St. Clare's so long as life lasted. Though it broke her heart and his own he would not save her from her doom.

"I—I hate Lord St. Clare," Rosette sobbed; "I'm frightened of him, and I love you, Jack. Oh! can't you save me? Won't you? You love me, too, and—and somehow love seems more than honour when honour is so—so empty and horrible. Do save me, Jack!"

A Beautiful Hotel at Bournemouth.—The "Royal Bath." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Magnificent sea frontage and private grounds on East Cliff, facing due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff.

Her words stabbed his heart just as her clinging hands thrilled his soul, and for a moment he stood speechless, dumb. Then he shook his head.

"Nothing is more than honour, Rosette," he said; "not even love. My dear, I can't save you. Oh! if I only could—if I only could!"

She looked wistfully up in his face with hurt wondering eyes, like the eyes of a child who is punished unjustly for something not its fault, and, meeting her look, he wondered if life could hold any more maddening torture. Then she turned away, wringing her little white hands together with a gesture of intolerable pain, and he stood and watched her go.

* * * * *

She was no longer a child but a woman, and she looked at him with a brilliant smile, half frivolous, half mocking.

"It seems," she said, in her light society tone, "quite an age since we met. Do you, by chance, remember just how long it is?"

"Three years," the man answered shortly.

His eyes rested on her lingeringly, drinking in with the old passionate admiration all the dainty loveliness of her uplifted face; the loveliness that was just the same as when it had first flashed into his life, and yet so different, with a difference that made him sick at heart.

In the days when first he had known her she had been a child, pure, innocent, stainless as the sweet white lilies in her garden. Now she was a woman of the world, one of Society's leaders, fast, reckless, daring, her conduct a scandal even in the ultra-smart set that claimed her for its own. Three years of life had changed the girl whom he had reverenced as a saint, worshipped as a queen among women, into something that it hurt him to think of. Rosette—the little Rosette he had known and loved—was dead, and Lady St. Clare reigned in her stead.

"Three years?" she echoed, raising delicately pencilled eyebrows quizzically; "you have a better memory than I, Jack. Ah! well; three years is a long time. The world doesn't stand still nowadays; men and women don't stand still either. I've learnt a good deal since I—married. I'm not likely to forget the lessons."

He turned to her swiftly, speaking on a sudden impulse.

"Rosette, little Rosette," he said, in his deep, quiet voice, "do you remember the first time we met? Do you remember the sunshine in the garden, the glory of the roses, the scent of the lilies, the peace and innocence and purity of it all—or have you forgotten?"

"Peace, innocence, purity!" she mocked; "what have they to do with me? I left them all behind me when I went away from the old home, out into the world to meet the fate that you—that you wouldn't save me from. I'm not 'little Rosette' now, I'm Lord St. Clare's wife; a very different thing, I can assure you."

"Rosette," he said again, stung by her tone to bitter remorse, "I couldn't save you. I——"

"You had only to put out your hand," she flashed, interrupting him, "only to say one word, and you would have saved a woman's soul from shipwreck. But you wouldn't put out your hand, you wouldn't say the word, and so—and so— Oh! how dare you sit in judgment on me, how dare you condemn me in your thoughts, as I can see you do—you who wouldn't use your power to save me, you who have made me what I am? Do you know what it is for an innocent girl to marry a man like St. Clare, and be plunged into the whirlpool of such a set as the one I am in? Have you any idea what a thing it is? I tell you it's a thing that breaks a woman's heart, ruins her soul, stains her womanhood. That's the thing you could have saved me from and wouldn't, and whatever comes—whatever comes, will lie at your door."

He bit his lip, drawing a long deep breath, his eyes still lingering on the fairness of her face, the gold-flecked waves of her hair.

"I don't sit in judgment on you," he said, very low, "I don't condemn you. It's myself I judge and condemn. I was wrong, Rosette, and I'm sorry——"

"Sorry!" she mocked again; "what good is it to be sorry? Can being sorry undo the past three years, and give me back all I have lost? Can it give me back one even of the things I have lost? You know it can't. You know I can never again be what I once was; what you could have kept me if you had chosen. Never again!"

"I am sorry," he said again, putting out his hand to touch hers.

But she brushed it aside, laughing frivolously.

"Nobody is ever sorry in the world I live in now," she said; "people are a great many things, but never sorry. It's evident that our worlds are quite different."

"Quite different," he assented, gravely, his eyes still on hers.

She flashed him a smile, dazzling, provoking, tantalising.

"In that case," she suggested, "suppose we say good-bye? The two worlds, yours and mine, don't seem to agree very well, do they, and—oh, is that you, Captain Graham? How clever of you to find me out in this quiet nook. Our dance? Oh, yes, I'm quite ready. Mr. Dunraven is such an old acquaintance that I needn't stand on ceremony with him. He will excuse me, I know."

She flashed another of those dazzling smiles, then laid her hand on the arm of the tall Guardsman who had come to claim her, and was gone.

Once again Jack Dunraven stood and watched her go.

* * * * *

"Violets, a penny a bunch! Violets, sweet violets!"

A girl stood patiently in the dull, cold spring day, her outstretched hands full of violets, a half-empty basket at her feet, a great weariness on her uplifted face.

"Violets, a penny a bunch! Violets, sweet violets!"

A slight, graceful figure, a little lovely face with a curved mouth that was like a red japonica flower, big violet eyes that matched the flowers in her hands. Only a girl of the pavement, a broken blossom flung up from the soiled mud of the London streets, and yet——

"Violets, a penny a bunch! Violets, sweet violets!"

Something in the haunting tones of the sweet, low voice fell on the ear of a man just passing with a strange sense of familiarity. He stopped short, turned round, came close to the girl, looking eagerly into her face in the dusky light, his own face growing white and set.

"Rosette! You!"

The violets dropped from her hands, falling in a scented purple shower at her feet. Her pale cheeks burnt suddenly scarlet.

"You!" she said, "you, of all men. I hoped—I prayed I might never see you again."

The man went closer still, looking at her with eyes in which a great pity and an overwhelming gladness contended for the mastery.

"I have found you at last," he said. "Oh! my dear, my dear, how I have looked for you; how I have wanted you. Why did you hide yourself from me? Did you think that I—I of all men—should blame, judge, condemn you? No, you can't have thought that, Rosette, little Rosette."

"Rosette, little Rosette!" How the words took her back over the days of her life, while memory painted strange pictures before her tear-blinded eyes. Once more in fancy she saw herself a child among the roses and lilies in the garden of her old home, sweet as the roses, pure as the lilies. The picture faded, and she was a girl with the realisation of love and its meaning just dawning within her heart; then the reluctant, unhappy wife of a man she hated, feared, despised. That picture faded in its turn, and she saw herself a faithless wife, flying from her husband's home with the man who had tempted her to her shame; afterwards, ruined, deserted, betrayed, an outcast, alone in London, alone in the world. After that—after that——

She turned away, catching her breath in a choking sob.

"Let me go," she said, very low, "let me forget that I've seen you—if I can. Why did Fate bring you into my life again? Oh, it was cruel—cruel."

"Rosette, little Rosette," he said again.

He caught her hand as she tried to pass him, but she wrenched it away, laughing bitterly.

"Rosette is dead," she cried. "There is no 'little Charing Cross Hospital, W.C., Convalescent Home, Limpsfield, dependent on £15,000 a year from voluntary sources. Contributions urgently solicited.

Rosette' in the world now; only Rose, the flower girl, Rose of the streets. Let her go, Jack. She isn't fit for you to touch. Let her go. Forget her."

"Never," he said, through his set teeth; "I've found you again, Rosette, and I'll hold you against the world. Whatever you are I have made you. Do you remember how you said to me that whatever came would lie at my door? I haven't forgotten, and I want to atone. I love you, my dear, whatever may have been. If you have lost everything else in the world there's still—love."

"Love!" she echoed, under her breath. "Love!"

She stood, her face a little uplifted in the old familiar pose, her eyes shining with the light of the sweet, sinless days gone by for ever, her red lips quivering, parting, in breathless wonder. Just for a moment the echo of Heaven's music came to her from those far-off days, borne softly on the wings of tender memories, flooding her soul with perfect harmony. Then the shrieks of the Legions of Hell rang once more in her ears.

"Love!" she cried again, her voice ringing with all the passion and tragedy of a lost soul. "Love!"

A peal of discordant laughter broke wildly from her lips. She sprang away from him and out into the crowded roadway, just where the traffic was thickest.

He started after her, but it was all over in a moment. A hoarse shout from the crowd, a startled, terrified horse plunging madly, a faint cry of agony, then stillness, silence, a motionless figure, a white, lifeless face, a shower of purple violets in the mud.

* * * * *

They carried her to the pavement, laying her almost at his feet; Rose the flower girl, Rose of the streets. And as he looked down at her it seemed to him that the marks of sin, sorrow, shame, faded away from her face, leaving it the face of the girl he had known in far-off years, sweet as the roses, pure as the lilies.

Rose the flower girl, Rose of the streets, was dead. But Rosette, little Rosette, lived again in the days of long ago.

ART NOTES.

I HAD meant to devote myself this week to considering those pictures now being exhibited at the New Gallery which I should not like to possess at any price. Considerations of space, however, prevent my doing justice to this great subject, and, instead, I should like to draw my readers' attention to a very interesting little exhibition of portraits now being held at the Carfax Gallery in Bury-street. It is the work of a Mr.—or perhaps I ought to say Herr—Max Beerbohm, who is, if I may judge by his name, a German artist. With so many exhibitions being held at the present time, there is always the danger that work, however interesting and valuable, which is not the work of a painter with a well-known name may be overlooked, and these portraits, though it is true that they speak more of promise than of performance, are of very definite interest. Their chief attraction to me, I must confess, lies in the insight which they give us into Continental ideas of England and the English. It is quite obvious that Herr Beerbohm has lived—or at least has stayed—in this country for some time, and has given himself up seriously to studying our institutions and our prominent men. Nevertheless, he makes so many mistakes in his treatment of both that, did we judge merely by the titles of his several works as given in the catalogue, we might suppose that they were Teutonic attempts at the humorous, were it not that such would be altogether foreign to the laboriously studious Teutonic temperament. Before I go any further, let me meet the very obvious sneer of the hypercritical, who, being led by the perusal of this article to visit Herr Beerbohm's exhibition, may contend that his draughtsmanship is defective. I know it is. I have already stated that his work is promising rather than presently effective. But that is a defect which a few years'—even a few weeks'—careful study at any of the many excellent schools of art which now abound will easily rectify. And, in spite of everything, I maintain that Herr Beerbohm's portraits, defective, rough, unfinished though they may appear (I should not be surprised to hear them dubbed caricatures by the superior person, especially if he happen to be included among the sitters)—I maintain, I say, that they show definite promise, and that it would be to the last degree unfortunate did they not obtain that critical appreciation from the press which they deserve.

To return now to the pitfalls which beset the path of even the most intelligent foreign student of English manners and customs, and which are reflected with such fascinating naïveté in Herr Beerbohm's series of portraits. I will mention a few instances, which may be trusted to speak for themselves. To choose one of the entries in the catalogue at random, we have "Lord Northcliffe suggesting a headline to Mr. Gosse." Here we have an excellent example of the dangers attending a little knowledge. Herr Beerbohm has quite evidently heard that the eminent littérateur and critic, Mr. Edmund Gosse, for a time held an appointment on the Daily Mail—an appointment which, I understand, he has recently vacated, amid universal expressions of regret. Herr Beerbohm, hearing this, and appreciating the literary excellence of the Daily Mail headlines, has at once leapt to the conclusion that Mr. Gosse was engaged by Lord Northcliffe to compose them. We know, of course, that he was nothing of the sort. But the intelligent foreign student, hearing of the bald facts of the case, leaps at once to an erroneous conclusion, with the result now visible at the Carfax Galleries. I should think it quite likely that he has actually seen both of the personages he depicts, for, allowing for the faulty drawing, it is quite easy, even with the slight data provided by the painter, to differentiate between the hair of Lord Northcliffe and that of Mr. Gosse. But this, of course, only makes the mistake the more pathetic.

Let me take another example. He gives us a portrait of Mr. A. W. Pinero, the famous dramatist—certainly one who has acquired an international reputation. He depicts him as saying, wistfully: "Perhaps I shall get an European reputation now." It is very likely that Mr. Pinero, before he had attained to his present eminence—when he was producing his first play, for example—made some remark of this kind. Such sayings are often recorded of great men in after days. We have, for instance, Disraeli's well-known "Some day you shall hear me!" What has the German painter done? He has in some extraordinary way confused Mr. Pinero with Mr. Bernard Shaw, who, as every one knows, is one of the most modest and retiring of men, whose one object in life is to shrink from that international reputation which his talents have, as it were, forced upon him. Could anything be more ludicrous? I could add instance to instance of the mistakes made by Herr Beerbohm in his speculations into the life and manners of our great men. I will mention only two more. Here is one entry in the catalogue: "Mr. George Moore, preacher to Lord Howard de Walden." Comment is superfluous. But perhaps the cream of the whole is that he has actually attempted a German version of Mr. Henry James's well-known and properly esteemed literary style. He shows us Mr. James in a London fog, and to it suffixes what is no doubt his own retranslation of some German translation of one of Mr. James's works. I will quote only a portion of the extract: "It was, therefore, not without something of a shock that he, in this to him so very congenial atmosphere, now perceived that . . . ." I think I have said enough to show that Herr Beerbohm's collection of portraits has a very definite interest, if only that it shows how difficult is the path of those who are endeavouring to make the nations of Europe understand each other. I could say much more to the same effect were it not that I wish, before I close, to draw attention to another exhibition which also points a very definite moral. It consists of a number of paintings, drawings, and coloured reliefs by Mr. R. Anning Bell, now being shown at the Fine Art Society's Galleries in New Bond-street, and it serves to show us to what extreme lengths specialisation has been carried in modern art. Mr. Anning Bell is notoriously a very clever painter. He has studied the pre-Raphaelites to some purpose, and he has studied the Early Florentine and the Venetian and several other schools. He can paint well. I should think he could paint anything he liked. As a matter of fact, he prefers to specialise in shoulders. He is continually painting shoulders—he cannot, I suppose he does not want to, get away from them. In every one of his pictures—or nearly every one—there is an agreeable young woman—more or less classical in feeling according to circumstances—and she always wears a costume which displays at least one, and generally two, extremely pleasing shoulders. Whatever she be doing, whatever her station in life or temporary circumstances, whether she be a heathen goddess, a pastoral nymph, or a more or less modern young person, her shoulders are always to the front, and worthily so. There are very few male characters represented in this collection, nor are their shoulders ever in prominence—probably because they are less artistically pleasing. Certainly, if all the great artists of all the ages could possibly be brought together to paint one supremely great picture in which each should do only that part which he was most capable of doing to perfection, Mr. Anning Bell could claim without fear of refusal the right of limning shoulders.

MUSIC.

MR. SANTLEY'S JUBILEE.

MANY years ago a small boy was taken to the Albert Hall to hear "Elijah," and disgraced his belongings by asking in a loud voice, "Is Santley tenor or bass?" It was many years ago, but the small boy has never forgotten the incident, and it is still quoted against him. It did, indeed, represent almost the ultimate limits of musical ignorance, and, at any rate, the small boy never had occasion to make the same inquiry again. To-morrow some thousands of Mr. Santley's friends and admirers (including the small boy) are to assemble in the largest building available for the purpose in London with the object of assisting in the celebration of his professional jubilee. What has been the secret of Santley's success? Putting aside his voice I should be inclined to say his sincerity. A well-known anecdote tells how, on one occasion, he stopped a fire panic in a theatre by stepping forward and adjuring the audience not to make damned fools of themselves. It was advice which he has never failed to act upon himself. His art has always been manly and unaffected. There has never been any humbug about it. And the qualities of the man were reflected to some extent in his voice. It always had a certain roughness which gave it character and virility, and constituted one of its greatest charms. This was certainly due, however, to no defect in Mr. Santley's vocal method. He learnt his lessons well, under Nava at Milan in the first place, and later with Garcia, and reaped his reward to the full in the length of years during which he was able to practise his art. Even to-day it is still a pleasure to hear him.

Marvellous, indeed, has been Mr. Santley's career. Yet young singers of to-day may take comfort from the fact that he had his early struggles like the rest, and he himself has recorded that when he first settled in London after studying in Italy, the prospects of his liquidating the liabilities which he had incurred were none too bright. Chorley, however, introduced him to Costa, who gave him an opportunity in opera, and thenceforward his success was assured. It is so long now since Mr. Santley abandoned the stage that one is apt to forget how great were his earlier triumphs in that sphere. His actual operatic début he made at Covent Garden as Hoel in "Dinorah" in 1859. Later he was the first Flying Dutchman in this country, while every one knows, of course, that when Gounod's "Faust" was first produced in London he was the Valentine. In connection with his playing of the latter part when on tour with Tietjens, Trebelli, and Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley tells, by the way, an amusing story. In the death scene, just as he was about to expire, a gallery boy called out, "Unbutton his weskit," thereby convulsing the house. It was for Santley that Gounod added the number, "Dio possente." Mr. Santley was also the first Danny Man in Benedict's "Lily of Killarney," while it may be noted further in connection with his operatic career that it fell to his lot to sing (in "Don Giovanni") the last note heard in the old Her Majesty's before it was burned down. As to the famous singers with whom he appeared, they would make an imposing list. There were giants in those days. He himself has placed it on record that the most perfect Marguerite he ever heard was Christine Nilssen. Patti's best part was, in his judgment, Dinorah.

When Santley abandoned the stage for the platform regret was universal, but the opera's loss was the oratorio's gain. There never was a finer Elijah, and if any one at the present day can sing "Why do the nations?" and "For He is like a refiner's fire" as he did in his prime, it would be pleasant to know his name. Oratorio singing was never found dull or soporific when Santley was one of the soloists. With how many famous songs, too, will his name be imperishably associated for all who heard him in them. Whether in a tragic ballad such as the "Erlkönig," a passionate love-song like "To Anthea" (one of the finest songs ever written by an English composer), or in such rollicking old ditties as "The Vicar of Bray" and "Simon the Cellarer," Santley was equally great and unapproachable. "Father O'Flynn" is another famous song with which his name will always be associated. The story of that song has often been told. When Mr. Alfred Percival Graves adapted a set of new verses to fit the old Irish tune, "The Top of Cork Road," he certainly had little idea that in the space of a few years the ditty would come to be regarded by most people as a classic which had come down through the centuries. It has been stated, indeed, that there was considerable doubt as to the advisability of including it in the collection of Irish melodies edited by Sir Charles Stanford, in which it was first published. It was so included, however; some years later Mr. Santley got hold of it, and to-day it is world-famous.

Mr. Santley, it may be noted in this connection, has nearly always shown good taste in the choice of his songs—which goes to explain, perhaps, why he has such little respect for certain more modern effusions, some of which, he once waggishly observed, suggested nothing so much as that they have been ground out by a typewriter. He has also published one or two songs of his own, and likewise an excellent treatise on singing, containing much sound advice conveyed in commendably simple and straightforward language. The three requisites for a singer bent on pleasing the public are, according to Mr. Santley, a good voice and ear; industry and perseverance to cultivate them; and finally musical and dramatic taste and feeling to apply them when cultivated. If he were not the most modest and unassuming of men, Mr. Santley might have added with truth that few have ever possessed these requisites, and others, in more abundant measure than himself. Every one will join in hoping that the grand old singer may live many years yet to enjoy the respect and affection in which he is held by his multitudinous admirers throughout the English-speaking world.

With the opening of Covent Garden on Tuesday the "season" proper has fairly got itself under weigh, and for the next three months there will be little respite for those whose duties require their presence in opera house and concert room. It is, of course, quite the least suitable period of the year for indoor entertainments. In an ideal state of things concerts and plays would, indeed, be absolutely unknown, if not actually forbidden, during June and July. But this has often been pointed out before, and since our social leaders have not at present shown the slightest disposition to adopt the advice which has been tendered them on the subject there is nothing for it, I am afraid, but to accept the inevitable and make the best of the situation.

There is, however, one direction in which reform is possible, if not, perhaps very probable, and that is with respect to the multiplicity of concerts which will shortly be inviting attention once more under conditions fatal to success. So far as concerns the many foreign performers who visit us, it is well known, of course, that every Continental artist, whether vocalist, violinist, pianist, or what not, who has appeared in his native land without actually breaking down considers that he has only to scrape together money enough to take him to London in order to make his fortune, and long years ago, it may be, something like this really was the case. Unfortunately—for the foreigner—that happy condition of things has long since passed away. But the tradition survives, and hence the invasion which every summer witnesses. Many of these visitors—even those least known to fame—are, of course, quite talented and notable artists whom at any other time we should be glad to hear. But frankly, when they come in the season with its innumerable counter distractions they are little likely to benefit themselves, and it is the truest kindness, therefore, to advise them to remain at home.

Recent concerts have not included many of much importance. Even that of the London Symphony Orchestra on Saturday contained only familiar works, though it is certainly not often that they are played as they were on this occasion. Tchaikowsky's Francesca da Rimini went as brilliantly as anything perhaps. There was an enormous and highly enthusiastic audience. Nikisch was in evidence also as accompanist at the recital of his protégé, Mr. Glenn Hall, an American tenor with a fine voice, a well-trained method, and highly cultivated interpretative powers. Vocalists have, indeed, been numerous just lately. Another was Miss Feilding Roselle, also an American artist, though hardly one so gifted as Mr. Hall; a third was Miss Marie Stark, a Swiss artist who uses a good voice in a very artistic manner; and a fourth was Miss Grainger Kerr, who, greatly daring, is giving a set of recitals devoted to living composers. Pianists heard have included Mme. Adeline de Lara and Mme. Else Gipser (whose energy is not always tempered by discretion), and a pleasing new violinist who appeared was Frl. Valérie Knoll. On Monday Mme. Liza Lehmann introduced another of her pleasant song cycles, "The Golden Threshold," and that very sound violinist, Mr. Sigmund Beel, was heard at the Bechstein Hall.

Many attending the Philharmonic concert on Thursday will be disappointed not to have the pleasure of seeing M. Sibelius, who has telegraphed regretting his inability to be present, but there should be compensation in the presence of that great pianist, Mme. Sophie Menter, who has not been heard in London for many years. Since she actually first appeared in this country it is now rather more than a quarter of a century. She is probably the greatest pianist that the world has ever known, though some would, perhaps, place Mme. Schumann before her as representative of a different school, while among present-day players Mme. Carreño certainly runs her hard. It will be interesting to note to what extent her playing still appeals, though, seeing that she is now nearly sixty years old, allowance will, of course, have to be made under this head.

Cilèa's new opera, "Gloria" by name, which has just been produced at La Scala, does not seem by all accounts to have achieved a very pronounced success. The music of the work is described as elegant and refined, but the opera as a whole hardly appears to have been received with ungovernable enthusiasm. But then it may be, of course, that it is too good for its public, for it must be remembered that in the case of an opera there are always two causes of possible failure. It may be too good or too bad, though it must be admitted that composers as a rule contrive to steer clear of the former danger.

Paderewski has revealed himself in quite a new rôle by the publication of his letter in a Viennese paper replying to the aspersions which Björnsterne Björnson has, it seems, been casting upon the Poles. We have always been accustomed to regard the fellow-countrymen of Chopin, Paderewski, and the brothers De Reszke, as a gallant and high-souled race rightly struggling to be free, but nowadays no delusion is sacred, and so we find Björnson denouncing them as the enemies of society and the oppressors of their fellows. No wonder Paderewski was aroused. But who would have suspected him of such polemical powers as he has seemingly disclosed? His letter, says a correspondent, reveals in the author a remarkable gift for political journalism. Can it be that the famous pianist has missed his vocation?

Mr. Carl Deichmann, who has just been fêted in honour of his eightieth birthday by some of his compatriots in London, is a veteran orchestral player whose reminiscences, if he could be induced to publish them, ought to make interesting reading. They would include recollections of music in England as long ago as 1848, and anecdotes of Wagner, Spohr, Mendelssohn, Schumann, von Bülow, Liszt, Joachim, and countless other notables of the past. For more years than some of the oldest concert-goers can recollect Mr. Deichmann has figured as leader of the second violins in some of the foremost English orchestras—or, to speak by the card, orchestras in England—and by his professional colleagues he has always been regarded with the greatest affection and esteem.

"The Morris Book" (Novello and Co.) is the title of an exceedingly interesting little volume by Cecil J. Sharp and Herbert C. Macilwaine, which has been published with the object of helping forward the movement aiming at the revival of the old English folk-songs and folk-dances. For some time past now efforts have been made in this direction with surprisingly successful results. All over the country, and in London as well as in the provinces, the movement has caught on in a manner which has exceeded the fondest anticipations of its promoters. But hitherto no work on the subject has existed giving information and instruction. Messrs. Sharp and Macilwaine, therefore, set about them to supply the need. The volume contains a history of the dance and detailed particulars of its different forms, from which those interested should be able to teach themselves; and as evidence of the extent of the interest which has been developed in the subject, the authors state that they have received inquiries even from Japan.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

